Fountains Abbey, a Benedictine monastery of the Cistercian Reform, about 21 m. from Ripon, Yorkshire, England, on the Skell River, established by monks from St. Mary’s Abbey, York, 1132. Hugh, Dean of York, and two wealthy canons, entered the monastery and brought money and property to the needy community. Monks were sent to Bergen, Norway, 1146, and the monasteries of Sawley, Roche, Woburn, Meaux, Kirkstall, and Vandy were also established from Fountains. Devastating invasions of the Scots caused Edward II to declare the monks tax-exempt, 1319. John de Pherd (de Fontibus), Abbot of Fountains, who became Bp. of Ely, 1220, was one of the most renowned architects of his period. In 1540 the abbey was surrendered to the king. Following a number of changes, it is held by the Marquess of Ripon, and the ruins, including part of the church, chapter-house, cloister, refectory, and calefactory, are preserved.—C.E.

Four Crowned Martyrs, in reality five Pan­nonian sculptors, buried in the catacomb of Sts. Peter and Marcellinus, Rome. They were martyred under Diocletian for refusing to make a statue of Asclepius for a heathen temple. Later tradition confused them with four Christian soldiers martyred at Rome two years after the death of the five sculptors. Since the names of these soldiers could not be authentically established, they are celebrated under the names of Sts. Claudius, Niceta­tratus, Symphorians, Castor, and Simplicius. Four martyrs buried in the catacomb of Albano are sometimes called the Four Crowned Martyrs. A basilica was erected to the Four Crowned Martyrs, on the Celian Hill and their relics were removed thither, c. 850. Feast, for both the Pannonian and Roman martyrs, 8 Nov.—C.E.

Four Horses of the Apocalypse. The vision of God enthroned upon the Cherubim is described in the Apocalypse, 4: 5. In His right hand there is a scroll sealed with seven seals. At the opening of four of these, four horses appear (Apoc., 6), white, red, black, and pale (piebald); they signify conquest, slaughter, famine, and death.

Fourteen Holy Helpers, saints having special power of invoking help from God in time of sickness, want, or peril. The group includes Sts. Achazi­us, Egidius, Barbara, Blaise, Christopher, Cyri­acus, Denis, Erasmus, Eustachius, George, Catherine of Alexandria, Margaret, Pantaleon, Vitus (qqv.).
in various localities the Blessed Virgin or St. Magnus are added to the list, and in some places other favorite saints are substituted for the 14 mentioned, e.g., Sts. Quirinus and Pancratius. The earliest mention of the cult occurred in 1284 with reference to an altar built in honor of the Fourteen Helpers at the parish church of Krems, Austria. The veneration of these saints collectively probably arose from the religious practices of the people at the time when the Black Death was raging throughout Europe and causing great distress. Its origin is usually traced to Germany, there having appeared to the shepherd-boy of the Cistercian Abbey of Langheim in Frankenthal, 1445–46, apparitions accompanied by the command to build a church there in honor of the Fourteen Holy Helpers. This order was executed and in 1448 the chapel was consecrated and became a place of pilgrimage; a brotherhood devoted to the cult was established, 1466, and sanctioned by Pope Paul V, 1618. The cult spread rapidly to Bohemia, Moravia, Galicia, Switzerland, Austria, Italy, and America. Shrines, holy articles, hospitals, and celebrations were dedicated to these saints. In 1890 the Congregation of Rites gave permission for a Mass in their honor to be celebrated on the fourth Sunday after Easter at Langheim and also at Hamelburg in the Diocese of Würzburg, renowned for observance of the devotion.

Fractio Panis. See Breaking of Bread.

France, republic in central Europe; area, 215,650 sq. m.; pop., 40,743,551. According to tradition, Christianity was introduced in Apostolic times into the Roman province of Gaul which is supposed to have been visited by Sts. Lazarus, Mary Magdalene, Martha, Dionysius the Areopagite, and Crescens. Greek culture and Christianity were both implanted by Greek, Asiatic, and Syrian merchants and missionaries, who probably crossed the Mediterranean to Marseilles, ascended the Rhone, founded colonies in the large towns, and established the Church at Lyons with suffragan in Vienne in the 2nd century. The Church in Gaul is first mentioned in history in connection with the persecution at Lyons under Marcus Aurelius (177) which included martyrs from every station in life. St. Polycarp, first Bishop of Lyons, and his successor, St. Ireneus, were both discipies of St. Polycarp, Bishop of Smyrna. The country was also evangelized by missionaries sent from Rome, including St. Denis, first Bishop of Paris, and several sees were organized by the middle of the 3rd century. At the Synod of Arles (314) the see of Vienne, Marseilles, Arles, Orange, Vaison, Apt, Nice, Lyons, Autun, Reims, Rouen, Bordeaux, Gabali, Eauze, Toulouse, Narbonne, Clermont, Bourges, and Paris were in existence. The towns were won first, and missionary work in rural districts increased during the 4th and 5th centuries under St. Martin of Tours (d. c. 397) and numerous popular preachers. Religious community life was introduced by St. Martin and Cassian (d. c. 435), but no codified rule was adopted until the time of Cæsarius of Arles in the 6th century. Of the heresies which beset the province, Arianism was combated by the exiled Athanasius and St. Hilary of Poitiers, Priscillianism was condemned at the Synod of Saragossa (380), and Pelagianism was defeated under Cæsarius of Arles (529). In the 5th century the Arian kingdom of the Visigoths was established, but their policy of hostility to Catholicity was soon changed for one of moderation, and in the following century the kingdom was seized by the Franks. Clovis, King of the Franks, who had been baptized, 496, by St. Remigius, Bishop of Reims, was accepted as the Christian ruler of Gaul, and the Kingdom of France established. The French royal house remained in closest union with the papacy throughout the Middle Ages, and devotion to the Church earned for the rulers of France, of whom the most illustrious was St. Louis, the title of Most Christian Majesty, retained until the Revolution in the 18th century.

Lutheranism and Calvinism, established in France in the 16th century, were checked by Henry IV’s acceptance of Catholicity and the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, 1685. With Louis XIV Gallicanism came to the throne, resulting on the one hand in persecution of Protestants and Jansenists, and on the other in subjection of papal pronouncements to the king’s approval. The 17th century marked a Catholic awakening under St. Francis de Sales, St. Vincent de Paul, and Jean Euller, founder of the Sulpicians, and the development of the grands séminaires began, with increase of missionary activity in America and the East. In the 18th century, the least Christian in the history of France, the Constituent Assembly confiscated the possessions of the Church, and established the “Civil Constitution of the Clergy,” giving voters the right to nominate priests and bishops without the approval of Rome, condemned by Pius VI. The Assembly obliged all members of the clergy to swear allegiance to the Constitution, but the majority refused and were persecuted. Persecution increased under the Republic which attempted to dechristianize France, but Catholicity, never entirely suppressed, was restored by the Concordat of Napoleon, 1790. Under the Restoration, the Little Sisters of the Poor were founded (1840)
FRANCE

FRANCE

377 and the conferences of St. Vincent de Paul instituted (1833). Universal suffrage, established under the Second Republic (1848), was confirmed by the Second Empire under Louis Napoleon, and the Third Republic was proclaimed, 1870. Through all these changes of government the foreign policy of France consistently supported the Catholic Church. There is no state religion. In 1905 all Churches were separated from the State and authorized to form self-supporting associations for public worship (associa,tions cultuelles) , and all buildings used for public worship were made over to the associations; in the absence of associations, buildings remain at the disposal of the clergy and worshipers, but an administrative act must be secured from the prefet or the maire. In 1920 diplonlatic relations with the Holy See, broken in 1904, ·were resumed. France is represented in the Vatican City by an ambassador, ~:ld a papal nuncio resides in Paris.

The colonial possessions and dependencies of France include: in Asia, Annam, Cambodia, Cochin-China, Tongking, Laos, and Syria (mandate under League of Nations); in Africa, Algeria, Tunis, Senegal, French Sudan, Guinea, Ivory Coast, Dahonley, Mauritania, Niger, Equatorial Africa, Can1eroon (mandate under League of Nations), Togo (Inandate under League of Nations) , Reunion, Madagascar, Mayotte, and Somali Coast; in America, St.-Pierre and Miquelon, Guadeloupe, and French Guiana; in Oceania,
New Caledonia and Dependencies, Tahiti, Society Islands, Marquesas Islands, Leeward Islands, and others.
Ecclesiastical administration is thus divided:
Franc~:

Year
Aix, I\.' .......••
5th cent.
Ajaccio, D. . .• 2nd or 3rd cent.
364 l?i!J!1e, D.
:E reJus, D
.
4th cent.
Gap, D
. 1st or 5th cent.
Marseilles, D
. 1st or 4th cent.
Nice, D
.
3rd cent.
Albi, A.
1676
Cahors, D.
c.250
Mende, D. . ... 3rd or 4th cent.
Perpignan, D.
1602
Rodez, D. .... 1st or 5th cent.
Auch, A.
829
Aire, D.
5th cent.
Bayonne, D. .. 4th or 6th cent.
Tarbes and Lourdes, D ... c.394
Avignon, A . . . . • 1475
Montpellier, D .• 1536
Nimes. D. c.374
Valence, D . . . •
344
Viviers, D . . . . •
3rd cent.
Besa nc;on, A. . ..•
4th cent.
Belley, D . . . . .
412
Nancy and Toul,
D. ........• 1777
Saint-Die, D. ..
1777
Verdun, D. . .. 1st or 4th cent.
Bordeaux, A. ...
3rd cent.
Agen, D.
c.300
Angouleme, D.. 1st or 3rd cent.
Luc;on, D.
1317
Perigueux, D.
1st or 2nd cent.
Poitiers, D. . .. 2nd or 3rd cent.
La Rochelle, D..
1648
Bourges, A. ..... 1st or 3rd cent.
C I e l' m 0 n t-Fer­ rand, D
.
2nd cent.
Le Puy, D
.
3rd cent.
Limoges, D.
1st cent.
Saint-Flour, D .• 1317
Tulle, D
.
1317

Pp.

Oaths.

129 273
268 395
343 297
174 351
244 206
95 408
222 336
501 733
480 502
215 522
223 252
668 1014
507 542
321 389
506 902

225,752
289,890
88,347
347,932
87,963
703,797
435,253
301,717
171,776
104,733
229,979
328,886
196,419
263,111
414,556

327
174
363
287
353
371
880
442

525
247
683
436
419
571
670
531

187,875
230,549
500,575
302,650
263,750
289,263
619,498
317,195

486
390
474
510
444
363
303
546
643
265
502

621
495
444
746
487
397
555
550
710
417
639

552,087
382,100
218,131
827,973
246,609
312,790
395,602
392,489
620,294
417,789
553,493

513
277
474
314
289

714
548
494
457
372

515,399
260,610
570,459
196,999
269,289

Ohs.

Year
Cambrai, A
.
Arras, D
.
Lille, D
.
Chambery, A. .
.
Annecy, D
.
Saint - Jean de Maurienne, D.
Tarentaise, D.
Lyons, A.
Autun, D. ....
Dijon, D.
Grenoble, D. ...
Langres, D.
Saint-Claude, D.
Paris, A.
Blois, D.
Chartres, D. .,
Meaux, D. ....
Orleans, D.
Versailles, D. . .
Reims, A.
Amiens, D.
Beauvais, D. ..
Cha,1ons, D. ...
Soissons, D. ..
Rennes, A.
Quimper, D.
Saint-Brieuc, D.
Vannes, D. ...
Rouen, A.
Bayeux, D.
Coutanees, D.
Evreux, D. .,.
Seez, D. .....
Sens, A.
:M:oulins, D. '"
Nevers, D.
Troyes, D.
Toulouse, A.
Carcassonne, D.
Montauban, D..
Pamiers, D. ...
Tours, A.
Angers, D. ...
Laval, D.
Le Mans, D
Nantes, D.
Metz, D.
Strasbourg, D. ..

1559
6th cent.
1913
1817
1822

Pp.

Caths,

471 758
989 1073
357 1270
172 332
300 378

Clis.

865,935
1,171,912
1,096,341
115,904
245,317

45,961
123
51,355
125
1646 1,663,131
549,240
642
328,881
468
558,079
830
195,370
490
230,685
432
1346 4,628,637
248,099
326
255,213
313
380,017
384
341,225
478
653 1,137,524
479,682
527
473,916
700
405,971
430
215,539
270
488,999
482
561,688
1250
753,702
994
552,788
973
543,175
823
885,299
776
390,492
709
431,367
822
414
308,445
277,637
594
277,230
325
370,562
499
260,502
309
238,253
310
431,505
705
291,951
468
164,191
356
167,498
307
334,486
327
477,741
924
259,934
579
387,480
607
651,487
876
633,461
838
1151 1,161,639

6th cent.
5th cent.
3rd cent.
270
1731
4th cent.
3rd cent.
1742
1622
1697
3rd cent.
3rd cent.
3rd cent.
1802
3rd cent.
3rd cent.
or 3rd cent.
or 3rd cent.
or 3rd cent.
1859
444
or 9th cent.
9th cent.
5th cent.
or 2nd cent.
5th cent.
or 5th cent.
or 2nd cent.
3rd cent.
1817
c.516
c.314
131 7
533
1317
1295
5th cent.
372 1855 or 5th cent.
c.374
or 3rd cent.
4th cent.

87
85
325
477
520
586
561
391
222
295
375
538
300
598
596
669
524
339
578
340
314
356
285
664
716
675
582
513
491
328
309
423
552
416
327
347
292
417
297
391
261
646
713

Aleppo, A
.
1899 lit elchite Rite
AntiOCh, P.
1729
Aleppo, A.
1790
Beirut and Gebail, A., .. 4th cent.
Bostra, A.
1687
Damascus, A.
c.240
Baalbeck, D.
1869
Zahleh and Forzul, D., 1866
Emesa, A.
1850
Tyre, A.,
2 nu cent.
Cmsarea, D.
1886
Sidon, D.
3rd cent.
Tripoli, D.
1897
Acre, A.
1856

5

5

6,000

14
2 40
9
14 10
37
12
14
16
42
10
28

26
18
51
18
26
14
49
16
16
21
50
14
38

10,835
9,876
12,000
9,900
10,835
8,450
29,460
14,200
5,270
2,000
18,550
1,225
13,923

8
2
2
4

27
8

1st
1st
1st
6th
1st 3rd
1st

2nd
1st

In Asia:
A rmenian Rite

Syrian Rite
Antioch, P
Aleppo, A
Baghuad, A
Damascus, A
Emesa, A

.
.
.
.
.

1783
1862
1862
1837
1832

5

9
4

4,200
4,000
1,300
3,000
2,200

5
112
110
20
89 100
76
16
277

16
173
200
120
122
150
350
19
470

3,600
40,000
600
33,300
35,000
42,000
60,000
10,000
85,000

154
187
842
340
721
270
155
52
405
180
430
242
512

170
48
165
71
168
110
52
29
137
96
117
125
161

292,000
40,265
280,000
78,000
150,000
66,745
35,000
14,287
128,696
60,297
65,681
84,462
138,049

5

Maronite Rite
Antioch, P
. 8th cent.
Aleppo, A
.
1851
Baalbeck, A. .
.
1861
Beirut, A
.
1844
1843 Cyprus, A
.
1848
Damascus, A. .
.
1900 Sidon, A
.
1826
Tripoli, A
.
1856
Tyre, A
.
1848
Gibail and Bntrun, D.

Latin Rite
Aleppo, V.A.
Rae Ninh, V.A. .
Buichu, V.A
I-Iaiphong-, V.A. .
Hanoi, V.A
Hue, V.A
Hung Hoa, V.A. .
Laos, V.A
Phat Diem, V.A
Pnom Penh, V.A
Quinhon, V.A.
Saig-on, V.A
Vinh, V.A

.
.
.
.
.
.
.
.
.
.
.

1762
1924
1924
1924
1924
1924
1924
1899
1924
1924
1924
1924
1924


Eleanor de Castro. He accompanied Charles on his expedition to Africa, 1535, and to Provence, 1536, ordained priest, 1551, and began immediately to preach with great success. He visited Portugal, 1553, and 1554-61 was missa generalized of the Society in Spain. He founded missions in Florida, New Spain, and Peru. In 1565 he was elected general of the Society, in which capacity he edited the rules, founded novitiates and scholasticates, created the Roman province, founded the Society in Poland, and established colleges in Piedmont and France. He worked with Pope Pius V and St. Charles Borromeo to further the renaissance of Catholicism. Invoked against earthquakes. Canonized, 1671. Relics at Madrid. Feast, R. Cal., 10 Oct.—C.E.; Butler.

Franciscan Guardians of the Holy Sepulcher, a band of six or seven Fathers and as many Brothers chosen every three months from the community of St. Saviour to keep watch over the Holy Sepulcher and the sanctuaries of the basilica, to which they conduct a daily pilgrimage. The rest of the St. Saviour community, numbering about 25 Fathers and 55 Brothers, are engaged in various activities of the convent which comprise, besides the church of St. Saviour (the Latin parish church of Jerusalem), an orphanage, a parish school for boys, a printing office, a foundry, carpenters' and ironmongers' shops, a mill, and the largest library in Palestine. —C.E., VII, 427; C.E. Suppl., 380.

Franciscans. See Order of Friars Minor.

Francis Caracciolo, Saint, confessor (1563-1608), co-founder of the Congregation of the Minor Clerks Regular, b. Abruzzi, Italy; d. Agnone. He went to Naples in 1585 to study theology, and was ordained in 1587. He collaborated with John Auguste Adorno in drawing up rules for the Congregation, which was approved by Pope Sixtus V, 1588. Chosen general at Naples, 1593, he established houses in Rome, Madrid, Valladolid, and Alcalá. Relics at Naples and S. Lorenzo in Lucina, Rome. Canonized, 1607. Feast, R. Cal., 4 June. —C.E.

Francis de Geronimo, Saint, confessor (1642-1716), apostle of Naples; b. Grottaglie, Italy; d. Naples. He was ordained, 1666, and spent four years teaching at the college of nobles in Naples. In 1670 he entered the Society of Jesus and for 40 years devoted himself to the evangelization of Naples. One of the most eloquent preachers of his time, he confirmed his work by striking miracles. Patron of Grottaglie. Canonized, 1839. Feast, 11 May.—C.E.

Francis de Sales, Saint, Doctor of the Church (1567-1622), Bp. of Geneva, b. Thorens, Savoy; d. Lyons, France. He studied at the College of Clermont in Paris, where he began a course in theology and took a vow of chastity, consecrating himself to the Blessed Virgin Mary; he received his doctorate in law at Padua, 1592. Against the will of his father he entered the priesthood and was ordained, 1593; he was appointed coadjutor to Claude de Granier, Bp. of Geneva, whom he succeeded, 1602. In collaboration with St. Jane de Chantal he founded the Visitation Order for nursing the sick and teaching. He became famous for his sermons and writings. Patron of journalists. Canonized, 1665. Relics near Annecy. Feast, R. Cal., 29 Jan. —C.E.; Butler.

Francis Isidore Gagelin, Blessed, martyr (1507-1593), b. Montpellier, France; d. Hué, Francis Jaccard, Blessed, Martyr (1709-1838), b. Omion, France; d. Tonkin, Indo-China. He began his studies at the seminary at Melan, from there went to Chambéry, 1819, and finally joined the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris. Assigned to the Cochinchina missions, he set out in 1824, and later, he became a member of the Society of Foreign Missions at Paris. In 1818, he embarked for Cochinchina, where, four years later, he became a member of the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris. Appointed vicar-general and assigned to Central Tonkin, Fr. Gagelin labored with the same zeal for souls he had shown in Cochinchina. After a decree of persecution he gave himself up at Bongson. Taken to Hue, the capital, he was put in chains and strangled to death, 17 Oct., 1833. His remains were buried at the Christian village of Phuham, but in 1846 they were transferred to the Paris Seminary. Beatified, 1900.—Wegener, Heroes of the Mission Field, Techyn, III., 1924.

Francis of Assisi, Saint, confessor (1182-1226), b. Assisi, Italy; d. there. The son of a wealthy cloth merchant, Pietro Bernadone, Francis was taken prisoner and entered his father's business. These early years in no way presaged the greatness and sanctity which was to follow, for he gave himself wholeheartedly to revelry and self-indulgence. In a battle between the Assisians and Perugians, Francis was taken prisoner and detained in Perugia for more than a year, where he suffered a severe illness. Returning to Assisi, he decided to abandon all for Christ; his father was so displeased with him that he disinherited him. In 1210, he built near Paula; they were first known as "Hermits of St. Francis" but later were called Minims by Alexander VI who gave formal approbation to the order. He founded new monasteries in Calabria and Sicily and established convents of nuns, and an order of laymen. He attended Louis XI in Plessis-lès-Tours at his death, and remained in France as counselor to Charles VII and Louis XII. His body was burned by Calvinists, 1562. Emblem: a scapular. Canonized, 1519. Feast, 2 April.—C.E.; Butler.

Francis Regis Clet, Blessed (1748-1820), b. Grenoble, France; d. Au-tsung-fu, China. Director of the internal seminary at mother-house of the Congregation of the Lazarists in Paris, he asked to be sent to China, where he labored until he was martyred. Beatified, 1900. Feast, 27 Feb.—C.E.

Francis Xavier, Saint, confessor (1506-52), Apostle of the Indies and of Japan, b. Castile of Francis Xavier, near Sanguesa, Navarre, Spain; d. Island of Sancian, near the coast of China. After a preliminary education in Spain, Francis Xavier went to the Collège de Sainte-Barbe in Paris, 1525. Here he met the Savoyard, Peter Faber and St. Ignatius Loyola who was already planning the foundation of the Society of Jesus. Xavier offered himself as a companion to Ignatius. After completing his studies and a short term as teacher in Paris, he went to Venice, where in 1537 he received Holy Orders with Ignatius. The following year he went to Rome, and after doing Apostolic work there for some time, was sent to evangelize India, 1540. On his way St. Francis stopped at Lisbon for nine months, reaching Goa, 1542. The first five months he spent preaching, tending the sick, and instructing children. He devoted about three years to the evangelization of western India and the Island of Ceylon. In 1545 he went to Malacca where he labored for three months and reaped an abundant spiritual harvest. From there he visited the Molucca Islands, Ambon, Ternate, Banarura, and other lesser islands. During this expedition St. Francis is said to have landed on the island of Mindanao, and for this reason he has been called the first apostle of the Philippines. Returning to Malacca, 1547, he established a novitiate and house of studies, and sent priests to the various missions he had organized. In 1549 he, with three companions, set out for Japan, landing at Kagoshima. Despite severe privations and conflicts with the holy see he succeeded in converting thousands of natives. Banished from Kagoshima, 1550, he preached throughout southern and central Japan, forming the nucleus of several Christian communities. On his return to Goa, 1552, he encountered certain domestic troubles, chiefly disagreements among the representatives he had left at home. In 1552 he started on a voyage to China but died on Sancian, near the coast of China. After a preliminary education in Spain, Francis Xavier went to the College de Sainte-Barbe in Paris, 1525.

ST. FRANCIS XAVIER

Malacca, 1547, he established a novitiate and house of studies, and sent priests to the various missions he had organized. In 1549 he, with three companions, set out for Japan, landing at Kagoshima. Despite severe privations and conflicts with the holy see he succeeded in converting thousands of natives. Banished from Kagoshima, 1550, he preached throughout southern and central Japan, forming the nucleus of several Christian communities. On his return to Goa, 1552, he encountered certain domestic troubles, chiefly disagreements among the representatives he had left at home. In 1552 he started on a voyage to China but died on Sancian, near the coast of China. After a preliminary education in Spain, Francis Xavier went to the College de Sainte-Barbe in Paris, 1525.

FRANCIS XAVIER 380 FRATICELLI

Malacca, 1547, he established a novitiate and house of studies, and sent priests to the various missions he had organized. In 1549 he, with three companions, set out for Japan, landing at Kagoshima. Despite severe privations and conflicts with the holy see he succeeded in converting thousands of natives. Banished from Kagoshima, 1550, he preached throughout southern and central Japan, forming the nucleus of several Christian communities. On his return to Goa, 1552, he encountered certain domestic troubles, chiefly disagreements among the representatives he had left at home. In 1552 he started on a voyage to China but died on Sancian, near the coast of China. After a preliminary education in Spain, Francis Xavier went to the College de Sainte-Barbe in Paris, 1525.

FRANKFORT, COUNCIL OF, convened, 794, "by the grace of God, authority of the pope, and command of Charlemagne." It was summoned primarily for the confirmation of Adoptionism. Following a wrong translation of the Acts of the Second Council of Nicaea, 787, this local council erroneously attributed a false doctrine on the worship of images to the Council of Nicaea, but rightly condemned the supposed teaching.—C.E.; Mann. (M. P. H.)

FRANKINCENSE (O.Fr., franc encens, incense of high quality), the fragrant resin of an Arabian tree, Boswellia serrata, procured by slitting the bark, from which it exudes and hardens on exposure to the air. It was one of the gifts offered to the Infant Jesus by the Magi (Matt., 2), symbolizing sacrifice due Him as God.

FRANZELIN, JOHANN BAPTIST (1816-86), cardinal and theologian, b. Aldein, Tyrol; d. Rome. He taught dogmatics at the Roman College. His treatise on Divine Tradition and Scripture is considered a classic.—C.E.

FRATERNAL CHARITY. The love of one's neighbor, though a universal law, must vary in its practical obligation, according as human relations vary. When these are so intimate as to become similar to natural brotherhood, the law of fraternal charity prevails. The matter remains the same; brother aids brother to attain salvation. The obligation is stricter; the exercise, more frequent, particular, and intense. The climax is reached in religious life, where all are supremely brethren in Christ. (H. J. W.)

FRATERNAL CORRECTION, an exercise of fraternal charity in which brother reproves brother. It supposes serious fault, its object being the offender's correction, not the satisfaction of one offended. In various orders and congregations it is a recognized means of perfection. (H. J. W.)

FRATICELLI (It., little friars), among the Italian people a designation of all the members of religious, particularly mendicant, orders founded during the 13th century, e.g., the Franciscans or Friars Minor, and especially solitaries, whether regulating their own lives or observing a definite rule; in church history, it is confined to various heretical sects which separated from the Franciscan Order during the 14th and 15th centuries on account of disputes concerning poverty. Their early history is bound up with that of the Franciscan Celestines, a group of extreme Spirituals under the leadership of Angelo da Clarenso, suppressed by John XXII in 1317. Thereupon, they professed themselves the original Friars Minor, denied the validity of the papal decrees through which, they said, John XXII had forfeited the papacy, and further asserted that all religious and prelates in the state of mortal sin were devoid of sacerdotal powers. They established themselves in southern Italy. They are not to be confounded with the Clarenzi, also adherents of Angelo, approved as true Franciscans by Sixtus IV, 1474. After Angelo's death (1337) the Fraticelli split into a number of groups, each with its own doctrines, causing great confusion, mainly... in Italy and Sicily. Active measures taken against the sect eventually met with success, largely through the efforts of St. John Capistran, and, by the end of the 15th century, the Fraticelli were reduced to mere remnants, so crippled as to constitute no real danger to the Church.—C.E.

Fraunhofer, Joseph von (1787-1826), scientist, b. Straubing, Bavaria; d. Munich. At the age of twelve he became an apprentice to a lens-grinder, working six years without pay. By his unaided efforts he rose to be professor royal in the Munich optical institute, 1819. His fame rests chiefly on his initiation of spectrum analysis, the discovery of the Fraunhofer lines in the solar spectrum and his establishing of the laws of diffraction.—C.E.

Fréchette, Louis Honoré (1839-1908), author, b. Notre Dame de Lévis, Quebec, Canada; d. there. He was admitted to the Canadian Bar, and spent seven years as journalist in Chicago; returning to Canada he was elected deputy in the House of Commons, 1874, but was defeated, 1878-82. Called the "Lamartine of Canada," he contributed to the best Canadian and American periodicals. The French Academy crowned a volume of his poems. He was writer of numerous prose works also, and was a charter member of the Royal Society of Canada, 1882. Laval, McGill, and Queen's Universities made him Doctor of Letters.—C.E.

Frederick I, surnamed Barbarossa (c. 1123-90), German king and Roman emperor; d. Asia Minor. Son of Frederick of Swabia, he was crowned king at Aix-la-Chapelle, 1152, and taking Charlemagne as his ideal determined to expand his supremacy to the limit, which explains his ecclesiastical policy. He succeeded in recovering the royal influence in the selection of bishops, but his attempt to obtain the incomes from vacant benefices in northern Italy, and thereby prove his superiority over the pope, failed. A synod was called at Pavia by him, and a decision given in favor of antipope Victor IV, against Pope Alexander III. The opponents of a universal imperial power rallied round Alexander, and eventually the battle of Legnano put an end to Frederick's pretensions. Having taken the cross, 1189, he started for Palestine, and while crossing the River Salphe in Asia Minor, met with a sudden death.—C.E.

Frederick II (1194-1250), German king and Roman emperor, b. Jesi, Ancona, Italy; d. Fioren­tina, Apulia. He was the son of Henry II and Constance of Sicily. Through the aid of Innocent III, Frederick overthrew Otto IV, emancipated the Church from undue royal influence, and vowed to undertake a crusade. His son Henry was elected king and, entrusting the affairs of Germany to Abp. Engelbert of Cologne, he returned to Italy and was crowned emperor, 1220. Frederick made Italy the center of his power. He controlled southern Italy and Sicily, though he had been forced to acknowledge the pope as his overlord in the latter. His desire of reestablishing the imperial power in northern Italy was opposed by a league of the Italian cities and also by the Holy See, as it endangered the liberties of the Papal States. His continued neglect to fulfill his vow led the newly-elected Gregory IX to excommunicate him, and thus precipitated a struggle. Frederick, however, now proceeded to the Holy Land, crowned himself King of Jerusalem, and on his return forced the pope to absolve him. He then resumed his north Italian policy, but was defeated at Legnano, 1215, and having restored order in Germany returned to subdue the Lombards. The Papal States were soon involved and matters were going badly for Gregory IX, when he died. After the election of Innocent IV, Frederick was again excommunicated by the Council of Lyons; several pretenders appeared in Germany, but at the time of his death several years had elapsed without a decisive conflict.—C.E.

Frederick II, the Great (1712-86), King of Prussia, b. Berlin; d. Sans Souci, Germany. Son of Frederick William I and Sophia Dorothea, English princess, his father planned his education along strictly military lines. Frederick acquired a thorough knowledge of French and in his early youth wrote two of his best works, "Considérations sur l'état présent du corps politique de l'Europe," and "Anti-Machiavel." Succeeding to the throne, 1740, he took advantage of the War of the Austrian Succession to enter Silesia, and signed the Peace of Breslau, 1742; a second Silesian war, 1744, secured his possession. Victories during the Seven Years' War (1756-63) placed Prussia at the head of the European powers and Frederick, whose absolutism was motivated always by the greater good of the state, undertook improvements at home. He aided the Catholic cause in Silesia and Poland, gave his protection to the Jesuits even after their suppression, and made an unsuccessful attempt to establish a "Catholic Vicariate of Berlin" having complete authority over Prussian Catholics. Education and science were encouraged; the Bank of Berlin established; the city became a center of commerce and industry; and the opera house and other buildings testify to his love of art. The partition of Poland toward the end of his reign marred his career.

Free Catholicism, term used by an English Free Churchman, Rev. W. G. Peck, in the "Coming Free Catholicism," to designate a movement in the Free Churches of England towards a Catholic interpretation of Christianity which shall include an element of freedom, and for the adoption of Catholic belief and practices without a return to Rome.

Free Church of Scotland, ecclesiastical organization dating from 1843 when 47 lay and ecclesiastical members of the Established Church of Scotland severed their connection with that body as a protest against the encroachments of civil authorities on the independence of the Church, especially regarding the matter of the presentation to vacant benefices. Ministers and professors renounced all claim to the benefices which they had had and built churches and colleges of their own for the training of their clergy. They adopted a new article of faith but represented the Presbyterian Church of the country enjoying its full spiritual liberty. They maintained, however, that the Church and State should be in intimate alliance. In 1876 they were joined by the Camerons or Reformed Presbyterians and by the United Presbyterians in 1880 when they assumed the name of the United Free Church of Scotland. A small minority resisted fusion and these were successful in the House of Lords in claiming, as the original Free Church, nearly all the buildings. This was rectified by an Act of Parliament which permitted them to retain only such churches and other edifices as were proportionate to their need.—C.E.

Freedom of Assembly. As society is natural to man, the general right to meet for mutual helpfulness is natural, but this general right would not necessarily cover specific instances. The right of free assembly to discuss political and social problems is guaranteed by the federal constitution of the United States. This right is not inherent, any more than the right to vote is inherent. Even under the democratic form of government this right is sometimes limited where it is thought that the assembly would endanger public peace. Under a more autocratic government, assembly for political purposes might be prohibited almost entirely. Catholic doctrine or philosophy does not presume to limit the general right to meet for mutual help, and the suppression of open discussion may lead to spreading information in ways doing more harm than would the open discussion of such facts; and the suppression of open discussion may lead to underground discontent resulting in ultimate revolt. Particularly in the political field, where there is usually room for difference of opinion, freedom of speech and of the press is likely to act as a safety valve, and be the lesser of two evils. Progress frequently comes from the clash of opinions. Governments, civil and ecclesiastical, may wisely adopt something of God's tolerance. (J. E. R.)

Freedom of Thought. At the basis of human personality is a certain power of the intellect to discriminate between true and false. To this extent the intellect is "free," as contrasted with a purely mechanized reaction disregarding the truth or falsity of a proposition. "Freedom of thought" in this sense is necessary for freedom of will as opposed to determinism. However, one is not free to think anything at all, as, that two and two make five. In so far as the intellect recognizes a statement as true, it is not free to think it false. As long as a man's thinking remains purely internal, it is, of course, beyond the control of the State, but it may indirectly come under the control of the Church. Thus one who recognizes the infallibility of the Church is not free to think that on a particular point, as the Virgin Birth, she has erred. (J. E. R.)

Freedom of Worship. The Catholic Church naturally has the right to preach Christ's Gospel to every creature by speech and by writing, and she has the right freely to worship God. However, the toleration of the individual, as of the individual, to follow his own conscience, and it would be unjust to force an external compliance that would be merely hypocritical. The individual's interior conviction is the important thing, and that cannot be reached by material force. But such freedom of worship is not unlimited, and the most tolerant governments have from time to time suppressed practices indulged in under the name of religion. Thus, Great Britain forbade the sutee in India, and the United States suppressed Mormon polygamy. In the past, Protestant countries have proscribed Catholic worship, and Catholic countries have proscribed Protestant worship. It is difficult for us now to see the justification of such measures, but it is probably true that if all Europe had had any large number of Protestants in a Catholic country, or vice versa, would have endangered the civil peace. Religion and politics were unfortunately inextricably mixed. Church and State were so united that disloyalty to one was disloyalty to the other. One could not be a heretic without being a traitor. It is to be hoped that we have progressed beyond such a condition. (J. E. R.)

Free-thinker, one who rejects Christian Revelation and bases his belief or opinion solely on the findings of reason.—C.E.

Free thought, thought founded on a disregard of religions or ethical authority.

Free Will, the liberty by which the will, when all conditions requisite for the production of an act are fulfilled, can place the act or refrain from it. Free will includes not only immunity from external coercion or force but also immunity from that internal necessity which determines a faculty to one way of acting. There is an indifference in the human will toward all objects (if we except attitude and objects such as existence and life when viewed as necessary means to beatitude, and God intuitively known) which is removed by the will itself. The conditions prerequisite are that God be willing to give (according to Molinism) or give (according to Thomism) the proper concursus and that the intellect offer motives for placing the act and motives for abstaining from it. Hence free will does not imply choosing blindly and without motives but among motives. The motives influence the will but do not determine or necessitate it. The determining factor is the will itself. Free will does not introduce a "causeless" act, an effect without a cause, since the "efficient cause" of a free act of the will is the will itself, i.e., the ego, the one through the will; and the "final cause" is the motive which prompts the act. Since the consciousness of men, which we must accept as a criterion of truth under pain of falling into absolute scepticism, testifies so crushingly to the existence of freedom, in practise the doctrine of free will is held by all men. Those who preach determinism live and act by the grace of God, which removes freedom from the human will. —C.E.; Gruner, Free Will, St. L., 1911. (J. F. g.)

Free Will Baptists, religious body organized in Chowan Co., N. C., in 1727 by Elder Paul Palmer. For a long time this body had no particular name, later being called Free Will Baptists and still later becoming known as Original Free Will Baptists. Since 1890 they have dropped the term "Original." Accepting the five points of Arminianism as opposed to the five points of Calvinism, they declare, in a confession of faith of 18 articles, that Christ "freely gave Himself a ransom for all, tasting death for every man"; that "God wants all to come to repentance"; and that "all men, at one time or another, are found in such capacity as that, through the grace of God, they may be eternally saved." The believers' baptism by immersion is considered the only necessary requisite for admission. They uniformly practise open communion, and believe in foot-washing and anointing the sick with oil. The Free Will Baptists are congregational in government. In the United States there are: 876 ministers; 762 churches; and 54,996 communicants.

Freiburg im Breisgau, University of, founded John, 6, there is the Divine command to receive Holy Communion worthily, which binds in any danger of death and some time during one's life. The Church, confirming this Divine command, adds besides her precept of Paschal Communion under pain of mortal sin. She further exhorts all the faithful, who are properly disposed, to receive frequently, and even daily, but not more than three a day. The proper disposition as indicated by Pope Pius X requires nothing beyond the state of grace (freedom from mortal sin) and a right and pious intention in communicating, e.g., of honoring God, increasing in charity, overcoming faults, etc., and not merely from routine or vanity. It is recommended, however, to keep oneself free from venial sin, at least from those fully deliberate, and from the affliction thereof, and to seek the advice of one's confessor on the frequency of Frequent Communion.—C.E.; Devine, Frequent and Holy Communion, St. L., 1923; De Zulueta, Notes on Daily Communion, St. L., 1924.

Fresco (It., fresh), painting in water-color on a freshly laid wet surface of absorbent plaster. In true fresco (buon fresco), the earth pigments are mixed with water of hydrate of lime on a wet surface; in dry fresco (fresco secco), the dry surface is wetted with water only just before touching. Real frescoes adorned the walls of prehistoric caves, the palaces of Mycene and Tiryns (1300 B.C.), and were used by the Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, and early Christians in the catacombs. Fresco painting was revived again in the 12th and 13th centuries under Giotto, Cimabue, Orcagna, and later by Michelangelo, Pinturichio, Leonardo da Vinci, Guido Reni, and the modern Puvis de Chavannes.

Fresnel, Augustin Jean (1788-1827), physicist, b. Broglio, Normandy, France; d. Ville d’Avray, near Paris. He occupies a prominent place among French scientists. He extended the work of Huyghens on double refraction and developed the theory bearing his name, 1743. Jesuit missionary and cartographer, b. Linz, Austria; d. Peking. With Frs. Regis, Jartoux, and.. Lord and for this reason a day on which the faithful abstain from meat. Mention of this practise is made in the “Teaching of the Apostles,” and by Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and Pope Nicholas I (858-867), who declared abstinence on that day to be obligatory throughout the Church.

Friday (Scandinavian goddess, Frigg), day of the week on which Christ died, consecrated by the Church for devotion to the Passion of Our Lord and for this reason a day on which the faithful abstain from meat. Mention of this practice is made in the “Teaching of the Apostles,” and by Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and Pope Nicholas I (858-867), who declared abstinence on that day to be obligatory throughout the Church.

Frideswide, Saint, virgin (c. 650-735), abbess. The daughter of the noble Didan, she fled to Oxford to escape marriage with King Algar. Her monastery was transformed into Christ Church College, and her church became Oxford cathedral. In 1561 Calhull, Canon of Christ Church, desecrated her relics, mingling them with those of a runaway nun. Patroness of Oxford. Feast, 19 Oct.—C.E.; Butler.

Friend at Midnight. This parable (Luke, 11), the lesson of which recalls somewhat that of the parable of the widow and the unjust judge (Luke, 18), teaches the efficacy of perseverance in prayer. An unexpected visitor having arrived, his host finds himself unprepared to entertain him as he would like to do. In spite of the lateness of the hour he goes to a neighbor and asks for the loan of some loaves of bread. The neighbor begins by refusing on account of the trouble it will cause him and the rest of his household. The refusal, however final it may sound, does not discourage the petitioner, who finally obtains his request.—Fonck, tr. Leahy, Parables of the Gospel, N. Y., 1916. (E. A. A.)

Friends, a group of religious bodies, including: the Orthodox Society of Friends; the Hickite So.
society of Friends, dissenters under the leadership of Elias Hicks; the Wilburite Orthodox Conservative Friends, separatists under the leadership of John Wilbur; and the Religious Society of Friends of Philadelphia who seceded from the Wilburites. In the United States in 1825 all four bodies had: 1361 ministers; 939 churches; and 115,528 members. The religious movement known as the Society of Friends (Orthodox), and commonly called Quakers, and also Children of Truth, Children of Light, Friends of Truth, began in England about the middle of the 17th century under the direction of George Fox. The Quakers suffered persecution in Massachusetts, Virginia, and Connecticut, but were cordially received in Rhode Island. The first meeting-house was established, 1756. Although the first attitude of the Friends was to treat slavery with toleration, many dissensions arose and finally “in 1776 slaveholders were to be ‘disowned’ if they refused to manumit their slaves.” They were subject to much suffering during the Revolution since they took no part in the war because of their religion. A small body of Friends actively supported the Revolution, and were disowned or seceded. They were known as the Free or Fighting Quakers, but after the war they disappeared, and the Friends loyally supported the new government. Although the doctrine of the Orthodox Friends agrees in essential points with that of the Christian Church, they differ in the manner of worship and appointment of ministers; attach great importance to the immediate personal teaching of the Holy Spirit, or Light Within, or Inner Light; have no outward ordinances, including Baptism and the Supper, on the ground that they are not essential, were not commanded by Christ, and, moreover, tend to draw the soul away from the essential to the nonessential and formal; and teach the doctrine of peace and nonresistance, in accordance with which no Friend can fight or directly support war. Monthly, quarterly, and yearly meetings, purely business organizations, are held, and woman is absolutely equal with man in Friends’ polity. They publish four periodicals. Foreign missionary work is carried on in Syria, India, China, Japan, British East Africa, Mexico, Guatemala, Cuba, Jamaica, and Alaska. In 1916 there were: 32 stations; 98 missionaries, with 198 native helpers; 28 churches, with 2279 members; and 71 schools, with 4117 pupils. In 1925 in the United States the Orthodox Friends had: 1312 ministers; 753 churches; and 95,128 members.—C.E.

Fringes (in Scripture), an ornament of Jewish costume, consisting of four tassels fastened with blue cords to the corners of the simlah (shawl). They were prescribed by God (Num., 15), and served as reminders of His commandments. Our Lord also wore them; the Pharisees made theirs extra large (Matt., 23).—C.E. (M. S.)

Frisians, Teutonic people occupying the coastlands from the Scheldt to the Ems, related to the Angles and the Saxons, speaking a Low German dialect, mentioned by Tacitus. In the 7th century those in the southwest were subdued by the Franks under Pepin of Herstal. Under the leadership of Radbod, a fanatical pagan, they obtained possession of Frisia (716), forced St. Willibrord and the missionaries to leave, but finally were forced to surrender Western Frisia to keep the peace. Their conquest and Christianization was completed by Charlemagne. Old Frisian literature consists of collections of laws, epics, poems, and sagas.

Froissart, frwär-sär, Jean (c. 1337–c. 1410), chronicler and poet, b. Valenciennes, France; d. Chimay. During his travels through France, England, and Italy, he gathered the materials for his “Chronicles” which deal mostly with the conflict between France and England from Philip VI to Charles VI. Froissart is a reporter rather than a historian, for he lacks critical sense, but his descriptions of the feudal world entering upon its decadence are vivid and picturesque.

Frontenac, Louis de Buade, Count of (1622–98), governor of New France, b. Paris; d. Quebec. Having acquired a brilliant reputation on the European battlefields he was sent to New France in 1672, and promoted the discoveries of Joliet and La Salle, but his haughtiness caused him to be recalled in 1682. His successor, Denonville, was a failure and when the colony was threatened with disaster, Frontenac was sent back in 1689 to face the English and their Iroquois allies, which he did with complete success. At death he left Canada in peace and respect.—C.E.

Frontlets. See Phylacteries.

Fruitusosus, Saint (d. c. 665), Abp. of Braga, Portugal. The son of a Gothic general, he studied at Palencia and later retired as a hermit to a desert in Galicia. He founded 10 monasteries, including Complutum. Appointed Bp. of Dumiun, 654, he received the Archbishopric of Braga, 656, and attended the synod of Toledo that same year. Represented in art with a stag which he had saved. Relics at Compostela. Feast, 16 April.—C.E.; Butler.

Fruits of the Holy Ghost are commonly understood to be the supernatural works that are done joyously and with peace of soul. St. Paul lists these fruits (Gal., 5) as “charity, joy, peace, patience, benignity, goodness, longanimity, mildness, faith, modesty, continency, and chastity.” These fruits are the acts of those supernatural virtues and gifts of an abiding character which are infused into the soul of the just by the Holy Ghost.

Fruentius, Saint, confessor (d. 383), Bp. of Axum, and apostle of Abyssinia, b. Tyre, Phenicia. With his brother Eudesius, he accompanied his uncle Metropius to Abyssinia. On the journey they were overtaken by pirates, and all were killed except the two brothers, who were taken as slaves to the court of the King of Axum. They gained the favor of the king and propagated Christianity throughout the kingdom. Fruentius journeyed to Alexandria, where he was consecrated bishop by St. Athanasius, c. 382. He returned to Abyssinia, established his see at Axum, and was called Abuna (Our Father) or Abba Salama (Father of Peace). Feast, 27 Oct.—C.E.; Butler.

Fulda, town, Hesse-Nassau, Prussia, and former principality of the Holy Roman Empire. It grew up around a Benedictine Abbey founded by St. Boniface (744). In 968 the Abbot of Fulda was made primate of all the Benedictine abbeys in Germany and Gaul, and from the 12th century ranked as a prince of the empire, enjoying the rights and privileges of princes in the deliberation of Diets and also the distinction of sitting at the left of the emperor. He possessed sovereign power over a considerable territory around the abbey, which was a famous seat of learning including among its teachers Alcuin, Rabanus Maurus, and Strabo. Its importance as a school declined in the 12th century on account of the relaxation of monastic discipline. The state became a bishopric, 1776, and later a prince-bishop. It was secularized, 1803, and divided between Bavaria and Hesse-Kassel respectively.

Fulgentius, Fabius Claudius Gordianus, Saint, confessor (d. 430), Bp. of Ruspe, Africa, b. Telepte. He was appointed provincial fiscal procurator, but soon entered a monastery, was ordained, and became superior. At that time the Arian persecutions had ceased, but the election of Catholic bishops was forbidden. In 508 it became necessary to defy the law, and bishops were consecrated, Fulgentius being chosen for Ruspe. Soon all the new bishops were exiled to Sardinia. Fulgentius was invited back to Carthage to hold a disputation, c. 515, and successfully refuted his Arian opponents. He was sent back to Sardinia where he erected a monastery, and wrote many fine treatises, sermons, and letters. In 528 the accession of Hilderic brought grant is a duty evident from merely philosophical reasoning. With this principle valid, fundamental theology goes on to prove from natural reason the twofold fact of a supernatural revelation actually granted and of an authoritative interpreter permanently established. So far it may be said to be an amplification of philosophy, since it continues to use as its principle of assent the lumen rationis (light of reason). The name fundamental theology is employed because the twofold demonstration just Fundamental Theology, also called Aracology, is the science which demonstrates that God has granted a supernatural revelation and has established a Church to be the custodian and interpreter of this revelation. As a science, it stands midway between philosophy and theology, Man's duty of conforming his belief and conduct to what he considers essential, religious, or scientific, whence their activity in behalf of anti-evolution legislation. In practice the Fundamentalists do not concede their coreligionists the exercise of their professed right of privately interpreting the Scriptures. In the theological sense fundamentalism means the adherence given to the fundamentals of God's revelation, as contained in the inspired Word of God and in Divine Tradition, and as proposed by the infallible dogmatists, and that of all the angels and saints. Granting Christ's obvious and necessary superiority, we may assume with Suarez that Mary's sanctifying grace transcends by far the combined sanctity of all other creatures.—Fohle-Pruess, Mariology, St. L., 1922.

Fundamentalism

Fundamentalism. The Abbot of Fulda was modern Protestant theologians to distinguish between what they consider as essential articles of Christian faith and those which they consider non-essential. Dissident churches might agree on the essential and thus form one body though disagreeing on the non-essential. The difficulty is of course to get any two Protestant churches to determine what is and what is not essential. It was in controversy on this point with the Calvinist Jurieu that Bossuet wrote his classic: "History of the Differences among Protestant Churches." The Catholic position is that every revealed truth is fundamental or essential and that, no matter how less in importance it may seem than other truths, to reject it is to reject the word of God.—C.E. (M.)

Fundamental Articles, a phalanx of French and Italian works. Among her novels are “Lady Bird,” “Too Strange Not to Be True,” and “A Will and a Way.” She translated Baumard's "Life of the Venerable Mother Barnat."—C.E.

Fundamentalism

Fundamentalism. The difficulty is of course to get any two Protestant churches to determine what is and what is not essential. It was in controversy on this point with the Calvinist Jurieu that Bossuet wrote his classic: "History of the Differences among Protestant Churches." The Catholic position is that every revealed truth is fundamental or essential and that, no matter how less in importance it may seem than other truths, to reject it is to reject the word of God.—C.E. (M.)

Fundamental Articles

Fundamental Articles. A phalanx of French and Italian works. Among her novels are "Lady Bird," "Too Strange Not to Be True," and "A Will and a Way." She translated Baumard's "Life of the Venerable Mother Barnat."—C.E.
noted prepares the way for the lumen fidei (light of faith), for the acceptance, that is to say, on the part of men of good will of revelation's content. This content is, of course, the very subject matter of theology. The true concept of revelation, so regrettably obscured by higher critics and liberal Protestants and modernists, must be insisted on by the Catholic apologete. Revelation is neither the manifestation of God contained in the works of creation, nor any religious consciousness, individual or collective, but is the Creator speaking to His creature and proposing religious truth to be believed on Divine authority. What means God may use thus to speak to man, what utility there is in the communication, how man is to judge between genuine and spurious revelation, these are questions that next demand satisfactory answers.

The questions answered, the apologete addresses himself to the demonstratio Christiana, the demonstration that Jesus Christ claimed and proved Himself to be a legate sent by God to teach a doctrine of salvation obligatory on all men. In the course of this demonstration the four Gospels are used merely as historical documents, in which we read what Jesus Christ explicitly claimed to be, what doctrines He taught, what Divine credentials (wondering of miracles, uttering and fulfilling of prophecies) He presented in proof of His claim. The demonstratio Christiana culminates in the stupendous and irrefutable argument of the Resurrection. The purpose of the demonstratio Catholica is to prove that Christ founded a Church to be the depository and interpreter of Divine revelation, the dispenser of the means of salvation, the ruler of man's conduct. All this is shown from Christ's own words and defended against those Christians who deny that Christ entrusted the continuance of His mission to an organized society. What its Founder's intention is as to the constitution of the Church, next demands attention. That this constitution is not democratic, but hierarchical, with bishops and priests to rule the faithful, and monarchical, with the plenitude of jurisdictional power possessed by one head, is proved scripturally as well as from the testimony of authentic tradition. Now the next step of the apologete and the next enquiry of the sincere seeker of truth is the identification of Christ's Church among the many Churches that profess to be such. The identification is effected by means of four notes or characteristics, which are Apostolicity, Unity, Sanctity, Universality. Tracing its origin to the very age of Christ's own Apostles, one throughout its history in doctrine and government, holy extensively in the lives of evangelical virtue of a great many of its members as well as intensively in the extraordinary sanctity of a notable number, universal in being the Church not of particular polity or region, but of every nation under heaven, the true Church must stand revealed as the City of God seated upon the mountain. A calm application of the test of the four notes shows that the Roman Catholic Church alone possesses them. This is the final conclusion of the demonstratio Catholica as second part of fundamental theology. — Brunsmann-Preuss, Fundamental Theology, St. L., 1928.

Funeral Pall, black cloth, usually with a white cross worked through its length and breadth, spread over a coffin or catafalque during the performance of obsequies.—C.E.

Furness Abbey, a Benedictine monastery in northern Lancashire, England, about 3 m. from Ulverston. Stephen, later King of England, in 1127 gave the valuable forest of Furness to monks of the Savigny Reform. Calder, Swnyeshead, and Rushin were founded by colonies of monks from Furness, and in 1148 all the Savigny monks adopted the Cistercian Reform. Communication between Furness and the Isle of Man was fostered through Rushin; several members of the Furness community became Bishops of Man. Shortly after the visit of royal commissioners to Furness, 1535, accusations were brought against the monks implicating them in the Pilgrimage of Grace, and in 1537 they were forced to surrender their abbey to the Crown. Title to the property was several times transferred, and is now held by the dukes of Devonshire. —C.E.

Fursey, Saint, confessor (d. 650), Abbot of Lagry; b. Clonfert, Ireland; d. Forsheim, France. He was baptized by his great-uncle, St. Brendan the voyager, and entered his monastery at Inisquin. Several years later he founded the monastery of Clonfert, where he was joined by his brothers Sts. Foillan and Ultran. He then passed 12 years in mission work in Ireland, and c. 633 proceeded to East Anglia, where he erected the monastery of Ciboheresburg and evangelized the Saxons. Forced to disband his monks owing to a war, he migrated to France, where he preached in Normandy and Neustria and established a monastery at Lagry near Chelles. Represented in art with two oxen at his feet; striking water from the soil at Lagry; beholding a vision of angels; or gazing at the flames of purgatory and hell. Relics at Péronne. Feast, 16 Jan.—C.E.; Butler.
Gabba'atha (Heb., raised), Aramaic name of a place in Jerusalem where Pilate had his judgment-seat, and whither he caused Jesus to be brought forth, that he might condemn Him to death (John, 19).—C.E.

Gabriel (Heb., hero of God), Saint, the Archangel, one of the seven angels who “stand before God.” Mention of him occurs four times in the Bible; he foretold the destruction of the Persian Empire by Alexander the Great and its division among his generals after his death (Dan., 8), interpreted to Daniel the Messianic visions (Dan., 9); predicted to Zachary the birth of the precursor (Luke, 1); and announced to Mary that she was to be the mother of God (Luke, 1). The Jews venerated Gabriel as the angel of judgment and placed him after Michael; Christian tradition holds that it was he who appeared to St. Joseph and the angels, and who strengthened Our Lord in the garden at Gethsemane. Patron of postal employees. Feast, R. Cal., 24 March.—C.E.; Edersheim, Jesus the Messiah, 22, contemporary of King David. (4) Pagan divinity (Is., 65, 11, where the Hebrew Gad is rendered “fortune”).—C.E.

Gaels, inhabitants of Ireland, after the 1st century n.c. They were organized in tribal communities, each clan being governed by a chief, who was always a member of the ruling family, or by a king. There were also the two assemblies, the druids who charmed the evil spirits, the ollamhs (professors of law), and bardis who had charge of the genealogies and reduced them to writing. They worshiped forces or objects of nature and were Christianized by St. Patrick. Through them Irish literature and culture reached its acme.

Gal, Saint, confessor (c. 490-551), Bp. of Clermont-Ferrand, France (527-551). Of a senatorial family of Auvergne, he early embraced the monastic life, and was elevated to the See of Clermont, 527. The chief event of his episcopate was the Council of Clermont, 535, which drew up 17 canons, 16 of which have become laws of the Universal Church. He assisted at the Council of Orleans, 541, which decreed the abolition of slavery, and at the 5th council, 549, at which the errors of Eutyches and Nestorius were condemned. Feast, 3 July. Another St. Gal, Bp. of Clermont (640-650), is honored on 1 Nov.—C.E.; Butler.

Galatians, Epistle to the, written by St. Paul to warn the churches of Galatia not to heed those who were urging them to submit to circumcision. These false teachers, known as Judaizers, announced that all Christians must be circumcised in order to be saved; according to some scholars their doctrine took the milder form of teaching merely that circumcision was necessary, if not for salvation, at least for Christian perfection. In either case they found Paul opposed to them and consequently tried to lessen his authority with the Galatians by representing him as a mere disciple of the other Apostles and as one who had failed to learn the Gospel correctly, since on this important point of circumcision he was at variance with the real Apostles. In this epistle Paul first vindicates the supernatural origin of his doctrine showing that he had received it directly from Christ and not from men (1), and then he recalls the historic occasion when he had laid his doctrine concerning circumcision before the Apostles at Jerusalem and they had fully approved it (2). Appealing to the spiritual experiences of the Galatians and to the testimony of Scripture, he proves that salvation is through Christ alone (3; 4). The Galatians then are not under the bondage of the Old Law; still they may commit sin. The Judaizers are seeking their own glory, not the good of the Galatians; true glory is found only in the cross of Christ (5; 6). Paul writes at least the last few lines with his own hand.

The epistle was probably addressed to the churches in Galatia Proper, situated in the north-central part of Asia Minor. Galatia, however, was also the name of the Roman province embracing Galatia Proper and the region to the south of it in which were Antioch of Pisidia, Iconium, Lystra, and Derbe, the cities evangelized by Paul on his first missionary journey; many hold that the epistle was addressed to these southern churches. Hence there are two theories regarding the churches addressed by the North Galatian and the South Galatian theories. The South Galatian theory was formulated by Mynster in 1825 and became popular toward the end of the last century. The North Galatian theory never lacked able defenders and in recent years has been coming into favor again; its chief recommendation is that it better satisfies the strict demands of the text of the epistle especially in the phrase “through infirmity of the flesh” (4, 13) in which Paul says that he had first preached among the Galatians because of some illness. No such sudden illness seems possible as an explanation for the beginning of the strenuous and deliberately planned work of the Apostle in the Church of southern Galatia as described in the Acts of the Apostles. Besides, the Galatians seem to have been bewildered by the novelty of the attack made on their faith by the Judaizers, but this could hardly have been the case in southern Galatia where Paul had published the decisions of the Council of Jerusalem and where in consequence the tactics of the Judaizers must have been well known. The epistle was probably written, either from Ephesus or Corinth, between A.D. 55 and 58. It was only on his second missionary journey that Paul preached in Galatia Proper, and from the epistle it seems that at the time of writing he had revisited it on his third journey. The South Galatian theory admits a much earlier date, some of its advocates even considering this the first of all Paul’s epistles. Controversy has long raged concerning the identification of the visit to Jerusalem (2) ; some seek to make it the same as the alms-visit of Acts, 11, 30, but there seems to be no doubt that it is to be identified with the visit described in Acts, 15, where the question of circumcision was decided.

Galerius, Valerius Maximianus (d. 311), emperor, b. Illyria. He was an illiterate shepherd, who married the daughter of Diocletian and was adopted by him. In 293 he was made Caesar, receiving the Danubian territories, and succeeding Diocletian as Emperor of the East, 305. He is responsible for the violent persecution of Christianity begun by his father-in-law, 303, which terminated, 311, when he was menaced by Constantine and Maxentius.—C.E.

Gallean (Heb., gātal, to roll), name of Christ denoting His native land, the scene of His first ministry and many of His works, the region from which He chose the Apostles term applied to Christ by Julian the Apostate: “Thou hast conquered, O Galilean.” (ed.)

Galilee (Heb., district), most northern of the three provinces of Palestine west of the Jordan at the time of Our Lord, comprising in general the territory assigned by Josue to the tribes of Asher, Naphtali, Zabulon, and Issachar. It was the native land of Jesus Christ, the cradle of the Christian Faith, where He began His ministry and performed many of His miracles, and from whence came His Apostles. Joseph and Mary belonged to Nazareth, the chief city in the south, and there Jesus lived the greater part of His life. Galilee’s fertility, invigorating climate, forests, vineyards, lakes, rivers, and prosperous cities gave it a varied and attractive aspect.—C.E.; Merrill, Galilee in the time of Christ, Lond., 1891.

Galilee, Sea of, a lake in Palestine, about 13 m. long, and 7½ m. wide, which lies in the Jordan gorge. In the time of Our Lord, vines and fig-trees and thick forests surrounded it, the nearby plains yielded rich harvests twice a year, and many cities were situated on its shores. Today they are barren and desolate, with only a few struggling villages. The Sea of Galilee is closely connected with the life of Our Lord: He came and went from one side to another with His disciples, to spread His teaching and perform miracles; commanded the winds and sea, and there came a great calm (Matt., 8); walked on its surface (Matt., 14); and explained the parables (Matt., 13). There took place the two miraculous draughts of fishes, after the first of which the Apostles were called (Luke, 5) and after the second Peter was made Vicar of Jesus Christ on earth (John, 21). On another occasion a tax was paid through a miraculous catch (Matt., 17).—Meiermann, New Guide to the Holy Land, Lond., 1907.

Galilee Porch, a porch or chapel at the entrance of a church, corresponding to the ancient atrium. It is also applied to the nave of a large church or the entrance end of the nave architecturally divided from the rest. One of the finest examples in England is that of Durham cathedral.
Galilei, Galileo (1564-1642), physicist and astronomer, b. Pisa, Italy; d. Arcetri. One of the greatest natural philosophers of his day, he refused to accept the authority of Aristotle and arrived at his conclusions by combining calculation with experiment. Among his contributions to the field of science were: the discovery of the isochronism of the pendulum; a demonstration of the laws of projectiles; the first satisfactory demonstration of the laws of equilibrium, and the principle of virtual velocities; an exposition of the true principle of flotation; his discovery of physical features on the moon resembling those on the earth, and the satellites of Jupiter, both of which resulted from his construction of a telescope which magnified 32 times. He lectured at the University of Pisa, and taught mathematics at the University of Padua, 1592-1610. His support of the heliocentric system of Copernicus in opposition to the geocentric of Ptolemy aroused antagonism among the scientists of his day. Unfortunately, in the manner of the time, he treated his opponents too often with ridicule and contempt and thus intensified their hostility. In 1615 Galileo came to Rome at the request of the Holy Office, which condemned the Copernican system as anti-scriptural and therefore heretical. He promised not to spread Copernican teachings, which were as yet only hypothetical. After leaving Rome he continued to advocate the Copernican system and for this he was summoned to trial for breach of contract. During his imprisonment he was allowed considerable freedom and spent only 22 days in the buildings of the Holy Office. He received the special blessing of Urban VIII before his death and was buried in consecrated ground. In 1623 he was revived and that the condemnation of Galileo by the Inquisition shows that the Church was opposed to the progress of science, it must be understood that neither Paul III nor Urban VIII condemned his teachings ex cathedra, and that the Inquisition is powerless to make a dogmatic decree. The trial of 1615 condemned the spread of Copernican propaganda as anti-scriptural, while the trial of 1633 was concerned with Galileo's breach of contract in refusing to abide by his promise made during the first trial. —C.E.

Galitzin, Elizabeth (1797-1843), princess, b. St. Petersburg; d. Louisiana. She was converted from the Orthodox faith and shortly after entered the Religious of the Sacred Heart at Metz, 1826. She was elected assistant-general, 1839, and while in the United States was stricken with yellow fever, dying a martyr of charity. —C.E.

Call (Callo, Chelleh, Gillianus), Saint, confessor (c. 550-627), Apostle of Switzerland, b. Ireland; d. Arbon, Switzerland. He was a monk, one of the 12 disciples who followed St. Columbanus to Luxeuil, and later to Bregenz, where he led a hermit's life, near the river Steinach. He declined the abbacy of Luxeuil and the episcopacy of Constance. After his death a church was erected in his honor which later grew into a monastery, c. 613. Represented in art with a bear, as there is a legend that a bear once brought wood to feed his fire; also holding a cross, and book. Feast, 16 Oct.—C.E.; Butler.

Gallic, Diocese of, Ceylon, comprises Southern and Saharagamawa provinces; area, 4047 sq. m.; established, 1893; suffragan of Colombo; entrusted to the Society of Jesus and the diocesan clergy. Joseph Van Reeth (1865-1923) was the first bishop. Churches and chapels, 78; priests, secular, 7; priests, regular, 23; religious women, 64; parochial schools, 42; institutions, 4; Catholics, 14,640.

Gallia Christiana, a documentary catalogue, with historical notices, of all the dioceses and abbeys of France from the earliest times, also of their occupants. The work, published at intervals from 1821, comprises at present about 25 volumes.—C.E.

Gallican Articles, the famous "Four Articles" drawn up by the Assembly of the French Clergy, convened by order of Louis XIV in 1682. On 19 March it voted the Articles, a summary of which follows: kings and sovereigns are not by God's command subject to any ecclesiastical dominion in things temporal; the decrees of the Council of Constance (4th and 5th sessions) remain valid and immovable, and therefore the pope is at all times inferior to the council; the exercise of the pontifical authority must be regulated by the canons and the pope is bound to respect the customs and maxims of the Church of France; the pope's judgment, even in matters of faith, is not irrefutable, unless confirmed by the consent of the universal Church. Outside of France the Articles were violently attacked and even in France they met with strong opposition. Alexander VIII proclaimed null and void all the declarations of the Assembly concerning papal authority; on the other hand, Louis XIV forbade the bishops nominated by him to seek their Bulls in Rome. The conflict lasted until 1693 when the king practically revoked the offensive Articles, which, however, remained the living symbol of Gallicanism until the 19th century. (F. P. D.)

Gallicanism, a body of doctrines which found particular favor in the French or Gallican Church, and tended to limit the power of the pope in favor of the bishops, and also to extend unduly the power of the State over ecclesiastical affairs; hence the familiar distinction between ecclesiastical and political Gallicanism, the former affecting the very constitution of the Church, the latter affecting the relations between Church and State. The two, however, were usually mingled, as too often civil rulers found willing tools in bishops and clergy. Ecclesiastical Gallicanism was the consequence of the Great Western Schism, during which the idea of the pope's supremacy was badly obscured. Political Gallicanism is traceable to the Byzantine emperors who interfered constantly in ecclesiastical affairs, to the German emperors of the Middle Ages and their neo-Cesarism, and to Philip the Fair of France and his struggle with Boniface VIII (q.v.). The first exponents of Gallicanism were the Franciscan William of Occam, John of Jandun, and Marsilius of Padua who in the 14th century denied the divine origin of the papal primacy and subjected its exercise to the pleasure of the civil ruler. After the Great Western Schism, the conciliar theory (superiority of the council over the pope) found favor and was formulated by Gerson and Peter d'Ailly.
The Council of Constance (1414-18) gave official sanction to this doctrine and the promulgation of its 4th and 5th sessions may be regarded as the real birthday of Gallicanism. The Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges (1438) reduced the theory to practicable form and undertook to regulate the administration of the churches independently from the popes. Gallicanism seemed to die away during the 16th century, but revived after the death of Henry IV (1610). The Sorbonne endorsed it, 1663, and in 1682 the famous Assembly of the Clergy published the "Four Articles" (see Gallican Articles), which became obligatory in all schools and faculties of theology. The French Revolution, by persecuting the Church, drove the bishops into the arms of the pope and dealt a mortal blow to Gallicanism. It survived, however, until the middle of the 19th century, and when the Vatican Council opened in 1869, it still had a few timid partisans in France. From France, Gallicanism spread during the 18th century into the Netherlands, thanks to the canonist Van Espen, and into Germany, through the efforts of Honthem (Febroinianus); it became known as Febronianism, and Josephism, after Joseph II of Austria, the "Sacristan Emperor." The Council of Pistoia, 1786, tried to introduce it into Italy. Stricken down by the Vatican Council, Gallicanism has only a very few adherents left in Switzerland and Germany, under the name of "Old Catholics." —C.E. (P. P. D.)

Gallican Liberties. In 1594 a famous Parisian jurist, Pierre Pithou, published a book entitled "The Liberties of the Gallican Church." It was directed both against the pope, whose authority was limited in favor of the bishops, and against the bishops who, in the discharge of their duties, were unduly subjected to the royal power. The book was a veritable code of Gallicanism in 83 articles. Among the so-called "Liberties," the following may be noted: the kings have the right to assemble councils and to make laws concerning ecclesiastical affairs; the pope's legates cannot be sent to France nor, a fortiori, exercise any power in the kingdom without the king's consent; the king may prevent bishops from communicating with the pope and from leaving the kingdom to repair to Rome; the publication of papal decrees and ordinances is subject to the king's approval; it is lawful to appeal from the pope to a future council. These pretensions were embodied again in the book of the brothers, Pierre and Jacques Dupuy, "The Rights and Liberties of the Gallican Church, with their proofs" (1636). Louis XIV constantly appealed to them in his dealings with the Holy See, as was shown especially by the affair of the Régalé (q.v.). —C.E. (P. P. D.)

Gallican Rite, the rite which prevailed in Gaul from about the 4th to the 8th century. It must not be considered as a general uniform rite, but a variety of uses built around a common outline. Its origin is disputed. Some hold it to be of Roman descent, others Eastern, others a local development of the original common rite brought by the first missionaries. Some differences from the Roman Rite are to be found in the arrangement of the liturgical year. In the Mass the catechumens were dismissed before the Offertory. The bread and wine for the sacrifice were brought in amidst great ceremony. The prayers of nearly the entire Mass were variable according to the day. The liturgies used at Milan and Toledo today are generally believed to be Romanized survivals of the Gallican Rite. —C.E. (M. E. D.)

Gallicanus, Saint, martyr (362), d. Egypt. He was a Roman general and consul, converted to Christianity, and exiled to Egypt by Julian the Apostate. Iowthwaite has dramatized his conversion. A church in Trastevere, Rome, is named for him. With him are commemorated two 6th-century Rps. of Embrun, named Gallicanus. Feast, 25 June.—C.E.

Gallicius, PUBLIUS LICINIUS EGNATUS (c. 218-268), Roman emperor, d. Milan. On succeeding his father, Valerian, Gallicius put an end to the persecution of the Christians, begun in 257. He was as- sinated at Milan, while besieging Aurelius, whom the troops in Italy had proclaimed emperor. —C.E.

Gal lists, brother of Soneca the philosopher and presbyter of Achaia when St. Paul was at Corinthis (Acts, 18). When St. Paul was brought before him, he showed Roman impartiality. He was put to death in one of the persecutions of Nero. —C.E. (P. P. D.)

Galilæus, demetrius Augustine, prince (1770-1840), missionary, b. The Hague; d. Loretto, Pa. He was baptized in the Greek Orthodox Church, but became a Catholic, c. 1787, came to Baltimore, 1792, and entered St. Mary's Seminary and was ordained, 1795. In 1799 he went to McGuire's Settlement in the Alleghenies, erecting a small log church where Loretto, named by him, now stands; there he re-trained 41 pupils. Receiving monastic vows, he spent what he received of his inheritance developing the colony spiritually and industrially. He was one of the first in the United States to defend the Church by writing. Made Vicar-General of Western Pennsylvania, 1827, he refused to allow the proposal of his name for the sees of Cincinnati and Detroit. On the cen- tenary of the Loretto mission, a bronze statue, do- nated by Charles M. Schwab, was erected over the rough-hewn monument marking his grave. —C.E.

Galloway, Dioceae of, Scotland, comprises the counties of Dumfries, nine-tenths of Ayr (south of the Lugton Water), Kirkcudbright, and Wigton; founded by St. Ninian, 397, as the See of Whithorn; divided into six dioceses. Among its bishops have been John McLachlan (1878-93), William Turner (1865-92), priests, 39; congrega- tional schools, 28; Catholic, 16,000.—C.E.

Gallwey, Peter (1829-1906), Jesuit preacher and spiritual director, b. Kil­ farney, Ireland; d. London. Among his writings is "Watches of the Passion." —C.E.

Gallvani, Luigi (1737-1808), physician, b. Bologna, Italy; d. there. He be- came professor of anatomy at Bologna, c. 1762, and held that post till a few months before his death, when he resigned rather than take the civil oath demanded by the Cisalpine Republic. His name has been given to manifestations of current electricity (galvanism). He is famous for his experiments concerning the electrical forces in muscular movements.—C.E.

Galveston, DIOCESE OF, Texas, comprises that part of the State of Texas bounded E. by the Sabine River, w. by the Colorado River, s. by the Gulf of Mexico, and n. by the northern line of the counties of Lampasas, Coryell, McLennan, Limestone, Freestone, Anderson, Cherokee, Nacogdoches and Shelby; area, 43,000 sq. m.; established, 1847; suffragan of New Orleans. Bishops: J. M. Odin (1847-61), C. M. Dubuis (1862-81); retained title of Bp. of Galveston till 1892; P. Dufal, C.S.C. (coadjutor, 1878-80).—C.E. (end.)

Nicholas A. Gallagher (administrator, 1882, succeeding to See of Galveston, 1882-1918), Christopher E. Byrne (1818). Churches, 146; priests, secular, 105; priests, regular, 35; religious women, 568; colleges, 2; seminary, 1; academies, 11; primary schools, 57; pupils in parochial schools, 9021; institutions, 9; Catholics, 139,110.—C.E.

Galway and Kilmacduagh, kil-mac-di'a, DIOCESE OF, Ireland, suffragan of Tuam, comprises Co. Galway, with one parish in Co. Mayo. St. Colman founded a monastery at Kilmacduagh (610) and subsequently became bishop there. The diocese was united with that of Kilfenora in County Clare, 1750. In 1494 Galway, in the Diocese of Annaghdown, obtained exemption from the jurisdiction of Tuam; during the Reformation its churches were taken by the Protestants. In 1831 disputes over the ecclesiastical administration of Galway led to its erection into an episcopal see. Its bishop was appointed Apostolic Administrator of Kilmacduagh and Kilfenora, 1896, and in 1896 the three dioceses were united. Bp. Francis MacCormack retired from the see, 1909; succeeded by Thomas O'Dea (1899-1923) and Thomas O'Doherty (1923). Churches, 53; priests, secular, 62; priests, regular, 24; colleges, 3; high schools, 5; numerous primary schools; institutions, 7; Catholics, 67,271; others, 1432.—C.E.

Gama, Vasco da (1469-1524), discoverer of the sea-route to the East Indies, b. Sines, Portugal; d. Cochin, India. After distinguishing himself against the French, 1490, on the coast of Guinea, Da Gama was commissioned by King Manuel I to complete the discoveries of Dias and De Covilhão. He sailed from Lisbon, 8 July, 1497, reached the coast of Natal on Christmas Day, hence its name, and after touching at Mozambique, Mombasa, and Melinda, reached Calicut, India, 29 May, 1498. Sailing for home, 5 Oct., 1498, he arrived at Lisbon in Sept., 1499. His second voyage in 1502, during which he destroyed 29 of Arab ships-of-war at Calicut, was a brilliant commercial success. In 1524 he was sent out as viceroy to India, and died shortly after his arrival. The story of his discoveries forms a large part of Camões’s "Lusiad."—C.E.

Gaminel (Heb., reward of God), a Pharisee, celebrated doctor of the Law, and teacher of St. Paul. He counseled the Sanhedrin to put St. Peter and the Apostles to death. According to early ecclesiastical tradition, he finally became a Christian.—C.E.

Gambling or Gaming, staking large sums of money or valuable articles on games of pure chance, as for instance, dice, roulette. Playing for small stakes, games that depend more or less on skill, is not gambling. The practise is not wrong in itself, but it is commonly the occasion of wrong, of risking money or property that does not belong to one, of losing what one has enough beyond one's means, of losing what should justly go to one's family, of losing time, of distraction from one's business or other more worthy pursuits.—C.E.

Gang Days (O.E., gang, walking), so called from the processions held on those days. See ROGATION DAYS.

Garcia Moreno, gar-se'it rna-ra'na, Gabriel (1821-75), patriot, President of Ecuador, b. Guayaquil; d. Quito. Graduated in law at Quito, 1844, he entered political life, and after the fall of Roca, whom he had helped defeat the Flores administration, he was exiled. He brought to Ecuador from Panama, with dictator Noboa's permission, some Jesuits expelled from New Granada, thus earning the everlasting enmity of the Liberal party. Advancing a policy defending the welfare of the masses, exploited by politicians, he was again exiled. He returned under general amnesty and was made rector of Quito University, 1856. He fought unsuccessfully for the French educational system, exposed governmental corruption, and organized a provisional government at Quito, and as leader of the Church party. Elected president, 1861, he ratified a concordat with Pius IX, infuriating his adversaries. Garcia Moreno supported his successor, but was forced, 1869, to head a provisional Conservative government to frustrate an impending Liberal coup d'état. When the Holy See was despoiled, 1870, Garcia Moreno, alone of all rulers of the world, protested against the outrageous violations of the Vienna Treaty. After many attempts, he was assassinated near the end of his term of office.—C.E.

Garden of the Soul, a popular work of devotion for the laity, originally brought out by Bp. R. Challoner in 1740, but so altered in subsequent editions that little of the original work remains.

Garesché, Julius Peter (1821-62), soldier, b. near Havana; d. Murfreesboro, Tenn. He entered the U. S. Army and took part in the Mexican War. Wherever stationed, he made himself a center of Catholic activities, being knighted by Pius IX for whom he had helped defeat the Flores administration, was forced, 1869, to head a provisional Conservative government to frustrate an impending Liberal coup d'état. When the Holy See was despoiled, 1870, Garcia Moreno, alone of all rulers of the world, protested against the outrageous violations of the Vienna Treaty. After many attempts, he was assassinated near the end of his term of office.—C.E.

Gariep, PREFECTURE APOTOLIC OF, Cape Colony, Union of South Africa (British possession); established, 1923; bounded s. by the southern limits of... the Richmond, Sterkstroom, Middelburg, Steynsburg, Molteno, Wodehouse, and Barkly East Districts; e. by the eastern limits of Barkly East and the western limits of Basutoland; n. by the northern limits of Rouxville, Smithfield, and the Reit River; and w. by the western boundary of the Hopetown, Britstown, and Richmond Districts; entrusted to the Fathers of the Sacred Heart of St. Quentin. Prefect Apostolic: Francis X Dement, S.C.J. (1923); residence at Allawah North. Churches, 7; stations, 36; priests, 6; schools, 9; orphanage, 1.

Garland. (1) A wreath of flowers or evergreens formerly used in baptismal, nuptial, and funeral rites. (2) A crown of precious metal made for the arrangement of flowers before a shrine at festival times.—C.E.

Garneau, François Xavier (1809-66), historian, b. Quebec; d. there. Having studied law, he was city clerk from 1844 until death. The first volume of his "Histoire du Canada" appeared in 1845, the second in 1846, and the third in 1848; this work although marred by unjust criticism of the doctrine and policy of the Church in its earlier editions is of considerable importance as a pioneering work in the field of Canadian history. By Garneau's request, later editions were revised by an ecclesiastic. His life and death were edifyingly Catholic.

Garnier, Julien (1643-1730), missionary, b. Connerai, France; d. Quebec. He was the first Jesuit ordained in Canada. After establishing a fruitful mission among the Onondagas, he labored successfully among the Senecas for 12 years, till De la Barre's ill-starred expedition, which he endeavored to prevent. Returning in 1701, he resumed his work, meriting the title of Apostle of the Senecas, till Schuyler's expedition extinguished the Seneca mission, 1709.—C.E.

Gaspé, Diocese of, Quebec, comprises Gaspé County and Bonaventure, excepting the townships of Assametquaghan, Restigouche, Milnikek, Matapedia, and Patapedia; established, 1922; suffragan of Quebec; Bishop: Francis X. Ross (1923-). Churches, 53; priests, secular, 57; priests, regular, 12; religious women, 211; seminary, 1; normal school, 1; academy, 1; parish schools, 15; institutions, 2; Catholics, 51,820.

Gaspé, Philippe Aubert de (1760-1871), author, b. Quebec; d. there. Educated at Quebec Seminary, he was early forced to forsake public life, retiring to the country for 30 years of study, producing, at the age of 75, "Les Anciens Canadiens" (The Early Canadians), an historical novel based on fact, illustrating national character and customs, and relating the fall of New France. This and the "Mémoires" (1866), anecdotal history, are authentic chronicles of this obscure, but eventful, period.—C.E.

Gasquet, Francis Aidan (1846-1929), cardinal and scholar; b. London; d. Rome. Ordained a priest of the Order of St. Benedict, 1874; he was elected Prior of Downside Abbey, 1878, and several years later became abbot president of the English Benedictines. He was a member of the Papal Commission of Anglican Orders, and in 1907 Pius X chose him as head of the Commission of Revision of the Vulgate. The first volume, the Book of Genesis, had been published, and the second volume, comprising the rest of the Pentateuch, was in press when he died. In token of his work, Pius X raised him to the cardinalate, 1914, as titular of St. George in Velabro, which he resigned, 1916, for the church of Santa Maria in Campitelli. He served as a member of several congregations of the Curia and was librarian of the Vatican and archivist of the Vatican Archives. He is the chief Catholic historian of the English Reformation, of English monastic life, and of the ecclesiastical history of the Middle Ages in England. His works, remarkable for their research, scholarship, impartiality, and interest, include: "Henry VIII and the English Monasteries"; "Eve of the Reformation"; "English Monastic Life"; "Edward VI and the Book of Common Prayer"; "Parish Life in Medieval England"; "The Old English Bible and other Essays."—Harney, in "America" XLI, 3, 27 April, 1929.

Gassendi, Pierre (1592-1655), philosopher and scientist, b. Champcenestre, Provence, France; d. Paris. After studying theology at Aix and becoming provost of Digne cathedral, he received a chair of mathematics at the Collège Royale de France, where he delivered a series of astronomical lectures. Gassendi, called "the Bacon of France," is especially noteworthy for his attempt to build up a Christian Epicurean philosophy in opposition to the Aristotelian system.—C.E.

Gassner, Johann Joseph (1727-79); priest and celebrated exorcist, b. Braz, Austria; d. Pondorf. When his physicians had failed to restore his health, he applied exorcism and was cured. Convinced that certain maladies were caused by the evil spirit, he utilized the procedure on others with wonderful success. The fame of these cures caused him to be invited to the Diocese of Constance, to Ratisbon, and elsewhere, and everywhere he obtained similar results. He worked openly in the presence of Catholics, Protestants, scientists, and ecclesiastics, following everywhere the directions of the Church ritual. Official records of his cures were made, and the commissions appointed by Ingolstadt University and the imperial government approved of his procedure.—C.E.

Gaston, William (1778-1844), jurist, b. Newbern, N. C.; d. Raleigh. After serving as state senator and Federalist congressman, he was elected judge of the Supreme Court of North Carolina. In 1835 he was mainly responsible for the repeal of the constitutional provision which practically disenfranchised Catholics in his native state. —C.E.

Gate-House Chapel. Medieval monasteries as well as towns were enclosed with walls, the entrance of which was through a small house built into the wall and called a gate-house. It was not uncommon to have a chapel in these houses, hence the name, gate-house chapel. (A. C. E.)

Gate of Heaven (Lat., Janua caeli), name applied to the Blessed Virgin Mary in the Litany of Loreto, and in the hymn “Alma Redemptoris,” because through her Christ came into the world, and on her intercession we largely base our hope of salvation.

Gatianus, Saint, confessor (d. 301), founder and first Bp. of Tours, b. probably Rome; d. Tours, France. After innumerable difficulties he evangelized the third Lyonnaise province during the latter half of the 3rd century. At his death the Church of Tours was securely established. Relics in Tours. Feast, 20 Sept.—C.E.

Gaulil, Antony (1659-1759), Jesuit missionary and scientist, b. Gaillac, France; d. Peking. He was the greatest astronomer and historian among the 18th-century French Jesuits in China, his numerous works being still highly prized.—C.E.

Gaudete Sunday, go,6-da'ta, the third Sunday in Advent, so named from the opening word of the Introit in the Mass, “Gaudete” (Rejoice). When obtainable, rose-colored vestments are used, to symbolize the fact that the penitential observances of the season are suspended for the day in order to rejoice in the Redemption which is so near at hand.—C.E.; Guéranger, tr. Shepherd, The Liturgical Year. Advent, Lond., 1883.

Gaul (Lat., Gallia), name the Romans gave to land bounded by the Alps, Mediterranean, Pyrenees, Atlantic, and the Rhine. Massilia was founded c. 600 B.C. Southern Gaul became a Roman province in 121 B.C., and Julius Caesar conquered northern Gaul, 58-51 B.C. From the letter sent by persecuted Christians of Lyons and Vienne, we know that the Church of Gaul existed in A.D. 177. Irenæus, Bp. of Lyons, intervened in the Easter Controversy, c. 200; St. Cyprian mentions, in 254, Faustinus, Bp. of Lyons. Gregory of Tours’s statement that the Church in Gaul was organized c. 250 by seven Roman bishops has been more or less accepted. By 314 many sees existed, and Christianity flourished in the towns. St. Martin established a monastery near Tours for conversion of rural districts. Athanasius influenced the episcopate during the Arian struggle, and Hilary of Poitiers championed orthodoxy. Priscillianism gained headway, Pelagianism divided the Church, and Semi-pelagianism prevailed until the Council of Orange. c. 229. Irenæus had probably in­ nized the primacy of Rome; and in 417 Pope Zosimus made the Bp. of Arles his delegate or vicar in Gaul. The Visigothic invasion established Arianism until the coming of the Franks in 567. Through all changes the bishops played important parts in upholding the social fabric.—C.E.

Gelasian Sacramentary, a liturgical book written in the 7th, or 8th century, probably in the Frankish kingdom. The book exists in several manuscripts, the oldest of which is preserved in the Vatican Library (MS. Regiae 316). In none of the old manuscripts does the book bear the name Gelasius but is simply called “Libro Sacramentorum Romanæ ecclesiae.” However, an old tradition, based on Walafrid Strabo, ascribes what is evidently this book to Pope Gelasius I (492-496). The book comprises three parts, made up of Masses for Sundays and feasts, prayers, rites and blessings of the Easter font and of the oil, dedication of churches, and reception of nuns.—C.E., IX, 298.

Gelasius I, Saint, Pope (492-496), b. Rome; d. there. As pope he undertook to settle the question of the Aecacian Schism, an offshoot of Arianism. It took its name and importance from Aecacius, Bp. of Cesarea, who rejected the term “consubstantial” but agreed to a “likeness” between the Father and the Son. Gelasius insisted on the primacy of the bishops of Rome, banished the festival of Luper-imperfections of the lists are not sufficient reason for the same period in different sections of the Bible, re­seem to have intended blood relationship, but rather complicated problems of textual and historical criti­cism. Comparison of the different lists concerning Table of Nations (Gen., 10), the writer does not to trace their descent (Luke, 1; 2; Phil., 3) .-C.E., VI, 408; Schumacher. (E,. A. A.)

veals the incompleteness of the lists, or I110re or less which take it for granted that individuals were able ,rhich for instance the priests ·were expected to gi ve analogies in every case, or at least froITI being their different forms of the Hebre\v alphabet. For an irremediable corruptions of some of the names, a thing which could take place easily enough in He­brew owing to the similarity of several letters in the different forms of the Hebrew alphabet. For an example of omission of names see the genealogy of Esdras in 1 Esdras, 7, and 1 Paralipomeron, 6. The imperfections of the lists are not sufficient reason for denying their authority. That families preserved their genealogies carefully appears from the proof which for instance the priests were expected to give of their descent; those unable to produce satisfac­tory evidence were excluded (Esdl, 2). The same impression is derived from the N.T. references which take it for granted that individuals were able to trace their descent (Luke, 1; 2; Phil., 3).—C.E., VI, 408; Schumacher. (E. A. A.)

Genealogy of Christ. The N.T. has preserved two different genealogies of Our Lord, in Matthew,

1, and Luke, 3. St. Matthew's list is divided artificial­ly into three equal parts of 14 names each, with several intentional omissions: from Abraham the father of the chosen people to David the king, to whose family the promise was made (2 Kings, 23); David and the royal line after him to the Baby­lonian captivity; the descendants of the royal line from the captivity to Joseph, the legal father of Our Lord. St. Luke proceeds in reverse order; he starts from Joseph and goes, beyond Abraham, back to Adam the father of the human race, in accord with the character of his Gospel—and he merely enumerates the names without grouping them ac­cording to a thesis or point, as is the case in St. Matthew. Few names are common to both lists: viz, those between Abraham and David, then Salathiel and Zorobabel after the captivity, and Joseph the foster-father of Christ; the others are absent from Matthew's list, or the persons are different. To account for these differences several explana­tions have been advanced, but no decisive evidence is extant. Not a few authors hold that St. Luke gives Mary's genealogy; but this view is more gen­erally considered improbable, so that both lists are taken as giving Joseph's ancestry. Only it must be supposed that at several points, instead of the ac­tual descent, the one or the other of the lists gives the legal relationship based on adoption in some manner. Our Lord was considered to belong to the family of David; this seems to be taken for granted in the N.T., where we find no difficulty raised against Him on the ground of His descent. The genealogies show His relationship to the royal fam­ily of Juda through Joseph, and that the rights could be transmitted, and Joseph was the legal father of Jesus. To trace Our Lord's ancestry through His mother would not have served the purpose of the Evangelists.—C.E. (B. A. A.)

General Chapter. The daily gathering of mem­bers of a religious community for disciplinary pur­poses and administration of monastic affairs has always included the reading of a chapter of the rule, and so the assembly became known as the chapter, and the place of meeting the chapter­house. There are various kinds of assemblies: con­vventual, provincial, and general, the latter com­posed of delegates of an entire order, congregation, or group of monasteries. The idea of general chapers originated with St. Benedict of Aniane in the 9th century, was revived at Cluny in the 10th, and finally culminated in the congregational system promulgated by the Fourth Lateran Council, 1215. Since that time general chapters have been held by practically every order and congregation.—C.E.

Genesareth, LAKE OF. See Galilee, Sea of.

Genesareth, LAND OF (Heb., kinnor, a harp), fertile district of Palestine, on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee (Mark, 6), often called the Lake of Genesareth; the scene of the public minis­try of Our Lord. He preached in nearly every vil­lage and hamlet. Capernaum, where He walked on the water (John, 6), and healed the ruler's son (4), was located there.—C.E.; Seisenberger, tr. Buch­anan, Practical Handbook for the Study of the Bible, N. Y., 1911.
Genesis (Gr., origin), the first Book of the Bible, containing an account of the origin of the world, of the human race and of the chosen people. The general divisions of the book are as follows: (1) the creation of the world and early history of mankind (1-11), including the Fall, the promise of a Redeemer, and the Deluge; (2) the early history of the Jews (12-50), including Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and Joseph. The Prophecy of Jacob (49) contains one of the most important Messianic prophecies in favor of the tribe of Judah, which will be the cradle of the Redeemer. The Biblical Commission, 30 June, 1909, forbade the denial of the historical character of the first three chapters.—C.E.; Butler.

Genuflection (Lat., genu, knee; flectere, to bend), an act of reverence made by touching the knee or knees to the ground. A simple genuflection, made with the right knee, is the proper mode of venerating the Blessed Sacrament enclosed in the tabernacle and, in certain ceremonies, the Cross. A double genuflection, made with both knees simultaneously, is to be made before the Blessed Sacrament, when exposed. Genuflection is a mark of homage given to the pope, to a cardinal, and to a bishop in his own diocese.—C.E.; Wuest-Mullaney, Matters Liturgical, N. Y., 1926. (F. J. C.)
Geography (Gr., ge, earth; grapho, write), the science which is concerned with the description of the earth's surface and the plant and animal life upon it. It may be divided into the branches of astronomical, biological, botanical, commercial, mathematical, and political geography, each of which is concerned with the subject implied in its name; it also comprehends cartography, the science of map-making, and exploration. The contributions of Catholics to every branch of the science are innumerable and of inestimable value. Motivated by a desire to spread Christianity, missionaries of the Dominican, Franciscan, Jesuit, and other orders who were the pioneers of scientific geography discovered and opened up new territories, while other Catholic scholars by their progress in the auxiliary sciences contributed much to geographical theory. Claudius Clavijus, Antoine Thomas d'Abbadie (1810-97), made invaluable contributions to the geographical knowledge of Abyssinia, drew up a map of the southern province of that country, distinguished himself as a topographer, and improved earth-measurement instruments. Vasco Nuñez de Balboa (1475-1519) discovered the Pacific Ocean, Martin Behaim (1459-1508) was a maker of the oldest geographical globe in existence. Claudius Clavijus (b. 1388) made the first map of northwestern Europe inclusive of Greenland, and a second similar map which exercised a great influence on the development of cartography. Elle Colin, S.J. (19th century), in collaboration with D. Roblet, drew up a map of Madagascar which won the gold medal of the Parisian Geographical Society, and also furnished the geographical data on which Granddiller based his cartographical work on Madagascar. Christopher Columbus (1451-1506) discovered America. Juan de la Cosa (1400-1510) accompanied Columbus on his second voyage as cartographer, and drew up a celebrated world chart which is considered the first map of America. Vasco da Gama (c. 1469-1524) discovered the sea route to the East Indies. Louisiot (1645-1700) explored the Mississippi River and established the fact that it emptied into the Gulf of Mexico. René Robert Cavalier de La Salle (1643-87) discovered the Ohio River and made explorations of the Mississippi Valley. Ferdinand Magellan (c. 1480-1521) first circumnavigated the globe. Albertus Magnus (1193-1281) opened up physiography to contemporary scholars, gave proofs of the earth's sphericity, and laid the foundations of comparative geography by his exposition of Aristotle. Bp. Ocean Magnus (1490-1568), one of the most distinguished geographers of the Renaissance, first propounded the idea of a northwest passage. Fra Maur (c. 1457) drew up the most famous medieval world map, Martin Martini, S.J. (1614-91), was the author of the “Atlas Linensis,” which contains the first collection of local maps of China and a valuable geographical description of the country. Jacques Marquette, S.J. (1636-75), is credited with the discovery of the Mississippi River. Alexander Mededin (1150-1229), Abbot of Cireneaster, author of the “Libre de Nature Rerum,” which contains the first record of the use of the mariner's compass in navigation, and a list of remarkable rivers and lakes. Heinrich Scherer, S.J. (1628-1704), was the author of “Geographia Naturalis,” which contained the earliest orographical and hydrographical synoptic charts. Joseph Tiefenthaler (1710-85) is renowned for his studies on the geography of Hindustan, particularly his maps of the Ganges basin. Martin Waldseemüller (1475-1522) drew up the first modern atlas of the world, a Latinized edition of Ptolemy's geography with 20 additional maps, used the name America in his world map (1507), and made a translation in Latin of the Cymric “Prophecies of Merlin.”

Geology (Gr., ge, earth; logos, science), the science which treats of every feature of the earth except that pertaining to its relation to other planets. In its wider sense it comprehends: hydrology, the study of the hydrosphere, i.e., the ocean, lakes, rivers, etc.; lithology, the science of the lithosphere or crust of the earth; meteorology, which is concerned with the atmosphere and particularly meteors; paleontology, the science of fossils; petrology, the science of rocks; seismology, the study of earth disturbances; and vulcanology, which is concerned with the pyrosphere. Geology proper or lithology may be divided into structural geology, which as the name implies deals with the structure and composition of the earth's crust; dynamical geology which treats of the forces operating on and in the earth, and historical geology. Renowned in this science are: Catholics.

Geoffrey of Monmouth or Gruffyd ar Arthur (c. 1100-54), chronicler and Bp. of St. Asaph, b. Monmouth, Wales (now England); d. Llandaff. As archdeacon of St. Telio's he opened schools where clergies and chieftains were educated. He was elected bishop, c. 1151, but died before entering his diocese. His history of British kings has influenced English literature, especially national romances, from Layamon to Tennyson. He also composed a Latin version of the Cymric “Prophecies of Merlin.”—C.E.
Belgian geology, systematized and unified Western European geological elements, and drew up a geological chart of the French Empire. Nicolaus Steno (1638-87), “the Father of Geology,” renowned for his geological discoveries, made the first explanation of petrifications in the earth. Wilhelm Heinrich Wagenes (1841-1906) made noted investigations on the fossilization of the German Jura and of the evolution of certain fossils, in which connection he was the first to apply the theory of transformation to Paleontology. Julian Edmund Tenison Woods (1832-89), priest, made distinguished research on the geology of South Australia and investigated the coal and mineral resources of the East. Other Christian Geologists, Leonce Ette de Beaumont (1798-1874) advanced a theory of the origin of mountain ranges which has exercised great influence on succeeding geologists, and did the major part of a valuable geological map of France. Karl Gustav Bischof (1792-1870) made notable contributions to speculative geology by his work on the role of water in geological processes, wrote a famous work on the heat in the interior of the earth, and on mineral springs, and was instrumental in having the well at Bad Neuenhaler drilled. Georges Léopold Christen Frédéric Dago-bert Cuier (1769-1832) did extensive research on the structure and classification of mollusca, fossilized mammals, and fishes, wrote a noted treatise on extinct Cenozoic mammals of the Eocene beds of Montmartre, and is considered the founder of the branch of Paleontology treating of mammals. James Dwight Dana (1813-95), “the master of American geology,” published valuable works on coral and crustacea, the geology of the Pacific, and organized a system of mineralogy.

Sir William Dawson (1820-99) discovered the first remains of the Dendrerpeton, an air-breathing reptile of geological times, and accomplished monumental work on the Silurian, Devonian, and Carboniferous rocks of Canada for the Canadian Geological Survey. Osseold Hec (1869-83), one of the inaugurators of paleo-botany, distinguished investigator of Tertiary plants and insects and of the Arctic Miocene flora. Edward Hitchcock (1793-1864), first president of the American Association of Geologists and Naturalists; as state geologist of Massachusetts he was the first to complete a governmental survey of an entire state; he also made important studies of the dinosaur tracks in the Connecticut Valley. Sir Charles Lyell (1791-1875), renowned as the exponent of uniformitarianism as opposed to the catastrophic theory of geology, did distinguished research on marine Tertiary strata of Italy, initiated the use of the terms Eocene, Miocene, and Pliocene, and was the author of the classic “Principles of Geology.” Nathanial, Christianity and the Leaders of Modern Science.

ST. GEORGE (Durer)

George (Gr., farmer), SAINT, martyr (c. 303), patron of England, one of the Forty Holy Helpers, d. Lydda, Palestine. He was known to the Greeks as the “Great Martyr.” His existence is established by inscriptions of ruined churches in Syria, Egypt, and Mesopotamia, by his church at Thessalonica, dating from the 4th century, and by the monastery at Baralle built by Clovis in honor of St. George, c. 512. During the Crusades his cult became widespread. He became the patron of the Order of the Garter which Edward III established c. 1347, and the cross of St. George came to be considered the symbol of knighthood. The most popular legend concerning St. George is that of his encounter with the dragon. The pagan town of Selena in Libya had been harassed by a dragon exhaling a pestilential breath; in order to placate him sheep were offered as victims, but when the supply of these was exhausted, the inhabitants of the town were substituted. The king’s young daughter, having been chosen by lot, was taken to the dragon’s lair and left to the mercy of the beast. St. George, riding by, slew the dragon, and the town became converted. Patron of soldiers; invoked against fever. Emblems: horse, lance, banner, armor, shield, Feast, R. C., 6 Apr.; O. E. C. B.; Butler: Bulley, St. George for Merrie England, Lond., 1903.

George the Bearded (1471-1539), Duke of Saxony; b. Dresden, Germany; d. there. He was trained for the Church, but after the death of his elder brother he succeeded to the title, 1500. Recognizing the abuses in the Church he labored to correct them, and at the Reformation held firmly to the faith, for which he was reviled by Luther. In 1525 he helped to suppress the peasant’s revolt, and formed the League of Dessau to protect Catholic interests.—C.E.

Georgetown University, Washington, D. C., founded 1789; conducted by the Jesuits; preparatory school; schools of arts and sciences, commerce or foreign service, law, medicine, dentistry, graduate school; professors, 363; students, 2246; degrees conferred in 1929, 448.

Georgia, the 20th state of the United States in size, the 12th in population, and the 4th to be admitted to the Union (2 Jan., 1788); area, 59,265 sq. mi.; pop. (1920), 2,895,832; Catholics (1928), 18,700. Colonial Georgia prohibited Catholic settlers, but after the Revolution a few Catholic families moved in from Maryland, and soon after 1795 some French refugees from Santo Domingo arrived. They were ac-
German-Hungarian College

The initiative towards its foundation was... taken by Card. Giovanni Morone and St. Ignatius Loyola, c. 1552; Gregory XIII was the real founder. The Hungarian College was founded, 1578, through P. Szanto, S.J.; and the two colleges were united, 1580. In 1886 the German College was transferred to the Hotel Costanzi, and receives students from Germany and Hungary.

Germany, republic of central Europe; area, 181,714 sq. m.; pop., 63,180,619. The first appearance of Christianity in Germany is uncertain, but St. Irenaeus in the 2nd century reports that the Germans have the same faith as Spain, Gaul, the Orient, Egypt, and Africa. In the cathedral of Trier is preserved the Holy Coat of Christ, which according to tradition was given to the Church of Trier by St. Helena, and in the Benedictine monastery of Trier is the grave of St. Matthias, the only grave of an Apostle in Germany. Trier was visited by the exiled Athanasius and St. Martin of Tours, and its bishops, St. Paulinus, was a steadfast opponent of Arianism. After the barbarian invasions evangelization of Germany was continued in the 6th century by Irish and Scottish monks, including St. Fidelis of Signa, St. Columban, St. Gall, St. Kilian, and St. Willibrord, but the great Apostle of Germany and organizer of the German Church was the English Benedictine, St. Boniface, who worked mainly in central Germany and Bavaria, a field also visited by Rupert of Worms (7th century), Emmeram (d. 715), and Corbinian (d. 730). Boniface dealt a death blow to paganism, symbolizing in cutting down the sacred oak of Geismar, founded the monastery of Fulda, and opened the first convents for women in Germany. Once Christianity had gained a foothold, the monastic ideal of union of Church and State became widespread, and through the grants of princes the Church received an economic power, resulting in the development of an ecclesiastical as well as a secular aristocracy. Charles Martel, Otto I, and St. Henry II established new dioceses, built cathedrals in conquered territory, and endowed the clergy, in recognition of which services the Church granted to the emperors the right to nominate candidates for benefices, which later resulted in the dispute over investiture. Henry IV was at length obliged to go to Canossa to make peace with the pope whose opposition he dared not risk, and his attempt at schism was condemned by the Concordat of Worms in 1122, recognizing investiture as the right of the Church. This pagan imperial policy was again attempted by Frederick Barbarossa who was vanquished by Pope Alexander III. The conflict was continued by Frederick II and Louis of Bavaria. During these centuries of turmoil there appeared also great saints, including the two Gertrudes and the two Mechthildes, all of the Cistercian monastery of Helfta, St. Elizabeth of Hungary, and Sts. Bruno and Norbert, who together founded the Grand Chartreuse in France. Among the Dominicans were Bl. Jordan of Saxony, Albert the Great, and later Henry Suso.

Dispute over the nature of indulgences occasioned the revolt of Martin Luther, which was established by the burning of the papal Bull at Wittenberg, 10 Dec., 1520. Political difficulties with France and the papacy prevented Charles V from adequately combating Lutheranism, and the general state of deterioration among the clergy facilitated a victory for the heretics and subsequent moral, intellectual, and social disorder, in spite of numerous cases of heroic resistance. The Catholic cause was upheld by several princes of the Church, as Stanislaus Hosius and Giovanni Commendone, St. Fidelis of Signa, the Carthusians of Cologne, and the first German Jesuits, notably Peter Faber and Peter Canisius; after the Council of Trent Albert V and William V of Bavaria were the acknowledged leaders of Catholicism. In the 17th century the Thirty Years' War added to Protestant advantages, and the Treaty of Westphalia (1648) accorded to each prince the right of determining the religion of his subjects. Though in the 18th century many rulers returned to Catholicism, they were powerless to repair the damage wrought by their ancestors. In 1780 the Electors of Cologne, Trier, and Mainz, with the Archbishop of Salzburg, separated German affairs from papal authority, and the Treaty of Lunéville (1801) completed the work of secularization, while an anti-clerical policy was popularized by authors and philosophers. The Kulturkampf (1871-77), which attempted confiscation of Church property and to work mainly in central Germany and Bavaria, a field also visited by Rupert of Worms (7th century), Emmeram (d. 715), and Corbinian (d. 730). Boniface dealt a death blow to paganism, cutting down the sacred oak of Geismar, founded the monastery of Fulda, and opened the first convents for women in Germany. Once Christianity had gained a foothold, the monastic ideal of union of Church and State became widespread, and through the grants of princes the Church received an economic power, resulting in the development of an ecclesiastical as well as a secular aristocracy. Charles Martel, Otto I, and St. Henry II established new dioceses, built cathedrals in conquered territory, and endowed the clergy, in recognition of which services the Church granted to the emperors the right to nominate candidates for benefices, which later resulted in the dispute over investiture. Henry IV was at length obliged to go to Canossa to make peace with the pope whose opposition he dared not risk, and his attempt at schism was condemned by the Concordat of Worms in 1122, recognizing investiture as the right of the Church. This pagan imperial policy was again attempted by Frederick Barbarossa who was vanquished by Pope Alexander III. The conflict was continued by Frederick II and Louis of Bavaria. During these centuries of turmoil there appeared also great saints, including the two Gertrudes and the two Mechthildes, all of the Cistercian monastery of Helfta, St. Elizabeth of Hungary, and Sts. Bruno and Norbert, who together founded the Grand Chartreuse in France. Among the Dominicans were Bl. Jordan of Saxony, Albert the Great, and later Henry Suso.

Dispute over the nature of indulgences occasioned the revolt of Martin Luther, which was established by the burning of the papal Bull at Wittenberg, 10 Dec., 1520. Political difficulties with France and Germain, zhér-mã, JEAN CHARLIER DE (1368-1429), scholar and orator, b. Gerson, near Reims, France; d. Lyons. He was a friend and pupil of Peter d’Ailly, Chancellor of the Paris University, whom he succeeded in 1395, and is particularly known for the zeal and energy with which he labored to bring to an end the Western Schism. He took a very important part in the Council of Constance (1415), where his conduct was in keeping with his principles, viz., that the Church and the ecumenical council are above the pope, as he saw no other means of ending the schism and of restoring unity. After the council, he had to take refuge in Bavaria to escape the wrath of John the Fearless, Duke of Burgundy, whom he had taken to task for the murder of the Duke of Orleans. After John’s death he retired to Lyons where he spent the last ten years of his life in a monastery in which his own brother was prior. He delighted to teach catechism to little children. His principal works are: “De aneribilitate Papae,” a treatise destined to prepare the Council of Pisa; “De Potestate Ecclesiae,” in which he professes erroneous doctrines concerning the doctrine of infallibility; “De Consolatione Theologica,” an imitation of the “De Consolatione Philosophiae” of Boethius; and “De parvulis ad Christum trahendis.” He was also among the first to recognize and to proclaim the supernatural mission of Joan of Arc. He is not, however, the author of the “Following of Christ,” which has been often attributed to him. He was hailed as a great and learned doctor, an ardent lover of souls, much time with His disciples (John, 18), suffered His agony (Mark, 14; Luke, 22), and was taken prisoner by the Jews (Mark, 14). Tradition places the tomb of the Blessed Virgin in the Valley of Gethsemani, near the Cedron.—C.E.

Gesta Dei per Francos (“Doings of God through the Franks”), the title adopted by Guibert de Nogent (d. c. 1124) for his history of the First Crusade. He infuses an epic coloring into his contemporary account of the Crusades, and shows the profound impression created throughout Europe by the conquest of the Holy Land. After the Crusades his title reveals the use of the word Frank by the Orientals to indicate the Crusaders.—C.E.

Gesta Romanorum, a popular medieval collection of anecdotes with moral reflections, compiled in Latin, probably by a priest, either in the 13th or 14th centuries. Its purpose was to provide preachers with moral anecdotes. Many were taken from Roman history, and later from Latin and German chronicles, and some from Oriental sources. Many of these have been preserved in English literature by Chaucer, Lydgate, Shakespeare, and others.—C.E.

Gethsemani (Heb., gat, press; semea, oil), plot of ground on the Mount of Olives, beyond the ravine of the brook Cedron, where Jesus spent much time with His disciples (John, 18), suffered His agony (Mark, 14; Luke, 22), and was taken prisoner by the Jews (Mark, 14). Tradition places the tomb of the Blessed Virgin in the Valley of Gethsemani, near the Cedron.—C.E.

Gezireh, Diocese of, Mesopotamia, Iraq, seat of a Chaldean and a Syrian episcopal see. (1) The Chaldean diocese, (2) The Syrian see, founded, 1863, has been vacant since the massacre of Rt. Rev. Flavian Malek, 1915. Churches or chapels, 14; priests, 17; schools, 7; Catholics, 6400. (2) The Syrian see, founded, 1863, has been vacant since the massacre of Rt. Rev. Flavian Malek, 1915. Churches or chapels, 14; priests, 17; schools, 7; Catholics, 6400.—C.E.

Gheel, town, Belgium, where a colony of lunatics has existed for centuries. Merevalen cures effected at the shrine of St. Dympna, martyred at Gheel, drew many seeking her intercession. The peasants in the neighborhood undertook their care, and sometimes as many as 1500 live in the homes of the inhabitants, where they share in the labors of the family and are treated kindly by them. This method of private persons’ caring for the harmless insane who are able to work is called the Gheel system. Communities of Norbertine, Augustinian, and Annunciation Sisters aid in the care of the sick and a hospital has been established for scientific treatment.
Ghiberti, LORENZO DI CIONE (c. 1381-1455), sculptor, b. Florence; d. there. He was the son of a goldsmith and first studied painting. In 1401, in a competition with Brunelleschi and others, he won the commission to execute the north doors of the baptistery of San Giovanni in Florence. The work was finished in 1424. Twenty small medallions were devoted to scenes from the New Testament, and eight to the Evangelists and four great doctors of the Church. In 1425 Ghiberti was appointed to design the main doors, facing the Duomo. This is his masterpiece, completed in 1422. Ten compartments represent scenes from the Old Testament. They are crowded with figures and suggest painting rather than sculpture. The doors and the panels are bordered with an elaborate frieze of flowers and small figures. Michelangelo declared them worthy to be the doors of Paradise.—C.E.

Ghirlandajo, gér-lán-di'yo (DOMENICO BIGNORDI; 1449-94), painter, b. Florence; d. there. His name, "the Garlandmaker," was applied first perhaps to his father as a goldsmith, or to himself for his own early work in that art. He studied under Alessio Baldovinetti, and became known as a master of fresco. He went to Rome in 1483 to assist in decorating the Sistine Chapel, his "Call of the Apostles" being still there. His greatest work is the frescoed decoration of the Tornabuoni Chapel in S. Maria Novella, Florence, finished in 1490. It consists of eight scenes from the life of St. John the Baptist and twelve from that of the Blessed Virgin. They furnish a marvelous picture of contemporary life and the portraiture is remarkable. Other notable works are "The Adoration of the Magi," in the Hospital of the Innocents, "The Visitation," now in the Louvre, and "the Last Supper," in the refectory of the Ognissanti convent. His portrait of "Giovanni degli Albizzi" is famous, as is his realistic "Old Man and Child" of the Louvre. He is also celebrated as a teacher of Michelangelo.—C.E.; Berenson, The Florentine Painters of the Renaissance, Lond., 1904.

Giant, emblem in art associated with St. Christopher by reason of his suposed gigantic stature; possibly figuratively, symbolic of the excessive weight of his burden, Christ.

Giaour, a term of contempt and reproach used by the Turks to describe all non-Mohammedans, especially Christians. It became so common that it is employed without realizing that it imitates the Turks for describing all non-Mohammedans, especially Christians.

Gift, Supernatural, a particular grant of Almighty God to rational beings (men or angels) unwarranted by man's nature, natural powers or needs; a grant therefore outside the limits of God's general Providence and consistent support of human life and human activity. It may be received in the soul itself, in the soul's faculties or even in the soul's operations. Wherever found, it is something added to God's prirnal gift of creation, something impossible for unaided nature to merit or achieve.—C.E.

Gift of Tongues, one of the preternatural gifts mentioned by St. Paul; the gift of speaking so as to be understood by all, and the corresponding ability of the hearers to understand one who is speaking in a foreign tongue. Acts, 2, tells how men of every nation under heaven, 18 being specified, understood the Apostles in Jerusalem the first Pentecost as they spoke in diverse tongues. St. Francis Xavier and other Apostolic men had this gift.—C.E., XIV, 176.
Gifts of the Holy Ghost, the operations of grace and the sanctification of souls appropriated to the Holy Ghost as works of God's goodness and love. The spiritual gifts He confers on man are twofold—one class is given to the recipient as powers or “charismata” to be used primarily for the benefit of others, e.g., the gifts of miracles, of prophecy, of tongues, etc.; the second class has for its prime purpose the sanctification of the recipient. These, as enumerated by Isaiah (11), are: wisdom, understanding, counsel, fortitude, knowledge, piety, and fear of the Lord. Christ had these gifts in their plenitude; all just souls receive them in various degrees. They are supernatural dispositions (over and above infused virtues) by which the soul is made docile and quickly responsive to the promptings of the Holy Spirit.—C.E., VII, 419; Manning, Mission of the Holy Ghost, Huntington, Ind.

Gilbert, Sir John Thomas (1829-98), archivist and historian, b. Dublin; d. there. His father was John Gilbert, English Protestant, Portuguese convert, and historian, b. Dublin; d. there. His father was educated at Dublin and Prior Park near Bath. In 1848 he was made a member of the Council of the Celtic Society, in 1855 a member of the Royal Irish Academy and Secretary of the Irish Archaeological Society, and subsequently was affiliated with several important historical and antiquarian societies. For 34 years he was librarian of the Royal Irish Academy to which he spent many years, his sole companion being a hind. Here he built a monastery, which he placed under the Rule of St. Benedict. The cult of St. Giles spread throughout Europe in the Middle Ages, and numerous churches and monasteries have been dedicated to him. Among the most important are the church of St. Giles, now Anglican, Cropley, London, and St. Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh, now a Presbyterian church. Invoked as one of the Fourteen Holy Helpers against epilepsy, insanity, and sterility of women. Emblems: hind, crosier, hermitage. Relics dispersed during Calvinistic disturbances and partly brought to St. Seruin, Toulouse, France. Feast, R. Cal., 1 Sept.—C.E.; Butler.

Gillespie, Eliza Maria (1824-81), first superior of the American Sisters of the Holy Cross, b. Pennsylvania; d. Notre Dame, Ind. She was noted for her work in the Civil War on behalf of the sick and wounded soldiers, for whom she established numerous hospitals. Her brother, Neal Henry (1831-74), the first graduate of Notre Dame University, joined the Congregation of the Holy Cross.—C.E.

Gillow, Joseph (1850-1921), English historical and archaeological writer. Educated at Ushaw College, he published the first volume of his “Literary and Bibliographical Dictionary of the English Catholics,” 1885, completing the set, 1902. Honorable recorder of the Catholic Record Society and member of its council, he was elected to the Manchester School Board 1880, and gave evidence for the cause of the English martyrs, 1888.

Gimlet or Tendril, emblem in art associated with St. Veronica Giuliani, symbolic of her stigmata of the instruments of the Passion.

Giorgione (Giorgio Barbarelli; c. 1476-1510), painter, b. Castelfranco, Italy; d. Venice. He was a pupil of Giovanni Bellini and one of the strongest influences in the Venetian school. He was one of the first to make beautiful landscape an integral part of the picture. He has been called "the joyous herald of the Renaissance." Ruskin declared his "Madonna," in the church of Castelfranco, one of the two most perfect pictures in the world. His skill in portraiture is shown in "The Knight of Malta," of the Uffizi gallery. "The Concert" of the Pitti is attributed to him.—C.E.; Cook, Giorgione, Lond., 1900.

Giotto,iot'to, di Bondone (c. 1266-1337), painter and architect, b. Vespignano, Italy; d. Florence. Successor to Cimabue, he is the acknowledged founder of modern painting. His genius revolutionized art since he inaugurated the rounded treatment of figures, dramatic movement and the expression of feeling, and the representation of actual life. In Assisi are his frescoes representing "The Life of St. Francis" painted from 1296 to 1320 in the upper and lower church of the Basilica; and the "Triumph of St. Francis" which decorates the roof-groining above the high altar. Santa Croce in Florence has his "Death of St. Francis," and in Padua in the Capella dell' Arena is perhaps his finest work, 30 frescoes of "The Life of Christ and the Virgin," painted after 1306. The "Last Judgment" above the arch of the doorway is famous. In the church of St. John Lateran, Rome, is a fresco representing Boniface VIII announcing the Jubilee of 1300. In 1334 Giotto was appointed Master of the Works of the Cathedral of Florence and he designed the famed Campanile. The portrait of Dante, attributed to him, is in the Bargello of Florence in a much damaged fresco of Paradise.—C.E.; Ruskin, Giotto and His Works in Padua, Lond., 1853.

Giraldus Cambrensis, or Giraldus de Barry (c. 1147-1220), historian, b. Manorbier, Wales. He was appointed Bishop of St. David's in 1180, but resigned to accompany Prince John to Ireland, where he remained two years. He visited Rome in a fruitless effort to secure his reappointment to his old see. Giraldus was a writer of remarkable brilliancy. A topography and a history of the conquest, long regarded as authoritative, were severely criticized by Dr. Lynch in his "Cambrensis Everus," 1682, who meets his charges against the Irish people, impeaches his ignorance of their language, unfamiliarity with the country, disregard of chronology, and credulity in accepting popular rumors and unauthenticated narratives.—C.E.

Girdle or Cincture, a priestly vestment generally made of white linen, but sometimes of silk, wool, or cotton and of the color of the day, tied around the waist to confine the alb (q.v.), worn at Mass. It symbolizes chastity. Wrapping it about the alb the priest prays: "Bind me, O Lord, with the cincture of purity and chastity." As a cord, or often as a broad sash, it is included in almost every form of religious or ecclesiastical costume. (J. C. T.)

Girl Scouts, since 1915 the official name of the incorporated organization originally termed Girl Guides; it was founded in America in 1912 by Mrs. Juliette Low of Savannah, Ga., and was based on the English group "Girl Guides," which, in turn was based on the idea of the Boy Scouts, and has been developed by the originator of the Boy Scout movement, Sir Robert Baden-Powell, and his wife. The purpose of the Girl Scouts is to develop character, mental and physical health, and patriotism, largely by means of play and group activities under trained leaders. It is a nonsectarian organization whose philosophy and principles, in no way contradict the teachings of the Catholic Church. The most recent official statistics show that 10 per cent of the troops are organized in parochial schools and that 12 per cent are held in buildings connected with Catholic churches, and there are also many Catholic children in the nonsectarian troops. There are 156 colleges and universities (and of these 25 are Catholic colleges) where Girl Scout training courses are now in existence, and 1740 Catholic young women have received this training during the last 5 years. The official publication of the organization is a monthly magazine, "The American Girl." Mrs. Nicholas F. Brady, the treasurer of the National Council and one of the chief patronesses of the organization, is also the chairman of the Girl Scout Bureau of the International Federation of Catholic Alumni.—Annual Report.

Gl. = Gloria (part of the Mass).

Glabrio, Manius Acllus, Roman consul in 91, banished by Domitian and put to death for the Faith in 95; the crypt at Rome in which his remains were placed was discovered in 1888.—C.E.

Glagolitic or Glagolitsa (Slavonic, glagolāti, to speak), ancient Slavic alphabet used in Slavic liturgical books of Roman rite.—C.E.

Glasgow, Archdiocese of, Scotland, comprises the counties of Lanark, Ayr north of Lugton Water, Dumfarton, Renfrew, Balkennoch, and East Kilpatrick in Stirling, and the Cumnbrine Isles; directly subject to the Holy See. Founded as a diocese, c. 543 by St. Kentigern (or Mungo), in 1492 it was erected an archdiocese. John Eochy (or Achains) was bishop, 1115-47. His successors included Robert Wishart (1372-1316), William Turnbull (1447-54), James Beaton (retired 1500), Charles Eyre (1878-1902), John Maguire (1902-21), and Donald Mackintosh (1922). Churches, chapels, and stations, 147; priests, secular, 308; priests, regular, 49; secondary schools, 12; numerous primary schools; institutions, 24; Catholics, 500,000.

Glasgow University, Glasgow, Scotland, founded by William Turnbull, Bp. of Glasgow, and erected by Bull of Pope Nicholas V, 1450, as a studium generale, with faculties of theology, arts, canon and civil law, after the pattern of the papal university of Bologna; the bishop and his successors were to be ex-officio chancellors. At its inception most of the students were ecclesiastics, largely of the Friars Preachers. Bp. William Elphinstone, David Cardinal Beaton, and James Beaton, Abp. of Glasgow, were illustrious scholars. The university occupied a site on High Street, 1460-1870, to which Mary Queen of Scots contributed 13 acres; it was almost completely destroyed at the Reformation. It reopened under Protestant control with a new charter by James VI, 1577. It moved, 1870, to Gilmore Hill, a commanding site, where it occupies a fine Early English structure with central tower and spire designed by W. G. Story. The university having incorporated St. Margaret's College for women, 1893; it includes faculties of arts, science and engineering, medicine, theology, law; there is an observatory. It counted 270 professors, 5348 students (1927-28).—Couts, A History of the University of Glasgow, Glasgow, 1909.—C.E.

Glastonbury, county in Ontario, Canada, between the St. Lawrence and Ottawa rivers, settled by Highlanders. These were originally of Glengarry, Scotland, and had been driven by fanaticism, during the American Revolution, from their New York settlement in the Mohawk Valley. They were joined by two groups of Catholic Highlanders from Glengarry, Inverness-shire, and other districts of western Scotland: one brought out by Rev. Alexander Macdonell (Scotus), in 1786; the other in 1803-04, by Rev. Alexander Macdonell, afterwards first Bp. of Kingston. The Glengarry Fenncibles, reorganized from the Catholic regiment of that name raised by the last-named in Scotland in 1794 and disbanded in 1802, fought on the American side in the War of 1812, with Fr. Macdonell as chaplain.

Globe, a symbol often shown beneath the feet of the Virgin Mary, to indicate that she is the Queen of the World. (J. F. S.)

Gloria in Excelsis Deo (Lat., Glory to God on High), the great doxology in the Mass beginning with the words sung by the angels at Christ's birth said or sung after the “Kyrie” except in times of penance.—C.E.

Gloria, laus, et honor, tibi sit Rex Christe Redemptor, or All glory, laud, and honor, hymn used in the procession on Palm Sunday. It was written by Theodulf, Bp. of Orleans (c. 760-821). There are twelve translations; the English title given is by J. Neale.—Britt.

Gloria Patri (Lat., Glory be to the Father), the Latin prayer beginning with these words, with the response “sicut erat in principio,” etc. This prayer is always appended to the Psalms in the Mass and in the Office, except in the last three days of Holy Week, and in Masses for the dead. It is called the lesser doxology. Its present form dates back to the 7th century. (C. J. B.)

Glory (Lat., gloriae, to glorify, to honor), term with many shades of meaning, e.g., praise, admiration, honor, celestial honor, splendor, or brightness. The word occurs frequently in Holy Writ to denote a visible, physical phenomenon: “And the glory of the Lord dwelt upon Sinai” (Ex., 24). Again it is used to designate the power and greatness of the Creator: “The heavens shew forth the glory of God” (Ps., 18). Sometimes the word occurs in the sense of future eternal reward of the just: “I reckon that the sufferings of this time are not worthy to be compared with the glory to come” (Rom., 8). Glory is also employed to designate a nimbus or aureole, especially if not only the head is surrounded by the disk but if also the entire body radiates brightness. (C. V.)

Glosses, Scriptural (Gr., glossa, tongue), brief notes which explain difficult words or passages of Holy Writ. Glosses in older works were written either on the margin or between the lines. Modern works use footnotes exclusively. The most famous glosses are the “Glossa Ordinaria” of Walafrid Strabo (d. 849), and the “Glossa Interlinearis” of Anselm of Laon (d. 1117). At times glosses found their way into the text. Thus “For thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory, forever. Amen.” is a liturgical gloss in King James’s Bible (Matt., 6).—C.E.; Schumacher. (H. J. G.)

Gloves, Episcopal, are worn by bishops and some privileged prelates at a solemn Pontifical Mass. Their color varies with the day. They signify being clothed with, acting in the name of, reliance on the merits of, Christ.—C.E. (J. C. T.)

Gluttony, the inordinate indulgence in food or drink, when through appetite one anticipates frequently the proper time for taking refreshment, or partakes in excess, or demands food more costly than one can afford, or devours it voraciously, or spends too great care in the preparation of it.—C.E. (w. J. h.)

Gnidus (GNIDUS), ni’du’s, city on a promontory of Caria, Asia Minor, between the islands Coos and Rhodes, St. Paul sailed by Gnidus on his journey to Rome (Acts, 17).

Gnosticism (Gr., gnosis, knowledge), salvation by knowledge. Gnostics were people who claimed to know mysteries of the universe; various pantheistic sects, antedating the Christian era and lasting to the 5th century and borrowing the formulas of various religions, particularly of Christianity, to express their view of matter as iminal to spirit, and of the universe as a deprivation of the Deity. It is an extinct force, so far as religion is concerned today, but there are survivals of it in Swedenborgianism, New Thought, and in some of the sects of Occultism.—C.E. (ed.)

Goa, Archdiocese of, India, in British and Portuguese territory; suffragan sees, Cochin, St. Thomas of Mylapur, and Macao in China. The archbishop is also Patriarch of the East Indies, Primate of the East, and holds the titles of Bp. of Damão (diocese suppressed, 1924), and Abp. of Cranganore. Erected into an episcopal see, 1534, it was raised to an archdiocese, 1557, and to a patriarchate, 1886. Antonio Valente was archbishop (1882-1908), succeeded by Mateo de Oliveira Xavier (1909). Churches and chapels, 511; priests, secular, 540; priests, regular, 12; seminary, 1; colleges and high schools, 6; elementary schools, 128; institutions, 8; Catholics, 326,690.—C.E.

Gobban Sear or GOBBAN THE BUILDER (c. 560-c. 640), celebrated Irish ecclesiastical architect, b. Turvey, Co. Dublin, Ireland. He has been popularly canonized, with a feast in June.—C.E.

God (A.-S., god, ultimately from Skt., hū, to invoke, or hū, to sacrifice to). There is nothing better on this subject than the following passage from Cardinal Newman’s “Idea of a University,” discourse III: “I mean then by the Supreme Being, one who is simply self-dependent, and the only Being who is such; moreover, that He is without beginning or Eternal, and the only Eternal; that in consequence He has lived a whole eternity by Himself; and hence that He is all-sufficient, sufficient for His own blessedness, and all-blessed, and ever-blessed. Further, I mean a Being, who, having these prerogatives, has the Supreme Good, or rather is the Supreme Good, or has all the attributes of Good in infinite intenseness; all wisdom, all truth, all justice, all love, all holiness, all beautiness; who is omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent; ineffably one, absolutely perfect; and such, that what we do not know and cannot even imagine of Him, is far more wonderful than what we do and can. I mean One who is sovereign over His own will and actions, though always according to the eternal Rule of right and wrong, which is Himself. I mean, moreover, that He created all things out of nothing, and preserves them every moment, and could destroy them as easily as He made them; and that, in consequence, He is separated from them by an abyss, and is incomunicable in all His attributes. And further, He has stamped upon all things, in the hour of their creation, their respective natures and ages, and has given them their work and mission and their length of days, greater or less, in their appointed place. I mean, too, that He is ever present with His works, one by one, and confronts every thing He has made by His particular and most loving Providence, and manifests Himself to each according to its needs; and has on rational beings imprinted the moral law, and given them power to obey it, imposing on them the duty of worship and service, searching and scanning them through and through with His omniscient eye, and putting before them a present trial and a judgment to come.”

The existence of God, according to St. Thomas, is proved by five arguments: (1) Motion, i.e., the passing from power to act, as it takes place in the universe, implies a first unmoved Mover, who is God; else we should postulate an infinite series of movers, which is inconceivable. (2) For the same reason, efficient causes, as we see them operating in this world, imply the existence of a First Cause that is uncaused, i.e., that possesses in itself the sufficient reason for its existence; and this is God. (3) The fact that contingent beings exist, i.e., beings whose non-existence is recognized as possible, implies the existence of a necessary being, who is God. (4) The graduated perfections of being, actually existing in the universe, can be understood only by comparison with an absolute standard that is also actual, i.e., an infinitely perfect Being such as God. (5) The wonderful order or evidence of intelligent design, which the universe exhibits, implies the existence of a supramundane Designer, who is no other than God Himself.

—C.E.; Chetwood, God and Creation, N. Y., 1928; Aveling, The God of Philosophy, Lond., 1906; Pohle-Preuss, God: Author of Nature and the Supernatural, St. L., 1953; Pohle-Preuss, God, His Knowledge, Essence, and Attributes, St. L., 1921.

God, Name of. God is the name of the Supreme Being, the Creator, Lord, and Ruler of the Universe, as well as moral Ruler of mankind. It is a proper name, as God is one and unique, and infinite in all perfection; yet it was mistakenly used by many false and putative “gods,” and so became in a sense plural or common. (p.c.)

Godfrey of Bouillon (1060-1100), Duke of Lower Lorraine, called “Defender of the Holy Sepulcher,” b. probably Boulogne, France; d. Jerusalem. As a vassal of Henry IV, he opposed Gregory VII in the investitures controversy. In 1096 he joined the Crusade of Urban II, with 40,000 followers, and passing through Hungary, was obliged to do homage to Alexius I (Comnenus). Contrary to the legends, he played only a secondary part in the Crusaders’ councils. In 1098 he took Antioch, and on 15 July, 1099, with his brother Eustace, was the first to enter Jerusalem. He accepted the sovereignty of Jerusalem after the other leaders had declined, but refused to be crowned as a king. Having real or investiture from the patriarch, he defeated the Saracens in Egypt, but died shortly after. His tomb in the church of the Holy Sepulcher was destroyed in 1808.—C.E.

Godparents, godfather, godmother, sureties, sponsors. The New Code of Canon Law, supporting ancient custom, requires the names of sponsors. The sponsor is the godparent. One should also be called for private Baptism if possible. This is in keeping with the nature of Baptism considered as a spiritual regeneration. It is the duty of sponsors to make a profession of faith during the baptismal ceremony for the one to be baptized, when necessary; and thereafter, to assume perpetual guardianship over the baptized and instruct them in the obligations of the Christian life, to insure fulfillment of baptismal vows. This obligation binds only when parents neglect to do their duty or die. Owing to the spiritual relationship which is created, the Church makes definite requirements by law for this honorable office.—C.E., II, 272; P.C. Augustine, (v. n. h.)

Gog, name of a king of Meshek having real or virtual power for the “land of Magog” mentioned in Ezekiel, 38, His armies came “from the northern parts,” from the country bordering on the Black Sea, i.e., from Scythia. In the Apocalypse, 20, Gog and Magog (q.v.) represent the last host that makes an assault upon the followers of Christ. Gog and Magog are also the false image of Baptism in form and substance in the Guildhall in London.—C.E. (A. H.)

Gold, a precious metal, first mentioned in the Bible in Gen., 2. It was one of the gifts of the Magi to the Infant Jesus (Matt., 2) offered to Him as symbol of His kingship; a symbol of purity (Job, 23), and great value (Is., 13).

Gold, Cloth of. Vesture of cloth of gold may be used instead of white, green, or red, especially in poorer churches which are unable to possess vestments of all the prescribed colors. Gold may not replace colors of mourning or penance, i.e., black, purple, or rose color. (J. C. T.)

Gold Coast, Vicariate Apostolic of, British West Africa, established as a prefecture Apostolic, 1879, and as a vicariate, 1901; comprises the British Gold Coast Colony; entrusted to the African Missions of Lyons. Maximilien Albert was appointed first vicar Apostolic; present vicar, Ernest Hauenger.
GOLD COAST

(1926); residence at Cape Coast. Churches or chapels, 370; schools, 94; Catholics, 41,953.

Golden Calf, image of God made by Aaron at the foot of Mount Sinai, pursuant to the request of the Hebrews weared by the protracted stay of Moses on the mountain (Ex., 32). It consisted probably of a wooden frame with plates of gold obtained from melting the jewelry worn by the Hebrews. Judging from the Hebrew word employed, its appearance was not so much that of a calf as of a young bull, signifying strength and vigor and symbolizing the principle of fertility. In the minds of the people the golden calf was not to be the formal object of their worship, but a representation of Yahweh, as is clear from Aaron's attributing to God the deliverance from Egypt, and proclaiming a feast to Yahweh. Any divine representation, however, contravened the prohibition to make any kind of images of God (Ex., 20); and particularly was the bovine figure objectionable, as the worship of that symbol was associated traditionally with scenes of obscenity. That is exactly what happened in this instance. After the secession of the ten northern tribes, Jeroboam, with a view to turn his new subjects away from the temple of Jerusalem, and at the same time to cater to their naturalistic propensities, set up golden calves at Dan and Bethel (3 Kings, 12). These apparently must be looked upon, like Aaron's golden calf, as representations of Yahweh. The worship carried out at their sanctuaries was likewise strongly tainted with immoral practices. (C. L. S.)

Golden Legend, a collection of biographies of saints and legends, including the apocryphal literature, the Gospel of the Nativity of Mary, Pseudo-Matthew, and the Protoevangélium of James, written c. 1260 by Jacopo de Voragine, and printed by Caxton, 1483. Its success was prodigious and it was translated into all the vernaculars of Europe. Long before the publication of the Golden Legend the Hebrews wearied by the protracted stay of Moses on the mountain (Ex., 32) divided the calendar subsequent to his discovery that after 19 solar years had elapsed the new moon would occur on the same days in the years indicated by identical numbers. They are so called because the number for each current year was inscribed in gold on an Athenian temple pillar. — C.E., V, 481.

Golden Rose, one of the oldest papal orders, and its membership is restricted to Catholic queens, a balance; the supreme characteristic and merit of virtue according to the Roman adage: In medio stat virtus (virtue is in the middle), like the fulcrum of a balance, the supreme characteristic and merit of the Catholic Church, always avoiding excess and deficiency, as in the matter of temperance, recreation, labor, Sunday observance, and in all other regulations of Christian life. (Ed.)

Golden Militia (Golden Spur), Order of the, papal order of knighthood conferred upon those who have rendered distinguished service in propagating the Catholic Faith, or who have contributed to the glory of the Church, either by feat of arms, writings, or other illustrious acts. It is one of the oldest papal orders, and its membership is restricted to one hundred throughout the world. In 1841 it was absorbed into the Order of St. Sylvester (q.v.) but Pius X restored it to the status of a separate order and placed it under the patronage of the Blessed Virgin. The decoration consists of an eight-pointed yellow, enamelled gold cross in whose center is a small white medal on one side of which is the word Maria, and on the other the year MDCCLV and Pius X Restituit, and which is suspended from a white-bordered red ribbon. The badge, which is worn on the left breast, is the cross upon the rays of a silver star. The official uniform is a red tunic decorated with gilt buttons, black velvet hat and gloves embroidered in gold, black trousers with gold side stripes, epaulettes, gold spurs, oblong two-peaked hat trimmed with gold and bearing the papal colors, and a sword.

Golden Number, name applied to each of the 10 numbers representing the cycle of lunar years into which Meton (432 B.C.) divided the calendar subsequent to his discovery that after 19 solar years had elapsed the new moon would occur on the same days in the years indicated by identical numbers. They are so called because the number for each current year was inscribed in gold on an Athenian temple pillar. — C.E., V, 481.

Golden Rose, a papal order of knighthood, originally conferred in 1615, to which 19 kings and princes, notably the kings of France, Spain, England, and Scotland, were made recipients. The order was revived by Pius IX, who authorized its members to wear a golden rose, to be suspended from a gold and black rose version. The order is a mark of recognition given by the Holy See to those who have contributed to the glory of the Church. — C.E., V, 481.

Golden Rule, the first and second commandments, love of God and love of one's neighbor. (Ed.)
Golden Sequence, name of the hymn “Veni Sancte Spiritus, Et emitte ccelitus.”

Golden Spur, Order of. See Golden Militia.

Golden Year. See Jubilee, Holy Year of.

Goldwell, Thomas (c. 1501-85), Bp. of St. Asaph, Wales, last survivor of the ancient English hierarchy, b. Kent, England; d. Rome. He was Card. Pole’s secretary, and went into exile with him to Italy, in 1538. Nine years later he joined the Theatines, and under Queen Mary returned as Bp. of St. Asaph; Mary’s death frustrated his transfer to Oxford, and he went into exile again. He was the only English bishop present at the Council of Trent.—C.E.

Golgotha. See Caesarea, gol-yär’s (followers of “Golias’”), wandering students and clerks, in Europe, during the 12th and 13th centuries, who demanded hospitality in monasteries and castles, and paid with songs, jugglery, and buffoonery. Proud of their scholarly achievements, they used a vulgar Latin in their compositions; thus producing a special literature or Goliardic poetry which in outward form resembled ecclesiastical sequences. Two collections exist: the Carmina Burana from the monastery of Benedict-beuren, and another among the so-called Harleian MSS., both containing songs on wine, women, nature, pious hymns of enthusiasm for the Crusades, or coarse lampoons on the clergy. Later they allied themselves with strutting players and were subject to the censure of synods and councils. Their influence on German poetry was stimulating and permanent. Among the songs attributed to them, and still popular, are “Gaudemeus Igitur” and “Lauriger Horatius.”—Haskins, The Renaissance of the Twelfth Century, Camb., Mass., 1928.

Goliath, go-lI’eth, man; Mó’l, a famous giant of Geth, against whom David fought, and whom he killed. Goliath is described as being “six cubits and a span” (1 Kings, 17) in height, i.e., over 9 ft. at the likeliest reckoning; his armor and weapons were in proportion. In the time of Saul, the Philistines, having attacked the Israelites, encamped in a valley between Socoh and Azeca. Each day, for 40 days, this giant came forth from the camp of the Philistines, and by words of contempt, provoked the Israelites to a single combat. David alone dared to accept the challenge; advancing with only staff, sling, and stones, towards Goliath, he struck the giant in the forehead with a stone, with such force that the latter fell to the earth. David rushed up, drew the sword of Goliath, and cut off his head. The Philistines fled in rout, and David returned in triumph to Jerusalem. Convinced that the honor of victory belonged to God alone, David saw that the sword of Goliath was placed in sanctuary at Nob, wrapped in a cloth behind the ephod of the high priest (1 Kings, 21).

Gomer. (1) F3dest son of Japheth (Gen., 10.). His tribe, the Cimmerians, an Aryan people who inhabited the Crimea and the adjoining districts of southern Russia, came into western Asia through the Caucasus in the 7th century b.c. They attacked the northern frontier of the Assyrian empire, besieged Sardis, invaded Lydia and Phrygia, and conquered Cappadocia. They were finally crushed by Ar dys (655-625) and the Assyrians in Cilicia. (2) Gomer, the wife of the prophet Osee (Osee, 1).

Gonfaloniere, gon’fö-ló-né-e’rá, the gonfalon­bearer, or standard-bearer of the Holy Roman Church. He has the rank of lieutenant-general and is entitled to the Noble Guard uniform.

Gonzalo Garcia, Saint, martyr (c. 1556-97), missionary, b. Bassein, East India; d. Mino, Japan. He assisted the Jesuits in Japan as a catechist for eight years, and then engaged successfully in commerce at Alacao. While in thePhilippines he became a Franciscan lay brother, and returning to Japan was crucified four years later under the Emperor Taiho-Sama. Feast, 5 Feb.—C.E.

Gonzaga University, Spokane, Wash., founded 1887; conducted by the Jesuits; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; schools of law, commerce, and finance; Saturday courses; correspondence, graduate, and summer schools; professors, 74; students, 1181; degrees conferred in 1929, 110.

Good, being when considered as having all that belongs to it, its perfection and therefore desirable; being, with its existence, its powers or activities, its acquired qualities, God, as possessing His existence, and powers in perfection, is therefore the greatest, highest, or supreme Good.—C.E.; Rickaby, Moral Philosophy, Lond., 1901.

Good, Moral, constitutes the natural end and perfection (in the supernatural order, the supernatural end) of the highest vital appetite of man’s rational nature. God, the source of all created being and goodness, is also the last end of man, the Supreme Good “Who satisfieth thy desire” (Ps. 103). Imperfect goods of particular appetites are really good only when ordained to the attainment of man’s perfection or last end. These are generally classified as: (a) external goods, (b) goods of body, and (c) goods of soul. While the goodness or badness of many acts is determined by positive law, yet ultimately, the distinction between good and evil is a natural one, right rational nature constituting the proximate norm of morality and the Divine Nature or Reason the ultimate norm. An act is morally good when directed by reason to man’s ultimate end, i.e., when in conformity with right rational nature; otherwise it is evil. Some objects are naturally suitable, others unsuitable, to human nature. Hence there exists a distinction between moral good and evil, which has its origin in the nature of things; acts such as blasphemy, idolatry, lying, etc., being intrinsically evil, others such as the worship of God, pursuit of truth, etc., being by their very nature good. Although some actions, such as walking, etc., considered in the abstract, may be termed indifferent, yet every concrete human act is either morally good or bad to the extent that it conforms to the moral law, or leads towards or away from man’s final end. This quality of moral goodness, which may be increased or diminished, is dependent on three factors: (a) the object of the act itself, (b) the purpose or end of the agent, and (c) the circumstances of the act. To be morally good all three elements of the act must be in conformity with the standards of morality, while if one of these determinants be evil the act itself will be morally had.—C.E.; Cronin, Science of Ethics, Dub., 1920; Ross, Christian Ethics, N. Y., 1919; Woods, First Book in Ethics, N. Y., 1923. (D. A. Mac.)

Good Counsel, a monthly magazine published at Philadelphia, Pa., by the Augustinian Fathers; founded, 1924; it is named after Our Lady of Good Counsel, and its purpose is to promote devotion to her; circulation, 7,500.

Good Counsel, OUR LADY OF, a title given to the miraculous picture of the Madonna at Genazzano, honored particularly in the Order of St. Augustine. The devotion arose from the legend that the Madonna of Genazzano was “miraculously transported from Albania into Italy, accompanying across the Adriatic two Christians who fled from the Mussulman invasion. It rested in the Augustinian Church, 1467. The feast was instituted by Benedict XIII in 1727, but is not in the universal calendar. Pope Leo XIII added the title “Mother of Good Counsel” to the Litany of Loreto.—Dillon, The Virgin Mother of Good Counsel. (N. M. W.)

Good Faith, a phrase used in allusion to the holding of an erroneous belief, that is objectively untrue, due to invincible ignorance. Thus one may sincerely believe the errors of a heretical sect and be saved. Generally, such an honest state of mind should be corrected, except when prudence demands silence for the sake of a greater good, private or public. Good faith is also necessary to prescription (Can. 1512).—C.E.; Slater, Manual of Moral Theology, N. Y., 1918.

Good Friday, Friday in Holy Week, anniversary of the death of Christ, on which the Passion and Crucifixion of Christ are commemorated; a day of fasting and penance from the earliest ages of the Church. Black vestments are worn by the priest, and until the Mass the altar is covered only by a single linen cloth and there are no lights. The morning services are in three parts: a Prophecy; Lesson from the Scriptures, the reading of the Passion and prayers for all mankind, the unveiling and adoration of the Cross, accompanied by the chanting of the Impropriety; and the Mass of the Presanctified, before which the Host, already consecrated on Good Thursday, is taken in solemn procession from the Altar of Repose to the main altar. It is not a Mass properly speaking, as there is no consecration, but the Host is incensed, elevated before the people, and consumed by the priest. Holy Communion is given to the faithful only in case of sickness. It is customary to have services from twelve noon until three in commemoration of the Three Hours’ Agency of Christ, and the office of Tenebrae is sung in the evening.—C.E.; Guéranger, tr. Shepherd, Liturgical Year: Passiontide and Holy Week, Lond., 1886.

Good-havens, a small bay on the southern coast of Crete, near Thalassa (Lassa), where St. Paul was beached on his voyage to Rome (Acts, 27).

Goodness, as a divine attribute, the perfection of God by the complete possession of all that is best in Himself, and as the source of all that is good in His creatures.—Pohle-Preuss, God: His Knowledge, Essence, and Attributes, St. L., 1921. (Ed.)

Good Samaritan, PARABLE OF THE. The occasion of the parable (Luke, 10) was a question of a doctor of the law concerning eternal life, asked with the intention of embarrassing Our Lord. Christ refers the man to the Law and invites him to answer himself; this the questioner does by reciting the commandment of the love of God, which was part of the great daily prayer, and adding to it the precept of the love of the neighbor, as was done by Our Lord himself in His teaching. When Our Lord approves his answer, the doctor wishes to justify himself further, putting a question which he was so well able to answer, by asking: And who is my neighbor? Since a more or less abstract definition could give occasion to distinctions and discussions, Jesus answered by giving a concrete illustration in the parable of the Good Samaritan. A man going down from Jerusalem to Jericho is attacked by a band of robbers who despoil him and beat him. A priest approaches, who might be expected to give good example and obey the Law’s precept of charity towards the neighbor, especially as the victim is apparently a fellow countryman, but he passes by. So also a Levite. Next comes a Samaritan, chosen by Our Lord to give greater force to the lesson; for in his case, racial and religious bitterness would make the practice of charity more difficult (John, 4). At once moved by compassion, he attends to the needs of the unfortunate, then conveys him to an inn, and pays in advance for the care for the man a sum equivalent to two days’ wages, promising to make good on his return any further expense incurred by the innkeeper. The story leads up quite naturally to the question Our Lord concludes the narrative: “Which of these three, in thy opinion, was neighbor to him that fell among the robbers?” The only possible answer to this query is given by the doctor of the law, who thus learns that a neighbor is anyone who needs any manner of assistance or help.—Fonek, tr. Leahy, Parables of the Gospel, N. Y., 1914. (E. A. A.)

Good Shepherd, PARABLE OF THE. Our Lord means to teach in this parable (Matt., 18) the care and love of God for the little ones, that is to say the weak, of whom He thinks so much that He has placed them under the protection of His angels. God wishes that not one of them should become lost; hence the two parables are commonly identified. The differences between them are of the kind that may be expected in two parallel versions of the same discourse, teaching essentially the same lesson; the value of the soul in the eyes of God, whence flows the necessity of doing everything to reclaim one on the way to perdition, the point brought out especially by St. Matthew, and the joy of God over the conversion of the sinner, the point brought out especially by St. Luke.—Fonek, tr. Leahy, Parables of the Gospel, N. Y., 1914. (E. A. A.)

Good Shepherd, RELIGIOUS OF THE. See RELIGIOUS OF OUR LADY OF CHARITY OF THE GOOD SHEPHERD OF ANGELS.
Good Thief, traditionally known as Dismas, one of the thieves crucified with Christ, who rebuked his companion for demanding that Christ should save them, prayed instead a share in His Kingdom, and received the assurance: "This day thou shalt be with Me in paradise." A portion of the cross on which he died is preserved in the Chapel of Relics, Santa Croce in Gerusalemme, Rome. He is patron of persons condemned to death.

Gopher Wood is mentioned in the Bible, as the material out of which Noah's ark was made (Gen., 6). Translators either have not attempted to give an equivalent, or have with early Jewish interpreters read a slightly different word (Vulg.: "Laevetatis"; D.V.: "timber planks"). Commentators as early as St. Ambrose and St. Augustine noticed, after Celsius, the close resemblance of the words gopher and kopher (pitch, hence any pitch-producing tree, especially cypress), and were of the opinion that a tree of the pine or cypress family might be intended. The suitableness of its wood for shipbuilding, known from very early ages, is a further argument in favor of this view.

Gordian, the name of three Roman emperors, who reigned between A.D. 237 and 244, all of whom met with violent deaths. Under them the Church enjoyed peace, as their rival, Maximin, had been a fierce persecutor of the Christians.—C.E.

Gordianus and Epimachus, Saints, martyrs (Rome, 362 and Alexandria, 250). Gordianus was a Roman judge, converted to Christianity by the priest Januarius. Under Julian the Apostate he was tortured and beheaded by the prefect Apronianus. His body was buried in a crypt on the Latin Way, beside the body of St. Epimachus, martyred at Alexandria under Decius. Relics in the Abbey of Kempten, Bavaria, and in St. John Lateran, Rome. Feast, R. Cal., 10 May.—C.E.; Butler.

Gordon, Andrew (1712-1855), priest, b. Bellie, Scotland; d. Aberdeen. The nephew of Bishop Geddes and brother of Fr. John Gordon, he entered the Seminary of St. Mary for three years, and went to Scots College at Douay for eight years. Ordained priest by Bp. Hay, 1785, he was placed in charge of the Mission of Aberdeen, which position he occupied until his death. In 1867 Fr. Gordon accompanied Bp. Hay to Edinburgh. He introduced music into the church in Aberdeen, 1814, and perhaps the most important work of his ministry was the erection of a parochial school, 1833, and the opening of the College of St. Mary for the education of young men destined for the Church.—Davidson, Priest Gordon, Lond.

Gordon Riots, so called from the head of the movement, Lord George Gordon, occurred in London from 2 June to 9 June, 1780. The "Protestant Association" had procured the introduction of a Catholic Relief Bill in Scotland, and were encouraged to work for the repeal of the Catholic Relief Bill in England and Canada. Lord George Gordon, president of both the English and the Scotch associations, procured a petition for the repeal of the Relief Bill, signed by more than 30,000 names, and carried it to the House of Commons, 2 June, 1780, accompanied by a huge procession wearing blue cockades and carrying flags with the device "No Popery." Attacks were made on the property of Catholics, and as the riot spread the prisons were fired and many Protestants suffered. The crowd was finally dispersed by a military force. Lord George Gordon was acquitted. Probably he did not foresee the result of his actions. Some compensation was paid to the Catholics for their losses.—C.E.; Butler.

Gorgonius, Saint, martyr (304), d. Nicomedia. He was a trusted servant in the household of the Emperor Diocletian. When the persecution began, Gorgonius remained firm in his faith, was tortured with his companions Dorotheus, Peter, and others, and strained Feast, 9 Sept.—C.E.; Butler.

Gorham Judgment, decision rendered, 1850, by the judicial committee of the Privy Council of England which directed the Dean of Arches to indict the Rev. George C. Gorham into the vicarage of Brampton Spoke, in spite of his denial of baptismal regeneration. Numerous protests and appeals were made by High Churchmen and the fierce controversy which arose in regard to it was the main determining factor in Manning's decision to become a Catholic.

Gorkum, The Martyrs of. In 1572, following the first Calvinist synod at Embden in the Netherlands, the Watergeuzen heretics seized 17 priests and two laybrothers in Gorkum and its environs.
They threw them into prison, and, after transferring them to Brielle, cruelly mutilated and hanged them, 9 July, for refusing to deny their belief in the Blessed Sacrament and the papal supremacy; this in spite of an order of William of Orange that priests should not be molested. They were beatified in 1675 and canonized in 1865.

Görres, gôr'res, JOHANN JOSEPH (1776-1848), author, and champion of Catholic interests in Germany, b. Coblenz, Germany; d. Munich. His earliest writings reveal his admiration for the principles of Romanticism, in which he was interested. Two years later he was again at Coblenz, where he devoted himself to mythology and was named superintendent of education. His struggle for civil and religious liberty provoked the hostility of the Prussian government, and to escape arrest he fled to Strasbourg. Gradually he took a more active part in the defense of the Church. In 1827 he was called to the University of Munich, and became the leading spirit in a brilliant Catholic circle including Arndts, Döllinger, Möhler, Phillips, and other scholars, who worked for a renovation of the spiritual life, the civil liberty of Catholics. As a result of his study of the medieval mystical writers, he produced his great work on Christian mysticism, and when the Prussians arrested the Abp. of Cologne he at once opposed the infringement of ecclesiastical rights by the civil power, and became a constant contributor to the newly-established "Historisch-politische Blätter." In his last years he showed his loyalty once more by his condemnation of the schism of Johann Ronge (1845).

—C.E.

Görres Society, an association of Catholic scientists and lawyers founded at Coblenz, 1876, by the poet, Alexander Kaufmann, to encourage the progress of science in Catholic Germany. It was named for Johann J. Görres (q.v.) and has its headquarters at Bonn, although annual sessions are held in other cities. It conducts discussions and lectures on philosophy, history, natural sciences, law, etc., and founded the Görres Society Historical Institute at Rome, 1889. This purely private association has, among other important works, successfully undertaken the task of editing the Acts and records of the Council of Trent.—Kirchenlexikon.

Gospel (A.-S., godspell, good news), an authentic and inspired document containing the glad tidings of redemption and revelation through the life, teachings, and death of Jesus. There are four such documents, the Gospels according to Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John. The titles of these books, "Gospel according to," etc., signify "the Gospel history as written by," etc. The first three so manifestly agree in many points that they are classed together as synoptic (at a glance); the fourth differs from them in content, style, language. Prior to the writing of the Gospels was the spoken record of the acts and sayings of Jesus, the "Oral gospel," as it is called, or tradition; but the writers of the Gospels were inspired to record many things not remembered or handed down by word of mouth. There are many books which claim to be "Gospels," but only the four mentioned rightly claim Apostolic authority, and they alone are received by the Church. All others, of later origin, often trivial, absurd, and legendary, were rejected as spurious and are known as Apocrypha (q.v.)—C.E.; Arendzen, The Gospels—Fact, Myth, or Legend?, Lond., 1923. (R. F. S.)

Gospel in Liturgy. From the earliest times the Gospels were read and explained during Divine services; gradually certain portions, appropriate to the chief feasts and seasons of the year, were chosen and became a fixed part of the Mass. Thus, in Advent the Gospels relate to preparation for the coming of Christ; at Christmastide and the Epiphany, to the birth and childhood of Christ; in Lent, to penance and the Passion of Christ; at Eastern time, the last discourse of Jesus, after Pentecost, the nature and development of the Kingdom of God and the duties of its members. During the reading of the Gospel all stand as a mark of reverence for the Word of God and sign their foreheads, lips, and breast with the cross as a sign of readiness to believe, profess, and cherish its truths. The Gospel is read or sung after the Epistle by the celebrant, standing at the left side of the altar, as the people face it. The Last Gospel is that regularly read at the end of Mass (John, 1); except on Vigils, days in Lent when the Mass of a feast is celebrated, and days of Special Commemoration.—C.E.; Ryan, Gospels for Sundays and Feast Days, N.Y., 1925. (R. F. S.)

Gospel Side of Altar, the left side of the altar as one faces it, so called because portions of the Gospels are read there at Mass. (J. C. T.)

Goss, ALEXANDER (1814-72), archaeologist, 2nd Bp. of Liverpool, b. Ormskirk, England; d. Liverpool. He was ordained at the English College in Rome, 1841; consecrated, 1853; and became Bp. of Liverpool, 1856. Zealous and devoted, he was a champion of Catholic education and of the welfare of the Church. As a member of the Chetham Society he edited several archaeological treatises; he also collected materials for a history of Catholicity in the north, and edited Drion's "Sacred History."—C.E.

Gothic Architecture. The word "Gothic," implying the extreme of barbarism, was a contemptuous and inaccurate term used by the Italians of the Renaissance to describe the architecture, Frankish-Norman in origin, of the Middle Ages. It may be fittingly called the "Catholic Style," since it was the expression of the new civilization introduced by the Church after the struggle with paganism, and it remains today the supreme artistic achievement of that civilization. The religious orders, the Benedictines of Cluny, the Cistercians, Carthusians, and Augustinians, promoted the development of Gothic art; the Franks, Lombards, and Northmen gave it vitality; the Capetian kings and Norman dukes invested it with a sense of nationalism. From the Lombards they borrowed the pier and archivolt, the ribbed and domed vault;
from the Carolingian builders, the basilica plan of triple aisles, transept, and three apses; and the interior system of arcade, triforium, and clerestory. To these the Normans added the vaulted roof and the principle of concentrated thrusts met by pier buttresses and hidden flying-buttresses. Gothic architecture was perfected in the Isle of France in the early 12th century. The pointed arch was introduced, the flying-buttresses emerged through the roof, the clerestory windows were heightened, and the chevet, with double apsidal aisles and chapels, was added. Architecture was now associated with sculpture, stained glass, and mural painting, in France. Among the cathedrals of the period may be mentioned those of Notre-Dame in Paris, Chartres, and Amiens. The last phase of Gothic architecture in France was the Flamboyant, more a form of decoration than a style. French 15th-century architecture was secular, and the best examples are found in guild halls, palaces, manors, and memorials. In England a parallel, but individual, course of development was taking place; buildings were larger, and covered with timber roofs. Norman Romanesque was introduced with the erection of Canterbury by Edward the Confessor, 1050, and adopted by the Benedictines. The Cistercians preferred the economical Gothic. The Early English period is marked by great beauty of interior treatment, e.g., the slender shafts, lancets, and sculptured capitals, of Westminster Abbey. Perpendicular, a style distinctly English in character, was introduced, and with it the invention of the fan vault. English Gothic displayed variety and personality, rather than the uniformity of the French. Its most famous examples are the cathedrals of Lincoln and Exeter, and Westminster Abbey. In Germany, where the favorite style was Rhenish Romanesque, Gothic developed slowly. Cologne cathedral was its first example. Individual development was manifest in the Haltenbau scheme, which consisted of a great hall with level vaulting, supported on slender shafts which divided it into aisles. In Flanders, Gothic architecture of distinctly French influence was evident in the secular buildings; the town- and guild-halls. In Italy, Burgundy, Aquitaine, and Spain the fundamental principles of Gothic were never accepted, although it influenced decoration and design.—C.E.; Ruskin, Seven Lamps of Architecture, Orpington, 1849; Cram, The Gothic Quest, New York, 1895; Brandon, Analysis of Gothic Architecture, London, 1847.

Gothic Rite. See Mozarabic Rite.
Gower

Gratia (Lat.)

grace, whether actual or habitual, according as it is either natural or supernatural, internal or external to the recipient. In its strict and ordinary sense, however, grace directly from God, without reference to the works of the recipient, is a gratuitous gift of God, for the ultimate purpose of fitting the recipient in a manner constituted a supernatural nature, a complete radical principle of salutary action. In reference to its origin, a distinction is made between the grace of God bestowed upon human beings is based on the merits of Christ. Before the fall Adam received grace directly from God, without reference to the Saviour of mankind; and so did the angels whilst they were on probation. But now we, the children of the new Adam, are grace bestowed upon us through Christ Our Lord. Grace is so necessary that without it we cannot do anything for life eternal. Hence the words of Christ: “Without me you can do nothing” (John, 15).—C.E.; Pohle-Preuss, Grace: Actual and Habitual, St. L., 1921.

Gracia, CONTROVERSIES ON, bear upon the reconciliation of grace with free will. The chief theological systems involved are: Augustinianism, Thomism, Molinism, Congruism, and Syncretism. Augustinianism and Thomism hold that grace derives its efficacy from its own intrinsic nature (ab intrinseco), the former ascribing it to a moral and the latter to a physical influence of grace upon the free will. Molinism and Congruism teach that grace is efficacious extrinsically (ab extrinseco), of deriving its efficacy from the free will prepared and assisted by grace. Congruism, however, explicitly postulates that the grace be congruous (congrua), that is, adapted to the nature and circumstances of the recipient. For the infallibility of the connection of grace with the consent of the free will, both fall back upon God’s foreknowledge of the free will. Syncretism defends the intrinsic efficacy of grace for difficult actions, and extrinsic for such as are less difficult.—C.E.; Pohle-Preuss, Grace: Actual and Habitual, St. L., 1921.

Gracias, William Russell (1832-1904), philanthropist and merchant, b. Cork, Ireland; d. New York. To his activities is largely due the commercial development of western South America. In 1880 and 1884, he was elected mayor of New York, the first Catholic to fill that office. He took an active part in succoring the famine-stricken Irish in 1879, and in 1897 founded at New York the Grace Institute to give free tuition in clerical work, dressmaking, and housekeeping to women and girls.—C.E.

Graces at Meals (Lat., gratia, thanksgiving), prayers said before and after meals, a custom common to all Christians. The prayers implore the divine blessing upon the food and upon those who are to partake of it, and express gratitude to God for the food, which is His gift. — C. E. (J. C. C.)

Grace of God and Favor of the Apostolic See, By The, formula used after a bishop's name in official documents to express that his office is from God and his designation to it from the Vicar of Christ.

Gradual (lat., gradus, step), the response and versicle to the Epistle, so called because at High Mass it was sung on the step of the altar. It ordinarily accentuates something in the Epistle, and is taken, except in rare cases, from Scripture, mostly from the Psalms. — C.E.; Fortescue, The Mass, N. Y., 1914.

Graduale, a liturgical book containing the choral parts of the Mass. Before the time of Gregory I (590-604), the responses and antiphons for the Mass and for the Divine Office were contained in one book called the Antiphonary. At present it is customary to have two separate books, the Graduale containing the Ordinary and Propers of the Mass, together with the Asperges me and the Ordo septemdi altar, and the Breviary with its Common and Proper Offices.

Gradual Psalms (lat., gradus, step) or Pilgrim Psalms (Ps. 119-133) were sung by the caravans of devout Israelites on their way to Jerusalem to celebrate the great feasts in the Temple. Other commentators say they were hymns sung in the liturgical service of the Temple as the Levites ascended in procession the steps, particularly in celebrating the Feast of Tabernacles. — C.E. (T. Mcl.)

Grasso-Greek Rite, See Italo-Greeks.

Graffiti (It., a scribbling), term accepted by archaeologists to designate the scratchings (names, ejaculations, prayers, etc.) of medieval pilgrims on early Christian monuments, particularly on tombs. Of little value artistically, they prove valuable to the historian. One of the most important examples is the graffito of Alexamenos, discovered 1857, and preserved in the Kircherian Museum of the Roman College. (See illustration.) It represents, desirously, a Christian worshiping a crucified figure with an ass's head; the Greek inscription signifies: "Alexamenos worships his God." — C.E.; Northcote-Brownlow, Roma Sotterranea, Lond., 1878.

Grain of Wheat, a parable occurring in John, 12, given as an explanation, when after the triumphal entry into Jerusalem, Philip and Andrew presented to Jesus the request of some Gentiles to see Him, of why He must suffer and die before His glorification. Jesus is the grain of wheat sown and that develops within it under the influence of sun and rain, so too must Jesus, according to the law of grace, suffer and die, that is, sacrifice all that He possesses according to the natural order in order that mankind may be redeemed, souls saved, honor and glory given to God. The same law holds good for all men; to encourage us we have Christ's promise of a great reward and assurance of the grace He merited for us. St. Ignatius of Antioch applied this parable to himself, just before being thrown to the lions, in the beautiful words: "I am the wheat of Christ, I shall be ground between the teeth of beasts, that I may become clean bread." It can also be applied to the Holy Eucharist. — Fonck, tr. Leahy, Parables of the Gospel, N. Y., 1914. (N. G.)

Granderath, Theodor (1839-1902), historian, b. Giesenkirchen, Rhine Province; d. Valkenburg, Holland. Entering the Society of Jesus, he was appointed professor of canon law in the Seminary of Giesebrecht, then in the Seminary of Giesebrecht, then in the Seminary of Alexamenos, discovered 1857, and in the Seminary of the Roman College. (See illustration.) It represents, desirously, a Christian worshiping a crucified figure with an ass's head; the Greek inscription signifies: "Alexamenos worships his God." — C.E.; Northcote-Brownlow, Roma Sotterranea, Lond., 1878.

Grain of Wheat, a parable occurring in John, 12, given as an explanation, when after the triumphant entry into Jerusalem, Philip and Andrew presented to Jesus the request of some Gentiles to see Him, of why He must suffer and die before His glorification. Jesus is the grain of wheat sown and destined to bring forth much fruit. Now, just as according to the law of nature the grain of wheat, under the penalty of remaining alone to rot, be trampled upon, or eaten, must die, that is, sacrifice all that it hides within itself in support of the life that develops within it under the influence of sun and rain, so too must Jesus, according to the law of grace, suffer and die, that is, sacrifice all that He possesses according to the natural order in order that mankind may be redeemed, souls saved, honor and glory given to God. The same law holds good for all men; to encourage us we have Christ's promise of a great reward and assurance of the grace He merited for us. St. Ignatius of Antioch applied this parable to himself, just before being thrown to the lions, in the beautiful words: "I am the wheat of Christ, I shall be ground between the teeth of beasts, that I may become clean bread." It can also be applied to the Holy Eucharist. — Fonck, tr. Leahy, Parables of the Gospel, N. Y., 1914. (N. G.)

Grand Island, Diocese of, Nebraska, comprises the counties of Arthur, Banner, Blaine, Box Butte, Brown, Buffalo, Cherry, Cheyenne, Custer, Dawes, Deuel, Garfield, Grant, Greeley, Hooker, Howard, Keya-paha, Kitun, Logan, Loup, McPherson, Rock, Scott's Bluff, Sheridan, Sherman, Sioux, Thomas, Valley, and those portions of Dawson, Hall, Lincoln, and Keith lying north of the South Platte River; area, 40,000 sq. m.; erected at Kearney, 1912; transferred to Grand Island, 1917; suffragan of Dubuque. Bishop: James A. Duffy (1913), Churches, 98; priests, secular, 64; priests, regular, 2; religious women, 158; academies, 3; primary schools, 14; pupils in parochial schools, 2250; institutions, 3; Catholics, 23,191.

Grand Rapids, Diocese of, Michigan, embraces the following counties of the Lower Peninsula of the State of Michigan: Alcona, Alpena, Antrim, Arenac, Bay, Benzie, Charlevoix, Cheboygan, Clare, Crawford, Gladwin, Grand Traverse, Gratiot, Eaton, Iosco, Isabella, Kalkaska, Kent, Lake Leelanau, Manistee, Mason, Mecosta, Midland, Missaukee, Montcalm, Montmorency, Muskegon, Newaygo, Oceana, Ogemaw, Osceola, Oscoda, Otsego, Ottawa, Presque Isle, Rose common, Saginaw, and Wexford; area, 22,561 sq. m.; established, 1882; suffragan of Cincinnati. Bishop: Henry J. Richter (1883-1914), Michael J. Gallagher (1916-18), Edward D. Kelly (1919-26), Joseph G. Pinten (1926). Churches, 229; priests, secular, 182; priests, regular, 25; religious women, 907; college, 1; seminary, 1; academies, 4; high schools, 39; primary schools, 91; pupils in parochial schools, 25,549; institutions, 12; Catholics, 145,000.

Gratian, Decree of, a collection of canonical decrees and excerpts from the Fathers and from Roman Law, published on his private authority by John Gratian, a monk and professor at the University of Bologna, c. 1150. Before his time there were many decrees of particular councils in the East, in Africa, Spain, and Gaul. Gratian sought to bring order into these various collections, adding brief comments and intending it as a text for the great law school of Bologna. It is divided into three parts. The first consists of 101 “Distinctions,” subdivided into chapters; the second part contains 36 “Causes”; the third section is composed of 5 “Distinctions.” The first part deals with the written sources of canon law and of ecclesiastical persons; the second treats of ecclesiastical administration, marriage, and penance; the third comments upon Sacraments and Sacramentals. The references to the Decree are technical, e.g., C. 24 DL means chapter 24 of the fiftieth Distinction; C. 4 C. 111 q. 2 means chapter four in the second question of the third cause. The Leipzig edition of the Decree is critically edited by Friedberg.—C.E., VI, 730.

Gratitude recognizes benefits with praise and thanksgiving, returning them according to opportunity and means. Since beneficence neither supposes title in the receiver nor creates one in the giver, gratitude is a special virtue. However, dictated by man’s social nature, it has been imposed by the Creator, to whom it is universally due.

Gratiana, HENRY (1746-1820), patriot, b. Dublin; d. London. Entering the Irish Parliament, 1775, he won fame as an orator, advocating free trade and legislative independence for Ireland. Though a Protestant he championed the Catholic Relief Bill, and having retired from Parliament, 1797, re-entered, 1805, chiefly to help that cause. He presented Catholic petitions, 1805 and 1810, and in 1813, with Castleraugh and Canning, succeeded in having the bill pass through a second reading.

Gratuitous Grace. The grace of God, actual or habitual is a created supernatural entity, beyond the scope of man’s attainment, outside the limits of human exigencies. It is wholly and entirely within God’s power to dispense or withhold. Good works cannot merit it; the most persistent natural desires cannot obtain it. In the present Providence of God, we are privileged to receive and use it, simply because God’s liberality and Christ’s redemption have come to the support of our natural helplessness for its attainment.—Pohle-Preuss, Grace: Actual and Habitual, St. L., 1921.

Grave, an excavation in the earth for the burial of a corpse. It was called loculus in the times of the catacombs, and was dug or hewn into the tufa or porous earth outside the city walls. The Church admits single and ancestral graves and family plots for members of the same family. Where there is no Catholic cemetery, the Church requires that a separate space be granted for the burial of Catholics, and, if this is refused, the single graves must be blessed (Can. 1206). No ownership can be claimed by individuals.

Graves, DESECRATION OF, a barbarous custom, among ancient and modern nations, punished by Church law. Whosoever desecrates corpses or graves to commit theft, or from some other evil motive, is to be punished with the personal interdict, is ipso facto infamous, and if a cleric, must be deposed (Can. 2328).—P.C. Augustine.

Great Britain. See British Empire.

Great Falls, Diocese of, Montana, embraces the counties of Big Horn, Blaine, Carbon, Cascade, Chouteau, Custer, Dawson, Fallon, Fergus, Hill, Musselshell, Park, Phillips, Prairie, Rosebud, Sheridan, Stillwater, Sweet Grass, Valley, Wibaux, and Yellowstone; area, 94,158 sq. m.; erected, 1904; suffragan of Oregon City. Bishop: Matthias C. Lenihan (1904). Churches, 149; stations and chapels, 156; priests, secular, 51; priests, regular, 17; religious women, 284; academies, 4; primary schools, 11; Indian schools, 7; pupils in parochial schools, 1396; students in Sunday schools, 6200; institutions, 9; Catholics, 32,425.

Great God, whatever through Thy Church, hymn written by an anonymous author, and found in “Hymns Ancient and Modern.”

Great Namaqualand, Prefecture Apostolic of, Union of South Africa; bounded N. by the northern limits of the civil districts of Luderitzbucht, Gibeon, and Rehoboth, w. by the Atlantic Ocean, s. by the Orange River, and e. by the political boundary of Southwest Africa; established, 1909; entrusted to the Oblates of St. Francis de Sales. Prefects Apostolic: Stanislav Kholikowski, O.S.F.S. (1910-22), Matthias Eber, O.S.F.S. (1923), residence at Hoarchabas. Churches, 10; stations, 9; priests, 8; religious women, 13; schools, 10; orphans, 2; Catholics, 3900.

Great Pastor of the sheep, title given Our Lord Jesus Christ (Rev., 1:12).

Great Silence, particular times, especially from night prayer, until next morning after breakfast, when speaking is more strictly prohibited among members of religious orders.

Great Supper, a parable occurring in Luke, 14. The occasion of this parable was a pious exclamation, made by one of the guests at a supper to which Our Lord had been invited. As Jesus had just mentioned the reward in store for good done unselfishly at the resurrection of the just, a man exclaimed: “Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the Kingdom of God.” Jesus takes occasion to teach that the Kingdom of God is something which will require more than a pious wish, and He does so in the parable of the Great Supper. A man who is naturally to be imagined wealthy, has prepared a great banquet and just before the feast he sends a servant to remind the guests of the invitation previously accepted by them. At the last minute each one of the guests in turn excuses himself, alleging various reasons of more or less cogent character. Angered by this refusal, the man sends his servant to bring in all whom he may find on the roads leading to the city, so that there will be no room for those that were invited. The parable teaches that they alone shall enter the Kingdom of God who have listened to His call in a spirit of docility, without allowing themselves to be detained by other cares in the false hope that their place is secure. Several Catholic authors as well as most critics outside the Catholic Church hold that this parable, and that reported in Matt., 21, are two parallel forms of the same parable; still the identification cannot be re-Greek Church, a term very commonly misapplied, in referring to the 17 Orthodox Churches, or even to all the Eastern Churches. Properly, it belongs only to the schismatic church of modern Greece, or at most to the very few Eastern Churches whose members are mainly Greeks (Greece, Constantinople, Cyprus).—C.E.

Greek College, Rome, a school founded and endowed by Gregory XIII for Greeks of any nation in which the Greek Rite was used. Begun, 1577, and entrusted to Jesuit direction, 1591, it was closed during the Revolution, reopened, 1849, and reorganized by Leo XIII, 1897.

Greek Cross, used in later Greek architecture, has four short limbs of equal length. (J. F. S.)

Greek Rites, any rite, i.e., the form or arrangement of liturgical services, derived from the rites or liturgies originally celebrated in Greek in Antioch and Alexandria, regardless of the language in which it is now used. The following table shows the various Greek rites and the Churches which use them.

Antioch.

(1) (a) Greek Liturgy of St. Mark; no longer used.
   (b) Coptie Liturgies of St. Cyril, St. Basil and St. Gregory Nazianzus (Uniat and non-Uniat Copts).

(2) Ethiopic Liturgy (non-Uniat Abyssinians).—C.E.

Green, in the liturgy, as in nature, a symbol of hope, life, and growth. This color denotes that through Christ is born the hope of salvation, and that after the winter, which preceded Christ's coming, the green springtime of grace has begun for souls. It is the color for the ordinary Sundays and for week days when the Sunday Mass is repeated.

Green Bay, Diocese of, Wis., embraces the 16 counties of Brown, Calumet, Door, Florence, Forest, Kewaunee, Langlade, Manitowoc, Marinette, Oconto, Outagamie, Portage, Waupaca, Waushara, and Winnebago; area, 11,583 sq. m.; established, 1868; suffragan of Milwaukee. Bishops: Joseph Melcher (1868-73), Francis X. Krautbauer (1875-85), Frederick X. Kutzer (1886-91), Sebastian G. Messmer (1892-1903), Joseph J. Fox (1904-14), Paul P. Rhode (1915). Churches, 241; priests, secular, 202; priests, regular, 60; religious women, 1759; colleges, 2; academy, 1; primary schools, 115; Indian schools, 2; pupils in parochial schools, 26,925; institutions, 13; Catholics, 175,000.

Greenland, colonial possession of Denmark; area, 46,740 sq. m.; pop., 14,355. It was a Catholic country from the 11th to the 16th century, lapsed thereafter into paganism, and since 1721 has become entirely Lutheran.—C.E.

Gregorian Altar, the privileged altar of St. Gregory the Great, in the church of St. Gregory on Monte Celso in Rome. It is related that St. Gregory, by saying one Mass, liberated the soul of a monk named Justus, from Purgatory; so the faithful have confidently hoped that any Mass on this altar would free a soul from Purgatory. The Congregation of Indulgences approved this confidence (see Indulgence). The indulgence of the Gregorian altar is no longer granted to other altars. (J. C. T.)

Gregorian Calendar. The Church's calendar depends on the calendar in use at the present time, which is known as the Gregorian, from Pope
Gregory XIII, by whose decree it was brought to its present form. As the length of the year depends on the time of the earth's journey around the sun, and as that journey is not completed in exactly 365 days, Julius Caesar made each fourth year a "leap year" by inserting an additional day in February. The Julian Calendar, however, was inaccurate; the journey of the earth is made in a little less than 365½ days, and a constantly increasing error resulted. In Pope Gregory's time, 1582, it amounted to 10 days; he therefore dropped these from the calendar and ordered that the leap year should be observed in the year 1584, not in 1700, 1800, and 1900, and that thereafter century years would be leap years only when they are divisible by 400. This gives a year so nearly exact that there will be an error of one day only in 35 centuries. The calculations were made principally by two astronomers, Lulii and Clavius. Protestant countries for a time refused to use the Gregorian Calendar. England did not accept it until 1752, and Russia, which was 13 days behind the rest of the world, adopted it only recently.—C.E., III, 168, 739; Sullivan, Externals of the Catholic Church, N. Y., 1918. (J. F. S)

Gregorian Chant, the Roman form of early plain chant, as distinguished from the kindred Ambrosian, Gallican, and Mozarabic chants, which it gradually supplanted from the 8th to the 11th centuries. Its name derives from Pope Gregory the Great (590-604) to whom tradition ascribes the final arrangement of the Roman chant. Pius X, by his "Motu Proprio" of 22 Nov., 1903, ordered the universal restoration of the authentic Gregorian as the sole chant of the Roman Church, describing it as the supreme type of sacred music (which is one and the same as liturgical music) because it contains in the highest degree the qualities characteristic of sacred music: true art, and holiness. It follows that Gregorian is altogether indispensable in the celebration of the solemn liturgy, since an integral part of that liturgy; so much so, in fact, that these liturgical functions cannot take place if the chant be lacking. Such is the relation between the liturgy of the Church and the music it employs, as laid down by the papal code. The now flourishing Pius X Institute of Liturgical Music (q.v.) was established in New York City for the purpose of working out systematically the return to the chant in church music thus decreed.—C.E.; Manzetti, Church Music and Catholic Liturgy, Balt., 1925; Tablet, 17 Aug., 1929; Wyatt, St. Gregory and the Gregorian Music, Lond., 1904.

Gregorian Sacramentary, a liturgical book ascribed to Pope St. Gregory I, called sometimes the Sacramentary of Adrian I, owing to the fact that he sent it to Charlemagne between the years 781 and 791 when the latter wished to introduce the Roman Rite into his kingdom. The book was copied many times so that there are many versions of it, each containing the additions made by the various scribes. At first these additions were carelessly distinguished from the original text, but eventually they became part of it. The book has three parts as follows: (1) the Ordinary of the Mass; (2) the Propers of the Mass for the year beginning with Christmas Eve, but without any Masses for the Sundays after Epiphany and Pentecost; (3) the prayers for ordinations. (D. B. J.)

Gregorian Water, or Water of Consecration, a holy water used in the ceremony of the consecration of a church. It contains wine, salt, and ashes. It takes its name because its use was prescribed by Pope Gregory I. (J. F. S)

Gregory I (The Great), Saint, Pope (590-604), Doctor of the Church, b. Rome, c. 540; d. there. A son of St. Sylvia, and prefect of the city of Rome, he gave up his career and his wealth, founded six monasteries, and entered the Benedictine Order. He was appointed cardinal-deacon, and then sent to the Byzantine court to secure aid against the Lombards. The result of his six-year sojourn was a conviction that Rome must not rely on the East for help. After his return he wished to convert the English, but the people of Rome would not allow him to leave. His desire was realized when he sent St. Augustine, with a band of missionaires to England, c. 590. Upon his election to the papacy, he published a work on episcopal duties, which was used for centuries. Trouble with the Lombards occupied a great part of his reign. He enforced the celibacy of the clergy, and supervised church funds. Although he strengthened the prerogatives of the papacy by demanding supreme authority over all churches, judging bishops, and hearing the complaints of prelates, he was always tactful in dealing with secular authority. He established the system of appeals to Rome, and is recognized as an administrator and lawyer. Monasteries and missionary work claimed his interest and he left many writings on these subjects. Feast, R. Calif., 12 March.—C.E.: Mann; Dudden, Gregory the Great: His Place in History and in Thought, Lond., 1905.

Gregory II, Saint, Pope (715-731), b. Rome; d. there. He is the first papal almoner or librarian known to us by name. As deacon he accompanied Pope Constantine to Constantinople to discuss the canons of the Quinisext Council with Justinian II. As pope, he upheld the primacy of the Holy See, and opposed the iconoclastic edicts of Leo the Isaurian, while nevertheless giving him the allegiance due to a temporal sovereign. His opposition to the Byzantine Empire brought the Lombards in union with the papacy. He sent St. Boniface to Germany, and repaired Monte Cassino and the walls of Rome. Feast, R. Calif., 13 Feb.—C.E.: Mann.

Gregory III, Saint, Pope (731-741), b. Syria; d. Rome. A renowned ecclesiastical administrator, he continued the struggle against Iconoclasm, opposed the Lombards, aided foreign missions, and completed the restoration of the walls of Rome. Feast, R. Cal., 28 Nov.—C.E.; Mann.

Gregory IV, Pope (827-844), b. Rome; d. there. A cardinal-priest, he was the choice of the Roman nobility. During most of his pontificate he was involved in attempts to restore harmony between Emperor Louis the Pious and his sons. He fortified Ostia against the Saracens, repaired aqueducts and churches, and made St. Anschar first Abp. of Hamburg in order to encourage his mission to the Scandinavians.—C.E.; Mann.

Gregory V (Bruno), Pope (996-999), b. Carinthia, c. 970; d. Rome. The first German of his acts was to crown Emperor Otto III. When Otto left Rome, Gregory was expelled by a man he had befriended, Crescentius Numentanus, who named an antipope, John Philagathus; the latter was degraded and exiled to Germany, while Crescentius was hanged. In the dispute between Arnulf and Gerbert concerning the See of Reims, Gregory upheld the former, but subsequently appointed Gerbert to Ravenna.—C.E.; Mann.

Gregory VI (John Gratian), Pope (1045-46), b. Rome; d. probably at Cologne, Germany, 1048. He was archpriest of St. John's, when Benedict IX offered to surrender the papacy for a large sum of money. Gratian paid in good faith, wishing to rid the Holy See of its unworthy occupant, and was installed, 1045. When Benedict retired, his rivals nominated an antipope, John of Sabina. A synod at Sutri sent John to a monastery, declared that Benedict IX had forfeited his rights, and claimed that the action of Gregory VI was simoniacal. Gregory resigned, 1046, and returned to Germany with King Henry III. With the aid of Hildebrand, later Gregory VII, he had attempted to bring about civil and religious order.—C.E.; Mann.

Gregory VI, antipope, 1012. He was elected in opposition to Benedict VIII by a small Roman faction. Unable to establish himself in the see, he sought aid from King Henry II at Pohle, Hanover. The latter forbade him to act as pope and promised to have his claim settled by canon law. Gregory then disappeared from history.—C.E.; Mann.

Gregory VII (Hildebrand), Saint, Pope (1073-85), b. Tuscany, Italy, c. 1020; d. Salerno. He entered the Benedictine Order. While chaplain to Gregory VI, he was placed in charge of the Patrimony of St. Peter and displayed the great administrative and reforming ability which later characterized his pontificate. Refusing the papacy on Leo's death, he was chief counselor to the four succeeding popes. Finally, despite his protestations, he was nominated and elected. Rapine, warfare, and corruption followed the decay of the Holy Roman Empire, threatening destruction; simony and clerical disregard of celibacy were rampant. He determined to carry out the reforms begun by his predecessors; Henry IV of Germany promised him aid. At the first synod he decreed the suspension of all simoniacal clerics and ordered the return of all purchased church property. The corrupt clergy of Italy, France, and Spain protested, and Henry IV broke his word and promoted unworthy clerics. Gregory replied by decreeing excommunication against anyone conferring investitures in connection with an ecclesiastical office. Henry was summoned to Rome, and after his3..adjusters deposition Gregory, who excommunicated him. His consequent submission to Gregory at Canossa is well known, but his penitence was short-lived and he was again excommunicated. Henry's antipope, Guibert of Ravenna, was driven from Rome by the pope with the aid of the Normans, but the excesses of the latter caused the Roman people to banish Gregory to Salerno, where he died. He realized the ideal of the papacy as a temporal power more than any other pope. Feast, R. Cal., 25 May.—C.E.; Mann; Wilmot-Buxton, Story of Hildebrand, N. Y., 1919.

Gregory VIII (Alberico di Morrone), Pope (1157), b. Benevento, Italy, c. 1100; d. Pisa. He was a Premonstratensian, cardinal-priest, and chancellor, in which capacity he was sent to England to investigate the murder of St. Thomas Becket. Elected in the midst of war with the Saracens and the capture of Jerusalem, he at once opened negotiations for a reconciliation with Barbossa, with the purpose of organizing a Crusade. Before this could be accomplished, he died while attempting to mediate between Pisa and Genoa.—C.E.; Mann.

Gregory VIII, antipope. See Bourdin, Maurice.

Gregory IX (Ugolino, Count of Segni), Pope (1227-41), b. Anagni, Italy, c. 1145; d. Rome. As cardinal-deacon of Ostia and Velletri, he was employed on many diplomatic missions throughout Europe. He was legate to Germany, where he effected a truce between two claimants, and mediator between Pisa and Genoa, Milan and Cremona, and Bologna and Pistoia. Commissioned to preach a crusade, 1221, he received Frederick II's vow to go to the Holy Land. When consecrated pope, he ordered the emperor to fulfill his vow, and excommunicated him when he refused. The imperial party stirred up a rebellion in Rome and drove the pope to Viterbo. Against Gregory, Frederick sailed for the Holy Land, and defeated the papal army in Sicily on his return. Pope and emperor were reconciled in 1220, but only temporarily, as their interests in Lombardy conflicted. Gregory allied himself with the Lombards, Tuscans, and Umbrians in vain. Efforts to stir up Germany against Frederick failed. The pope summoned a general council to meet at Rome, which was prevented by Frederick who encamped about the city, and by the death of Gregory. As pontiff he had encouraged the mendicant orders, suppressed heretics, restored Aristotle as the basis of Scholasticism, and entrusted Raymond of Pefiafort with the compilation of the papal decretals.—C.E.; Mann.

Gregory X (Teobaldo Visconti), Pope (1271-76), b. Piacenza, Italy, 1210; d. Arezzo. After the death of Clement IV, 1268, the Holy See was vacant for nearly three years. Finally the archdeacon of Liège, though not yet a priest, was elected, 1271. He was ordained and consecrated, 1272. The outstanding event of his reign was the convocation of the Council of Lyons, in which he effected a temporary union with the Greeks, sought to restore peace between the Guelphs and Ghibellines in Tuscany and Lombardy, and made plans for a crusade to lighten the oppression of Christians in Palestine. He crowned Rudolf of Hapsburg as emperor. Because of his great virtue, he is revered as a saint in Rome and in a number of Italian dioceses.—C.E.

Gregory XI (Pierre Roger de Beaufort), Pope (1370-78), b. castle of Maumont, Limoges, France, 1331; d. Rome. Canonist, theologian, and cardinal-deacon, he was ordained priest one day before his consecration as pope. His policy of appointing Frenchmen to positions in Italy led to rebellion. At the insistence of St. Catherine of Siena, he left Avignon and came to Rome, 1376. He was unable to secure peace, and had decided to return to France when he died. He condemned Wyclifism in five Bulls, secured peace for Castile, Aragon, Navarre, Sicily, and Naples, and carried on a war with the tyrant Barnabò Visconti of Milan.—C.E.; Pastor.

Gregory XII (Angele Corrario, or Coreer), Pope (1409-13), b. Venice, Italy, c. 1297; d. Re­canati, 1417. He was elected after swearing to resign, in order to end the Great Schism, if Benedict XIII, the Avignon pope, would do likewise. When the latter hesitated, Gregory refused to resign, and the cardinals at the Council of Pisa elected Alexander V to replace both. Gregory, who was the legal pope, pronounced both schismatics. At the 14th session of the Council of Constance, which had been called by antipope Baldassare Cossa, Gregory submitted his resignation by proxy. It was accepted, 1415, and he was made Card.-Bp. of Pisa.—C.E.; Pastor.

Gregory XIII (Ugo Buoncompagni), Pope (1572-85), b. Bologna, Italy, 1562; d. Rome. He was instructor in jurisprudence at the University of Bologna, one of the jurists at the Council of Trent, Apostolic secretary, and cardinal-priest. Elected pope, he carried out the Tridentine reforms zealously, promulgated the revised canon laws, revised the Martyrology, condemned the errors of Baus, and stemmed the tide of Protestantism by raising the educational standards of the seminaries. To this end he founded 23 seminaries of various grades. He opposed Elizabeth's persecution of Catholics in England and attempted to effect her deposition by aiding two unsuccessful expeditions to Ireland, 1578. He was probably unaware of the circumstances of the massacre of St. Bartholomew's day, when he ordered thanksgiving festivities in Rome, having been officially notified that it was the punishment of conspirators in a plot to assassinate the royal family. When informed of the true details he condemned the slaughter. One of his achieve­ments was the reform of the calendar (see Gregoryian Calendar) which was introduced into most Catholic countries, 1578.—C.E.; Ranke, tr. Foster, History of the Popes, Lond., 1906.

Gregory XIV (Niccolo Spondrati), Pope (1500-01), b. Somma, Italy, 1535; d. Rome. He was Bp. of Cremona, a participant in the sessions of the Council of Trent, cardinal-priest, and friend of St. Charles Borromeo and St. Philip Neri. As pope he supported the Holy League in its struggle against Henry of Navarre, ordered the abolition of Indian slavery in the Philippine Islands, and appointed commissions for the revision of the Sixtine Bible and the Pian Breviary.—C.E.; Ranke, tr. Foster, History of the Popes, Lond., 1906.

Gregory XV (Alessandro Ludovisi), Pope (1621-23), b. Bologna, Italy, 1544; d. Rome. He was educated by the Jesuits, entered the papal service as a judge, was Abp. of Cre­mona, nuncio to Savoy, and cardinal-priest. His Bull “Eterni Patris” laid down the rules, practically unchanged today, governing papal elections. In these he introduced the secret ballot. He established the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda to regulate missionary activity for Benedictines at Rome; issued the last papal ordination against witchcraft, 1623; sent financial aid to Emperor Ferdinand II to regain Bohemia; secured more tolerance for Catholics in England; and aided the Catholic reaction in the Netherlands. War in the Valetelline, Italy, was averted when Gregory's army seized possession of it before Spain and Aus­tria could open hostilities, and held it until its status was settled.—C.E.; Ranke, tr. Foster, History of the Popes, Lond., 1906.

Gregory XVI (Bartolomeo Alberto Cappellari-­Colomba), Pope (1831-46), b. Belluno, Italy, 1765; d. Rome. He entered the Camaldolese Order and later was sent to Rome, where he wrote a treatise on the infallibility and tem­poral sovereignty of the papacy. As cardinal, and prefect of the Sacred Congregation of the Propaganda, he arranged concordats between William of Holland and the Belgian Catholics, and the Ottoman Empire and the Armenian Catholics. As soon as he was given the papal ti­le, he introduced important judicial and administrative reforms in his domain, but he believed in the older autocratic ideas and his subjects rebelled again before his death. He censured De Lamennais and his fellow-editors of “L'Avenir” in their dispute with the French episcopate. In Germany he con­demned Hermesianism; in Portugal, Spain, Poland, and France, he combated anti-clerical legislation; and attacked two Protestant societies for promoting anti-clerical free thought in Italy. He founded the Egyptian and Etruscan museums in the Vatican, the Christian Museum in the Lateran; tunneled...
Monte Catillo to avert the floods of the River Anio; established steamboats at Ostia, and a bureau of statistics at Rome; introduced a decimal currency; sent missionaries to China, North America, India, Abyssinia, and Polynesia; and erected numerous hospitals, orphanages, and public baths.—C.E.

Gregory of Nazianzus (Gr., gregoreo, watch, be vigilant), Saint, Doctor of the Church (c. 325-389), b. Arianzus, Asia Minor; d. there. His father, a Hypsistarian heretic, was converted to Catholicism and became bp. of Nazianzus; his mother was St. Nonna; his brother, St. Cesarious, and his sister, St. Gorgonia. Gregory was educated at Caesarea, where he formed a lasting friendship with St. Basil, and at Alexandria and Athens. With Basil he lived for a time as a hermit in a secluded part of Pontus; returning to Nazianzus, he was ordained by his father, 361. In 373 St. Basil, then bp. of Sasima, consecrated Gregory bp. of Sasima, but Gregory, finding himself incompatible with that see, abandoned it, thereby becoming estranged from Basil. He was made abp. of Constantinople, 381, after the conversion of Emperor Theodosius the Great. That city being almost entirely given to Arianism, Gregory met with constant opposition, and resigned his see after a few months. He returned to Nazianzus and devoted himself to suppressing heresy. In 383 upon the appointment of his cousin as bishop, he retired to Arianzus to spend his time in literary labors. Renowned in the East as an orator and theologian, he is also famous as a literary genius; his poems, epistles, and orations being among the finest of his age. Relics in Basilica of St. Peter, Rome. Feast, R. Cal., 9 May.—Bright, The Age of the Fathers; C.E.; Butler.

Gregory of Neocæarea (Thaumaturgus), Saint, confessor (213-270), bp. of Neocæarea, b. Neocæarea in Pontus (Asia Minor); d. there. Of a noble pagan family, he was educated for the career of a lawyer, Converted to Christianity by Origen, Gregory took up the study of philosophy and theology. Consecrated bp. of Neocæarea c. 240, he converted the inhabitants by his preaching and miracles. When he became bishop there were only 17 Christians in his flock and at his death there were but 17 pagans in the whole town of Caesarea. He was present at the First Council of Antioch against Paul of Samosata. Because of the great number of miracles he performed, Gregory is called the “Wonder Worker.” He is also well known as a writer and some of his chief works are: “Oratio Panegyrica,” in honor of Origen; “Tractatus ad Theopompum,” on the possibility and impossibility of God; “Epistola Canonica,” an explanation of the organization of the churches of Pontus under Gregory; and “Exposition of the Faith,” showing Gregory’s idea of the Trinity. Patron of those in desperate situations; invoked against inundations. Relics: St. Peter’s, in the Vatican, and Lisbon. Feast, R. Cal., 17 Nov.—C.E.; Butler.

Gregory of Nyssa, Saint, confessor (c. 331-394), Father of the Church, b. Sebaste, Asia Minor, brother of Sts. Basil and Macrina. Against the wish of Basil he became a rhetorician and subsequently married, but about 371 he was consecrated bp. of Nyssa. This appointment which Basil later thought unfortunate, stirred up jealousy; and Gregory was soon forced into exile for two years. He returned to his see 378, and was present at the Council of Antioch, 379, and probably at Constantinople, 383. Most of his writings treat of the Scriptures, which he is fond of interpreting allegorically. His “Catechesis” is an argumentative defense of Catholicism; Gregory, however, believed in the temporal nature of the punishment of hell. Among his ascetical works is an admirable treatise on virginity. Feast, 9 March.—C.E.; Butler.

Gregory of Tours, Saint, confessor (c. 538-593), Bp. of Clermont-Ferrand, France; d. Tours. He was made bp. of Clermont in 538, and in 573, once called to the See of Tours by King Sigebert. At that time Roman civilization in Gaul was breaking down under the Frankish invaders. The bishops, who alone were instructed, the last refuge of the people, and Gregory was their leader in upholding the general social welfare, amidst the constant changing of temporal masters. His history of the Franks is a plain statement of what he saw and heard; but he delighted in the true spirit of his day, the marvels of the miraculous. Feast, 17 Nov.—C.E.; Butler.

Gregory of Valencia (c. 1550-1603), Jesuit theologian, surnamed “Doctor doctorum,” b. Medina, Spain; d. Naples. After lecturing on philosophy with distinction in Rome, he was sent to Germany where he taught theology for 17 years at Ingolstadt, and won additional fame as a brilliant controversialist. He has been unfairly criticized for his views on witchcraft trials. Gregory played an important part in deciding the attitude of the Holy See in the dispute concerning interest. In 1598, he was sent to Rome to vindicate the teachings of St. Ignatius and St. Thomas Aquinas. He was prominent in the controversy over the universality of grace and freedom of will. He was also known for his work in the field of ethics. He wrote extensively on theology, philosophy, and literature. Gregory is famous for his vivid descriptions of the life of the Jesuits and for his role in the Counter-Reformation. He was declared a Doctor of the Church in 1970. Feast, R. Cal., 17 Nov.—C.E.; Butler.

Gregori (Lat., gremium, lap), a silken apron, trimmed with silk embroidery, of the color of the... day laid upon the bishop’s lap when he sits during a pontifical Mass. A linen gremial is used when conferring sacred orders. (A.C.E.)

Grens, dependency of the British Empire, in the British West Indies, administered by a Legislative Council, partly nominated and partly elected; area, 133 sq. m.; est. pop., 71,621. Christianity was introduced into Grenada by the Spanish missionaries and other missionaries laboring there until the island passed to the British and was entrusted to secular clergy. Ecclesiastically Grenada belongs to the Archdiocese of Port of Spain (q.v.), on the Island of Trinidad, B.W.I.

Grey Friars, popular name in Great Britain for the Franciscan Friars because originally their habit was gray. At present they wear brown, except the Conventuals who have adopted black. The robes of the Franciscan cardinals and the general of the Conventuals are also gray. Many urban districts in Great Britain, e.g., Edinburgh, are known as Grey Friars, owing to the former location there of Franciscan monasteries.

Grey Nuns of the Cross, a religious community founded by Sister Elizabeth Bruyère and three other nuns at Ottawa (then Bytown), 1843. These Sisters were members of the Sisters of Charity of the General Hospital of Montreal (q.v.), or Grey Nuns, and were sent to Ottawa at the request of Bp. Phelan. Teaching and the works of mercy constitute their purpose but they undertake any good work. The community has 68 houses, including schools, orphanages, and hospitals, in Canada and the United States. The mother-house is at Ottawa; total number of religious, 940.—C.E.

Grey Nuns of the Sacred Heart, a religious congregation formed as an independent foundation at Philadelphia in 1921 by a group of nuns who were members of the Grey Nuns of the Cross (q.v.). The congregation undertakes any good work, such as teaching and the direction of charitable institutions; it numbers 15 houses, including D’Youville College (Buffalo), schools and academies, hospitals, orphanages, and a home for the aged in the archdioceses of Boston and Philadelphia, and the dioceses of Brooklyn, Buffalo, Trenton, and Ogdensburg. The mother-house is at Melrose Park, near Philadelphia; total number of professed religious, 211.

Gridiron, emblem in art associated with St. Lawrence the Deacon and St. Juliette, in the case of St. Lawrence symbolizing his martyrdom. Griffin, Gerald (1803-40), novelist and lyric poet, b. Limerick, Ireland; d. Cork. At the age of 19 he went to London hoping to stage some plays he had written, with a view to revolutionizing dramatic taste. Unable to obtain an opening, he became a literary drudge, but after two years his talents were recognized and he published a series of novels descriptive of life in the south of Ireland. His “Colleens,” dramatized by another hand under the title of “The Colleen Bawn” is perhaps the best Irish romance. In 1838 he entered the Christian Brothers after ending his literary career by destroying nearly all his unpublished manuscripts.—C.E.

Griffon, mentioned in Leviticus, 11, as an unclean animal, whereas the bearded vulture, the largest bird of prey, is probably intended. The opinion that the Bible here speaks of the fabulous griffou, the monstrous progeny of a lion and an eagle, is based on a misinterpretation of the Hebrew word pérés, from which it is translated.

Grille, an enclosure, usually constructed of wrought iron or bronze, employed to designate the limits of the cloister in monasteries of nuns. A grille is placed in the parlor and chapel of those communities of nuns who, by solemn vows, are obliged to observe papal cloister. (A.C.E.)

Grimaldi, Francesco Maria (1613-63), Jesuit scientist, b. Bologna, Italy; d. there. He discovered the phenomena of diffraction, interference, and the dispersion of light passing through a prism.—C.E.

Groote, grót, Gerard (1540-84), founder of the Brethren of the Common Life, b. Deventer, Holland. He taught theology at Cologne and after spending some years in solitude and prayer in Munsterhuisen monastery was ordained a deacon and preached at Utrecht. Many disciples flocked around him, and he founded with Florence Radewyns his institute at Zwolle. Groote, who was the first successful practical mystic, died a martyr of charity, leaving his institute to be organized into a community of canons regular by Radewyns.—C.E.

Groseteste, gró-sé-test, Robert (c. 1175-1253), Bp. of Lincoln, 1235, one of the greatest scholars of the Middle Ages. He came from Suffolk and studied at Oxford, where subsequently he won fame as a teacher. He laid more stress on scriptural studies than on intellectual speculation. His insistence on experiment in science won the praise of Roger Bacon, and in addition to a commentary on Aristotle’s “Physics,” he wrote original treatises in meteorology and optics, and pointed out the defects of the Julian calendar. His studies on Christian antiquities were so important that the beginning of the Christian Renaissance has been dated from him. He befriended the Franciscans on their arrival at Oxford, and encouraged their work throughout his life. From the inception of his episcopate he revived diocesan visitations, which he carried out thoroughly, though this involved him in difficulties with the Cistercian monasteries, on account of the exemptions they claimed. In these disputes he appealed to the supreme authority of the Holy See, yet he did not hesitate to oppose the abuses of the papal administration in regard to English benefices. The Bp. of Lincoln held a high position in the state. Personally on friendly terms with Henry III, he was frequently obliged to oppose the royal policy in both ecclesiastical and civil matters. After his death, he was regarded throughout England as a saint, but though efforts were made by several prelates to procure his canonization, they were unsuccessful.—C.E.

Grottaferrata, Abbey of, a Basilian monastery 2½ m. from Frascati, Italy, founded 1004 by St. Nilus, a Calabrian Greek, who obtained the site from Gregory, Count of Tusculum. Extensive possessions were bestowed upon the abbey, and its head was created Baron of Rossano, with a fief. Opposing factions brought much trouble to the monastery between the twelfth and fifteenth centuries. In 1608 it became a member of the Basilian congregation established by Gregory XIII, and in 1881 Leo XIII restored the Greek Rite at the abbey, which has always been a center of Greek learning. Declared a national monument, 1874, it was raised to the rank of a Roman basilica, 1903. About 1908 the archaeologist Lancia discovered catacombs near Grottaferrata which had remained untouched since the early days of the Church. These were acquired by the abbey and excavations begun in 1912 yielded much of interest.—C.E.; The Catacombs at Grotta-Ferrata, in The Tablet, Lond., 20 Sept., 1913.

Grouard, Vicariate Apostolic of, Alberta, Canada; comprises the region bounded N. by 60° N. lat.; E. by 113° W. long.; S. by 55° N. lat. and W. by the Rocky Mts.; suffragan of Edmonton. Vicars Apostolic: Henry Faraud, O.M.I. (1804-90), Emile Grouard, O.M.I. (1891-). Churches, 41; priest, secular, 1; priests, regular (Oblates), 21; religious women, 105; convents, 7; Catholics, 11,000.

Guadalupe, Feast of Our Lady of, 12 Dec., patronal feast of Mexico and a holy day of obligation there, commemorating the apparition of the Blessed Virgin to an Indian convert, Juan Diego, in 1531, whom she instructed to convey to the bishop her desire that a chapel be erected in her honor on the spot where she had appeared. As a sign she imprinted her image on the peasant's mantle, which is preserved in the shrine and to the intercession of which many miracles have been attributed. Pilgrimages have been made almost uninterrupted since the apparition. The picture, which is on coarsely woven Indian cloth, is assumed to represent the Immaculate Conception, being the figure of a maiden with the sun, moon, and stars, and an angel under the crescent. Its marvelous tints and perfect proportions have puzzled many painters. Devotion to Our Lady of Guadalupe was encouraged by many popes and Benedict XIV named her patroness of Mexico. The special Mass and Offices of the feast may be said by Mexican priests on the 12th day of every month.—C.E.; Butler.

Guatemala, independent republic of Central America; area, 42,353 sq. m.; est. pop., 2,601,900. It was discovered in 1524 by Pedro de Alvarado, lieutenant of Cortes, and Christianity was introduced by Spanish missionaries. The See of Santiago de Guatemala was erected by Paul III in 1534, with Francisco Marroquin as first bishop. After three centuries under Spanish rule Guatemala won its independence with the rest of Central America in 1821, and in 1839 was established as a republic. In 1872-74 religious orders were expelled, and the Fundamental Law of the Republic (1879) forbade the establishment of conventual congregations or monastic associations; much Church property was confiscated, and there is no government aid in any ecclesiastical work. Catholicity is the prevailing religion, but there is equality and religious freedom for all denominations. Ecclesiastical administration is thus divided:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Year</th>
<th>P.</th>
<th>Caths.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1843</td>
<td>132</td>
<td>879,630</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>Verapaz and Peten, V.A.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Gudula, Saint, virgin (7th century), religious, b. Brabant, Belgium. She was the daughter of St. Amalberga, and sister of Sts. Reinelda and Emembert, Bp. of Cambray. Patroness of Brussels. Relics in church of Saint-Michel, Brussels. Represented in art holding in her right hand a candle, and in her left a lamp, which a demon endeavors to extinguish. Feast, 8 and 19 Jan.—C.E.; Butler.

Guelphs and Ghibellines, two political factions which kept Italy divided during the later Middle Ages. The names originated in Germany during the rivalry between the house of Welf (Bavaria) and the house of Hohenstaufen, whose ancestral castle was Waiblingen in Swabia. When Otto of Bavaria and Philip of Swabia fought for the imperial crown in Germany and in Italy, at the close of the 12th century, the names of the rival parties were introduced into Italy, Guelfo and Ghibellino being the Italian forms of Welf and Waiblingen; the former designated the partisans of the pope and the latter the partisans of the German emperor. The popes fostered and favored the popular liberties and the growth of the communes, so that the Guelphs were in the main the republican party, while the Ghibellines represented the feudal lords of Teutonic descent. The cities of Italy were divided in their allegiance, Florence and Milan, for instance, being Guelph, while Siena and Pisa were Ghibelline. The principal episodes of the conflict, which lasted from the 12th to the 13th century, were the battle of Legnano (1176), won by the Lombards near Milan; the battle of Civita Castellana. He was imperial chancellor for intervals for the intentions of the guild, and the laity undertake to say daily the special "Ransom" prayer. The White Cross Ransomer, a priest, pledges other causes, are without special Masses and pray\-ers. The Blue Cross Ransomers' obligations are purely spir\-itual; Red Cross Ransomers engage in some active work for the conversion of England and Wales, e.g., outdoor speaking from Evidence Guild platforms. The Ransom Guild is responsible for organizing annual pilgrimages through the streets in about 40 parishes in Greater London, and also the famous "Tyburn Walk" from the site of old Newgate Prison to Marble Arch, in honor of the martyrs who there suffered for the faith. Nine English pilgrimages are also conducted annually: to York, King's Lynn (the shrine of Our Lady of Walsingham), Glastonbury, St. Albans, Canterbury, Chelsea (Bl. Sir Thomas Mann. and statesman, b. Florence; d. there. He represented Guéroulde, Prosper Louis Paschal (1805-75), liturgist, b. Sable-sur-Sarthe, France; d. Solesmes. Ordained, 1837, he labored, 1831-37, to reestablish the Rule of St. Benedict at Solesmes, and was appointed Superior general of the Benedictines of France by Pope Gregory, 1837. An ardent servant of the Church, Dom Guéroulde tried to establish more filial relations between France and the Holy See. He was a prolific writer, devoting his talents to historical and liturgical subjects and to controversial works, which are, however, of slight interest today. In 1841 he began to publish his most famous work, "Liturgical Songs" (Paris, 1841-1901; London, 1892), in which he endeavored to familiarize the faithful with the official prayers of the Church, by introducing fragments of the Eastern and Western liturgies with interpretations and commentaries.—C.E.

Guerin, Belle (c. 1880-1929), feminine leader, d. Montreal. She founded the Catholic Women's League of Canada, 1910, of which she was first president. By request of Card. Vannutelli, she was awarded the Cross Pro Ecclesia et Pontifice (for Church and Pope), 1922.

Guibert of Ravenna (Clement III), antipope (1056-1058, 1064-1100), b. Parma, Italy, c. 1025; d. Civitá Castellana. He was imperial chancellor for Italy, 1057-63; helped secure the election of the antipope Cadalois, and accepted the Archbishops of Ravenna to which he had been nominated by Henry IV. Disliking the reforming policy of Gregory VII, he joined the opposition party and was suspended, 1075, when he violated his oath to attend the Lenten Synod. The following year he was excommunicated because he sided with the German bishops and declared Gregory deposed. Henry IV secured his nomination, 1080, and installed him in St. Peter's, 1084. He was soon forced to leave Rome but returned at intervals and exiled the legitimate pontiffs Victor III and Urban II. His attempt to expel Paschal II failed and he died on the way to Ravenna.—C.E.; Mann.

Guicciardini, Francesco (1483-1540), historian and statesman, b. Florence; d. there. He represented Florence at the Spanish court; later governed Modena and Reggio for Leo X; aided in forming the anti-imperial League of Cognac, and in subjugating Florence to the Medicean rule, but fell into disfavor on opposing the absolutism of Cosimo de' Medici. His chief work is a history of Italy from 1492 to 1534.—C.E.

Guido d'Arezzo, gu'do da'ret'so, Guido Arete

Guido of Crema (Paschal III), antipope (1164-68), d. Rome. He was elected at Lucca, by the schismatic cardinals, in opposition to Pope Alexander III and as successor to the antipope Octavian. He was established at Viterbo and successfully prevented the legate of Alexander from reaching Rome. Frederick Barbarossa supported his claims, installed him in St. Peter's, and forced him to canonize Charlemagne. The Church never ratified this act, and the Third Lateran Council, 1179, annulled all his ordinances.—C.E., XI, 515; Mann.

Guild of Our Lady of Ransom, or Catholic Church Extension Society of England and Wales, founded in London, 1887, by the Rev. Philip Fletcher and Lister Drummond, a metropolitan police magistrate. Its headquarters are in London. The three special intentions of the Guild are: the conversion of England and Wales in general, and of individuals in particular; the rescue of apostates and those in danger of apostasy; the forgotten dead, who, owing to the Reformation, or to being isolated converts, or other causes, are without special Masses and prayers. The White Cross Ransomer, a priest, pledges himself to offer up the Holy Sacrifice at stated intervals for the intentions of the guild, and the laity undertake to say daily the special "Ransom" prayer. Blue Cross Ransomers' obligations are purely spiritual; Red Cross Ransomers engage in some active work for the conversion of England and Wales, e.g., outdoor speaking from Evidence Guild platforms. The Ransom Guild is responsible for organizing annual pilgrimages through the streets in about 40 parishes in Greater London, and also the famous "Tyburn Walk" from the site of old Newgate Prison to Marble Arch, in honor of the martyrs who there suffered for the faith. Nine English pilgrimages are also conducted annually: to York, King's Lynn (the shrine of Our Lady of Walsingham), Glastonbury, St. Albans, Canterbury, Chelsea (Bl. Sir Thomas More), Padley Wood, Hastings, and Chichester. The Guild of Ransom engaged in outdoor preaching for some 30 years before the Catholic Evidence Guilds were established. Between these different organizations there is now sympathetic cooperation. The Ransom Guild has developed a most important activity in the form of church extension work. Funds are collected for the building of churches and for the maintenance of priests in poor districts, grants being made from time to time to the bishops of various dioceses according to their needs. This guild was founded, 27 July, 1910, by Surgeon-General Thomas Maunsell, C.B., LL.D., and is now affiliated to the British Medical Association the guild arranges for a paper to be read before a meeting open to all medical students and qualified Catholics. Its quarterly organ is “The Catholic Medical Guardian,” devoted mainly to medical science and the master science of theology. It has issued a special form of medical certificate which it recommends for the use of sick pilgrims visiting shrines of reputed miraculous healing; it seeks to quicken and sustain a corporate spirit among Catholic medical practitioners; and it urges members to take an active part in parochial and diocesan life. At the annual meeting of the British Medical Association the guild arranges for a paper to be read before a meeting open to all medically-qualified Catholics. Its quarterly organ is “The Catholic Medical Guardian,” devoted mainly to medical morality against unscientific materialism. The guild is thus a symbol of the connection between medical science and the master science of theology. It was difficult, were usually sold at the town market or fair. Everyone in the town knew his neighbor, and an individuality stamped each man’s work. This stimulated a spirit of emulation which resulted in the production of excellent work. The craft guilds cared for both professional and moral training of their members after the manner of the merchant guilds. The altered industrial and social conditions of Europe after the Reformation deprived the craft guilds of their power in England, while in France, Germany, and Italy, they were abolished by the authorities in the 18th and 19th centuries.

RELIGIOUS GUILDS. These existed in Europe before the rising merchant guilds secured their liberation from the feudal lords, and continued throughout the Middle Ages. Each guild had a peculiar religious purpose, usually manifested by some charitable service. The guild was placed under the patronage of a saint to whom special devotion was paid, and whose festival day became the particular gala day of the guild. The Church encouraged these associations, but it was the members of the guild who personally administered its affairs, such as almsgiving, assistance to those setting out on pilgrimages, repairing churches, and the establishment of free schools. These religious guilds were comprised of members in all classes of society, rich and poor, clerical and laical, who were thus joined in brotherhood.—C.E.; Walsh, Thirteenth, Greatest of Centuries, N. Y., 1907. (M. P.) Guile, sin against prudence, being reducible to the vice of prudence of the flesh. It executes, principally by word, deceits conceived by astuteness so as to end in fraud. Its opposite is that simplicity of the just scorned by the wicked, but praised in Nathanael by Our Lord Himself. (H. J. W.)

Guiscard, Robert (c. 1016-85), founder of the Norman state of the Two Sicilies, d. Cephalonia, Greece. He was the son of Tancred, seigneur of Hauteville-la-Guichard, Normandy. Entering the Lombard service, he took part in the defeat of Pope Leo IX at Civitella, and in 1057 became leader of the Normans in their conquest of southern Italy. Two years later he became a vassal of the Holy See, as duke of the lands conquered in Apulia, Calabria, and Sicily. He was excommunicated by Gregory VII for attacking papal territory, but was subsequently pardoned. Having set out to conquer the Byzantine Empire, he was recalled to save Italy from Henry IV, and he rescued Gregory VII in Rome. He died shortly after resuming his eastern campaign. — C.E.

Guise, name of a Catholic ducal family of Lorraine, whose members played an important part in 16th-century France. — Claude (1464-1509), 1st Duke of Guise, b. Conde, France; d. Joinville. His success in the war against Charles V was rewarded with a peerage from Francis I. He expelled the invading Anabaptist bands from Lorraine, 1525; and was later made governor of Burgundy. — Francois (1519-63), son of Claude, 2nd duke of Guise, b. Bar, France. He defended Metz against Charles V, 1552; invaded the territory of Naples, 1557; expelled the English from Calais, 1558; and frustrated a Huguenot plot to murder him, 1560. He was assassinated while attempting to take Orleans during the war in the cause of religion. — Charles (1524-74), known as the Cardinal of Guise, brother of Francois, was Abp. of Reims, and founded a university there. He was present at the Council of Trent, where his advocacy of the views of Charles IX of France, distinctly Gallican in character, brought him into disfavor with Pius IV. — Mary (1515-60), sister of Francois, d. Edinburgh. The widow of Louis II d’Orleans, she married James V of Scotland, and on his death was made regent for her daughter, Mary, Queen of Scots. During the politico-religious disturbances of the times she was deprived of her office through the agency of John Knox. — Henri (1550-98), Prince of Joinville, son of Francois, d. Blois. He fought against the Turks, 1566, returned to France and joined in the second and third Huguenot wars, and took an active part in the massacre of St. Bartholomew’s Day. When the Catholic League was formed, 1576, he became its hero, and virtual leader against the Protestants under Henry of Navarre. During the ensuing civil war, 1585-89, the Protestants forced King Henry III, who feared his influence, to have him assassinated. — Charles (1554-1611), Duke of Mayenne, brother of the preceding; d. Soissons. He fought against the Turks, and subsequently took part in the fourth, sixth, and seventh Huguenot wars. After his brother’s assassination he led the Catholics against Henry III and Henry of Navarre, but was forced to yield.

Gulf of Saint Lawrence, Vicariate Apostolic of, Quebec, comprises the northeastern part of the Province of Quebec, east of the St. Lawrence River, and the adjacent peninsula of the American continent. Vicar Apostolic: Gustave Blanche, C.J.M. (1905-16); Patrick Alexandre Chiasson, C.J.M. (1917-20), Julian M. Lefrancois, C.J.M. (1922). Churches, 42; chapels, 33; priests, regular (Eudists), 10; religious women, 27; parochial and mission schools, 42; Catholics, 11,000 (including 1000 Indians). — C.E.

Gunpowder Plot, a conspiracy in English history, formed by Catesby, Percy, Digby, Winter, Guy Fawkes, and others, to blow up the Parliament Houses in London, 1604. It was discovered by the arrest of Guy Fawkes, but the conspirators were put to death. An attempt was made to incriminate the Church by arresting the Jesuit priests Greenway and Garnet, to whom the conspirators had made their last confession; but the priests kept the seal of confession. Garnet was executed, 1606. The effect of the plot was the passage of new drastic measures of persecution against the Catholics. — C.E.

Gutenberg, Johannes (Heinrich Gansfleisch zur Laden; c. 1400-67), inventor of printing, b. Mainz, GUTENBERG

427

Germany; d. there. About 1434 he joined the goldsmith's guild at Strasbourg, and experimented in typography. Shortly after 1444 he printed two short works, still extant, with a type used later in the "26-line Bible." With the financial aid of Johann Fust he made a new type for the famous Mazarin "42-line" Bible, 1455, but became insolvent when Fust required repayment. In 1460 he printed a grammar and lexicon, with a new set of small type fashioned after the contemporary cursive handwriting. Gutenberg spent his declining years in the service of Abp. Adolf of Nassau.—C.E.

Guy Fawkes (1570-1606), conspirator, b. York, England; d. London. He was educated at York free school where he knew the Wrights and Fr. Greenway, later also implicated in conspiracy. Of Protestant parents, he became an ardent Catholic, and was solicited as a "confident gentleman," courageous and cool, with a military reputation in Continental wars, by Winter and Catesby, the originator of the Gunpowder Plot, to return to England and actually accomplish it, 1604. Suspicions having been aroused, he was arrested, Nov., 1605, on lonely vigil at the "mine" (a cellar adjoining the House of Parliament where the gunpowder was stored), and though at first courageously defiant, was horribly tortured for nine days into confession. After trial he was executed, Jan., 1606, at the Tower with Thomas Winter, Rokewood, and Keyes.

Guyon, gwi-an, JEANNE MARIE BOUVIER DE LA MOTTE, mystic (1648-1717), b. Montargis, Loiret, France; d. Blois. Due to ill health her education was neglected. Married at 16, she was a widow at 28. In 1680 she became acquainted with Fr. Lacombe, a Barnabite; and soon she adopted the erroneous theories of her director who was a follower of Molinos (q.v.). According to her, "perfection consists in a perpetual act of contemplation and love, comprising in itself all the other acts of religion." She set forth her views in her "Short and Easy Method of Prayer" and in "Spiritual Torrents." She traveled over France and Italy, giving spiritual conferences with great success. Then for a while she was shut up in a convent as suspected of heresy, but regained her liberty after a few months, and won the favor of Mme. de Maintenon, who invited her to give lectures to the young ladies of St.-Cyr. In 1689 she became acquainted with Fénélon (q.v.) over whom she wielded an extraordinary influence. In 1694 her theories were submitted to a critical examination and condemned during the famous conference of Issy in which Bossuet, Fénélon, Olier, and Mgr. de Roails took part. Later Mme. Guyon was arrested and imprisoned in the Bastille until 1703. She spent the remainder of her life in silence and solitude and in the composition of religious poetry. Her ideas have found great favor among Protestants, especially the Methodists.—Masson, Fénélon et Mme. Guyon, Paris, 1895. (F. P. B.)

Gwenhael, SAINT, confessor (d. Landevenec, Brittany, c. 518), Abbot of Landevenec. The son of a Breton chieftain, he accompanied St. Winwaloe to Landevenec, 489, where he entered the monastic life. He was elected abbot, 532. He journeyed to Britain and Ireland, where he abolished the last of the pagan customs. Returning to Brittany, he established foundations at Cornouailles, 546. Patron of Landevenec, Corbeil, and Vannes. Represented causing a spring to gush forth. His body, preserved at Corbeil, was lost during the Revolution. Feast, 3 Nov.
Haakon the Good (d. 961), King of Norway, son of Harold Fair Hair. He was educated as a Christian by King Athelstan in England, and was recalled to Norway, c. 935, to drive out his tyrannical half-brother, King Eric. Subsequently he introduced judicious reforms, but his efforts to crush paganism failed, leading to civil war, in which he was slain by Eric's sons.—C.E., VII, 116.

Habacuc, Book of, in the O.T., contains the prophecies of Habacuc, foretelling, as a thing incredible to Juda, the invasion of the Chaldeans. The temple of Jerusalem, which was to be destroyed by Nabuchodonosor, King of the Chaldeans, 587 B.C., was still standing (2, 20), and the fact that the Chaldean conquest did not seem likely makes it probable that the prophet's prediction dates from before 606 B.C., when the victory of Nabuchodonosor over the Egyptians at Carchemish assured his domination over western Asia. However the work of Habacuc's contemporary, Jeremias, shows that Jerusalem remained rather blind to the Chaldean menace even after that time and some scholars regard 606-600, as the most likely date. The prophet foretells the chastisement of his guilty country, Juda, by the Chaldeans, whom God uses as His scourge, and then the chastisement of the still more wicked Chaldeans, God's assurance that whereas "the just shall live in His faith" the proud oppressor shall be destroyed, is followed by a taunting song in which the prophet represents the people pronouncing a "Woes" against the rapacious violence of the Chaldeans and the dishonesty and cruelty by which the magnificence of their cities was maintained, as well as against their idolatry. The book ends in a beautiful lyric ode in which God is represented as appearing in judgment, to execute vengeance on the nation's foes and to assure His people's salvation.—C.E.; Seisenberger, tr. Buchanan, Practical Handbook for the Study of the Bible, N. Y., 1911. (w. s. r.)

Habit (Lat., habere, to acquire, possess), a disposition to do certain things with ease, or to act the same way in given circumstances; with ease because the disposition proceeds into action without much reflection or deliberation, and at times without consciousness. Habit is acquired by repeated acts. It becomes like a second nature; it determines character and personality; and may be good or bad. It is a very great aid in the performance of virtuous actions and a fatal influence in evil-doing, though there is no evil habit that, with divine grace, cannot be resisted and corrected.—C. E.; Maher, Psychology, N. Y., 1909. (Ed.)

Habit, Religious, the dress of a monk or a nun. Each order has a habit peculiar to it. The rule of several, e.g., Jesuits, is to use the habit worn by the priests in the country in which they reside, but long established custom has supplanted this rule in many places.

Habitual Grace, a supernatural quality infused by God into the soul at the moment of justification, perfecting the soul in a supernatural way, establishing it in justice and sanctity, making it a sharer in the Divine Nature, truly constituting it as a living temple of the Most High God. By habitual grace, a free gift of God, the soul is privileged to enter on a state of friendship with God, which is of its nature permanent, but may be broken temporarily or forever by the abuse of free will and the introduction of sin. Cherished and guarded in the soul it is an unfailing pledge of everlasting life with God.—C. E., VI, 701; Pohle-Preuss, Grace: Actual and Habitual, St. L., 1921. (R. J. MC.)

Habitual Sin, the sinful state of a soul resulting from actual sin. After the act of sin has been accomplished, the soul remains in a state of avarition from God. This state, considered as depriving the soul of the beauty of grace, is a stain (macula peccati). This sinful state is imputable to the sinner because it follows from a voluntary sinful act. It remains until satisfaction is made.—C. E., XIV, 9; Manning, Sin and Its Consequences, N. Y., 1904. (R. G. B.)

Habsburgs, a family of sovereigns in Germany, Austria, and Spain. The name was taken from the castle of Habsburg built on the Aar River in Aargau, Switzerland, by Werner, Bp. of Aargau in 1070. Rudolph, the first to ascend the German throne, 1273, acquired Austria and founded the imperial line which reigned as emperors, 1273-91, 1298-1308, 1438-1740. In 1477 Maximilian acquired by marriage with the heiress Mary, the domain of the ducal house of Burgundy, and in 1490 by the abdication of Count Sigismund all the Habsburg domains were united. His son married Joanna the Insane, Queen of Aragon and Spain. Their son became King of Spain as Charles I in 1516, and emperor as Charles V in 1519. Their second son received the Austrian crown to which he added Bohemia and Hungary. The Spanish line reigned 1516-1706. The last male representative of the line in Austria was Charles VI who was succeeded by Maria Theresa in 1740 by virtue of the so-called Pragmatic Sanction. By her marriage with Francis I of Lorraine the house of Habsburg-Lorraine was founded, which ruled as emperors of the Holy Roman Empire until its abolition in 1806, and as emperors of Austria until 1918.

Haceldama (Aramaic, hagal dema, field of blood), name given to the potter's field, purchased with the price of the treason of Judas to be a burial-place for strangers (Matt., 27; Acts, 1). Tradition places it s. of Mt. Sion.—C.E.

Hadrian, Saint, martyr (c. 306). According to legendary records he was an officer in the body-guard of the Emperor Galerius. Having witnessed the torture of 22 Christians who were tortured and martyred in Nicomedia by his master, he became converted to the faith, was imprisoned, tortured and burned. Patron of soldiers and butchers; invoked against pestilence. Relics at Grammont (Geertsbergen). Feast, R. Cal., 8 Sept. —C.E.; Butler.

Hadrian I-VI, Popes. See Adrian.

Hec est dies, qua candida, or BEHOLD THE BLESSED MORNING, hymn for Lauds on 15 Oct., Feast of St. Teresa. It was written by Pope Urban VIII (1568-1644). Five translations are in existence; the English title given is by D. Donahoe.—Brit. Hagiography (Gr., agios, holy; grapho, write), writings or documents about holiness, holy persons, the saints. Beginning with martyrlogies, or lists and brief records of those who suffered for the faith, and calendars giving the dates of their martyrdom or feast days, these writings soon included lives, pendants, or acts, the narratives of their sufferings, known, when collected together, also as passionaries or legendary and later as sacramedia, sanctaria, or sanctilogia. The modern collections began in the 15th century. The Bollandists in the century following were the first to put the study of these writings on a scientific basis in their great collection of "Acta Sanctorum." Mabillon, Ruinart, Assemani, have also done their share. "Les Petits Bollandistes" is a most useful collection, but Alban Butler's "Lives of the Saints" is for English readers a treasury of sacred lore and piety.—C.E. (ed.) Hagioscope. See SQUINT.

Haileybury, Diocese of, Ontario; comprises that part of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec bounded n. and w. by the Prefecture Apostolic of Northern Ontario; e. by 72° w. longitude; s. by the height of land, except in the Temiskaming district, of which the southern boundary is 47° n. latitude; established as a vicariate, 1908; diocese, 1915; suffragan of Ottawa. Bishops: Elie A. Latlulfe (1908-22), Louis Rheaume, O.M.I. (1925). Churches, 100; priests, secular, 78; priests, regular, 8; parishes, 72; women, 225; preparatory schools, 8; institutions, 6; Catholics, 69,702 (including French, English, Italian, and Polish-speaking groups, also 1700 Indians).

Hail Mary, most familiar prayer used by the Church in honor of the Mother of God, made up of the salutation of Angel Gabriel, the greeting of St. Elizabeth (Luke, 1), and a petition framed by the Church.—C.E.

Hail, Queen of heaven, the ocean Star! hymn written by Rev. John Lingard (1771-1851).

Hail, thou Star of Ocean! See Ave Maria Stella.

Hair, emblem in art associated with St. Agnes, St. Madeleine (Mary Magdalen), and St. Mary of Egypt. With reference to St. Agnes and St. Mary of Egypt, it symbolizes the miraculous growth of hair covering their nakedness, and in the case of St. Mary Magdalen the wiping of Our Lord's feet.

Hair (in CHRISTIAN ANTIQUITY). The paintings in the catacombs showed that the Christians followed the fashion of their time. The short hair of the men and the wavy tresses of the women were toward the end of the 2nd century curled, frizzled, and arranged in tiers. Images of Christ retain the long hair parted in the middle and flowing to the shoulders; those of the Blessed Virgin wear the veil. In mosaics, emperors, bishops, priests, and the faithful wore their hair of medium length cut across the forehead. The barbarians wore long hair, but later adopted the Roman custom. Various church synods regulated the modes of hairdressing. The tressure and removal of beards were very early interposed as an obstacle to fantastic styles, though they also occasioned some strange styles.—C.E.

Hairsuit, a garment of coarse cloth made in Cilicia from goat's hair and worn in the form of a shirt or girdle by way of penance and mortification; probably the same as the scriptural sackcloth, or haircloth in Judith, 9. In use from the early ages of Christianity, even among lay people, it was adopted as a matter of custom or voluntary mortification.—C.E.

Haiti, independent Negro republic occupying the western part of the island of Haiti in the West Indies; area, 10,284 sq. m.; est. pop., 2,928,000. The island was discovered in 1492 by Columbus, who returned in 1493 bringing several Dominican missionaries; since then the western part of the island has never lacked pastors. In 1511, it was divided between the dioceses of Santo Domingo and Concepcion de la Vega. Settlements were established, 1639, by the French, who took possession of the western part of the island in 1697. Continual insurrections of the Negroes against French and Spanish rulers were disastrous to the missions, and the massacre of whites in 1804 when Haitian independence was established caused nearly all the clergy to leave the... colooy, though several missionaries returned in 1806. There was no hierarchy from 1804 until 1860 when a concordat was signed with Rome, guaranteeing the protection and support of the government for the Catholic religion, which is the only source of order and progress in a country hampered by disorder, illiteracy, and instability. In 1861 five sees were erected. Haiti is represented at the Holy See by an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, and an internuncio resides in Port-au-Prince. Ecclesiastical administration is thus divided:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1861</td>
<td>140</td>
<td>97</td>
<td>210</td>
<td>799,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1881</td>
<td>63</td>
<td>35</td>
<td>408</td>
<td>99,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1881</td>
<td>26</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>27</td>
<td>196,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1881</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>12</td>
<td>69</td>
<td>000</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

—C.E.

Hallahan, Margaret (1803-68), foundress of the Dominican tertiary Congregation of St. Catherine of Siena; b. London. She obtained the consent of the Dominican fathers to form a community of Dominican tertiaries, who were to devote themselves to works of charity. It was approved by the Holy See, 1851.—C.E.

Hallel (Heb., praise), a Jewish ritualistic term to designate Psalms 113-118 (Vulgate 112-117) inclusively, known as the "Hallel of Egypt." It was chanted in the Feasts of the New Moons, the Feast of the Dedication, the Feast of Weeks, the Feast of Tabernacles, and in the Pasch. Buxtorf believes that its origin is quite ancient. Paul of Burgos believes that Christ chanted the Hallel or a part thereof at the Last Supper (I Cor., 11). Some of the later rabbis disturbed the ancient liturgical ordinance by assigning other psalms, but they do not agree, and their opinions were not adopted.

(A. E. B.)

Hallelujah, or Halleluiah (Heb., praise ye Yahveh), an ejaculation, which motivates or sums up an act of praise of God. It is found at the end of Psalms 105 and 106, inclusively; also in the beginning of Ps. 106, in the beginning of 111 to 113 inclusively; at the end of 115 and 117, inclusively; in the beginning of Ps. 85 and in the beginning and at the end of Psalms 147 and 150, inclusively. From very early times the liturgy of the Church used this term to express glad praise of God.

(A. E. B.)

Hallowe'en, 31 Oct., eve of All Hallows, i.e., All Saints; a day on which many quaint customs are revived. It is popular in the United States and Scotland, but not in England.—Walsh, Curiosities of Popular Customs, Phila., 1897.

Halo, in Christian art, a glow of light or an ornamented circle often shown around the head of the Saviour or of a saint, symbolizing holiness, the light of grace.—C.E., XI, 80.

(J. F. S.)

Hamilton, Diocese of, Ontario; comprises Brant, Bruce, Grey, Haldimand, Halton, Waterloo, Wellington and Wentworth Counties; founded, 1856; suffragan of Toronto. Bishops: John Farrell (1856-79), P. J. Crinnon (1879-82), Jas. J. Carberry, O.P. (1882-87), Thos. J. Doling (1889-1921), J. T. McNally (1924). Churches, 76; priests, secular, 72; priests, regular, 30; religious women, 492; college, 1; seminary, 1; academies, 3; parish schools, 60; institutions, 8; Catholics, 70,000.

Hammurabi, sixth king of the first Babylonian dynasty of reason, by the supreme superstition of the lower spirits taken together with his skill in governing his kingdom and his code of laws, place him among the greatest men of ancient history. He is probably the Amraphel, King of Sennaar, mentioned in Gen., 14. His code, uncharted at Susa, Persia, 1901, by French excavators is a legal masterpiece, dealing comprehensively with civil and criminal matters.—C.E.

Hands, Laying on of (Consecration). See Imposition of Hands.

Happiness. Very early in the history of Greek philosophy, happiness became the center of keen speculation and the science of ethics had its origin in these theories. According to Socrates, happiness consists in the cultivation of the mind and must not be built on the perishable things of the external world. The Cyrenaics and the Stoics, assuming happiness to be the result of following nature, diverged to opposite poles. The former claimed that felicity signified gratification of the senses which are the voices of nature; the latter advocated the satisfaction of reason by the entire suppression of the lower appetites. Plato and Aristotle rejected these extreme views and both agreed in considering happiness as the highest good. Plato defines it as that harmonious functioning of the parts of man's soul which shall preserve the subordination of the lower to the higher faculties. Aristotle was distinctly human in his view, which is that which it is possible for man to gain in this life, a felicity which springs from the highest virtue. He asserts that there are two virtues: the ethical or practical attainable by the majority, which does not exclude wealth, pleasure, friends, etc., and the intellectual or speculative which is acquired by the exercise of the best faculties and which only a few philosophers may achieve. It remained for Christian philosophers to go beyond the present life. St. Thomas taught that happiness, the supreme end of man, is open to all but is unattainable in this life. It consists in the exercise or activity of man's highest faculties, the intellect and the will, in the contemplation and possession of the one object of infinite worth, God, and in a consequent felicity of the lower powers so that the whole of man's complex nature may enjoy perfect beatitude. Relative and incomplete happiness in this world may be obtained by self-restraint, detachment, and sacrifice of transitory enjoyment for the sake of the eternal end. Since Descartes, philosophy has been separated from theology and the problem of modern thought is temporal happiness which is identified with pleasure. Some stress the difference between higher and lower pleasures, between active and passive pleasures, between pleasures that endure and those that pass by repetition. John Stuart Mill and others, departing somewhat from these hedonistic principles, adopted a theory of utilitarianism which teaches altruism and the happiness of the community. Finally, the extremists degenerate into pessimism declaring that human misery outweighs happiness and that supreme felicity is altogether impossible.—C.E.; Rickaby, Moral Philosophy, N. Y., 1893; Cronin, The Science of Ethics, Dub., 1909.

Harbor Grace, Diocese of, Newfoundland; comprises the northeast portion of the island of Newfoundland, and Labrador; established 1856; suffragan of St. John's. Bishops: Dalton (1856-69); Carfagnini (1870-80); R. McDonald (1881-1906); John March (1906). Churches, 36; priests, secular, 26; academies, 2; convents, 5; Catholic schools, 115; Catholics, 24,000.

Hare Indians, a Dene tribe, one of the northernmost redskins in America, inhabiting a region that extends from Ft. Norman, on the Mackenzie, west of Great Bear Lake to the confines of the Eskimos not far from the Arctic Ocean. They are a timid and kindly people but very superstitious. The first Hare Indian was baptized by Fr. Belcourt, a famous missionary of the Red River Settlement, 1839. In 1859, his tribe was first evangelized by Fr. Grollier, a Catholic convert, he showed his interest in the English mystery plays. It is also found in an occasional Cornish plays. Its origin is traced to the well known apocryphal gospel of Nicodemus (Latin) of the 2nd or 3rd century, which was familiar to English writers, e.g., Bede, and translated into English in the Middle Ages. The modern pedal harp was perfected by Sebastian Erard, 1810. As an emblem in art it is associated with St. Cecilia as a musician and patroness of music.

Harris, Joel Chandler (1848-1908), b. Eaton, Georgia; d. Atlanta. Adopting journalism as his profession, he was long associated with the Atlanta "Constitution." He is best known by his "Uncle Remus" stories of negro folk-lore, which created an original department in American literature, and were translated into 27 languages. Although his wife was a Catholic and he had long admired the Catholic religion, he did not embrace it until a few weeks before his death.—C.E.; Harris, Life and Letters of Joel Chandler Harris, N. Y., 1918.

Harrisburg, Diocese of, Pa., embraces the counties of Dauphin, Lebanon, Lancaster, York, Adams, Franklin, Cumberland, Perry, Juniata, Mifflin, Snyder, Northumberland, Union, Montour, and Columbia; area, 7,565 sq. m.; established, 1868; suffragan of Philadelphia. Bishops: J. F. Shanahan (1868-86), Thomas McGovern (1888-98), John W. Shanahan (1899-1916), Philip R. McDevitt (1916). Churches, 82; missions and chapels, 41; priests, secular, 119; priests, regular, 26; religious women, 1071; academies, 3; high schools, 7; primary schools, 53; pupils in parochial schools, 14,839; institutions, 4; Catholics, 81,997.

Harrowing of Hell, an Old English and Middle English term for the triumphant descent of Christ into hell between the time of His Crucifixion and Resurrection. The word first occurs in Ælfric's homilies (1000), and is used by the Old English poets, Cædmon and Cynewulf, also in the Old English homilies and lives of the saints. It is the subject of the earliest extant specimen of English religious drama and is given a separate scene in the four cycles of the English mystery plays. It is also found in ancient Cornish plays. Its origin is traced to the well-known apocryphal gospel of Nicodemus (Latin) of the 2nd or 3rd century, which was familiar to English writers, e.g., Bede, and translated into English in the Middle Ages.—C.E.

Hartford, Diocese of, Conn., embraces the state; area, 5,004 sq. m.; established, 1843; suffragan of Boston. Bishops: William Tyler (1844-49), Bernard O'Reilly (1850-56), F. P. MacFarland (1858-74), Thomas Galerry (1876-78), Lawrence S. McMahon (1879-93), Michael Tierney (1894-96), S. McMahon (1879-93), Michael Tierney (1894-96), Lawrence S. McMahon (1879-93), Michael Tierney (1894-96), S. McMahon (1879-93), Michael Tierney (1894-96).
Hatred, the passion opposed to love, aversion for a thing, for a person, or for his actions or qualities. It is justifiable to hate or loathe the evil deeds or habits of another, as this can be done without hating the person. It is never permitted to hate another with hostile sentiment or action, wishing him ill, rejoicing over his sufferings, injuring him in any way no matter how abominable his deeds or qualities may be. Hatred for things appears chiefly in what is known as odio theologicum, the hatred of a religion or of those who profess it.—C.E.

Hatto (c. 850-913), Abp. of Mainz, a Swabian Benedictine of Fulda, Abbot of Reichenau and Ellwangen. He labored to consolidate Germany under a strong central ruler, and so incurred the hatred of the nobles. He has been grossly maligned by historians; and the story of his having been eaten by mice and rats in punishment for his callousness during a famine has no historical foundation.—C.E.

Hatred, the passion opposed to love, aversion for a thing, for a person, or for his actions or qualities. It is justifiable to hate or loathe the evil deeds or habits of another, as this can be done without hating the person. It is never permitted to hate another with hostile sentiment or action, wishing him ill, rejoicing over his sufferings, injuring him in any way no matter how abominable his deeds or qualities may be. Hatred for things appears chiefly in what is known as odio theologicum, the hatred of a religion or of those who profess it.—C.E.
1859, to assist in the education of Hawaiian girls. One of the eight inhabited islands, Molokai, is the government settlement for lepers. It was here that Fr. Damien carried on his heroic work, 1873-89, assisted, 1886, by Br. Joseph Dutton, who continued in his stead. The territory is included in the Vicariate Apostolic of the Hawaiian Islands (q.v.).

Hawaiian Islands, Vicariate Apostolic of. This comprises all of the Hawaiian Islands, besides the Equatorial Islands: Palmyra, Washington, Fanning, and Christmas; area, 6449 sq. m.; prefecture, 1826; vicariate, 1844; entrusted to the Fathers of the Sacred Hearts of Jesus and Mary. Prefects Apostolic: Alexis Bachelot (1827-37), Louis Maitre (1837-44). Vicars Apostolic: Herman Koeckermann (1851-92), Gulstan Koperti (1892-1903), Libert H. Boymaens (1903-29), Stephen P. Alencastre (1924); residence at Honolulu. Churches, 112; priest, secular, 1; priests, regular, 47; religious women, 154; college, 1; academy, 1; grade schools, 11; pupils in schools, 4457; institutions, 6; Catholics, 109,000.

Hay, George (1729-1811), bishop and author, b. Edin­burgh; d. Aquhorthies, Scotland. While studying medicine he became a Catholic, and proceeded to Rome and was ordained, 1751. His remaining years were spent on the Scottish mission, where he was appointed vicar Apostolic. He wrote "The Sincere, Devout and Pious Christian," an excellent treatise on Catholic doctrine.—C.E.

Haydn, Haymo (d. 1243), general of the Franciscans; b. Faversham, England; d. Anagni, Italy. He had already gained fame as a lecturer in the University of Paris when he entered the Order of Friars Minor, c. 1223. He was one of the Friars sent by the Holy See to negotiate for the reunion of the Greek and Latin Churches. The revision of the Roman Breviary, 1241, is chiefly his work. He was an energetic opponent of Br. Elias, and when elected general rectified the disorders caused among the Friars by Elias.—C.E.

Head Cleft by Axe, emblem in art associated with St. Peter Veronese as first means of his martyrdom. A severed head is associated with St. Denis, St. John the Baptist, and St. Solange.

Health and Apostolical Benediction, form of salutation in letters written by the pope, first used by Pope Cletus (Anacletus), second successor of St. Peter.

Healy, George Peter Alexander (1808-94), painter, b. Boston; d. Chicago. He studied in Europe, 1834-90, a pupil of Baron Antoine Gros and Thomas Couture among others, and lived there again from 1869-90. The interval was spent mainly in Chicago, where he finally established himself in 1892. He is chiefly known as a portrait painter. Among his subjects were Pius IX, U. S. Grant, Louis Philippe, Cardinal Mccloskey, and Henry W. Longfellow. His most celebrated historical painting, "Webster’s Reply to Hayne," is in Faneuil Hall, Boston.—C.E.; Autobiography, Reminiscences of a Portrait Painter, Chicago, 1894.

Hearse. In Christian art a wounded heart, encircled with thorns and surmounted by a cross, represents the Sacred Heart of Jesus. A heart surrounded by a wreath of roses and transfixed by a sword is the Heart of Mary. Sometimes seven swords are shown, emblematic of the Seven Dolors or Sorrows of the Mother of God. A heart is also a symbol of one of the theological virtues, Charity. A flaming heart is associated with St. Augustine of Hippo, in allusion to a passage in his "Confessions."

Heaven. In Holy Writ the term heaven is used to designate the dwelling-place of God, His angels, and saints, as well as their happiness, and is called the kingdom of heaven (Matt., 5), the kingdom of Christ (Luke, 22), the house of the Father (John, 14), the city of God, the heavenly Jerusalem (Heb., 12), the holy place (Heb., 9), paradise (2 Cor., 12), life everlasting (Matt., 19), the joy of the Lord (Matt., 25), crown of life (James, 1), crown of justice (2 Tim., 4), crown of glory (1 Peter, 5), eternal inheritance (Heb., 9). The existence of heaven is denied by atheists, materialists, pantheists, and those rationalists who deny the existence of God and the immortality of the soul. Reason proves that God in His infinite wisdom and justice must give virtue its due reward. Experience teaches that the just do not receive an adequate reward here, since evil often triumphs over good. Hence there must be an eternal recompense hereafter for the soul which is immortal. The supernatural beatitude of heaven fundamentally consists in the intuitive vision of God, i.e., the seeing of God face to face and in experiencing perfect happiness through this beatific vision. Texts of Holy Writ, such as, I will be thy reward exceeding great," "I shall be satisfied when Thy glory appears," prove that God, the Supreme Author of creation, will be the object of the creature's eternal delight. Finally, such texts as: "In My Father's house there are many mansions" (John, 14), "Each shall receive his own reward according to his own toil" (1 Cor., 3), indicate that there are various degrees of happiness among the blessed.—C.E.; Pohle, Theology, Dub., 1922: Prat, tr. Stoddard, Theology of St. Paul, N. Y., 1926. (t. e. v.)

Hebdomadarian (Gr. hebdomas, week), name applied in monasteries and churches to the priest officiating for the week who makes the intonations at the beginning of the various canonical hours, gives the required blessings, of holy water, etc., and sings the conventual Mass each day during the week.

Hébert, Louis Philippe (1850-1917), sculptor, b. Sainte-Sophie d'Halifax, Quebec. He won a prize for wood-carving at the Provincial Exhibit, Montreal, 1873, studied in Paris, and in 1882 won the prize donated by the Dominion government for his full length statue of Cartier. He was elected to the Royal Canadian Academy, 1883; was made a Knight of the Legion of Honor, 1901; a Companion of St. Michael and St. George, 1903; and a Knight of St. Gregory the Great, 1914. Among his principal works are monuments to Queen Victoria, Ottawa; Bp. De Laval, Quebec; King Edward VII, Montreal; the South African Soldiers, Calgary.

Hebrew Bible, Except Wisdom and 2 Maccabees, which were composed in Greek, all of the O.T. books were written originally in Hebrew, in the old Phenician characters (later exchanged for the "square" script), but without vowels, separation of words, or division into chapters and verses. These elements were introduced later. The present Hebrew Bible contains only the protocanonical books (see Canon); the deuterocanonical books, except a part of Ecclesiastes, are no longer extant in Hebrew.—C.E.; Vigouroux, Dict. de la Bible; Gigot.

Hebrews, Epistle to the, was written at Rome, c. A.D. 65, after St. Paul's release from his first Roman imprisonment. It was addressed to a Church whose members were almost entirely converts from Judaism, who were subject to persecutions, and for whom the splendor of the Temple and the pomp of its services were a constant danger; all of which shows that the Christians of Jerusalem were the recipients of this epistle. Its purpose is to encourage the Christians to perseverance in the faith, and to warn them against apostasy to Judaism; to accomplish this purpose, it sets forth the excellence of Jesus Christ and the superiority of the New Law. The epistle is divided: (1) the dogmatic part (1-10, 17); (2) the Moral Part (10, 19 to 13, 17), in which the Christians are exhorted to perseverance in the faith and to Christian life according to the faith. The unbroken testimony of the Eastern Fathers, the perfect accord in the Western Church since the 4th century, the decrees of popes and councils, the constance of the universal Church, the similarity and harmony existing between this and other epistles of St. Paul prove that he is its author; the differences in style and language are perhaps due to one of St. Paul's disciples who put it in the form in which it now stands (Biblical Commission, 24 June, 1914).—C.E.; Boylan, The Epistle to the Hebrews, Dub., 1922: Prat, tr. Stoddard, Theology of St. Paul, N. Y., 1926. (U. E. F. S.)

Hebron (Heb., league), ancient royal city of Chanaan, famous in biblical history; mentioned in O.T. (Gen., 13), when Abraham went to the vale of Mamre, a name given to Hebron. On the death of Sara, his wife, he bought there the cave of Machpelah as a burial-place for her, Isaac, Jacob and himself. David was anointed King of Juda at Hebron and made it his capital (2 Kings, 2), and all the tribes of Israel came and made submission to him there (5). The modern El-Khulil, a. of Jerusalem, occupies the site.—C.E.

Hecker, Isaac Thomas (1819-88), founder of the Paulists, b. New York; d. there. Owing to family reverses, Hecker began to work as a baker's assistant before completing his education. Although his parents also neglected his religious instruction, he was naturally studious and thoughtful. He read Kant, but found him over-exalting man's utter depravity and moral helplessness, repelled him, and he finally entered the Catholic Church, 1844. In 1845 he joined the Redemptorists in Belgium, and in 1851 returned with four companions to the American mission. A misunderstanding between them and their European brothers having arisen, Hecker went to Rome to obtain an authoritative solution, and there received his excerpt from the congregation. With the approval, however, of Pius IX, he returned to New York to found with his companions a new institute, the Paulists, to conduct missions, especially for Protestants and for others who are not even Christians. He met with great success and in addition became an apostle of the Catholic Church. His Congregation of Missionaries of St. Paul the Apostle, the only community of men of United States origin, has prospered and has widely influenced Catholic life, especially in devotion to the liturgy and preaching.—
C.E.; Elliott, Life of Isaac Thomas Hecker, N. Y., 1891.

Hedge-schools, Irish, a term which originated in Ireland during the 18th century and denoted the proscribed gatherings of Catholic children and their teachers, when the repression of the Catholic schools by the Penal Laws made secret meetings necessary for the continuation of Catholic education.
The forbidden classes were held in the open fields, generally near a hedge for shelter, hence the name.

Hedonism, he'don-ism (Gr., hedonai, take pleasure), a group of ethical systems holding that feelings of pleasure or happiness are the highest and final aim of conduct, so that actions increasing the sum of pleasure are thereby right and those increasing pain are thereby wrong. This happiness may be that of the agent, or that of the greatest number.
—C.E.

Hedwig, Saint, widow (1174-1243), Duchess of Silesia, b. Andechs castle, Bavaria; d. Trebnitz, Daughter of Berthold IV, Duke of Croatia, she was married, 1186, to Henry I of Silesia to whom she bore seven children; after the birth of their last each, she and her husband vowed continency. Hedwig was a great influence for good in the history of the duchy; she endowed monasteries of the Cistercian, Premonstratensian, Augustinian, DOMinican, and Franciscan orders, thus introducing German culture into Silesia. The best known of these religious foundations is probably the Cistercian convent at Trebnitz to which she retired at Henry's death; although she did not take the veil, she led a life of great austerity. Patroness of Silesia.
—C.E.; Butler.

Heaney, Cornelius (1754-1848), philanthropist,
b. Ireland; d. Brooklyn. On coming to the United States he engaged in business and, in association with John Jacob Astor, amassed a fortune, which he devoted to religion and charity. In 1845 he obtained permission of the legislature to form a trust of his estate, the annual income of which amounts approximately $25,000, for the benefit of the poor and orphaned. —C.E.

Hefele, Karl Joseph von (1809-93), historian,
Bp. of Rottenburg, b. Unterkochen, Württemberg;
d. Rottenburg. He taught church history at Tübingen (1836-69), where he opposed Illuminism and laid special emphasis on Christian archeology.
Hefele accepted the definition of papal infallibility after opposing it during the deliberations of the Vatican Council. His best-known work is a great history of the councils. His Congregation of Missioners was a great influence for good in the history of the duchy; she endowed monasteries of the Cistercian, Premonstratensian, Augustinian, DOMinican, and Franciscan orders, thus introducing German culture into Silesia. The best known of these religious foundations is probably the Cistercian convent at Trebnitz to which she retired at Henry's death; although she did not take the veil, she led a life of great austerity. Patroness of Silesia.
—C.E.; Butler.

Heis, Eduard (1806-77), astronomer, b. Cologne,
g. Münster. He taught mathematics and sciences in the gymnasium of Cologne (1827-77), in the high school at Aix-la-Chapelle (1837-62), and in the Academy (now University) of Münster (1852-77). His treatises dealt with his observations of auroral light, sun-spots, comets, zodiacal light, etc. During the Kulturkampf (q.v.) he championed Catholicity. —C.E.
Hell (Gr., light), Saint, widow (c. 247-330), wife of Emperor Constantius Chlorus and mother of Constantine, b. probably Drepanum (Helenopolis), Bithynia; d. probably there. She was converted to Christianity by her son after his victory over Maxentius, and thenceforth lavished her wealth and influence on behalf of the faith. About 324 she visited Jerusalem, and from this visit arose the tradition of her discovery of the Holy Cross. She lived, for some time at Rome, and her tomb is venerated in S. Maria Maggiore; some of her relics were transferred to the Abbey of Hautvillers, France, 849. Feast, 18 Aug. —C.E.; Butler.

Heliand, Diocese of, Montana, comprises the western part of the state, embracing the following counties: Lewis and Clark, Glacier, Pondera, Flathead, Lake, Lincoln, Missoula, Mineral, Sanders, Powell, Granite, Ravalli, Deer Lodge, Silver Bow, Jefferson, Broadwater, Gallatin, Madison, Beaverhead, Meagher, Wheatland, parts of Golden Valley, Teton, and Toole; area, 51,922 sq. m.; erected, 1884; suffragan of Oregon City. Bishops: John B. Brondel (1884-1903), John P. Carroll (1904-25), George J. Finnigan (1927). Churches, 100; priests, secular, 87; priests, regular, 13; religious women, 380; college, 1; academies, 4; high schools, 7; primary schools, 22; pupils in parochial schools, 5988; institutions, 15; Catholics, 40,849.

Hell, Jewish high-priest and judge at Silo, with whom Samuel's early history in the Bible is connected. Another Hell is mentioned in the N.T. (Luke, 3), as the father of St. Joseph in accordance with the levirate law, though in reality he was his uncle.—C.E.

Heliand, The (Ger., Heiland, Saviour), the oldest complete work of German literature, an epic poem on the life of Christ, composed in the Saxon language, c. 830, under Emperor Louis the Pious. A fragment of the manuscript was discovered before 1587, and the full text appeared in 1830, from a Munich manuscript. The poem, written in alliterative verse, either by a priest or a layman, has a purely German atmosphere.—C.E.

Hell (prob. from A.-S., helan, conceal), theologically, a place of privation and punishment after death. In the strict sense of the term, hell (infernum) is the place of eternal punishment for the damned, whether demons or men. In a broad sense it may mean: (1) the limbo of infants (limbus parvolorum), where those who die in original sin, but without personal mortal sin, are deprived of the happiness which would come to them in the supernatural order, but not of happiness in the natural order; (2) the limbo of the Fathers (limbus patrum), where the souls of the just who died before Christ awaited their admission to heaven, which had been closed against them in punishment for the sin of Adam; (3) purgatory, where the just who die in venial sin or who still owe a debt of temporal punishment for sin are cleansed by suffering before their admission to heaven. Under this heading only the strict sense of the word will be treated. The existence of hell is shown from innumerable passages of Holy Scripture where it is referred to, not only as a place of punishment, but as a place of eternal punishment of fire for those who die in the state of mortal sin. The chief punishment is of course loss of God. The location of hell has never been revealed and is a matter on which the opinions of theologians differ. That there should exist a place of punishment as well as a place of reward for men after death is readily admitted by all who believe in the existence of God and the immortality of the human soul. Human reason, however, unaided by revelation, could not know with certainty all that is actually known of hell. Although this is the case, there is no contradiction between faith and reason. One of the most common objections offered to belief in the eternity of hell is that it is repugnant to Divine goodness. This objection is often due to the fact that men fail to remember that: God is infinitely just and holy as well as infinitely good; no man will be damned who does not deserve it; God is infinitely wise, and it would be repugnant to attribute for Him to establish laws which man can violate with impunity in this life without endangering his eternal happiness; the damned persevere forever in their evil dispositions and impenitence. See Pain.—C.E.; St. Thomas, Summa Theologica (trans., Benziger, 1925); Pohle-Preuss, Escholog, St. L., 1924; Chetwood, God and Creation, N. Y., 1928. (A. L. F.)

Hell (in the Apostles' Creed) occurs in the phrase "He descended into Hell," and refers not to the abode of the damned, but to the abode of the just who had died before Christ's death, limbo, as it is called, a place where they were awaiting Him so as to enter Heaven with Him.

Hell, Maximilian (1720-92), Jesuit astronomer, b. Schenmitz, Hungary; d. Vienna, where he directed the Imperial Observatory. At the request of the King of Denmark he made observations of the transit of Venus in 1769 at Yardohus, Norway, which owing to a delay in publication were considered forgeries. Later research proved this charge false. He published a valuable annual astronomical review for over 30 years, and wrote several astronomical works.—C.E.

Help of Christians, Feast of Our Lady, 24 May, established by Pope Pius VII, 1814, in thanksgiving for his safe return to Rome after five years captivity at Savona. It is the patronal feast of Australasia and has spread throughout nearly the whole Church but is not in the universal calendar. The invocation "Auxilium Christianorum" (Lat., Help of Christians) was inserted in the litany by Pius V in gratitude to Our Lady for the Christian victory over the Turks at the battle of Lepanto, 1571.—C.E. XI, 309.

Helvetic Confessions, See Confessions, Protestant.

Henderson, Isaac Austin (1850-1909), writer, b. Brooklyn; d. Rome. Adopting journalism as a profession, he was associated with the "New York Evening Post," and wrote several novels and plays. He became a Catholic in 1896, and both in New York and Rome devoted himself to the welfare of children.—C.E.

Henry VIII (1491-1547), King of England, b. Greenwich; d. Westminster. The second son of Henry VII, he was intended in his youth for the Church; he married Catherine of Aragon, his brother Arthur's widow, 1509, after obtaining the requisite dispensation. He succeeded to the throne in 1509. Intelligent, devoted to letters and skilled in sport, he was intensely popular. With the aid of Card. Wolsey he made England a European power, strengthened his position at home, and remained on excellent terms with Rome. His work against Luther, in defense of the Seven Sacraments, the Mass, and papal supremacy, won for him the title “Defender of the Faith,” conferred by Leo X. His life, however, had not been stainless; he had immoral relations with Elizabeth Blount and Mary Boleyn. About 1527 he conceived a violent passion for Mary's sister, Anne, and having only a daughter (later Queen Mary) by Catherine, he endeavored to procure a divorce on the grounds of nullity. When he failed to obtain it through Wolsey, the cardinal fell into disgrace and was replaced by Cranmer. In January, 1533, to anticipate the birth of Anne's child, the future Queen Elizabeth, he went through a form of marriage with Anne; in May, Cranmer declared the marriage valid, and Elizabeth was born in September, 1533. In 1534 the breach with Rome was complete, and Henry was declared Supreme Head of the Church of England. Thomas Cromwell, Cranmer's abettor, who had first suggested this step, inaugurated a reign of terror; priests and nuns were put to death, over 8000 religious were expelled from their homes, more than 200 monasteries and churches confiscated and plundered, under grossly exaggerated accusations of monastic immorality. Protestants, too, were sent to the stake, for Henry, schismatical rather than heretical, insisted on the recognition of the ancient sacramental system. Anne Boleyn fell into disfavor and was executed; Henry's third wife, Jane Seymour, mother of Edward VI, died naturally; Cromwell procured him a fourth wife, Anne of Cleves, who, proving uncomely, was divorced, and Cromwell was executed; the fifth wife, Catherine Howard, was executed on an accusation of infidelity, being succeeded by Catherine Parr, who survived Henry. The last 15 years of his reign contain hardly a feature not exciting repulsion; Henry was to the end cruel and inconsistent, one of his final acts being to suppress chanctries, which, however, he virtually reestablished for his own interest by making testamentary provision to have Masses said for the repose of his soul.—C.E.; Gairdner, History of the English Church in the 16th Century, Lond., 1902; Gasquet, Henry VIII and the English Monasteries, Lond., 1925.

Henry IV (1553-1610), King of France and Navarre, b. Pau; d. Paris. He was educated a Calvinist, and from 1569 he led the Protestants in French wars on account of religion. In 1572 he married Margaret of Valois, sister of Henry III whom he supported. The Catholic princes, alarmed when he became heir-presumptive to the French crown through the death of Henry's brother, appealed to the pope, who, relying on the public right acknowledged in those days, released his subjects in Navarre from their allegiance. Supported by the Parliamentarians and appealing to the people, Henry took up arms and, despite the Catholic League headed by the Guises, succeeded Henry III, 1589. His religion remained a barrier between him and the main body of his subjects; however, after lengthy discussions between rival theologians, he became a Catholic, 1593, and two years later was fully reconciled with the Holy See. Shortly after, his arms were successful in Burgundy, Picardy, and Brittany. In 1599 his marriage was annulled by Clement VIII. The reasons approved were lack of necessary dispensations (the ceremony had been performed by the Cardinal of Bourbon, before the dispensations necessary because of difference in religion were granted) and want of consent of one of the parties (Margaret claimed that she had never consented to the contract and had been forced by her brother, Charles IX). A few months later, he took Marie de’ Medici as his consort. With the aid of his minister, Sully, he centralized public authority, and developed industry, commerce, and agriculture. He secured liberty for Protestants by the Edict of Nantes, and refused to allow the publication of the decrees of Trent. Henry, who for his frivolity was nicknamed the Vert Galant (ladies’ man), was notoriously immoral and perished by the dagger of the maniac Ravaillac.—C.E.

Henry II, Saint, confessor (972-1024), German king and Roman emperor, son of Duke Henry II, b. Bavaria; d. Göttingen, Prussia. He was educated at Cologne under Eckhart the celebrated mystic. From his eighteenth year his life was a continual voyages down the west coast of Africa, discovered the Azores, the Madeira, and Cape Verde Islands, and traced the coast as far as Sierra Leone.—C.E.; Thuente, Blessed Henry Suso, N. Y., 1926.

Henry III (1017-56), German king and Roman emperor, son of Conrad II, b. Bohemia; d. Hofbed, Germany. He obtained the imperial crown in 1039. Early in his reign he checked Bohemia and made Hungary his vassal. A man of profound piety, he looked on himself as a priest-king, like David. He aimed at Church reform, presided over synods, passed sentence in ecclesiastical affairs, and held inflexibly to the right of investiture. He put an end to the papal troubles caused by the resignation of Benedict IX, but claimed control of nominations to the papacy. Towards the end of his reign Hungary revolted. As Grand-Master of the Military Order of Christ he carried on constant war against the infidels; and his swift caravels, making continual voyages down the west coast of Africa, discovered the Azores, the Madeira, and Cape Verde Islands, and traced the coast as far as Sierra Leone.—C.E.; Major, Life of Prince Henry of Portugal, Lond., 1868.

Henry IV (1050-1108), German king and Roman emperor, b. Goslar, Germany; d. Liege, Belgium. He was the son of Henry III and was educated under the influence of Abps. Anno of Cologne and Adalbert of Bremen, the latter the de facto ruler during his minority. Henry assumed control in 1070, when the papacy had emancipated itself from the imperial power. He determined to subdue both the temporal and spiritual princes. Bavaria and Saxony were soon crushed, but he was confronted with Hildebrand, who in 1073 became Pope Gregory VII, the great ecclesiastical statesman, who determined that bishops should be dependents of the papacy, not of the empire. A synod at Worms pronounced Gregory deposed, 1076, whereupon the pope excommunicated Henry. When the German nobles decided to elect another emperor, Henry fled to Italy where he penitently craved forgiveness from Gregory at Canossa. After his return to Germany a revolution broke out, but he pressed on, and when in 1080. Having been again excommunicated, Henry retorted by setting up the simoniaic Guilbert of Ravenna as antipope Clement III. Gregory’s second successor, Urban II, continued the struggle. In 1098 the emperor had his son Henry elected king of Germany, but in 1104 the latter revolted and compelled his father to abdicate. Henry the Navigator

Henry V (1081-1125), German king and Roman emperor, d. Utrecht, Netherlands. He was the son of Henry IV, and last of the Salic princes. Though he succeeded to his title under a pact with the pope and princes, he refused later to yield his claim to the right of investiture. He seized Pope Paschal II, and forced him to order all the clergy to turn over the entire church property to him; this illegal agreement was repudiated at once by the princes and by Guido, Abp. of Vienna, who excommunicated Henry. When Guido became Pope Callistus II, Henry, to procure internal peace, agreed to a treaty by which the Church alone was to appoint bishops and abbots, while the king, abandoning the ring and scepter at investitures, was entitled to confer the temporalities on ecclesiastics by investing them with a sceptre.—C.E.

Henry Suso, Blessed, confessor (c. 1295-1366), Dominican mystic, b. Constance, Germany; d. Ulm. He studied at Cologne under Eckhart the celebrated mystic. From his eighteenth year his life was devoted to a burning love for the Eternal Wisdom. Though an esteemed preacher his great work was as a spiritual director, his influence being particularly noticeable in the convents of Katherinenthal and Töss. His “Little Book of Eternal Wisdom” (tr. McKenna, New York, 1889) is a most beautiful fruit of German mysticism. For centuries his works have been spiritual exercises and have contributed much to the formation of German prose. Represented with the Holy Name on his chest. Cult approved, 1831. Feast, 2 March.—Thuente, Blessed Henry Suso, N. Y., 1926.

Henry the Navigator (1394-1460), son of King John I of Portugal, b. Oporto; d. Sagres. In 1415 he captured Ceuta in Morocco, Portugal’s first over-sea conquest. As Grand-Master of the Military Order of Christ he carried on constant war against the infidels; and his swift caravels, making continual voyages down the west coast of Africa, discovered the Azores, the Madeira, and Cape Verde Islands, and traced the coast as far as Sierra Leone.—C.E.; Major, Life of Prince Henry of Portugal, Lond., 1868.
Heortology (Gr., heorte, feast; logos, knowledge), the study of the feasts of the Church, their origin, meaning, and observance. See Feasts.—C.E.; Kellner, Heortology, St. L., 1908.

Heptateuch, heptat-tuk (Gr., hepta, seven; teuchos, case, book), the first seven books of the Bible: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Josue, and Judges. They are treated as a section having some historical unity.

Heraldry, Ecclesiastical, is divided into various branches, principally, the arms of religious corporations and other bodies; the insignia of ecclesiastical dignity, rank, or office; the charges, terms, and forms of general heraldry having a religious or ecclesiastical origin, usage, or character; the emblems or devices attributed to or typifying particular saints or other beings venerated by the Church. The earliest ecclesiastical seals were undoubtedly personal, bearing the effigy or arms, or device of a bishop or abbot, but in England, by law of Edward I, 1307, religious houses were ordered to have a common seal and there finally developed the idea of an impersonal coat of arms for each community. There is little, if any, evidence of a regularized sovereign control of ecclesiastical heraldry before the Reformation, hence the arms of abbeys and priories have little of the exactitude depending from within it are of the same color. That of a bishop and an archbishop are identical. The mitre is another external ornament to the shield, widely made use of by ecclesiastics and as a sign of episcopal dignity is said to be traceable to the 4th century. The processionals consist of the tiara and the crossed keys of St. Peter, one of gold and the other of silver, the two being usually tied together with a cord. Crests and helmets are not usually borne by ecclesiastics but the use of mottises is quite correct. Members of a regular order frequently impale the arms of the order with their personal arms, and cardinals have often impaled with their personal arms the arms of the pope who has raised them to that rank. Precen­tors denote their office by placing a baton behind their shields and the arms of a canon are often displayed upon his alnuce (tippet or hood). Priors and priresses place a bourdon (or knobbed staff) of silver in pale behind their shields. Armenian archbishops use a green hat with ten red tassels. Behind the shield are placed a Latin crozier and a Greek crozier in saltire, the shield is ensignied by a miter and in pale is a cross with a double traverse.

Archbishops possess episcopal rank and use the same hat as a bishop. The ordinary ecclesiastical hat of a simple priest is black and had originally on either side a single tassel of the same color, but this later developed into a double tassel. The prelates of the papal chamber use a violet hat with ten red tassels on either side. Apostolic prothonotaries are entitled to a violet hat with six red tassels at each side. Domestic prelates, priory chamberlains, and privy chaplains of His Holiness have a violet hat with six violet tassels. Honorary chamberlains and chaplains have a violet hat with three violet tassels.

The heraldic miter is placed above the arms of all who are entitled to wear it. It is always represented as of gold and the labels or infules depending from within it are of the same color. That of a bishop and an archbishop are identical. The crozier is another external ornament to the shield, widely made use of by ecclesiastics and as a sign of episcopal dignity is said to be traceable to the 4th century. The processionals consist of the tiara and the crossed keys of St. Peter, one of gold and the other of silver, the two being usually tied together with a cord. Crests and helmets are not usually borne by ecclesiastics but the use of mottises is quite correct. Members of a regular order frequently impale the arms of the order with their personal arms, and cardinals have often impaled with their personal arms the arms of the pope who has raised them to that rank. Precedents denote their office by placing a baton behind their shields and the arms of a canon are often displayed upon his alnuce (tippet or hood). Priors and priresses place a bourdon (or knobbed staff) of silver in pale behind their shields. Armenian archbishops use a green hat with ten red tassels. Behind the shield are placed a Latin crozier and a Greek crozier in saltire, the shield is ensignied by a miter and in pale is a cross with a double traverse.

Herbert of Lea, Elizabeth, Lady (1822-1911), authoress and philanthropist, b. London; d. there. The daughter of General Charles A'Court, M.P., and niece of Lord Heytesbury, British ambassador at St. Petersburg, she married, in 1846, Sidney Herbert, son of the Earl of Pembroke. In 1861, her husband died; she became interested in Catholicism through the influence of Card. Manning and was converted at Palermo (1866). Lady Herbert soon became a most zealous promoter of all Catholic charities and interests. She devoted most of her energy to writing, translating a number of biog-Voluntary causes, or a formal heretic, knowingly defines the laws which exegetes must follow in order and freely heretic, adhering to heresy innocently or from in- and of inquiring into their true sense. This science Christ corrupts its dogmas. He may be a material art and science of interpreting the Sacred Writings Preuss; Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, Lond., begun, 1626, but interrupted. Relics at Steinfeld, 1878. (ED.) Cologne, and Antwerp. Feast, 7 April.—C.E.; Butler.

Teaching; e.g., Arianism, denying the divinity of chaplain and spouse, bestowed on him. Represented almost every Christian doctrine.—C.E.; Koch- gin and Child. The cause of his canonization was accepting the truth taught by Christ, and His moral Joseph, which the Blessed Virgin, calling him her self “—hat one shall believe and practise instead of Hoven. He soon became known by the name of Christ; the various sects of Protestantism denying in art, offering an apple to the statue of the Vir­

Tion. Only one printed edition of this rite, that of gin. Entering the monastery of the Premonstraten­Rouen, dating from 1502, is still in existence. sians at variance with recognized teachings in philos­ Hered, or Flock, emblem in art associated with Sts. Joan of Arc, Geneviève, Germaine, and Solange as shepherdesses or tenders of flocks.

Herdrich, Christian Wolfgang (1625-84), Jesuit missionary in China, b. Graz, Styria. In 1671 he became court mathematician of Emperor Kang-he. His Chinese-Latin dictionary was probably the first written, and he collaborated with his fellow-Jesuit, Intorcetta, in making Confucius known to Europeans.—C.E. Suppl.

Hereford, ancient diocese, England, founded, probably 676, by partition from Lichfield, with Putta as first bishop. The shrine of the martyred Etelbert, dating from 795, was destroyed by the Welsh in 1055. The cathedral has suffered from un­skillful additions. Included among its bishops is St. Thomas of Hereford, the last English saint canonized.—C.E.

Hereford, Use of, form of liturgy commonly used in some of the northwestern counties of Eng­land and in parts of Wales, prior to the Reforma­tion. Only one printed edition of this rite, that of Rouen, dating from 1592, is still in existence.

Heresy (Gr., hairesis, choice), deciding for one­self what one shall believe and practise instead of accepting the truth taught by Christ, and His moral teachings; e.g., Arianism, denying the divinity of Christ; the various sects of Protestantism denying almost every Christian doctrine.—C.E.; Koch-Preuss; Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, Lond., 1878. (Ed.)

Heretic, one who having professed the faith of Christ corrupts its dogmas. He may be a material heretic, adhering to heresy innocently or from in­voluntary causes, or a formal heretic, knowingly and freely adhering to heresy. One who holds opin­ions at variance with recognized teachings in philos­ophy, science, or art; since the term is somewhat odious, it is more properly applied to the originators of heresy than to their descendants and remote followers.

Hergenröther, Joseph (1824-90), cardinal, his­torian, and canonist, b. Würzburg, Germany; d. Mehreran. In 1882 he was appointed professor of canon law and church history and in addition lectured on patrology. He was particularly interested in the origin of the Greek Schism and as a result of his twelve years' research published his classic, “Phoiliarz Patriarch von Constantinopel.” In the meantime he had written numerous historicocanonist and his-epistolographic treatises, and as early as 1861 had opposed the dangerous tenden­cies of Döllinger and Michielis. In 1868 he was called to Rome to prepare the way for the Vatican Council, writing his “Anti-Janus” in reply to Döll­inger's notorious work, “Janus.” His “Catholic Church and the Christian State,” 1872, is a great thesaurus of information on the politico­ecclesiastical conflicts of the past. Besides supple­menting Hefele’s “History of the Councils” with two volumes, he wrote a manual of church history in 1876. He was raised to the cardinalate in 1879, and appointed first cardinal-prefect of the Apostolic archives when these Vatican treasures were opened to scholars by Leo XIII.—C.E.

Hermann (Sp., brotherhood), originally a voluntary organization (Santa Hermandad or Holy Brotherhood) for maintenance of public order, in Spain. Throughout the Middle Ages such alliances were formed by combining towns to protect the roads and were extended to political purposes. At one time they formed a general police force under officers appointed by themselves, endowed with large powers of summary jurisdiction.

Hermann Contractus (1013-54), chronicler, mathematician, and poet, b. Althausen, Swabia; d. island of Reichenau, Lake Constance. Though a helpless cripple from birth he took monastic vows, 1043, and became a brilliant scholar, compiling the first medieval chronicle, a monument of erudition. He wrote several mathematically-astronomical works and was a gifted poet, and has been considered the author of the “Salve Regina” and the “Alma Redemp­toris Mater.”—C.E.

Hermann Joseph, Blessed (1150-1241), b. Cologne, Germany; d. Hoven. At a very early age, Hermann had a tender devotion to the Blessed Virgin. Entering the monastery of the Premonstratensian Canons at Steinfeld (1102) he was ordained and appointed chaplain of the Cistercian nuns at Hoven. He soon became known by the name of Joseph, which the Blessed Virgin, calling him her chaplain and spouse, bestowed on him. Represented in art, offering an apple to the statue of the Vir­gin and Child. The cause of his canonization was begun, 1626, but interrupted. Relics at Steinfeld, Cologne, and Antwerp. Feast, 7 April.—C.E.; Butler.

Hermeneutics (Gr., hermeneuo, interpret), the art and science of interpreting the Sacred Writings and of inquiring into their true sense. This science defines the laws which exegetes must follow in order to determine and explain the sense of Holy Writ.
It presupposes that the interpreter have a knowledge of scriptural languages, Hebrew, Aramaic, and Greek, and of Semitic languages generally. Other subsidiary languages and sciences that contribute greatly to the literature of the subject or to a knowledge of the various biblical periods, their social and cultural setting, etc., are regarded as preliminary knowledge required of the exegete. Hermeneutics recognizes a twofold sense of Holy Writ, a literal and a typical. Since the literal sense is also the basis of the typical it is always present. Not every passage of the Bible has a typical sense. Before determining rules of interpretation, it must be kept in mind that the Bible has a twofold aspect: it is a literature written by men, and it is God's Word entrusted to the Church to guard and explain. As a literature the Bible requires the application of grammatical and rhetorical rules if the literal sense is to be determined. The class of literature to which each book or passage of the Bible belongs must be ascertained. The sense is then arrived at by studying the signification of the words themselves, of these words in their context, proximate and remote, in parallel passages, and in the light of the author's purpose. Because the Bible is God's Word the interpreter must treat it with reverence. He cannot admit in it errors attributable to the Author. Primitive texts, i.e., autographs, have to be free from mistakes, but textual corruptions frequently occur in the transmission of the Bible text, however not in matters of faith or morals, and not of a kind that would affect the substantial integrity or trustworthiness of the Text. The Catholic interpreter must accept the Church's definitions of the sense of Bible passages. The Church, however, has defined but few texts expressly, although in the definition of dogmas and the condemnation of errors many texts are implicitly defined. Furthermore the unanimous consent of the Fathers in interpreting any text of the Bible that pertains to faith or morals cannot be set aside, since the consent of the Fathers in such matters is proof that their interpretation has descended, as a matter of Catholic Faith from the Apostles. The sense once determined is given in translations, paraphrases, glosses, dissertations, and commentaries. See EXEGESIS.—C.E.; Grannan. (H J. G.)

Hermengild, Saint, martyr, d. 585. Son of Leovigild the Visigoth king, a follower of the Arian heresy, he married the Catholic princess of the Franks, and was converted to the faith by St. Leander, Bp. of Seville. He took arms against his father in defense of the Catholics; betrayed by the Byzantines, he was captured in 583 by Leovigild who brought him in chains to Toledo, stripped him of his royal garments, and banished him to Valencia. What his fate was after that is not certain; however, Gregory the Great relates that Leovigild sent an Arian bishop to him on Easter Eve, 585; upon refusing to receive communion from the heretic bishop, Hermengild was beheaded. He is invoked against thunderstorms, drought, and inundations. Relics at Seville. Feast, R. Cal., 13 April.—C.E.; Butler.

Hermes, Saint, martyr (132), d. Rome. According to legend he was a wealthy freedman; a catacomb in the Saesian Way bears his name. Relics at Acquapendente. Salzburg, Cornelimünster, S. Marco (Rome), and Seligenstadt. Feast, R. Cal., 28 Aug.—Butler.

Hermit (Gr., eremites, inhabitants of a desert), or Anchorite, a man who dwelt alone in retirement to pray and meditate. This mode of religious life is considered to date from the early persecutions of the Church, though its O.T. precursor is found in Elias, St. Anthony popularized it at Pespir early in the 4th century, and after the persecutions hermits increased in Egypt, Palestine, the Sinaiic peninsula, Mesopotamia, Syria, and Asia Minor, and spread to the West. Eventually monasteries combining the advantages of the cenobitical and ere—mitical types of religious life were founded. Many isolated hermits were formed into congregations, e.g., Hermits of St. Augustine (1256), of St. Ambrose (1441), of St. John the Baptist, approved by Gregory XIII, and many others. Individual hermits were numerous in the 17th century in Italy, Spain, France, and Flanders, but it has ever been the wish of the Church that the hermits be united into communities.

Hermitage, the dwelling of a hermit.

Hermits of St. Augustine or Augustinians, a religious order formed by the union of several monastic societies following the Rule of St. Augustine, in imitation of the monastic community established by St. Augustine of Hippo among his clergy, 397. It is divided into about 220 provinces, many of which are separate. The general Congregation of the Augustinians is at Villanova, Pa. The mother-house is in Rome. The mother-house of the Augustinian Nunns, Monastery of women following the Rule of St. Augustine, has existed as independent communities since the 11th century.—C.E.

Hermits of the Holy Trinity in Tuscany, and other houses in Italy. These were united in 1256 through the efforts of Pope Alexander IV, and monasteries were soon established in Germany, France, and Spain. In 1299 the German province was subdivided into the Rhenish-Swabian, the Cologne, the Bavarian, and the Saxon. At the period of its greatest prosperity, in the 15th century, the order had 42 provinces and 2 vicariates numbering 2000 monasteries and about 30,000 members. Several reformed congregations known as “Regular Observants” were instituted about this time. The most important of these were the Hermits Recollects of St. Augustine, a reform begun in Spain, 1498, established, 1588, and formed into a distinct order in 1912, and the German or Saxon Reformed Congregation, recognized in 1493 and comprising many important convents in Germany afterwards affiliated with the Lombardic Congregation. After the 16th century the order lost numbers of monasteries as a result of the Reformation. Most of the houses in Spain were suppressed during the French Revolution, losses resulting from the secularization of religious houses in Germany, Austria, and Italy, and in 1835 nearly all the houses in Spain were suppressed. The Philippines also suffered losses due to the political disturbances of 1896, and the order was suppressed in 1896 in Russia and in 1880 in Mexico where it was later reestablished though suppressed with other religious in 1926. The work of the order is cure of souls, including missions, and the advancement of learning through teaching and scientific study. They conduct academies, colleges, seminaries, and missions in Italy, Spain, Netherlands, Belgium, Germany, Czechoslovakia, Malta, England, Ireland, Australia, China, Philippines, Colombia, Peru, Brazil, Argentina, Ecuador, Chile, Cuba, and the United States. Statistics: 18 provinces, 2 congregations, 5 commissariats, and about 400 houses. The mother-house is in Rome. The mother-house of the order in the United States is at Villanova, Pa.

Augustinian Nuns. Monasteries of women following the Rule of St. Augustine have existed as independent communities since the 11th century.—C.E.

Hermopolis, Diocese of (Coptic Rite), Egypt, comprises central Egypt, bounded n. by the Patriarchate; e. by the Gulf of Hermopolis; s. by 27° and 28° N. lat.; w. by the Libyan Desert; established, 1895; suffragan of Alexandria. Bishops: Joseph M. Sedfaoui (1896-1926), Francis Bistauros (1926); residence at Minieh, Churches, 11; missions and stations, 5; priests, secular, 15; priests, regular, 7; seminary, 1; elementary schools, 10; pupils, 1150; Catholic Copts, 5000; Catholics of other rites, 2565. There is a titular see of the Latin Rite.

Herod, name of many rulers mentioned in the Bible. (1) Herod the Great (73-4 B.C.), son of Antipater, an Idumean. He became governor of Galilee and in 40 B.C. King of Judea, by the favor of the Romans. He was barbarous, a slave to his passions, jealous, and ambitious; he put several of his own children to death and was responsible for the massacre of the Holy Innocents. (2) His son, Archelaus, succeeded as ethnarch of half his father’s kingdom, but excited opposition by marrying his brother’s wife, and was finally exiled to Gaul, a.d. 7; through fear of Agrippa I the Great, grandson of Herod the Great, after being a prisoner in Rome under Tibersius, was restored to his throne by Caius, 37. He imprisoned St. Peter and beheaded St. James, and died in 44, eaten up by worms. (5) His son, Agrippa II, received the throne of Chalcis, 50, and became titular King of Judea. He opposed the Jewish rebellion against Rome, and after the fall of Jerusalem went to Rome. St. Paul pleaded before him.—C.E.

Herodians, a political party, not a religious organization, probably adherents of the Herodian dynasty, mentioned in the N.T. as plotting against Our Lord (Matt., 22; Mark, 3). The origin of the Herod the Great is involved in obscurity, but it is certain that he was not of pure Jewish pedigree. This fact and his cruelty made him odious to many Jews. He ruled by the good will of Rome, which he drew to his side by bribes and adulation. By the exile of Archelaus, son of Herod the Great, the Jews were made more subject to Rome. Every Jew hated this foreign domination, but the more prudent veiled their true feelings, because of the power of Rome. The Herodians are not believed to have borne any love to their alien subjugators, but they simulated loyalty to Rome in a hope thereby to restore the national kingdom under the Herodian dynasty. Therefore, although the Pharisees detested the Herodians, the two bodies made common cause against Jesus. It was the Herodians, sent by the Pharisees, who, in the discussion of the tribute, strove to entrap Jesus, that they might accuse him of sedition. (A. E. B.)

Herodias, daughter of Aristobulus, son of Herod the Great and Mariamne, descendant of the Machabees. She entered into an adulterous union with Herod Antipas, Tetrarch of Galilee, who was thereupon rebuked by John the Baptist. Her hatred aroused, she, by the dance of her daughter Salome, brought about the death of the saint. She preferred a life of exile with Antipas at Lyons, Gaul, to one of Heroic Act of Charity, an act by which a member of the Church on earth, in virtue of the doctrine of the Communion of Saints, offers to God (or to the Blessed Virgin), for the benefit of the souls in Purgatory, all the works of satisfaction he will perform during his life, and all the suffrage which will accrue to him after death. It is commonly regarded not as a vow, but as an offering which can be revoked at will. Heroism is manifested in the willingness to bear the dreadful pains of Purgatory, that other souls detained there may suffer less, and may sooner enjoy the Beatific Vision. The Church’s approval is attested by the many favors bestowed upon those making it.

Heroic Virtue, the performance of “virtuous actions with uncommon promptitude, ease, and pleasure, from supernatural motives and without human reasoning, with self-abnegation and full control over natural inclinations.” It is so defined by Benedict XIV in his treatise on beatification and canonization. It means eminence in practice of the social or cardinal virtues, prudence, justice, temperance, and fortitude, and in the theological or godly virtues, faith, hope, and charity. The principal requirement in the process for the beatification and canonization is to prove that a servant of God practised these virtues in an extraordinary or heroic manner. —C.E.; Devine, A Manual of Mystical Theology, N. Y., 1903.

Herrera, Francisco, “El Viejo,” or “the Elder” (1570-1656), painter, b. Seville; d. Madrid. Famous for his bold realism, he is considered the founder of the Spanish school. He was the teacher of Velazquez until his temper drove the pupil away as it had many others. His paintings were mainly religious and genre subjects. His masterpiece is the “Last Judgment,” in the church of San Bernardo in Seville. In the archiepiscopal palace in Madrid is his “Moses smiting the Rock,” and in the Louvre “St. Basil dictating his Doctrine.”

—Francisco, “El Mozo,” or “the Younger” (1622-1658), son of the preceding, b. Seville, d. Madrid. Having gone to Rome to escape his father’s tyranny, he was noted there as a painter of still life, especially of fish. In 1656 he returned to Spain and soon after founded the Seville Academy. His masterpiece is a “St. Francis” in the Seville cathedral. The Prado has his “Triumph of St. Hermengild.” —C.E.

Herring Procession, a curious festival held in the Middle Ages by the chapter of Reims, France, at the beginning of Lent. The canons went in single file from the cathedral to St. Remi, each dragging a herring, symbol of abstinence, and trying to put his foot on the one dragged by the next canon ahead of him.—Walsh, Curiosities of Popular Customs, Phila., 1897.

Hervás y Panduro, Lorenzo (1735-1809), famous Jesuit philologist, b. Horcajo, Spain; d. Rome. On the suppression of the Jesuits he returned to Europe from America, where he was a missionary, and wrote in Italian an extensive treatise in several volumes on cosmography, in which he investigates the development and ethnological relationship of the different nations on the basis of language, and also the origin of language.—C.E.

Hessians, inhabitants of Hesse, descendants of the Chatti. They were converted by Sts. Lubentius and Gare, but their chief missionary was St. Boniface. They formed minor states as Hesse-Darmstadt and Hesse-Nassau. During the Revolution Hessian troops were hired by England to help hold her American colonies.—C.E., VII, 298.

Hesychasm (Gr., hesyehos, quiet), a system of mysticism defended by the monks of Athos in the 14th century. It is the only great mystic movement in the Orthodox Church, and reopened the controversy with Rome. The Hesychasts maintained that it is possible by means of asceticism, detachment from earthly cares, submission to an approved master, prayer, and perfect repose of body and will, to see the uncreated light of God. There seems to have been a strong element of Pantheism and a tendency to neo-Platonism in the fully developed system. From one point of view the Hesychast controversy may be considered an issue between Greek Platonist philosophy and Western Aristotelianism. The Hesychasts were vehemently Byzantine and bitter opponents of the West, while their opponents were Latinizers, eager for reunion. By the end of the 14th century, Hesychasm had become a dogma of the Orthodox Church and is so still. Interest in the question gradually waned and although there was a faint echo of Hesychasm in the West, it never has achieved a following among Catholics. —C.E.

Hethites, or Cethites (Ezech., 16), a people of Asia Minor, descendants of Chanaan (Gen., 10), occupying the territory between Chaldea and Egypt, one of the richest commercial countries in the East. When Abraham came to Chanaan, he found a Hethite colony clustered around Hebron (Gen., 23; 26). Little is known of their language and religion.—C.E.

Heude, Pierre (1836-1902), Jesuit zoologist, b. Fougéres, France; d. Zi-ka-wei, China. Going to the Far East mission in 1868, he seized the opportunities offered by his pastoral wanderings to continue his scientific studies. His writings on the land molluscs of China are the standard authority. He was one of the chief contributors to the Jesuit review of oriental natural history and specialized in the systematic and geographical propagation of east Asiatic mammals, and comparative morphology of classes and groups according to tooth formation and skeleton.—C.E.

Hewit, Augustine Francis (1820-97), second superior general of the Paulists, b. Fairfield, Connecticut; d. New York. Ordained a Congregationalist minister, after visiting England he embraced Anglicanism, and following Newman in the Oxford Movement became a Catholic. He then joined the Redemptorists and a few years later associated himself with Fr. Hecker in establishing the Paulist Institute, for which he drafted the first laws and constitution. He was a prolific writer, aiming always at popularizing Catholic teachings. His “King's Hexameron (Gr., 'six days' work). The account, in Genesis, 1, of the formation of the world. On three days God separates: light from darkness; water above from water below; water from dry land. On three more God peoples the world with living beings. The presentation of God's work in six natural days is stylistic embellishment of the essential truth that the world comes from God, as God did, so should man work six days and rest after that. No clash between Bible and science is possible.—C.E.; Schumacher. (J. L. S.)

Hexapla, Origen's (186-254) colossal critical edition of the O.T. in Hebrew and Greek. This "sixfold" Bible, comprising about 50 large volumes, is arranged in six parallel columns which contain the characters, the Septuagint, and three other Greek versions. Origen's purpose, as regards the Septuagint, was to show its relation to the Hebrew text and the other Greek versions. Only one of the columns has survived, which is that exhibiting the text of the Septuagint.—C.E.

Hexateuch, Hexa-thius (Gr., hex, six; text, case, book), the first six books of the Bible: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, and Josue, so called to mark the fact that they form a literary whole.—C.E.

Hexam Abbey (Hextold, Hagustald), founded by St. Wilfrid of York (674) on land given the Northumbrian queen, St. Etheldreda. It became the seat of a bishopric in 678, received a grant of sanctuary from the king, and was administered by several saints, among whom were St. Aca, St. Eata, and St. John of Beverley. After the Danish invasions, the monastery was rebuilt in 1113 and transformed into a priory for Austin Canons which flourished until its dissolution under Henry VIII in the modern Catholic Diocese of Hexham and Newcastle (q.v.).

Hexham and Newcastle, Diocese of England, comprises Northumberland and Durham; suffragan of Liverpool. In 1861 the See of Newcastle was united with that of Hexham, founded 674, and revived in 1850. Eleven of the early bishops were saints. William Hogarth was appointed to the see (1850-66), succeeded by James Chadwick (1866-82); John Beverley (1882-86); Henry O'Callaghan (1888-89), Thomas Wilkinson (1889-1909), Richard Collins (1900-24), and Joseph Thorman (1925); residence, Newcastle-on-Tyne. Churches and chapels, 167; priests, secular, 236; priests, regular, 27; elementary schools, 118; other schools, 15; institutions, 12; Catholics, 220, 532.—C.E.

Hic breve vivitur, hic breve plangitur; hic breve fluet, or BRIEF LIFE IS HERE OUR PORTION, hymn not in use in the Breviary. It was written about 1140 by Bernard of Morlaix and translated by J. Neale.—Britt.

Hic est dies verus Dei, Ambrosian hymn used by the Mozarabic and Ambrosian Offices for Lauds and Vespers on Easter Sunday. The melody of this hymn is the one to which the Veni Creator Spiritus, written several centuries later, has always been sung.

Hickey, Patrick Vincent (1846-89), founder of the "Catholic Review," Dublin; d. Brooklyn. His periodical adopted the ideals of progressive modern journalism and for a time met with success as a high-class weekly. Hickey also printed in 1888 "The Catholic American" and the "Illustrated Catholic American." He was noted for his zeal for religion and generosity to the Church, and in 1888 received the L但却 Medal.
Hierarchical Jurisdiction. By divine institution of Christ, the pope, and the successor of St. Peter, is the supreme head of the visible Church. By his sacred office, the Roman pontiff has supreme jurisdiction over the universal Church, in matters of faith and morals, in discipline, and in rule. This power is ordinary, and immediate over all churches, all pastors, all the faithful, and comes to him immediately from God (Vatican Council, sess. 4, can. 3). Next by divine institution we have the episcopate; while the bishops of the Church are subject to and subordinate to the Roman pontiff, by ordinary jurisdiction they rule over a portion of the Church committed to their care. As to the sources of episcopal jurisdiction, the more common opinion is that power to rule a diocese comes to the bishop immediately from the pope, since no bishop is made without the consent and confirmation and the approval of the Holy See. Since the episcopate was constituted by Christ as part of the divine organization of the Church, the pope as supreme head of the Church cannot suppress the episcopate, but must appoint bishops who in the diocese committed to their care enjoy ordinary jurisdiction. As the power of Orders and jurisdiction are really distinct, it can happen that a bishop can have the fullness of the episcopal order but lack jurisdiction, e.g., a titular or auxiliary bishop. The priesthood is divinely instituted by Christ. By the Sacrament of Orders, priests receive the spiritual power to offer the Eucharistic sacrifice and to administer the Sacraments; by jurisdictional power received from their superiors, they exercise the sacred ministry over a portion of the Church, either as pastors of souls or as curates. Finally from ecclesiastical institution, we find a number of administrative and judicial offices in the Church; thus we number as members of the ecclesiastical hierarchy, cardinals, patriarchs, primates, archbishops, whose powers ultimately proceed from the pope; also diocesan authorities as vicar general, rural deans, diocesan consultors whose powers proceed from the bishop. First tonsure is not an order; it is an ecclesiastical ceremony by which a person is made a cleric and is made eligible to receive Orders.—C.E. (R. H. M.)

High Church Party, members of the Church of England who stress the authority and claims of the episcopacy and priesthood, maintain a sacerdotal view of the Sacraments and give a high place to those points of doctrine, discipline, and ritual which distinguish the Anglican Church from other forms of Protestantism. They cultivate orthodoxy in doctrine and rigorism in discipline. The extreme wing has reintroduced practices such as the Mass, veneration and adoration of the Blessed Sacrament, auricular confession, communion under one species, Extreme Unction, and the establishing of monastic orders.

High Mass, the complete rite of the Mass, the priest assisted by the deacon and subdeacon, and all the rubrics of the Order of Mass observed, such as chanting the Gospel, incensing altar, ministers, and people; also called solemn Mass.—O'Brien, History of the Mass, N. Y., 1882; Fortescue, The Mass: A Study of the Roman Liturgy, N. Y., 1914.

High Places, probably originally altars on any slight elevation, mentioned in the O.T. Before the Temple was built, there was nothing contrary to the law in the "high places" provided God alone was worshipped there, and no incense or victims were offered to idols. During the period of the Judges and the Kings, the Israelites erected idolatrous altars and Solomon built a temple for the idol of the Moabites on the hill near Jerusalem (3 Kings, 11).

High Priest, the chief priest of the Jews, whose special duties were to officiate on the Day of Atonement and preside over the people. As to the sources of episcopal jurisdiction, the more common opinion is that power to rule a diocese comes to the bishop immediately from the pope, since no bishop is made without the consent and confirmation and the approval of the Holy See. Since the episcopate was constituted by Christ as part of the divine organization of the Church, the pope as supreme head of the Church cannot suppress the episcopate, but must appoint bishops who in the diocese committed to their care enjoy ordinary jurisdiction. As the power of Orders and jurisdiction are really distinct, it can happen that a bishop can have the fullness of the episcopal order but lack jurisdiction, e.g., a titular or auxiliary bishop. The priesthood is divinely instituted by Christ. By the Sacrament of Orders, priests receive the spiritual power to offer the Eucharistic sacrifice and to administer the Sacraments; by jurisdictional power received from their superiors, they exercise the sacred ministry over a portion of the Church, either as pastors of souls or as curates. Finally from ecclesiastical institution, we find a number of administrative and judicial offices in the Church; thus we number as members of the ecclesiastical hierarchy, cardinals, patriarchs, primates, archbishops, whose powers ultimately proceed from the pope; also diocesan authorities as vicar general, rural deans, diocesan consultors whose powers proceed from the bishop. First tonsure is not an order; it is an ecclesiastical ceremony by which a person is made a cleric and is made eligible to receive Orders.—C.E. (R. H. M.)

Hilarion, Saint, abbot (c. 291-371), b. Tabatha, near Gaza, Palestine; d. Raphos, island of Cyprus. While studying at Alexandria he was converted to Christianity; he visited St. Anthony (q.v.) in the desert, and stayed with him for two months. Returning to Palestine, 307, and finding both his parents dead, he distributed his wealth among the poor, and retired to a little hut in the desert of Majuma near Gaza, where he lived as a hermit. He fasted rigorously, for six years taking only fifteen figs a day which he ate at sunset, and supported himself by weaving baskets. The miraculous cures and exorcisms which he effected attracted numerous disciples to him, 329. He returned to Egypt, 360, to seek greater solitude, journeyed to Sicily and for some time lived as an anchorite near Pachinum; but his disciples discovered his retreat and again surrounded him. He went then to Dalmatia, and later to the island of Cyprus where he spent the remaining years of his life. Hilarion is honored as the founder of the anchoritic life in Palestine. Relics at Majuma. Feast, R. Cal., 21 Oct.—C.E.; Butler.

Hilarius (HILARIUS OF PALERMO), Pope (461-468), b. Sardinia; d. Palermo. He attended the "Robber Synod" of Ephesus, 449, as a legate and upheld the rights of the papacy until Dioscurus of Alexandria forced him to flee. As pope he continued Leo I's vigorous policy, strengthening ecclesiastical government in Gaul and Spain. He erected churches, convents, libraries, and two public baths, and his synod of 465 is the earliest Roman synod whose records are extant.—C.E.

Hilary (Lat., joyful), Saint, Doctor of the Church (d. 368), Bp. of Poitiers, b. Poitiers, France; d. there. Brought up in paganism, he later embraced the Catholic Faith and in 350 was made Bp. of Poitiers. Opposing the introduction of Arianism into Gaul, he was exiled to Phrygia, 356, where he assisted at the synod of Scevia, 359; so well did he defend the Church against the Arians that the heretics had him sent back to Gaul, 361. Invoked against snakes. Emblems: a stick, and pen. Relics burnt by the Calvinists, 1572. Feast, R. Cal., 14 Jan.—C.E.; Butler.

Hildebrand, See Gregory VII, Saint, Pope.
Hilton, Walter (d. 1396), English Augustinian mystic. He was a man of great sanctity, and an able spiritual writer. The most famous of his writings is the "Scala Perfectionis" (Ladder of Perfection). Among his many other works, the one that deserves special mention is styled "To a Devout Man in Temporal Estate." It is written for the spiritual guidance of religious people of wealth and social position in the world, and explains how they can sanctify their lives, and turn all to the honor and glory of God.—C.E.; Inge, Studies of English Mystics, Lond., 1906.

Hincmar, (815 - 882), theologian, Abp. of Reims, d. Epernay, France. He was educated at the Abbey St. Denis by Hilduin, whom he accompanied in 822 to the court of Louis the Pious. In 844 he became the trusted counselor of Charles the Bald, was made archbishop, 845, and for 40 years was a decisive factor in the policies of the West-Frankish Empire. Hincmar took a leading part in opposing the predestination theories of Gotschalk. He vigorously defended ecclesiastical rights against secular aggression, but was censured by Pope Nicholas I for his conduct as metropolitan towards Rothard of Soissons. In 858 he procured the appointment of his nephew Hincmar (d. 879) to the See of Laon, but the latter's ambitious violent disposition led to such trouble that he incurred his uncle's censure and was deposed in 871.—C.E.

Hindering Impediment, one that renders a marriage unlawful unless a dispensation be obtained, but does not affect its validity. It is also called an impediment. There are three kinds: a simple vow; mixed religion; and legal relationship under certain conditions. Each is explained under its proper title. (J. F. S.)

Hind or Doe, emblem in art associated with St. Giles the Hermit, symbolizing the hind saved from the huntsman by him.

Hinduism, in a restricted sense, the total of religious beliefs and practises in India, growing out of ancient Brahmanism, and contrasting with the present orthodox Brahmanism. In its broader and generally accepted application Hinduism comprises all religious, social, and intellectual life popularly accepted as compatible with Brahman tradition. It extends to orthodox Brahmanism, and to popular Vishnuism and Shivaism with their numerous sects. The Brahman priests require both recognition of their supremacy and of certain fundamental traditions. The elastic pantheistic all-god Brahma admits all varieties of worship from the higher monotheistic to the popular depraved worship of nature, demons, animals, and trees, together with fetishism, totemism, and animism. Hinduism is of wide adaptation with its spiritual and abstract, practical and concrete, ethical and ceremonial, and quiescent and contemplative sides. Bound up with its castes, and its intricate social customs, it is a national, not a world religion. Hinduism numbers over 200,000,000 followers. India's remaining population of about 100,000,000 is composed mostly of the heretical Jainists, Buddhists, and Sikhs, of 62,000,000 Mohammedans, and of Christians. See Brahmanism.—C.E.; Mitchell, The Great Religions of India, N. Y., 1906; Monier-Williams, Brahmanism and Hinduism, Lond., 1891; Monier-Williams, Hinduism, N. Y., 1808.

Hippolytus, Saint, martyr (c. 252), d. Rome. He was the jailer of St. Lawrence who converted him. Racked and scourged, he was finally tied to the tail of a horse and dragged to death. His nurse, Concordia, and 19 members of his household suffered martyrdom with him. The catacomb of St. Hippolytus, in which he is buried, is near the grave of St. Lawrence not far from the city. Feast, R. Cal., 13 Aug.—C.E.; Butler.

Hippolytus of Rome, Saint, martyr (236), antipope (217-225), d. Sardinia. Little historically certain is known of his life due to the discordant traditions which are extant. After the death of Pope Zephyrinus he secured his election by a small band of followers in opposition to Callistus I whom he considered a heretic. He remained antipope during the reigns of Urban I and Pontian, and was banished to Sardinia, 235, where he became reconciled with the Church. Hippolytus was one of the most important and prolific theological writers of the Roman Church in the pre-Constantinian era. Most of his writings have been lost but his "Philosophumena" (Refutation of all Heresies) was discovered in a monastery at Mount Athos, 1842. Of the 10 books the second, third, and part of the fourth are missing. The "Philosophumena" is written in Greek, as are all his writings, and discusses the early heresies under five headings: Ophites; Simonists; Basilidians; Docete; Noetians. It comprises the most valuable source for the history of the early heresies. Feast, R. Cal., 22 Aug.—C.E.; Butler.

Hireling, contemptuous name for one who works for wages only, and makes the reward his only motive (Job, 7); through Our Lord's use of the word, it has come to express one who has no interest in his work and is unfaithful in performing it (John, 10), the difference between the true and the mercenary shepherd of souls.

His Holiness, designation of the pope on account of his office as chief administrator of holy things.

History, Church, the record or narrative of the origin and internal and external development of the religious society founded by Jesus Christ. It forms the most valuable part of history, since it deals with a part of human life, the religious. Of the religious society founded by Jesus Christ, the greatest institution ever established to lead men to salvation. As universal history deals with the history of man, so church history concerns itself with that of the Christian. In its treatment it must fulfill the conditions required of all history writing. It must therefore be: impartial, i.e., state the facts without bias and in their proper perspective, as found in the sources; based on original sources, i.e., derived from the most authentic and reliable documents furnishing first-hand information concerning the facts to be narrated; critical, sifting, weighing, and estimating at its true value the existing evidence and distinguishing carefully between possibility, probability, or certainty of an event; philosophical, i.e., stating not merely the facts, but investigating their causes and following up their results. Besides fulfilling these conditions,
The ecclesiastical historian must ever be mindful of the fact that the Church of Christ is a Divine institution with supernatural means, leading to a liability and indefectibility, received from its Founder. A special Providence watches over this simultaneously Divine and human institution and an exclusive study of human causes and effects will fail to furnish a satisfactory and exhaustive account of ecclesiastical events.

From a topical viewpoint, church history is divided into internal and external. The internal history of the Church treats of such subjects as her membership, nature, constitution, doctrine, worship, and discipline; the external history considers the Church's relations with persons and institutions which, while not belonging to her, have nevertheless some connection with her, as schismatic, heretics, and infidels, whom she seeks to convert, and secular powers with whom she comes into contact. From the chronological standpoint the division into three great periods is pretty generally accepted, although there is considerable divergence in determining the years in which these periods open or close. The following divisions and subdivisions with respective dates are suitable: (a) Christian antiquity (1-692), from the birth of Christ to the Council of Trullo (so called from the hall in Constantinople where it was held). During this period the Greeks and Romans were the chief representatives both of civilization and Christianity. It is subdivided into two epochs by the Milan Agreement (313). (2) The Middle Ages (692-1517), from the Council in Trullo to the beginning of the pontificate of Gregory VII (1073-1075); (b) from the pontificate of Gregory VII to the beginning of the pontificate of Boniface VIII (1073-1294); (c) from the pontificate of Boniface VIII to the beginning of the Protestant Revolt (1294-1517). (3) Modern times (1517 to the present day). It is a period of transition from ancient to modern civilization, the period during which religious unity prevailed in the Christian Church and the new western nations became the main representatives of civilization. It is subdivided into three epochs: (a) from the Council in Trullo to the Council of Trent; (b) from the Council of Trent to the beginning of the pontificate of Pius IX (1846-1878); (c) from the pontificate of Pius IX to the present day. It is a period of discord among Christians and of important changes in the life and organization of State and Church. It is divided into two parts by the beginning of the French Revolution in 1789. By sources of history are meant accounts, reports, narratives, inscriptions, and relics of all kinds left us by the past generations. In church history Divine and human sources must be distinguished. The former are found in the written word of God, the Sacred Scriptures of the Old and New Testament; the latter have man as their origin and authority. For the proper use and evaluation of historical sources the so-called auxiliary sciences are of great assistance. Among them are philology, epigraphy, paleography, numismatics, diplomatics, but particularly geography and chronology. A knowledge of general history, the history of philosophy, literature, and religion will also greatly help to an understanding of the history of the Church.
Brenan, "Ecclesiastical History of Ireland" (Dublin, 1864); Malone, "Church History of Ireland from the Anglo-Norman Invasion to the Reformation" (Dublin, 1882); Scotland: Canon Bellesheim, "History of the Catholic Church in Scotland" (Glasgow, 1874). Canada: Garnon, "Histoire du Canada" (Quebec, 1848); Leclercq, "The Establishment of the Faith in New France" (tr. Shea, New York, 1881); Faillon, "Histoire de la Colonie française au Canada" (Montreal, 1865). Australia: Card. Moran, "History of the Catholic Church in Australasia" (Sydney, 1896); Abp. Carr, "Fifty Years of Progress"; O'Brien, "Life of Archpriest J. J. Therry" (Sydney, 1922).

—C.E.; Guilday, An Introduction to Church History, St. L., 1925; Idem, Church Historians, N. Y., 1926.

Hive, emblem in art associated with Sts. Ambrose, Bernard, and Blaise. A bee-hive is sometimes placed at the feet of St. Ambrose as patron of bees; it symbolizes also eloquence. With Bernard it is a symbol of eloquence, allusive also to his title of "Doctor Mellifluus" (Mellifluous Doctor). In the case of St. Blaise it typifies his miraculous command over beasts.

Has, a Catholic paper published twice a week in English in the United States, in the National Language by the Bohemian Literary Society, Inc.; founded, 1871; circulation, 7000.

Hobart, Archdiocese of, Australia, comprises the Island of Tasmania, Bruny Island, and the Islands in Bass Straits; established as a diocese, 1842, erected into an archdiocese, 1888. Frs. Philip Connolly, Cotham, and John Therry carried on missionary work in the 19th century. Bp.: Robert Willson (1842-60). Absb. Daniel Murphy (1866-1907), Patrick Delany (1907-26), and William Barry (1926). Churches, 72; priests, secular, 29; priests, regular, 2; religious women, 183; high schools, 34; primary schools, 26; institutions, 2; Catholics, 23,016.—C.E.

Holbein, Hans (1497-1543), Renaissance painter, son of the preceding, b. Augsburg, Germany; d. London. He was the pupil of his father. Going to Basel in 1514, with his brother Ambroise, they first did illustrations for the printers there but were soon engaged on religious paintings and portraits. Hans showing early the extraordinary skill that made him one of the world's greatest portrait painters. He became the friend of Erasmus and executed several portraits of him, among them the well-known one in the Louvre. In 1526 he completed his most beautiful religious picture, the "Madonna of the Burgomaster Meier," now in the Darmstadt Gallery. The same year he went to London with letters from Erasmus to Sir Thomas More. Several portraits of the latter and his family exist now only in sketches and it is doubted that the familiar portrait of the Louvre represents More. After a brief sojourn in Basel Holbein returned to London, 1531, and increased his fame by works executed for the Steelyard colony of the German Hanseatic League, among them the "Portrait of George Gisze," of the Berlin Gallery. In 1536 he was named a royal painter by Henry VIII. His representations of that monarch are among his best-known works. His portrait of Anne of Cleves is now in the Louvre, and his reputed masterpieces of portraiture, "The Duchess of Milan," of the National Gallery, was done when he was a princess of Denmark and a prospective candidate for Henry's hand. The woodcuts of the so-called "Dance of Death," were published in 1538. They give Holbein his rank with Dürer as one of the greatest draughtsmen in the history of art. Holbein's life was cut short by the plague. Among his many superb portraits are those of "Robert Cheseman, the King's Falconer," at the Hague, "The Ambassadors," in the National Gallery in London, and the "Sieur de Morette" in Dresden. In Windsor Castle is a most valuable collection of his drawings.—C.E.; Chamberlain, Hans Holbein, Lond., 1902.

Holiness (Mark of the Church), one of the four marks by which the true Church of Jesus Christ can be recognized and distinguished from false Churches. There is no doubt that Christ in—C.E.

Holler, Hans, the elder (c. 1460-1524), painter, b. Augsburg, Germany; d. Isenheim. Little is known of his life. In art he was influenced by...
tended holiness to be a note of His Church. St. Paul writes to the Ephesians: "Christ also loved the church, and delivered himself up for it: that He might sanctify it, cleansing it by the laver of water in the word of life: That He might present it to himself, a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing, but that it should be holy, and without blemish" (Eph., 5). The question at once arrives as to what constitutes this holiness as a visible note of the Church. We say the Church is holy for many reasons. (1) It is essentially holy, i.e., all its intrinsic constitutive elements are holy; its final cause, the sanctity of men; its ministry, because endowed with a multiple power of sanctifying; its doctrine, both theoretic and practical, because it regulates and develops a holy life; its material cause, viz., those regenerated into the Sonship of God by baptism. (2) The Church is holy because it very evidently cultivates the Christian virtues, not only in the common sense of that term, but even in the most perfect sense. The Church cultivates the highest possible virtue in many ways. (a) By its doctrine, concerning faith and morals, including the integral doctrine of Scripture and tradition; a complete code of morality, certain and clear in content, with sufficient and efficacious sanctions; the ceaseless proposition of the perfection humanly attainable with God's help through the practise of the Evangelical Counsels. (b) By its cult. It worships God through the offering of the Sacrifice of Calvary again in the Mass, which administers the seven sacraments; the holiest of the seven sacraments, the Eucharist, which sanctify the whole life of a Christian, and supply a special grace for every necessity. Prayer is constantly commended and urged upon men. (c) By its laws. These move men to a more perfect and complete fulfilment of the Law of God. The Holiness of the Church consists not merely in its abundant means of holiness but also in the manner in which its members avail themselves of these, in its hosts of saints canonized and in the far greater number uncanonized; in the zeal of its missionaries, priests, and religious communities which are veritable schools of holiness; in the response of the faithful in general to the exhortations of their pastors, in their true sense of obligation to observe not only the commandments, but to perform even acts of heroism for their faith and for the welfare of their neighbors. (3) Finally the Church is holy because of the miracles which have always attended its existence. Christ promised these charismata to the Church: "Amen, amen, I say to you, he that believeth in me, the works that I do, he also shall do; and greater than these shall he do" (John, 14). The historical truth of miraculous powers in the Church is a certain fact. This power, promised by Christ to His Church, and actually exercised by the Church throughout the ages, is a sure proof of the indwelling of the Holy Ghost in the Church, and consequently of the sanctity of the Church.—C.E. XIII, 428; Debrunner-Messmer, Christian Apologetics, N. Y., 1903; Kempf, Sanctity of the Church in the Nineteenth Century. (C. D. M.)

Holocaust, hōl'ō-kést (Gr., holos, whole; kairos, burnt), an offering entirely consumed by fire, in use among the Jews and some pagan nations of antiquity. Only animals could be offered in holocaust, which was regarded as the highest and most complete expiation of man's reverence to God. There were two general kinds, according as to whether the offering was prescribed by the Law or the result of a private vow or devotion. The chief purpose of the holocaust was (1) to recall vividly to the Hebrews of old the supreme dominion of God over His creatures; (2) a means of atonement for sin; and (3) to foreshadow the sacrifice which Jesus Christ, the Lamb of God, was to offer in fulfillment of all the bloody sacrifices of the first covenant (Heb., 9).—C.F.

Holofernes, hōl-ō-fərnēz, general of the army of Nabuchodonosor, King of Assyria (Jud., 2). Nabuchodonosor, who reigned at Nineveh, had sent his army to the head of a considerable force to bring all the earth under his empire. Only the Jews resisted (5). Holofernes besieged Bethulia, a city of the Jews. Soon they decided to surrender. God raised up a pious widow, named Judith, of extraordinary virtue and courage (8), who reenacted the confidence of her compatriots. Gaining the good graces of Holofernes, Judith, at a certain great feast, captivated the general. Having drunk to excess, Holofernes fell into a deep sleep, and Judith, praying for strength, cut off his head, which she carried back to her people (13). The heroine celebrated the victory of the Jews by a canticle (15) and all the people thanked God. (F. J. L.)

Holy, See Sanctus.

Holy Alliance, a name given to the treaty signed by Emperor Francis I of Austria, King Frederick William III of Prussia, and Alexander I of Russia. It was distinctly religious in character and states that the rule of their future administration is to be based on Christian morality. The Church authorities regarded the alliance with coldness. It was political alliances. The treaties of the era (1815-23), when Metternich's influence was at its height, revived the conception of a centralized Europe and a common European responsibility. The revival of religious feeling induced him to allow the words "proper application of the principles of Christianity to politics."—C.F.; Guggenberger, General History of the Christian Era, St. L., 1908.

Holy Childhood, Association of the, a children's association for the benefit of foreign missions, founded, 1843, by Charles de Forbin-Janson, Bp. of Nancy, France. Its chief ends are: to draw young children near to the Infant Jesus that they may practise Christian charity and contribute to the salvation of pagan children; to procure baptism for these infidels, and educate them to spread Christianity among their countrymen. Children may be enrolled in this association immediately after Baptism, by contributing one cent monthly, and reciting a Hail Mary daily, for the poor pagans. The parish priest is the regular director of the work in his own parish; the affairs of the association are managed by an international council at Paris, consisting of 15 priests and as many laymen. Bp. Forbin-Janson traveled and lectured in France, Belgium, and England, in the interests of this association, and in 1846 it was introduced into New Orleans and Baltimore, from which places it spread to other cities in the United States and Canada. In 1890 Pittsburgh, Pa., became the central bureau of the association in America, and in 1893 the entire work was entrusted to the Holy Ghost Fathers. At present the association is known throughout Austria, Asia, Africa, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, England, France, Germany, Greece, Holland, Italy, Ireland, Malta, Norway, Oceania, Portugal, South America, Spain, Switzerland, and the United States. The "Annals of the Holy Childhood" is issued bimonthly in 7 languages.—C.F.
HOLY CHILDHOOD 450 HOLY FAMILY

Holy Childhood, Pontifical Society of the. See Pontifical Society of the Holy Childhood.

Holy Coat of Trier and Argenteuil. The cathedral of Trier (Fr., Trèves), Germany, and the parish church of Argenteuil, France, both claim to possess the seamless garment of Christ, tunica inconsuitalis (John, 19) for which the soldiers cast lots at the Crucifixion. The Trier tradition which affirms that the relic was sent there by St. Helena, is substantiated by a tablet of the 6th century and several documents of the 12th century. The coat of Argenteuil is mentioned in a document dating from 1156 as the Cappa pauci Jesu (garment of the Child Jesus). The intermingling of these two traditions gave rise to the legend that the garment woven by the Blessed Virgin for the Child Jesus grew with Him and was worn by Him during His whole life on earth. Modern advocates of the Argenteuil tradition now claim the Trier relic is not the tunica inconsuitalis but the outer garment of Christ. The veneration of both these relics has been the occasion of many pilgrimages.—C.E.

Holy Chriostmion, See Communion, Holy.

Holy Chriost, one of the three holy oils, the matter or essential substance of the Sacrament of Confirmation. It is olive oil in which a small quantity of balm or balsam has been mixed; this is a perfumed resin from the terebinth tree and other oriental and tropical plants. The word chrisma signifies a scented ointment. Besides its use at Confirmation, it is also employed in the ceremonies of Baptism, in the consecration of a bishop and of a church, and in the blessing of chalices, patens, baptismal water, and church bells.—C.E., III, 696. (J. F. S.)

Holy Cross Abbey, near Thurles, Co. Tipperary, Ireland, founded, 1169, by Donald O'Brien, King of Thomond. It owes its fame to the relic of the Holy Cross enshrined there, and was for three and a half centuries one of the most frequented places of pilgrimage in Ireland. The Abbey was suppressed under Henry VIII, 1536. The year 1632 seems to have been the last during which the relic of the True Cross was exposed for public veneration. The preservation of the abbey ruins is now the charge of the Board of Works.—C.E.

Holy Cross Abbey, Canon City, Colo., founded by the Benedictines, 1886; abbey since 1925; conducts the Abbey School; students, 100; priests, 10; brothers, 5.

Holy Cross College, Worcester, Mass., founded, 1843; conducted by the Jesuits; college of arts and sciences; professors, 75; students, 1050; degrees conferred in 1929, 255.

Holy Days of Obligation, feasts with the obligation to hear Mass and rest as far as possible from servile work. There are ten such feasts for the universal Church, though certain countries are exempt from observing all of them. The observance of these feast days is as follows: Christmas, New Year's Day, Epiphany, Ascension, Corpus Christi, Immaculate Conception, Assumption, St. Joseph, Sts. Peter and Paul, All Saints. Suppressed feasts are not to be restored without the permission of the Holy See. Thus in the United States, Epiphany, Corpus Christi, St. Joseph, and Sts. Peter and Paul, in England the feasts of St. Joseph and the Immaculate Conception, in Ireland the feast of St. Joseph, and in Australia the feasts of the Epiphany, Corpus Christi, St. Joseph, Sts. Peter and Paul, and the Immaculate Conception are not observed. St. Patrick's is a holy day in Ireland. In the course of centuries feasts of precept increased, so that more than a hundred were observed in some countries. Urban VIII in 1642 decreed the observance of 36. On all these, whether now observed or suppressed, pastors must apply Mass for their parishioners.—C.E., VI, 21. (D. B.)

Holy Face, Archiconfraternity of the, established at Tours, France, 1884, through the piety of Leo Dupont, for the prevention of blasphemy and the observance of Sunday. The insignia of the brotherhood is the Face of the Suffering Saviour on the veil of St. Veronica, worn by the members on a scapular, cross, or medal.

Holy Family, Devotion to the. Since the three holiest persons the world has ever beheld, Jesus Christ, the Incarnate Son of God, His immaculate mother, Mary, and His foster-father, St. Joseph, dwelt together for many years in the humble home of Nazareth, it is natural that Catholics should venerate them not only as individuals but also as a family. The cult of the Holy Family, however, did not manifest itself to any extent in the Church until the 17th century. At that time this devotion became popular throughout Europe, and was introduced into Canada through the zeal of Fr. de M. Laval, first Bp. of Quebec. This period witnessed the establishment in France of a religious congregation of women known as Daughters of the Holy Family. At the present day there are several religious congregations both of brothers and of sisters under the patronage of the Holy Family. In 1851, Fr. Francoz, a Jesuit, founded at Lyons an association of Christian families consecrated to the Holy Family. Pope Leo XIII, in his Apostolic letter "Nominem fugit" (14 June, 1892) and in his brief "Quum nuper" (2 July, 1892), affiliated to this society all the similar organizations throughout the world and enriched it with many privileges and indulgences. The association of the Holy Family is exempt from servile work. There are ten such feasts for the universal Church, though certain countries are exempt from observing all of them. The observance of these feast days is as follows: Christmas, New Year's Day, Epiphany, Ascension, Corpus Christi, Immaculate Conception, Assumption, St. Joseph, Sts. Peter and Paul, All Saints. Suppressed feasts are not to be restored without the permission of the Holy See. Thus in the United States, Epiphany, Corpus Christi, St. Joseph, and Sts. Peter and Paul, in England the feasts of St. Joseph and the Immaculate Conception, in Ireland the feast of St. Joseph, and in Australia the feasts of the Epiphany, Corpus Christi, St. Joseph, Sts. Peter and Paul, and the Immaculate Conception are not observed. St. Patrick's is a holy day in Ireland. In the course of centuries feasts of precept increased, so that more than a hundred were observed in some countries. Urban VIII in 1642 decreed the observance of 36. On all these, whether now observed or suppressed, pastors must apply Mass for their parishioners.—C.E., VI, 21. (D. B.)
of working-men under the patronage of the Holy Family. Its first spiritual director was the Redemp­torist Fr. Victor Dechamps, later cardinal and Abp. of Malines. In 1847 the organization was ap­proved by Pope Pius IX, who elevated the confraternity of Liége to the dignity of an archconfrat­ernity, with the right to affiliate to itself other confraternities throughout the world and to com­municate to them its spiritual privileges. The con­fraternity is now extensively spread through Eu­rope and America and has a membership of several hundred thousand. It is no longer limited to working-men; any Catholic, man or woman, child or adult, may join this association. It is, to a great extent, under the direction of the Redemptorist Fathers, the rector of the Redemptorist community at Liége being its chief director. One of the most celebrated confraternities is that in the Redemp­torist Church at Limerick, Ireland, which counts more than 6,000 men as practical members. By decree of the Congregation of Rites, 20 Oct., 1921, a feast of the Holy Family was instituted for the universal Church, to be celebrated on the Sunday within the octave of the Epiphany. Among the chief masters who have represented the Holy Family in art are: Alberti, Barocci, Batoni, Bartolomeo, Burekmair, Annibale Carracci, Agostino Carracci, Cignaui, L. Cranach the Elder, Credi, Da Vinci, El Greco, Fra Bartolommeo, Francis, Imola, Lanzano, Luini, Mantegna, Mengs, Michelangelo, Murillo, Perugino, Pinturicchio, Piozio, N. Pouss­in, Raphael, Rembrandt, Reni, Ribera, Romano, Rottenhammer, Rubens, Sarto, Schongauer, Signor­elli, Titian, Trevisani, Van der Weyden, Van Dyck, Van Orley, Vasari, Veronese, Zaleski.—C.E., VII, 1894. (f. j. c.)

Holy Ghost, The, title of the pope as father of all the faithful. (q.v.)

Holy Ghost (A.S., gaunt), the Third Person of the Blessed Trinity (q.v.); He is the Spirit of the Father and of the Son and proceeds alike from Both, as from one common principle. He is the per­sonal infinite term of the eternal act of mutual love of the Father and the Son; hence His name of Spirit or Holy Ghost, as the issue or term of God's eternal love or act of will. He is also called the Spirit of Truth, the Creator Spirit, the Sanctifier, as the gifts of creation (or recreation, or regeneration). of revelation, and of sanctification are the outpourings of God's love, and so appropriated to the Spirit of Love, though all external Divine effects belong to the common or united action of the Three Divine Persons. He is called Dove, as in this form He descended visibly upon Christ at the Jor­dan (Mark, 1), the dove being a symbol of inno­cence and of peace. See Fruits of the Holy Ghost; Gifts of the Holy Ghost; Novena of the Holy Ghost. —C.E.; Pohle-Preuss, The Divine Trinity, St. L., 1892. (c. F. C.)

Holy Ghost, Order of the, created by Innocent III, had its inception in the Hospital of the Holy Ghost, Rome, and spread throughout the Christian world, rendering invaluable services. Repeated attempts were made to make the Hospitalers of the Holy Ghost military, although they never resorted to arms. The institution was granted several privi­leges by Innocent III, among them exemption from all spiritual and temporal jurisdiction save his own, the right to build chapels, etc., which provided an impetus to the rise of other houses modeled on the one at Rome enjoying the same privileges, provided they submitted to periodical visitation and con­tributed alms to their metropolitan. The central authority was a commander, resident at Rome. The great temporal wealth of the order was responsible for an administration similar to that of the mili­tary orders, and abuses crept in, including indis­criminate bestowal of honors, which necessitated reform measures, culminating in 1700 when reli­gious of the order published an edict declaring the order regular and in no way military. Under papal government the Arcispedale di Santo Spirito of Rome was open to all Catholics without regard to country, condition, or fortune, but later became a municipal institution restricted to inhabitants of Rome.—C.E.

Holy Ghost, The, a monthly bulletin published at Holy Trinity, Ala., by the League of the Holy Ghost in order to promote devotion to the Third Person of the Holy Trinity; founded, 1923; circulation, 12,000.

Holy Grail, The, a legendary sacred vessel, identified with the chalice of the Eucharist or the dish of the Paschal Lamb, and the theme of a medieval cycle of romance. These romances may be divided into four classes, each with a sacred character. The quest assumes a sacred character. The hero is Percival; “Parzival” by Wolfram von Eschenbach (1205-15), based on the work of the French Guiot (Kyot), which conception of the Grail as guarded in a castle by a special order of knights, Templese, who are nourished by its miraculous food-giving power; the Welsh folk-tales or the “Mabinogion” (13th century); and the Eng­lish poem “Sir Percivale” (15th century). To the Early History class belong: “Joseph d’Arimathe” and “Merlin” by Robert de Boron (1170); the Early History class belong: the poetic “Conte del Graal” (13th century); and the French prose romance, “Queste del St. Graal” (13th century); and the French prose romance, “Queste del St. Graal,” which was embodied in Malory’s “Morte d’Arthur.” In all of these the quest assumes a sacred character. The Grail is said to have been the dish used by Christ at the Paschal supper, to have been used by Joseph of Arimathea to gather the Precious Blood of Christ, and to have been brought to England, Galahad (in “Queste” and “Grand St. Graal”) achieves the quest, in which the other knights of the Round Table participate. The origin of the legend is ob­scure; it may be traced to the Apocryphal Gospel of Nicodemus (popular in Britain in the 12th cen­tury); the Arthurian legend and the Percival story are probably of Celtic origin. Walter Map, who probably wrote a Grail-Launcelot cycle, perhaps got his information from the Abbey of Glastonbury, the center of many Arthurian legends. Robert de Boron, an English knight, used this work as a basis. The legend was connected later with that of Lohengrin, the swan knight, of Prester John, and also of Klinschror, the magician. The most famous modern versions are Tennyson’s “Holy Grail” in the “Idylls of the King” (1869), and Wagner’s “Parsifal” (1882). As the early legend claimed for the Church of Britain an origin as illustrious as that of Rome and independent of Rome, it was in the opinion of the Church calculated to encourage separatist tendencies in Britain, and therefore was ignored. Edwin Abbey has beautifully represented the “Quest of the Holy Grail” in 15 mural paintings in the Boston Public Library.—C.E., VI, 710; Nutt, Legends of the Holy Grail, Lond., 1902.

Holy Hour, The, a pious exercise of mental or vocal prayer, in union with the prayer of Our Lord in the Garden of Olives on Maundy Thursday night, when He was abandoned by the Apostles. It was taught as a practice to St. Margaret Mary Alacoque by Our Lord Hinnself, who appeared to her in 1673, as she was in adoration before the Blessed Sacrament. In 1829 Fr. Debrosse, S.J., founded a confraternity at Paray-le-Monial for the purpose of spreading this devotion, and in virtue of a rescript of Pius IX, 1875, the associates of the Apostleship of Prayer can gain a plenary indulgence by keeping the Holy Hour. It may be practised publicly, when any hour may be named for any day in the week by the local directors; or in private, when the time is restricted between 2 p.m. on Thursday and 6 p.m. on Friday. No special prayers are obligatory but the Holy Hour should be offered in memory of Our Saviour’s Passion, and in particular of His prayer and agony in the Garden of Gethsemani. It has become a general and popular practise weekly in some parishes, and a favorite termination for parish missions, and for retreats of clergy and religious. The best way of making it is by dividing the hour into quarters, devoting five minutes to points for reflection, five for silent prayer or meditation, and five for congregational singing.

Holy Innocents, martyrs, male children slain by Herod. Matthew, 2, recounts that Herod, angered because he had been deluded by the wise men, ordered the massacre of all male children of two years or under in Bethlehem. The Greek Liturgy numbers the martyrs at 14,000; the Syrians made it 64,000; medieval records 144,000; and modern authors have reduced the number considerably, some even so low as 15. The year of their death is unknown; however, it is generally accepted that the slaughter occurred about two years after the apparition of the star to the wise men. Patrons of choir boys. Relics partly in St. Paul’s Outside-the-Walls and in St. Mary Major, Rome. The feast of the Holy Innocents commemorated in the Roman Calendar, 28 Dec., is of ancient origin; the first extant mention of it is in the Leontine Sacramentary, c. 485. Mass is celebrated in purple and the Gloria and Alleluia are omitted. In England it was known as Childermas and, as in some other European countries, on this day a boy-bishop, consecrated on the feast of St. Nicholas, 6 Dec., officiated at cathedral services.—C.E.

Holy League. Discontent following the Peace of Beaulieu (1576) by which the Protestants gained important concessions from Henry III led to the formation of the Holy League, an alliance of nobles, clergy, and people under Henry of Guise in 1576 to defend the Catholic religion in France and to restore the ancient rights and liberties. Supported by Catherine de‘ Medici, Philip of Spain, Pope Gregory XIII, and led by King Henry III, it was finally disbanded in 1593 after the conversion of Henry IV.—C.E., IX, 98.

Holy Name, Feast of the, Sunday between 1 and 6 Jan., if one occurs, otherwise on 2 Jan.; instituted in the 15th century by the bishops of Germany, Scotland, England, and Belgium; extended to the universal Church in 1721. There is a commemoration in the Mass of the Octave of St. Stephen if the feast is kept on the second, of St. John on the third, and of the Holy Innocents on the fourth of January.—C.E.

Holy Name Journal, The, official publication of the Holy Name Society in America, published monthly in New York City by the Dominican Fathers; founded 1907; circulation, 15,500.

Holy Office, Congregation of the. It was founded by Paul III in 1542. The pope is prefect with a cardinal as secretary. Besides officials common to every congregation it has an assessor who acts as secretary, a commissary, a Dominican, who conducts the trials, his two companions who are also Dominicans, a prosecuting attorney and one for the defense. Besides consultors there are also qualified theologians who advise the cardinals on the degree of truth or error in the theses and books submitted to the congregation. This congregation defends Catholic teaching of faith and morals. Its decrees are not infallible, even when specifically approved by the pope, but they call for a true assent. It censors and condemns books judged dangerous to faith or morals, and can grant permission to read such books. It can dispense priests from the fast required before celebrating Mass. It has exclusive jurisdiction over questions about the Pauline Privilege and the impediments of disparity of worship and mixed religion. As a tribunal it judges all cases of mixed marriages carried to the Roman Curia. It also judges heresy and all offenses leading to a suspicion of heresy. Its members are bound to the strictest secrecy, called the secret of the Holy Office.—C.E., XI, 170; c.d., 116.

Holy of Holies, the innermost room of the Tabernacle and of the Temple of Jerusalem. The expression is a Hebrew idiom meaning “the most holy” thing or place. In the Tabernacle this inner room measured 10 x 10 cubits (about 15 x 15 ft.) and was separated from the outer room, or holy place, by means of a veil, or porishre, of rich woven fabric, hanging from four pillars overlaid with gold and standing on sockets of silver. In Solomon’s, Zorohabel’s, and Herod’s temples, the holy of holies was 20 cubits square and 20 high. No windows admitted light into it; it was entered into, at least in the first temple, by a double folding door of olive wood with cherubim carved upon it. Whether that door remained closed or open, a veil (2 Par., 3) maintained the separation of the two places. In the middle of the holy of holies of Solomon’s temple stood the Ark of the Covenant, overshadowed by the Holy of Holies, the Day of Atonement, to offer incense and the blood of the bullock and of the goat destined to atone for himself, his house, and the people. (c. l. s.)

Holy Oils, a sacramental blessed by a bishop. There are three kinds: oil of catechumens, holy chrism, and oil of the sick. The first and third are pure olive oil; the chrism contains an admixture of balm or balsam. Each of them and their uses are described under their own titles. The use of oil for the anointing of sacraments undoubtedly goes back to the beginning of the Church (James, 5).

Holy Place, in both the Tabernacle and the Temple, the outer or easternmost room. This room in the Tabernacle measured 20 × 10 cubits (about 30 × 15 ft); very nearly the same size, but smaller, was the Holy Place in the first Temple a double folding door of cypress wood with doorposts of olive wood closed the holy place from the porch. A veil probably covered this door in Herod's temple. A veil of the season of Lent and penance and the beginning of Holy Saturday, eve of Easter Sunday, closing of the season of Lent and penance and the beginning of paschal time. In the early Church no Mass was said, services starting about three o'clock in the afternoon and ending with the Mass of the Resurrection on Easter morning, but the services have been gradually anticipated so that the Mass now is celebrated in various ways at different times, and but seldom agreed to by both; even the territorial extent of the Empire was always vague, though it may be stated roughly as comprising: all the German-speaking lands in Europe; certain territories to the west of these; and a shadowy claim, never substantiated, to the whole of Italy, though at one period the emperors had a firm hold on Sicily and resided there. Its history is inextricably bound up with that of the Papacy and of Germany; its throne, at first nominative, came to be elective, the electors being seven princes of the Empire, of whom three were the Archbishops of Mainz, Cologne, and Trier; it was abolished by Napoleon in 1806, many centuries after it had lost all vestiges of real political importance.—Hayes and Moon, Ancient and Medieval History, N. Y., 1929.

Holy Rood, name applied to the True Cross or any representation of it.

Holyrood Abbey, Edinburgh, Scotland, founded, 1128, by King David I, for the Canons Regular of St. Augustine. It possessed a fragment of the True Cross which disappeared at the Reformation. The abbey suffered from attacks by Edward II, in 1322, and Richard II, in 1385, but was restored. In 1670 Charles II rebuilt the adjoining palace of Holyrood. The ruined and roofless nave, of purest early English architecture, is all that remains.—C.E.

Holy Rosary, Feast of the, 7 Oct., commemorating the remarkable response to the prayers of the rosary of the Blessed Virgin, notably the preservation of Europe from the Turks by the victory of Lepanto, 1571, after which St. Pius V ordered a commemoration of the rosary on that day. Gregory XIII allowed the observance of the feast of the Holy Rosary on the first Sunday in October in all churches having chapels or altars dedicated to the Blessed Virgin under that title. Clement X granted it to all Spain, and Clement XI extended it to the universal Church after the victory of Prince Eugene over the Turks at Peterwardein, Hungary, in 1716. Leo XIII inserted the invocation "Queen of the Most Holy Rosary" into the Litany of Loreto. On this feast in every church which has a rosary confraternity, a plenary indulgence is granted on certain conditions to those who visit the rosary chapel or a statue of Our Lady.—C.E., XIII, 189.

Holy Saturday, eve of Easter Sunday, closing of the season of Lent and penance and the beginning of paschal time. In the early Church no Mass was said, services starting about three o'clock in the afternoon and ending with the Mass of the Resurrection on Easter morning, but the services have been gradually anticipated so that the Mass now is celebrated on Saturday morning is by origin the first Mass of Easter Sunday, and Lent is over at noon. The present ceremonies consist of the blessing of the new fire, the lighting of lamps and candles and the paschal candle, the recitation of the 12... prophecies, the blessing of the baptismal font or water, and the recitation of the Litany of the Saints. After this the altar is decked with lights and flowers and the Mass is celebrated in white, as a symbol of joy. It contains no Offertory, and the Communion and Postcommunion are replaced with Vespers. At the Gloria the bells, which have been silent since Maundy Thursday, are rung.—C.E.; Géranger, tr. Shepherd, The Liturgical Year: Passiontide and Holy Week, Lond., 1886.

Holy See, a synonym of Apostolic See, designating Rome, the official seat of the Pope, as well as the power of the Pope personally or that of the various Roman congregations, Tribunals, and Offices.—C.E.

Holy Sepulcher, the tomb outside the walls of Jerusalem, in which the Body of Our Lord was laid after His death on the Cross. It was a new monument, belonging to Joseph of Arimathea, hewn out of a rock, and closed by a great stone (Matt., 27). It was situated in a garden in the place of the Crucifixion (John, 19) outside the city (Heb., 13), because the Jews did not permit burial inside the city except for their kings. No further mention of the place of the Holy Sepulcher is made until the 4th century, but scholars maintain that knowledge of it was handed down by oral tradition, and it was investigated by the Emperor Constantine, 326, who erected a basilica over the tomb of Jesus, in place of which now stands the church of the Holy Sepulcher.—C.E.

Holy Sepulcher, Knights of the, a papal order of knighthood. The founder of it is uncertain and the credit has been variously attributed to the Empress St. Helena, Charlemagne, Godfrey de Bouillon, and Baldwin I. According to some authorities it was a branch of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem. It was approved in 1113 by Pope Paschal II but with the downfall of the Latin Kingdom of Jerusalem was expelled from there, whence members came to Perugia. Pope Innocent III united it to the Knights Hospitalers in 1489, but it was restored to its former status as an independent order by Alexander VI, who conferred the honor upon those who visited the Holy Land and aided holy places. He authorized the Franciscan custodian of Mount Sion, the Commissary Apostolic of the Holy See, to confer the honor virtue of papal authority; but on the restoration of the Latin Patriarchate of Jerusalem in 1847 patriarchs alone were empowered to create Knights of the Holy Sepulcher in the name of the pope. There are three classes in the order: Grand Cross Knights, who wear the grand cross suspended from the ribbon worn saltire-wise from the right shoulder to the left side, and a badge on the breast; Commanders, who wear the cross and ribbon fastened at the neck; and Knights, who wear the badge on the left breast. The decoration, which is suspended from a black ribbon, consists of a gibbet-shaped cross with four small red enamelled crosses attached. The badge is an eight-pointed silver star, in the center of which is a red cross surrounded by a green oak and laurel branch. The rarely worn collar is made of small golden Jerusalem crosses and rings. The official uniform is a white evening dress coat trimmed with black velvet, gold embroidery, and gold epaulet, white trousers with gold side stripes, sword, plumed hat, and a white woolen mantle with a red Jerusalem cross on the left breast. The decoration may be conferred on women, who are then known as Dames or Matrons of the Holy Sepulcher, and wear the insignia on the left side of the breast.—C.E.

Holy Souls, the souls of the departed dying in the grace of God, but still, for certain faults, in purgatory. They are the object of prayers for their release, and also of prayers for their intercession on our behalf, especially on All Souls' Day (q.v.) and during the entire month of November. (q.v.)

Holy Synod, or Most Holy Directing Synod, name of the council by which the Churches of Russia and Greece, and other Orthodox churches are governed. In 1721 Peter the Great abolished the patriarchate at Moscow and established a Most Holy Directing Synod, absolutely dependent on the state, whose members were ecclesiastical and lay persons all appointed by the czar, having jurisdiction over all ecclesiastical matters. This council, which was adopted by the Greek Church in 1833, is considered a more democratic system of government, though unerringly in harmony with the strict monarchy of the Church Fathers, than the autocratic rule of the patriarchate of Russia.

Holy Thursday, See Maundy Thursday.

Holy Water, a sacramental blessed by a priest to invoke God's blessing on those who use it. There are four kinds: ordinary holy water, blessed by the priest for the sprinkling of the people before Mass (see Aspersores), for use at the door of the church, and for the blessing of persons and things in the church and at home, sometimes used with salt, as a symbol of wisdom and of preservation from corruption; Baptismal water, in which the oil of catechumens and the holy chrism are mingled, used only in the administration of Baptism; water of consecration, or Gregorian water, and Easter water (q.v.). As used in nearly all the blessings of the Church's ritual, it is usually contained in a bowl-shaped vessel having a swinging handle and provided with a sprinkler. At the church door it is kept in a fixed vessel called a font, so that the people may use it conveniently when entering or leaving. There is an indulgence of 100 days for using it. Water is the natural element for cleansing; and symbolically it denotes interior purification. It has been used in many religions. The laws of Moses enjoined the sprinkling of the people, the sacrifices, etc. In the Christian Church its use goes back probably to the 2nd century. Holy water is usually blessed just before the principal Mass on Sunday, but may be blessed at any other time. The priest reads several prayers, including an exorcism (q.v.) of the salt and the water, and puts the salt into the water in the form of a threefold cross, in the name of the three Persons of the Blessed Trinity. He then asks God's blessing on it.—C.E.; Sullivan, Externals of the Catholic Church, N. Y., 1918. (J. P. S.)
Holy Water Fonts (Lat., fons, fountain), vessels for holding holy water. They are sometimes imbedded in the walls, and sometimes rest on a pedestal. The shell-shaped font which has persisted was introduced in the 17th century. The most ancient portable fonts for use in aspersions were pails of lead or bronze covered with silver. The present form of the aspersorium was introduced in the 13th century. Private fonts are usually in the shape of a very small basin attached to the wall by means of a plate.—C.E.

Holy Water Vessel, emblem in art associated with Sts. Margaret and Martha; it is commemorative of their having overcome dragons. St. Martha is often represented with a holy-water pot.

Holy Week, week preceding Easter. The commemoration of Christ's sufferings determines many of its functions: the reading of the Passion on Palm Sunday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday, respectively according to Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John; the stripping of the altars on Thursday; the unveiling and adoration of the Cross on Good Friday; Tenebrae on the last three days. The termination of the catechumenate with Baptism on Saturday determined other functions: the blessing of the Holy Oils on Thursday; the prophecies and blessing of the baptismal font on Saturday. The function of Holy Saturday originally took place during the following night. In great part the ceremonies of Holy Week originated in Jerusalem.—C.E.; Guéranger, tr. Shepherd, The Liturgical Year: Passiontide and Holy Week, Lon., 1886.

Holywell, market town of Flintshire, North Wales, taking its name from the miraculous well of St. Winefred. According to legend, a stream burst from the ground on the spot where St. Winefred was slain by Caradoc, c. 634, and has flowed ever since. The 14th-century Gothic chapel, which encloses it, is now used for Welsh services of the Anglican church and the well itself which sends up 21 tons of water a minute has been leased by the Jesuits of the mission. For more than a thousand years, the town has been a place of pilgrimage and there have been numerous cures. The parish church is built over the remains of Basingwerk Abbey, used as a monastery before 1119. The Catholic buildings are the church of St. Winifred, a convent, and a hospice for poorer pilgrims.—C.E.

Holywood, John (Joannes de Sacrobosco; d. 1256), a monk of English origin, professor of astronomy at Paris. He wrote the "De sphera," an astronomical text-book which had an immense vogue in the 13th century and was published in almost a hundred editions before the adoption of the new Copernican theory (17th century).

Holy Writ (A.S., hailig, holy; O.E., written, to write) one of the titles of the Bible; the more English equivalent of the expression Sacred Scripture.

(H. A. C.)

Homes, a common name for asylums for the helpless and needy. Thus, homes for the aged, the destitute, or wayward children are familiar examples of charitable effort. This name emphasizes a quality which is necessary, but too often absent from such institutions, i.e., that the refuge offered those who have not a normal family life, should, as far as possible, approximate a real home. Mere food, shelter, and clothing must of course be provided, but beyond this every effort should be made to secure peace and content of spirit, the conscious presence of a mutual sympathy based on human kindness, if not religious charity, and the entire absence of any feeling of inferiority or degradation. A charity which deliberately falls short of this is almost not charity at all, for it is of the essence of the virtue to do all the good that one well can. According to a report of the U. S. Department of Labor, 1929, there are 475 homes for the aged and infirm operated in the United States by religious organizations; of these 156 are conducted under Catholic auspices. E. E. Henderson, Modern Methods of Charity, N. Y., 1904.

Homicide (Lat., homo, man; cedere, to kill), destroying a human life, taking the life of another unjustly. Its malice consists in interfering with God's right over life as its author and owner, and with the God-given right of man to life.—C.E.; Rickaby, Ethics and Natural Law, Lond., 1908.

Homiletic and Pastoral Review, The, a monthly magazine published in New York City by Jos. F. Wagner, Inc., under the editorship of Chas. J. Callan, O.P., and J. A. McHugh, O.P., for the Catholic clergy; founded 1900; circulation 8,000.

Homiletics, the science or study of composing and preaching sermons, so called from homily, the name applied to familiar explanations of the Gospel.

Homiliarium (Gr., homilos, gathering), a collection of homilies or familiar explanations of the Gospels. Read in early times after the recitation of the Divine Office, in the 8th century, numerous collections were compiled from the homilies of the Fathers, Gregory the Great and others, for the purpose of preaching. The most famous of these is the "Homiliarium" of Paul the Deacon, made by order of Charlemagne.—C.E.

Homily, name applied, since the time of Origen (c. 185-253), to a didactic commentary, without formal introduction, division, or conclusion, on some part of Sacred Scripture, the aim being to explain the literal, and evolve the spiritual, meaning of the text. Among the famous homilists are Origen, Sts. Hilary, Ambrose, Chrysostom, Augustine, and Bernard of Clairvaux. The oldest homily extant is the so-called Second Epistle of Clement to the Corinthians. At present there are four methods of treating the homily: (1) to treat separately each sentence of the Gospel; (2) to focus the entire content of the Gospel in a single idea; (3) to select some virtue or vice arising out of the Gospel, and to treat it to the exclusion of all else; (4) to paraphrase and explain the entire Gospel, and then make an application of it.—C.E.
HOMINIS SUPERNE CONDITOR, or Maker of Man, who from Thy throne, hymn for Vespers on Friday; written probably by Pope St. Gregory the Great (540-604). There are 16 translations. The English title given is by J. Chambers, as changed in the "English Hymnal."—Britt.

Homoeousion (Gr., of the same substance) and Homoousion (Gr., like in substance), two words used attributively of Christ; the former by the Council of Nicaea (325) which declared that Christ was consubstantial and, consequently, coeternal and coequal with the Father, in order to offset the use of the latter by a sect of the Arians which maintained that Christ, although He was not a creature, was not of one and the same substance as the Father, that He had a beginning and was only like unto the Father.—C.E. (R. G. B.)

Honduras, independent republic of Central America; area, 44,375 sq. m.; pop., 775,408. It was discovered in 1502 by Columbus on his fourth voyage, and the first settlement was made in 1524 by Cristobal de Olid, lieutenant of Cortes. The first missionaries were Franciscans who entered the country with Cortes, c. 1525, but their records were destroyed by the insurrections of the 19th century during which much church property was confiscated. The Diocese of Honduras was erected by Clement VII in 1527, with residence at Trujillo in 1540, Comayagua in 1561, and Tegucigalpa in 1907. The Church grew rapidly, but in the 17th century English pirates scattered the missionaries. Honduras threw off Spanish rule in 1821 and in 1839 became independent as an independent republic. Catholicity is the prevailing religion, but freedom of worship is granted to all, and no denomination receives support from the state. It is divided for ecclesiastical administration into the Archdiocese of Tegucigalpa (Catholics, 358,759) and its two suffragans, the Diocese of Santa Rosa de Copan (Catholics, 198,453) and the Vicariate Apostolic of San Pedro Sula (Catholics, 51,558), all founded in 1916.

Hong Kong, crown colony of the British Empire, at the mouth of the Canton River, China, administered by a governor assisted by an executive and a legislative council; area, 291 sq. m.; pop., 625,166. The religious history of Hong Kong is indissolubly connected with that of China. Ecclesiastically the colony belongs to the Vicariate Apostolic of Hong Kong, established 1874, and entrusted to the Seminary of Foreign Missions of Milan. Vicars Apostolic: Giovanni Raimondi (d. 1894), Luigi Piazzoli (1895-1905), Domenico Pozzoni (1905-24), a Henri Valtorta (1927). Churches, 54; chapels, 151; priests, 43; seminaries, 2; schools, 84; Catholics, 30,639.

Honor, the deferential recognition by an external sign of another's position or authority, the sensible expression of another's worth; reputation, virtue or dignity; veneration paid to God by worship, or to the saints by prayer asking their intercession.—C.E., VII, 462. (C. J. D.)

Honoratus, Saint, confessor (350-429), Abp. of Arles; b. probably Toul; d. Mondon, Greece. He was born of pagan parents in northern Gaul, and after his conversion to Christianity, embarked, c. 388, to visit Palestine and Egypt. Returning to Gaul through Italy, he founded the celebrated monastery of Lérins, near Cannes, and was appointed Abp. of Lérins. Relics at Lérins. Feast, 16 Jan.—C.E.; Butler.

Honorius I, Pope (625-638), b. in the Campagna, Italy; d. Rome. As pope he did much for the embellishment of ecclesiastical Rome, arranged for the conversion of the West Saxons, bestowed the pallium on St. Paulinus of York and Honorius of Canterbury, and urged the Irish to adopt the Roman system of reckoning Easter. He died with an untarnished reputation but notoriety has come to him from the fact that he was condemned as a heretic by the Sixth General Council, 680, which based its condemnation on a letter of his to Sergius, Patriarch of Constantinople. The latter wrote for advice on an expression relating to the Incarnate Word which was being used to refute the Monophysite heresy, and which he considered not in accord with Catholic doctrine. The papal answer, which was undogmatic, smoothed over the error and gave no decision, but since Honorius neither defined nor condemned anything and did not speak ex cathedra the papal infallibility was not involved. However, the idea prevails that Honorius may have been wrong in fact but not in intention.—C.E.; Mann.

Honorius II, antipope. See Cimabue, Pietro.

Honorius III (Cencio Savelli), Pope (1216-27), b. Rome; d. there. He was papal chamberlain and cardinals' council, 291 sq. m.; pop., 625,166. The religious history of Hong Kong is indissolubly connected with that of China. Ecclesiastically the colony belongs to the Vicariate Apostolic of Hong Kong, established 1874, and entrusted to the Seminary of Foreign Missions of Milan. Vicars Apostolic: Giovanni Raimondi (d. 1894), Luigi Piazzoli (1895-1905), Domenico Pozzoni (1905-24), a Henri Valtorta (1927). Churches, 54; chapels, 151; priests, 43; seminaries, 2; schools, 84; Catholics, 30,639.

Honorius III, Pope (1216-1227), b. Rome; d. there. He was papal chamberlain and cardinal-priest. As Card. of Ostia he accompanied Pope Honorius II in 1219 to an unsuccessful effort to suppress the Albigenses, aided in the conversion of the West Saxons, bestowed the pallium on St. Paulinus of York and Honorius of Canterbury, and urged the Irish to adopt the Roman system of reckoning Easter. He died with an untarnished reputation but notoriety has come to him from the fact that he was condemned as a heretic by the Sixth General Council, 680, which based its condemnation on a letter of his to Sergius, Patriarch of Constantinople. The latter wrote for advice on an expression relating to the Incarnate Word which was being used to refute the Monophysite heresy, and which he considered not in accord with Catholic doctrine. The papal answer, which was undogmatic, smoothed over the error and gave no decision, but since Honorius neither defined nor condemned anything and did not speak ex cathedra the papal infallibility was not involved. However, the idea prevails that Honorius may have been wrong in fact but not in intention.—C.E.; Mann.

Honorius II (Lamberto Scannarelli), Pope (1124-1130), b. Fagnano, Italy; d. Rome. He was Archdeacon of Bologna, canon of the Lateran, and cardinal-priest. As Card. of Ostia he accompanied Pope Honorius II in 1219 to an unsuccessful effort to suppress the Albigenses, aided in the conversion of the West Saxons, bestowed the pallium on St. Paulinus of York and Honorius of Canterbury, and urged the Irish to adopt the Roman system of reckoning Easter. He died with an untarnished reputation but notoriety has come to him from the fact that he was condemned as a heretic by the Sixth General Council, 680, which based its condemnation on a letter of his to Sergius, Patriarch of Constantinople. The latter wrote for advice on an expression relating to the Incarnate Word which was being used to refute the Monophysite heresy, and which he considered not in accord with Catholic doctrine. The papal answer, which was undogmatic, smoothed over the error and gave no decision, but since Honorius neither defined nor condemned anything and did not speak ex cathedra the papal infallibility was not involved. However, the idea prevails that Honorius may have been wrong in fact but not in intention.—C.E.; Mann.

Honorius II, antipope. See Cimabue, Pietro.
III, Gregory VII, and made the Fifth Collection of Decretals.—C. E.; Mann.

Honorius IV (GIACOMO SAVELLI), Pope (1285-87), b. Rome, c. 1210; d. there. Cardinal-deacon, and papal prefect in Tuscany, he did not receive ordination until six weeks after his election. Sicilian affairs demanded his immediate attention. While not renouncing the claims of the Church and the Angevins over Sicily, he did not approve of Charles of Anjou’s tyrannical government which resulted in the massacre known as the Sicilian Vespers. In his Constitution, 1295, he laid down ordinances to protect the Sicilians. He supported the French in their struggle against Aragon and refused to allow Charles of Salerno to surrender his Sicilian claims to the Aragonese. In order to prepare missionaries he advocated the teaching of Oriental languages in the University of Paris, and aided the mendicant orders.—C. E.

Honorius, Saint, confessor (d. 653), Abp. of Canterbury. He was probably a Benedictine and came to England with St. Augustine in 596 or 601. To his inspiration the conversion of the East Angles by St. Felix is due. Relics in St. Peter and Paul’s church, Canterbury. Feast, 30 Sept.—C. E.; Butler.

Hood, a flexible, conical, brimless, head-dress, enveloping the entire head except the face, and worn either as a separate garment or as part of a cloak. Under the Roman Empire it was separate but both styles were used during the Middle Ages. It was the customary head-dress of monks and mendicant friars, and constituted part of the religious habit. The hood of the 13th and 14th centuries, called hirhippium, usually formed a long peak, extending down the back, and frequently served as a neckcloth. It has been retained by the old Orders ever since the adoption of hats by both clerics and laymen.—C. E.

Hope, one of the three theological virtues infused into the soul together with sanctifying grace and having God as its primary object. It makes us desire eternal life or the possession of God and gives us the confidence of receiving the grace necessary to arrive at this possession. The grounds of our hope are: the omnipotence of God, or the fact that He can give us eternal life and the means to attain it; His goodness, or the fact that He wills to give us eternal life and the means to attain it; and His fidelity to His promises, or the fact that He has pledged Himself to give us eternal life and the means thereto. Since the virtue of hope is based on God’s power, goodness, and fidelity to His promises, it must be sure and unshakable in the sense that God will certainly offer us the means necessary for the attainment of eternal life and that if we employ our free-will to cooperate with the grace of God we shall certainly be saved. Hence, we alone can make hope void by our wilful refusal to work with the proffered grace of God. Hope is necessary to salvation. The virtue of hope infused into the soul at Baptism is sufficient for those who have not attained the use of reason; in all others an act of hope is required, such at least as is included in living a Christian life. The sins against hope are: despair or wilful difference about obtaining heaven and the means necessary thereto, since this implies mistrust of God’s power or goodness or fidelity to His promises; and presumption or the unreasonable confidence of obtaining eternal salvation without taking the necessary means.—C. E.; Slater, Manual of Moral Theology, N. Y., 1908. (L. A. A.)

Hope-Scott, James Roderick (1812-73), barrister, benefactor, b. Great Marlow, England; d. London. Grandson of the second Earl of Hopetoun, he was educated at Eton and Christ Church, Oxford, and was a fellow of Merton College. He was called to the bar at the Inner Temple, 1838, chancellor of the Diocese of Salisbury, 1840-45, D.C.L., Oxford, 1843, and Q.C. with right of precedence, 1849. He specialized in parliamentary practise, and as counsel for nearly every railroad in the kingdom, his success and emoluments were phenomenal. With Newman he was one of the foremost spirits in the Tractarian Movement at Oxford, and after the Gorham Judgment (q.v.), with his friend the future Card, Manning, became a Catholic (1851). He was Newman’s counsel in the libel case Achilli vs. Newman. His first wife, who followed him into the Church, was Charlotte Lockhart, granddaughter of Sir Walter Scott. At her death he became the owner of Abbotsford, under the same name Scott. He was a generous benefactor of Catholic institutions, and notable for his abounding but unostentatious charity. His funeral sermon was preached by Card. Newman, and he was buried in St. Margaret’s Convent, Edinburgh, of which he was the chief benefactor.

Hora novissima, tempora pessima sunt; vigillemus, or The World is Very Evil, hymn not found in the Breviary. Written about 1140 by Bernard of Morlaix, it was translated by J. Neale.—Britt.

Horeb, Mount. See Sinai, Mount.

Hormisdas, Saint, Pope (314-25), b. Frusino, Italy; d. Rome. As pope he opened his pontificate with his friend the future Card. Newman, and he was buried in St. Margaret’s Convent, Edinburgh, of which he was the chief benefactor.

Horn, emblem in art associated with St. Hubert and St. Eustachius, symbolic of the former as huntsman and of the latter as huntsman and soldier.

Horn (in the Bible), a symbol of strength because of its use as a weapon by horned beasts (Deut., 33; Ps. 74; 131). It is frequently mentioned to signify power and glory: “in my name shall his horn be exalted” (Ps. 88); “his horn shall be exalted in glory” (Ps. 111); “my horn is exalted in my God” (1 Kings, 2); “the horn of Moeb is cut off, and his arm is broken, saith the Lord” (Jer., 48). The horn was used as a vase among the Hebrews and other nations, and held the oil used for anointing: “The Lord said to Samuel . . . fill thy horn with oil, and come, that I may send thee to Isai... Then Samuel took the horn of oil, and anointed him" (1 Kings, 16). The projecting points on the altar of the holocaust were called horns (Ex., 30), and were smeared with the blood of the sacrificial victim (Ex., 27; Lev., 4). Criminals were free from danger as long as they took hold of these horns (3 Kings, 1; 2).
HORN

Hosanna (Heb., hoshi'a na, save me), exclamation of joy. Its origin is traced to the 117th Psalm, which was recited daily by a priest in the procession around the altar during the Feast of Tabernacles, when the people were commanded to rejoice before the Lord (Lev., 23), and on the seventh day it was recited in each of the seven processions. When verses 25 and 26 were said, the trumpet sounded, and the people waved branches of palms and myrtle and shouted the words with the priest. Hoshi'a na was repeated so often that it became abbreviated into hosanna; the feast being an occasion for rejoicing, hosanna and palm-branches became associated with joy. In the Mass it is said twice during the Sanctus at the end of the Preface, and is sung at High Mass by the choir; also during the distribution of palms and the solemn procession on Palm Sunday, in imitation of the reception Our Lord received on entering Jerusalem before His seizure and Passion.—C.E.

Hosius, Stanzilinus (1504-79), cardinal, theologian, b. Krakow, Poland; d. Capranica, near Rome. After studying at Krakow, Padua, and Bologna, he became secretary of the Polish chancery, and in 1543 received the priesthood. He negotiated the alliance between Poland, Bohemia, and the Empire, 1550, and soon was raised to the See of Culm. At once devoted himself to the extirpation of heresy, a policy he continued successfully after his translation to the Prince-Bishopric of Ermland, 1557. Mainly through his efforts was Poland saved to the faith. His Confessio fidei, an elaborate exposition of Catholic doctrine, written in elegant Latin, is one of the masterpieces of the Reformation period. In 1518 he was called to Rome to aid the Curia; he arranged for the reopening of the Council of Trent and converted Prince Maximilian of Bohemia from heresy. He supported energetically the reform work of St. Pius V and Gregory XIII, and died highly esteemed for his sanctity.—C.E.

Hospice (Fr., a refuge), an asylum; especially an institution providing shelter to travelers. Such assistance was commonly rendered by all monasteries; but in places where travelers were common, and the difficulties and dangers of the road brought many into need, the work of aiding and sheltering the needy became a special work. Perhaps the most famous example, enduring to our day, is the Hospice of Saint Bernard, conducted by Augustinian monks, upon the passes of Saint Bernard across the Alps.—C.E.

Hospital (Lat., hospes, guest), an institution for the care of the sick. Today they are highly specialized centers, not merely for nursing of patients, but for all sorts of preventive medical care of individuals and of society. Disease is no longer viewed as an individual affliction, but as a menace to the community, and as a cause of economic loss and waste. Hence the extended service given by hospitals, in outpatient departments, dispensaries and clinics for the poor, and medical social service. For this reason also, in theory and practice, the state is assuming the responsibility, to an ever larger degree, for the prevention and cure of disease. Hospitals are intimately connected with the history of Christian charity. The first public hospital was founded in the 4th century by the pious Roman lady, Fabiola. Others were founded about the same time by St. Pammachius and St. Basil. The latter insti­

HOSPITALLERS

A STRONGHOLD OF THE HOSPITALLERS OF ST. JOHN

Fabiola. Others were founded about the same time by St. Pammachius and St. Basil. The latter insti­

HOSPITALS are intimost famous hospital during the Middle Ages was the Hôtel-Dieu of Paris. Certain communities of women formed during the Middle Ages to aid the military orders in the care of the sick were also known as hospitals.—C.E.

Hospitalers of St. John of Jerusalem, military order founded by one Gerald (Gerard), probably c. 1113, to care for the poor and strangers in the Holy Land; known as Knights of Rhodes, 1309-1522; Knights of Malta since 1530. Infirmary were established under Raymond of Provence (1120-60); their military character grew out of the armed escorts provided to pilgrims.
The fall of Jerusalem, 1187, and Acre, 1291, greatly depleted their possessions and they took refuge in the Island of Rhodes until vanquished by Solymur 11, 1522, when they were offered Malta. Grave abuses crept in and the religious vows were frequently ignored.
Protestantism caused their suppression in many countries, and from 1805 they were without a grand master, until Leo XIII filled the office, 1879. Admission now rests upon strict conditions. There are four great priories in Boheia and Italy.—C.E.

Hospital Sisters of the Mercy of Jesus, a congregation of the Order of St. Augustine, traditionally dating from the first community of women founded by St. Augustine at Hippo, 423. The sisters appeared in the 12th century as Hermit Sisters at the Hôtel-Dieu of Dieppe, France. While leading a contemplative life, they are dedicated by special vow to the care of the sick. The congregation has 35 houses, including hospitals, in France, England, Canada, and Africa. Each monastery is independent and has its own novitiate. The total number of religious is 1226.—C.E.

Host. See SACRED HOST.

Host, emblem in art associated with St. Yves, typifying his youth­ful devotion; St. Barbara, symbolizing her promise that those devoted to her shall not die without the Sacraments; St. Clare of Assisi, who by holding a mones­trance before the advancing Saracens miraculously dispersed them. Sts. Barbara and Clare are the only female saints bearing this attribute.

Host (Lat., hostia, hostage, victim), title of Our Lord as Victim for our sins, familiar in the hymn sung at Benediction of the Most Holy Sacrament, "O Salutaris Hostia," and used in the Mass at the oblation and immediately after the Consecration.

Hôtel-Dieu (Fr., House of God), name ap­plied in general to a large hospital. Specifically, it refers to the hospitals established throughout the West during the Middle Ages by religious who usually followed the Rule of St. Augustine. Among the most famous Hôtels-Dieu of the present are those at Paris, Quebec, and Montreal.

Hound of Heaven, title of Francis Thompson's poem, or allegory, of the pursuit of the wayward soul by the Infinite Love of God.—Méroz, Francis Thompson, Lond., 1927; Le Buffe, Thompson's
Hound of Heaven, N. Y., 1922.

Hours, Canonical, the fixed portion of Divine Office appointed by the Church to be recited at different hours by clerics in Holy Orders, benefiaries, and religious bound to the Office of Choir.—C.E.

Hours, Scriptural. In both Greek and Roman times the idea of an hour as the twenty-fourth part of a day, appears occasionally in scientific works but never in popular literature, or common life. In the time of Our Lord there were only three divisions of time which the people were used to note, the third, sixth, and ninth hours; the sixth being midday, was better marked than the others; the third was the modern 9 A.M., the sixth, noon; and the ninth, at about three. These three divisions were used vaguely by most people without any accurate estimate of the duration of an hour.

House of Gold, a symbolic title given the Blessed Virgin in the Litany of Loreto denoting her personal perfection and her office of Divine motherhood. She was the house wherein God dwelt, and for His sake, a house of gold, that is, adorned with the most precious virtues. (N. M. W.)

House of Prayer, a church, the house of God, as Our Lord designated the Temple of Jerusalem:
"My house is the house of prayer" (Luke, 19). (Ed.)

Hubert, Saint, confessor
(c. 656-728), apostle of the Ardennes, and first Bp. of Liége, d. Ter­ vueren, Brabant. Son of Bertrand, Duke of Aquitaine, he was educated at the Neustrian court, and married the daughter of Dagobert, Count of Louvain. While hunting one Good Friday he was converted from his worldly life on beholding a miraculous crucifix between the antlers of a stag. Placing himself under the direction of St. Lambert, Bp. of Maastricht, after the death of his wife, he distributed his wealth to the poor and became a priest.
Succeeding St. Lambert he transferred his see to Liége and spent his life in extinguishing idolatry. He was widely venerated in the Middle Ages and many military orders were named after him.
Patron of hunters, and healer of hydrophobia. Relics elevated at Liége, transferred to Amandin monastery, dispersed by the Huguenots, 1568. Feast, 3 Nov.—C.E.; Butler.

Huc, Évariste Régis (1813-69), Vincentian missionary and traveler, b. Olym, France; d. Paris.
He went to China in 1839, and five years later was sent to explore Tartary and Mongolia. With a companion, Joseph Gabet, he visited the nomadic tribes of those regions and on encountering a Tibetan embassy accompanied it to Lhasa, where he was well received. Owing to the enmity of the Chinese commissioner, however, he was expelled and sent to Canton. Returning to France, Huc joined the secular clergy, after publishing an account of his voyage that enjoyed extraordinary popularity.—C.E.

Hugh Faringdon (or Cook), Blessed, martyr (1559), b. Faringdon, Berkshire, England; d. Reading. Although he was usually called Faringdon, he bore the arms of Cook of Kent. Elected Abbot of Reading, 1520, he enjoyed the special favor and friendship of Henry VIII. He served as a royal chaplain, sat in Parliament, and sang the requiem and dirge for Queen Jane Seymour. Refusing to surrender his abbey, he was accused of treason and put to death with the priests, John Rugg and John Eynon. Beatified, 1895.—C.E.

Huguet, Saint, martyr (c. 1246-55), called Little St. Hugh of Lincoln, supposed to have been tortured, crowned with thorns, and crucified by the Jews. His martyrdom was the subject of many popular medieval ballads. Miracles were said to have been wrought at St. Hugh's tomb. Whether there was any truth in the accusation against the Jews, there is now no means of ascertaining. Relics found in a well, brought to the cathedral of Lincoln. Feast, 27 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Hugh of St. Victor (1096-1141), writer on philosophy, theology, and mysticism, b. probably in Saxony. He was the eldest son of Conrad, Count of Blankenburg. In 1133 he became head of the School of St. Victor, Paris, which under him acquired great celebrity. His writings cover the whole range of the arts and sacred science of his age. After synthesizing the dogmatic teachings of the Fathers, he systematized them into a coherent body of doctrine, influencing the whole development of Scholasticism, of which he is a founder. He was no less remarkable as leader of the great mystical movement of which St. Victor's was the center.—C.E.

Hugh of St. Victor (1096-1141), writer on philosophy, theology, and mysticism, b. probably in Saxony. He was the eldest son of Conrad, Count of Blankenburg. In 1133 he became head of the School of St. Victor, Paris, which under him acquired great celebrity. His writings cover the whole range of the arts and sacred science of his age. After synthesizing the dogmatic teachings of the Fathers, he systematized them into a coherent body of doctrine, influencing the whole development of Scholasticism, of which he is a founder. He was no less remarkable as leader of the great mystical movement of which St. Victor's was the center.—C.E.

Hugh of Lincoln, Saint, confessor (c. 1135-1200), Bp. of Lincoln, b. Avalon, Burgundy; d. London. He entered the Augustinian monastery at Villard-Brondel near Grenoble and, c. 1159, was made prior of St. Maximin near Avalon. About four years later he became a Carthusian, and in 1180 was sent as prior to Whitham, Somerset, England. He was consecrated Bp. of Lincoln, 1181, and at once began his reforming work. His episcopate was a model; conspicuous for his unbounded charity to the poor, he was also a protector of the Jews, and vigorously opposed the unjust taxation of Richard I. He built the Gothic cathedral of Lincoln. Sent as ambassador to France he concluded a treaty of peace between France and England. The Carthusians honor him only second to St. Bruno and the great modern Charterhouse at Parkminster, Sussex, is dedicated to him. Canonized, 1220. Relics at Lincoln. Feast, 17 Nov.—C.E.; Butler; Thurston, Life of St. Hugh of Lincoln, Lond., 1898.
and vigorously opposed the investiture abuses, the source of many of the Church's misfortunes. The improvement he effected in Cluny induced many cloisters to seek affiliation with his abbey, and these together with the monasteries he founded in Spain formed a powerful weapon in the hands of the popes in their struggle against imperial interference. Hugh's reforming efforts won the approbation of the popes from Leo IX to Paschal II, and especially of Gregory VII, with whom he temporarily reconciled Henry IV. Through his assistance the Mozarabe Liturgy was replaced by the Roman in Castile, whose sovereign, Ferdinand the Great, made his kingdom tributary to Cluny. He imparted the utmost solemnity and splendor to the liturgical services in his abbey and his ordinance regarding the singing of the Veni Creator at Terce on Pentecost has since become universal in the Church. His fostering of the trade guilds and emancipating the abbey's bondsmen and feudatories had an immense influence on the progress of civilization. Canonized 1129. Belies dispersed by the Huguenots, 1574. Feast, 29 April.—C.E.; Butler.

Huguenots (Ger., Eidgenossen, confederates, popularized under the influence of the name Hugues, from Besançon Hugues, a Protestant leader), term used in a popular sense after 1560 to designate the French Protestants of the 16th and 17th centuries. Their sect, which received its organization and form from Calvin, gained a foothold in France where the Faith had been weakened by the Western Schism, the growth of Gallicanism, the Pragmatic Sanction (1438), and the opposition to the Holy League of Pope Julius II. They provoked serious opposition, which abated, 1555, when Calvin championed their cause, only to break out again as a result of more stringent laws, 1546. They held a national synod, 1559, and gradually increased in strength under the leadership of d'Andelot, Admiral Coligny, and Henry of Navarre. The last-named secured for them the free exercise of their religion by the Edict of Nantes, 1598. Not content with liberty, they sought to become a political and even a military power, and were disloyal to France. Their power was crushed, 1628, when La Rochelle surrendered, and they lost their political and religious freedom when Louis XIV revoked the Edict, 1685. They fled to England, South Africa, America, and the Netherlands.—C.E.

Hujus oratu Deus alme nobis. See VIRGINIS PROELIS, OPFEXQUE MATRIS.

Human Figure, Winged, emblem in art associated with St. Matthew as typifying the human descent of Our Lord in His Incarnation.

Humanism (Lat., humanus, human), name given to the intellectual, literary, and scientific movement from the 14th to the 16th centuries, which aimed at having every branch of learning on the literature and culture of classical antiquity. It had both a pagan and a Christian aspect. On one side, it signified a pagan conception of life, as extolled by classical writers, which consisted in the full development of man, towards a better enjoyment of life and nature and in a consequent rejection of the supernatural and unworldly ideals of the Scholastics. In opposition to this spirit, the Christian humanists encouraged the free use of the treasures of antiquity without sacrificing Christian principles. The history of humanism begins with Dante (1265-1321), who, with true genius, combined classical materials with Christian ideals, and Petrarch (1304-74), who represents the pagan side of the movement. It extended through Italy, where it reached its height, receiving the support of the popes, notably Pius II, Sixtus IV, and Leo X, and the Medici. From Italy the movement spread throughout Europe; into Germany under Reuchlin (1455-1522) and Erasmus (1466-1536), who both exemplified its Christian spirit; into England where Sir Thomas More (1478-1535) was its chief exponent; into the French universities. The extreme humanistic spirit rebelled against theology and the Church, and the moral and religious views of pagan antiquity led many humanists to live dissolutely.—C.E.; Glenn, History of Philosophy, St. L., 1929.

Humanitarianism, False, an ethical system which places the welfare of the human race as the exclusive goal of human effort and the basic standard of conduct. It rejects, commonly, any consideration of God, of God's Will expressed in Revelation, and the immortality of the soul. In place of these external values, it considers the welfare of the continuing human race as the only abiding good, and hence the only rational object of will and endeavor. While this philosophy inculcates much good, it is fundamentally wrong in its view of God and man, and often teaches positive wrong, e.g., negative eugenics. The Christian duty of charity and justice includes all the best elements of this system, and avoids its errors. (E. F. MacK.)

Humanity of Christ. Jesus Christ as man was in every respect like unto us, except in sin and the consequences of sin. Christ could not have been mediator between God and men (1 Tim., 2) and the head of humanity, He could not have called Himself "Son of Man," unless He was a true and perfect man. A complete human nature implies, in the first place, a rational soul. Christ's soul differed from ours only in the marvelous perfections and graces with which it was enriched. His human intellect did not possess infinite knowledge which belonged only to His Divine intellect, but it possessed in the highest degree the beatific vision, infused knowledge, and acquired knowledge. By the first He saw the Divine essence from the first instant of the creation of His human nature; by the second, He knew like the angels by means of infused ideas, without sensible images and reasoning; and by the third He apprehended by means of His senses and reason (Luke, 2). By making use of the senses and reason Christ learned from experience what He already knew theoretically and supernaturally (Heb., 5). Christ possessed not only a human intellect but also a human will: "Father, not my will (human will) but Thine (Divine will) be done" (Luke, 22). Besides being impeccable, Christ's human will was in perfect conformity to His Divine will, because one and the same Divine Person operated through both. Christ also had a true and real body and not an imaginary or heavenly body, as certain heretics claimed. The view of the latter would imply that Christ did not truly suffer and die for us and that He deceived us. Since Christ's body was conceived miraculously by the supernatural operation of the Holy Ghost, it did not possess those infirmities which flow from sinful fallen nature. Christ's body was perfect, complete, and becoming His condition. Being fashioned directly by the Holy Ghost it possessed a beauty worthy of its Divine nature. Christ assumed only those infirmities which in the present order flow from the natural constitution of the body, such as hunger, thirst, sufferings, and death. Christ willed to experience bodily suffering in order to expiate our sins and to give us a superlative example of all virtues.—Arendzen, Whom Do You Say? St. L., 1927.

(a. 6. B.)

Human Race, all men taken collectively or specifically as a class of beings having the same essential characteristics and essentially different from every other class. Concerning the human race, two points are often discussed today: its unity and its age. As regards the first, faith clearly teaches that all men are descended from one pair, Adam and Eve. History has not yet succeeded in proving this thesis; perhaps it never will; its documents are too scanty. Reason, however, arguing from the data of science, does prove that all men can have descended from one pair; for all men belong to one species. The different races existing among men do not militate against this unity of species and descent. There is no essential difference between them, but rather a gradual transition. Nor is it much difference of opinion as to how many years ago man first appeared on this earth. Neither faith nor history give a definite answer. Certainly it is necessary to postulate new species for the Neanderthal race or the Cro-Magnon race; they differ in no essential point from man as he exists today. Concerning the age of the human race, there is much difference of opinion as to how many years ago man first appeared on earth. Neither faith nor history give a definite answer. Certainly it is on the flimsiest evidence that evolutionists measure its age. As regards the first, faith clearly teaches that all men are descended from one pair, Adam and Eve. History has not yet succeeded in proving this thesis; perhaps it never will; its documents are too scanty. Reason, however, arguing from the data of science, does prove that all men can have descended from one pair; for all men belong to one species. The different races existing among men do not militate against this unity of species and descent. There is no essential difference between them, but rather a gradual transition. Nor is it much difference of opinion as to how many years ago man first appeared on this earth. Neither faith nor history give a definite answer. Certainly it is necessary to postulate new species for the Neanderthal race or the Cro-Magnon race; they differ in no essential point from man as he exists today.

Humility, a moral virtue which restrains the inordinate appetite for high things. Its foundation is the knowledge of ourselves and of our relations to God. The former recognizes our natural weakness, checking presumption; and our defects and sins, forbidding self-exaltation over others. The latter acknowledges our subjection to God's law and His providence, inclining to submission to creatures for God's sake. Thus humility is necessary for salvation. "Unless you become as little children you shall not enter the Kingdom of Heaven" (Matt., 18).—C.E.; Liguori, Christian Virtues and Means of Obtaining them.

Humphrey Middlemore, Blessed, martyr (1535), d. Tyburn, England. He belonged to an ancient family of Warwickshire, joined the Carthusian Order, was ordained priest, and appointed procurator in the Charterhouse, London. Refusing to recognize the validity of Henry VIII's marriage with Anne Boleyn, he was arrested, imprisoned, and put to death. Beatiated, 1886.—C.E.

Hungary, independent kingdom of central Europe, bounded N. by Czechoslovakia, Poland, and Ukraine, E. by Rumania and Ukraine, S. by Yugoslavia, w. by Austria; area, 35,164 sq. mi., est. pop. 8,457,952. Christianity was introduced into the region in the 5th century when the greater part of Hungary was included in the Diocese of Esztergom, raised to metropolitan rank by St. Stephen (c. 1000-38), first King of Hungary, under whom the country was converted to Catholicity and the Church organized. It was placed under the patronage of St. Adalbert, Bp. of Prague and martyr, who had converted the royal family and evangelized the country. In the 16th century Hungary was overrun by the Turks, Church discipline became lax, and Protestantism gained a strong footing. Peter Pazmany, greatest of the archbishops of Esztergom (1616-37) checked the decline of the Catholic faith and brought about a counter-reformation with ecclesiastical reorganization, after which the Church continued to recover strength, assisted by the Habsburgs until the time of Joseph II (1780-90). The country remained part of Austria-Hungary until the fall of that empire in 1918, when it was reestablished as an independent monarchy. All religions recognized by law, including the Catholic, Greek Orthodox, Evangelical, Unitarian, Baptist, and Jewish, enjoy equality and each manages its own affairs. Hungary is represented at the Holy See by an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary, and a nuncio resides in Budapest. Ecclesiastical administration is thus divided:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Eger, A.</td>
<td>1909</td>
<td>493</td>
<td>1,516</td>
<td>745,198</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eger, D.</td>
<td>1909</td>
<td>675</td>
<td>1,504</td>
<td>514,835</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eger, W.</td>
<td>1909</td>
<td>268</td>
<td>431</td>
<td>510,330</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Szombathely, B.</td>
<td>1977</td>
<td>179</td>
<td>237,339</td>
<td>465,882</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
HUNGRY

Hunter, Sylvester Joseph (1829-96), Jesuit educator, b. Bath, England; d. Stonyhurst. Graduating at Cambridge with high mathematical honors, he subsequently adopted the legal profession, becoming rapidly noted as a practitioner and author. He embraced Catholicity in 1857 and four years later joined the Jesuits. He modernized the course of studies in Stonyhurst College and later directed the Jesuit house of studies at St. Beuno's, where he wrote his valuable "Outlines of Dogmatic Theology."—C.E.

Hunter's Mass (Missa venatoria), said for hunters in a hurry, was a kind of dry Mass (Missa sicca), a common form of devotion used for funerals or marriages in the afternoon, when a real Mass could not be said. It consisted of the Mass with the Offertory, Consecration, and Communion omitted.

Hunting, canons on. The Church does not absolutely forbid all hunting to clerics. The law distinguishes between ordinary hunting, described by the authors, as that species in which a man goes out for game with one or two dogs and without much paraphernalia; and the chase (venatio clamorosa) again described as that which is attended by a large number with many dogs, hounds, horned, and the like. The former is not to be habitual with clerics as we gather from the laws. There could not be said. It consisted of the Mass with the Offertory, Consecration, and Communion omitted.

John XXIII against these measures, and were excommunicated. In 1411, besides continuing to defend Wyclif, he attacked the Bulls issued by John XXIII proclaiming indulgences to all who would supply funds for the crusade against Ladaris of Naples, and when he aroused the university and populace to treating with indignity the members of the papal commission, the Roman authorities took the more vigorous action of not only reiterating his former excommunication, but also placing his residence under interdict, and finally ordering his imprisonment.

Late in 1412 Hus left Prague for Austria, where he wrote his principal work "De ecclesia." As no effort was made to imprison him he returned to Prague, 1414, and posted his treatise "De sex errobibus" on the walls of the Bethlehem chapel, where he had been preacher. From these two treatises a number of propositions of a heretical character was submitted to the new archbishop, and when the Council of Constance assembled in Nov., 1414, Hus appeared before that body, gave an account of his errors these writings contained. The following year Hus again became rector of the university, and was reported to Rome for his Wycliffite tendencies, with the result that A. received a Bull from Alexander V ordering him to withdraw Wyclif's writings from circulation, and forbid any preaching except in cathedral, collegiate, parish, and cloister churches. Hus and his adherents protested to Husenbeth, Frederick Charles (1796-1872), liturgist, b. Bristol, England; d. Norfolk. He was ordained in 1820 and shortly afterwards was sent to Cossey Hall, Norfolk, as chaplain to Sir George Stafford Jerningham, where he remained for 52 years, devoting himself to the ministrations of his office, and to literary pursuits. From 1823 till his death, he wrote numerous works on historical, liturgical, or doctrinal matters, e.g., “The Emblems of the Saints” and “The Life of Bishop Milner,” published admirable editions of the Missal, and contributed to many periodicals.—C.E.

Hussey, Thomas (1746-1803), ecclesiastic and diplomat, b. Ballybogan, Co. Meath, Ireland; d. Trimore, Co. Waterford. He was educated at Salamanca and appointed chaplain to the Spanish embassy at London, 1767. Twenty-five years later, when Spain and France broke with England, he took care of the Spanish interests in England; subsequently he was entrusted by the British with diplomatic missions in Madrid and Ireland. In 1795 he was appointed first president of Maynooth College, and shortly after was consecrated Bp. of Waterford and Lismore.—C.E.

Hussites, a religious sect which arose in Southern Bohemia in the early 15th century; the followers of Hus (q.v.); also known as Wyelitites, as they professed the teaching of Wyelit (q.v.) and as Utraquists, as their distinctive dogma was Utraquism, i.e., the necessity of receiving Communion under both species. The followers of Hus, venerating him as a holy martyr of the old religion rather than as a founder of a new one, objected to the appellation “Hussites,” which implied separation from the Universal Church, for they believed their creed to be truly Catholic; but during the Hussite Wars the name became commonly applied both to the original followers of Hus and to the subsequent smaller sects into which they divided. The dogma of Utraquism, introduced by Jacobitis von Mies, was never preached by Hus, who first thought it “wise not to introduce such an innovation without the approbation of the Church.” Later, however, he maintained that the chalice should be given to the laity if Christ and the Apostle Paul were to be obeyed. The Council of Constance, realizing the danger of the heresy, ordered its extirpation by the civil and ecclesiastical authorities of Bohemia, but the Bohemian and Moravian nobles considered the “unjust” martyrdom of Hus, and the assertion that a heresy existed in Bohemia, insults to their country, and therefore banded together in an offensive and defensive league. Dissensions soon arose among the Hussites; the Taborites, so called because they met at “Mount Tabor,” completely set aside the authority of the Church and admitted no other rule than the Bible; the Calixtines only demanded Communion under both species for the laity, and free preaching of the Gospel; they were called Calixtines because of the chalice which they displayed on their flag, weapons, clothes, etc. Under the leadership of Ziska of Troznów, however, the two factions successfully resisted both the imperial armies and the papal crusaders sent to subdue them. Civil war and the destructive forces of the Hussites ravaged Bohemia for over fifteen years, but finally peace was obtained by the Compactata of Basle, 1433, which permitted Communion under both forms to those who had reached the age of discretion and were in the state of grace, under these conditions: that the Hussites confess that the Body and Blood, Soul and Divinity of Christ was contained wholly and entirely both under the form of bread and under that of wine, and that they retract the statement that communion under both forms is necessary for salvation. Though the Compactata pleased the moderate Utraquists, the Calixtines, it found little favor with the Taborites (also, since the death of Ziska in 1424, called “Orphans”), but the Taborites were nearly exterminated at the Battle of Lippan, 1424, and the Compactata was finally accepted at the Diet of Iglau, 1436. (For further history of the Taborites, see Moravians). Various troubles with Rokycana, a leader of the Calixtines, eventually led to the nullification of the Compactata by Pius II, and his refusal to recognize the Utraquist rite, and other religious and civil wars followed, until in 1485 both parties were granted equal rights and liberty by King Vladislaw. By degrees the Utraquists conformed to the Roman rites so as to be hardly distinguishable from them, except through the chalice for the laity.—C.E., VII, 485.

Huysmans, u-és-man, Karl (1848-1907), novelist, b. Paris; d. there. Although he was a civil service employee for 30 years, this did not interfere with his literary career. He was one of the founders of the Goncourt Academy. After 1856 he made open profession of the Catholic faith and became an Oblate in the Benedictine Monastery of Ligue. After the expulsion of the monks, he returned to Paris where he died after cruel sufferings heroically endured. He belongs to the realistic school and his descriptions are of a vividness sometimes bordering upon brutality. His chief works are: “En route,” “La Cathédrale,” “L’Oblat,” “Les Foules de Lourdes,” an answer to Zola, and “Ste. Lydwine de Schiedam.”—C.E.; Caivet, Le Renouveau Catholique. (P. P. D.)

Hyacinth (Gr., purple), Saint, confessor (1185-1257), apostle of the North, b. castle of Lanka, Kamin, Silesia, Poland; d. Krakow. He was a relative of St. Ceslaus. He studied at Krakow, Prague, and Bologna and received the title of Doctor of Law and Divinity. Accompanying his uncle, Bp. Ivo Konski of Krakow, to Rome, he there met St. Dominic and was among the first to be enrolled in the new Order of Friars Minor. After his profession he was appointed head of a band of missionary preachers sent into Poland. There he established numerous communities and preached in Prussia, Pomerania, Lithuania, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, and Lower Russia. Many miracles are credited to him. Canonized, 1594. Relies at Paris. Feast, 17 Aug.—C.E.; Butler.

Hyacintha Mariscotti, Saint, virgin (1585-1640), Franciscan tertiary and foundress of the Saccioni, b. Vignanello, Italy; d. Viterbo. After a frivolous youth of dissipation and disappointment, she entered St. Bernardine’s convent, Viterbo, where for ten years she lived in unselfish luxury; then, touched by grace, she repented and gave herself up to a life of charity and intense mortification, nursing the plague-stricken and establishing the Sacconi, or Oblates of Mary, for the relief of the poor and aged. Canonized, 1807. Feast, 30 Jan.—C.E.

Hyderabad, Diocese of, India, bounded N. by the Bay of Bengal, S. by the River Godavari, W. by the Bombay Presidency, and E. by the Tungabhadra and Kistna rivers; suffragan of Madras; established, 1886; entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions, Milan, and secular clergy. Early vicars of the territory were Fr. Mateo de Castro, Don Custodius de Pío, and Don Bisconti. Bishops: Peter Caprotti, vicar Apostolic from 1882, bishop 1886-97; Peter Vigano (1898-1908), and Dionysius Visnara (1909); residence at Secunderabad, Churches and chapels, 233; priests, secular, 27; priests, regular, 5; religious women, 128; schools and orphanages: Catholics, 35,597.

Hyginus, Saint, Pope (c. 138-142), b. Greece, d. Rome. Little historically certain is known about his pontificate. Feast, R. Cal., 11 Jan.—C.E.; Butler.

Hylozoism (Gr., hylē, matter; zoē, life), term used to designate a doctrine according to which all matter possesses life, and which forms the basis of many false philosophical systems. Animism (q.v.), the earliest form of hylozoism, was a basis of primitive religion, and on it the Ionian school of philosophers built their system. This primitive form disappeared when Plato and Aristotle differentiated between mind and matter, and hylozoism became materialistic with Strato, who explained life as a property of matter. It grew pantheistic with the later Peripatetics, the Neo-Pythagoreans, and the Neo-Platonic school of Alexandria, which explained that there was life in all material beings but that perfections proceed from the soul. The doctrine reappeared in Christian countries with the nature philosophers of the Renaissance, Paracelsus, Cardanuis, Giordano Bruno, etc. Spinoza combined the materialistic and pantheistic forms, and reduced mind and matter to the rank of attributes of one infinite substance. Scientific hylozoism, as adhered to by Häckel, Spencer, Lotze, etc., protests against a mechanical view of the world, but tends to make all beings conform to a uniform pattern.—C.E.; Turner, History of Philosophy, Boston, 1903; Gerard, The Old Riddle and the Newest Answer, Lond., 1904.

Hymn (Gr., hymnos), a song of praise. In ancient pagan literature a hymn was a song in honor of gods or heroes. The noun occurs in two passages in the N.T. (Eph., 5; Col., 3). From the spiritual contents of such songs it is difficult to distinguish the three kinds of Divine praise indicated by the different terms, psalms, hymns, and canticles. St. Augustine, commenting on Ps. 148, defines hymn as "a song with praise of God," but praise of God must be understood to include the praise of His saints. Moreover a song can be composed in prose, but a hymn is understood a song whose sequence of words is ruled by a symmetrical arrangement of verses, with or without rhyme. The term song must not be limited to songs actually set to music and sung, but may be given to any religious lyrical poem capable of being sung and set to music.—C.E.; Britt.

Hymnody, religious lyric poetry as distinct from epic and didactic poetry, and contradistinct from profane lyric poetry; hymns taken collectively. According to whether it is used for public and official worship or for private devotion, the entire Latin hymnody is divided into liturgical and non-liturgical. Liturgical hymnody is again divided into the hymns belonging to the sacrificial liturgy of the Mass (Missal and Gradual), or to the liturgy of canonical prayer (Breviary and Antiphonary). Non-liturgical hymnody is divided into that intended for singing and that intended for silent, private devotion. The study and science of hymnody is called hymnology.—C.E.; Julian, Dictionary of Hymnology, Lond., 1907.

Hyperdulia (Gr., hyper, over; douleia, service), the technical name for homage paid to the Blessed Virgin Mary as the Mother of God. Recognizing the unique dignity to which God raised her and the fullness of grace conferred on her, both supernominal, she receives a higher homage than any saint; needless to say, however, an homage infinitely below that paid to God.—Pohle-Preuss, Mariology, St. L., 1922. (A. T. Z.)

Hypnotism (Gr., hypnōs, sleep), that artificial form of profound sleep in which the body of a person is apparently in a state of complete lethargy, while his mind appears to be perfectly awake, but only within the range in which he is subject to the operator. The operator has the subject in his power, and can make him do his will. The subject passes under the absolute rule of the operator, who assumes full command of the subject's senses and mental faculties. Most of the various phenomena of hypnotism, if not all of them, are of a natural character. The mystery which originally surrounded hypnotism has long since been removed. The all-potent factor and the exclusive cause of the phenomena are suggestion and the absolute surrender of the patient to the practitioner. When practised by reliable medical men for therapeutic purposes, or by physiologists for the sake of research, hypnotism may be made use of, provided the necessary precautions are taken to avert bodily and spiritual dangers. Hypnotism when practised by ordinary jugglers and charlatans is a perilous undertaking, and should be discouraged and forbidden.—C.E.; Sidsis, The Psychology of Suggestion, N. Y., 1898; O'Malley and Walsh, Essays in Pastoral Medicine, N. Y., 1907. (F. S.)

Hypostasis (Gr., hypo, under; histemi, stand), literally, that which lies beneath as basis or foundation. During the early Christian centuries the term was frequently used as synonymous with ousia (nature). The distinction between hypostasis and ousia was brought about gradually by the controversies concerning Christ and was definitely established by the Council of Chalcedon (451), which declared that in Christ the two natures are united in one person (hypostasis).—C.E.; (G. E. W.)

Hypostatic Union, a theological term succinctly expressing the definition of the Council of Chalcedon (451) concerning the Incarnation: that in Christ the two natures, each retaining its own properties, are united in one Person; not, therefore, two persons morally or accidentally united (according to Nestorius). nor two natures commingled (Eutyches), but two perfect natures united hypostatically, i.e., in the one Person of the Word, who is thus both perfect God and perfect man.—C.E.; Pohle-Preuss, Christology, St. L., 1913. (A. C. K.)

Hyssop, a plant of unknown identity, mentioned in Scripture, and found in Egypt, Sinai, and Chanaan, used in sprinkling the blood of the paschal lamb or victims of sacrifice. The plant of the Mosaic ritual is the Origanum marum of the family of labiatae, growing on the terrace walls of Palestine and Syria. It is referred to in the Miserere (Ps. 50).—C.E.
Iconography (Gr., eikon, image; graphia, writing), Christian, the science of the description, history, and interpretation of the traditional representations of sacred symbols in art. The walls of churches have always been decorated with scenes from the Bible and legends of saints. These representations are often of historical and doctrinal importance.—C.E.; Twining, Symbols and Emblems of Early and Mediaeval Christian Art, Lond., 1860.

Ibar (Iberius or Ivor), Saint, abbot (d. c. 500), Bp. of Begerin, Wexford, Ireland. About 480 he settled at Begerin where he built an oratory and cell, around which several disciples gathered. Feast, 23 April.—C.E.; Butler.

Iberville, Pierre Le Moyne, Sieur d' (1661-1706), founder of Louisiana, b. Ville-Marie, Montreal; d. Havana. He was a brilliant soldier and sailor, fighting against the English, and capturing Fts. Rupert, Nelson, and Pemaquid, and the coastal settlements in Newfoundland. In 1688 he sailed from Brest and established a French colony on the Bay of Biloxi, Louisiana. While in Cuba obtaining reinforcements for an attack on the Carolinas he died of yellow fever.—C.E.

Iceland, kingdom of northeastern Europe; area, 39,709 sq. m.; pop., 101,764. It is united to Denmark through the identity of the ruler. It was evangelized by Irish monks early in the 10th century, became Lutheran in the 16th century, and received Catholicism again c. 1850, though Catholics constitute only a small minority of the inhabitants. It maintains a prefecture Apostolic, established 1923. 1923.—C.E.

Ichthus. See Fish.

Icon (Gr., eikon, image), sacred pictures of the Eastern Church, generally painted on wood and covered, excepting the face and hands, with relief of gold, silver, or seed pearls. In churches, placed on the iconostasis screen.

Iconoclasm, i-con'o-clasm (Gr., eikon, image, and klosein, to break), a heresy that disturbed the peace of the Eastern Church in the 8th and 9th centuries. It rejected both the use and the veneration of images. The first storm against images was raised by an Emperor, Leo the Isaurian, 726, and brought to an end by the Seventh General Council, 787, under the protection of the Empress Irene; the second, inaugurated by Emperor Leo V, was ended by the establishment of the feast of Orthodoxy (19 Feb., 842), under the Empress Theodora. In the West there was an echo of the controversy under Charlemagne, 790. Here the controversy turned about the veneration of images. In an interchange of letters between the pope and the Frankish bishops the principles were gradually clarified and the decrees of the Seventh General Council accepted. —C.E. (A. T. Z.)

Icons. See Fish.

Idaho, the 12th state of the United States in size, the 42nd in population, and the 43rd state to be admitted to the Union (3 July, 1891); area, 83,888 sq. m.; pop. 83,888 (1920), 431,860; Catholics (1928), 21,000. As a result of a visit to the Cœur d'Alâne Indians of Idaho by Fr. Pierre De Smet, S.J., and in response to requests from the Indians themselves, the Sacred Heart Mission was established, 1842, by Fr. Nicholas Point and Br. Charles Huet. The first chapel, a simple wooden structure put together with wooden pegs, was built about 16 m. from Cœur d'Alâne Lake by Frs. Gazzoli and Ravalli. In 1853, after the mission had attracted white settlers, the secular priests, Rev. Toussaint Nfesplie and Rev. A. Z. Poulin were sent to Idaho by Abp. François Blanchet of Oregon City, and the first churches were built the same year in Idaho City, Placerville, and Centerville. The Diocese of Boise (q.v.) comprises the state. Catholic influence on place-names in the state is shown in the following: Priest River, St. Anthony, St. Charles, St. Joe, St. Maries. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in Idaho:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Church</th>
<th>Membership</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Catholic Church</td>
<td>17,947</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints</td>
<td>22,439</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>21,973</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.</td>
<td>9,943</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northern Baptist Convention</td>
<td>5,965</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disciples of Christ</td>
<td>5,965</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congregational Churches</td>
<td>2,827</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Protestant Episcopal Church ........................................ 2,404
Seventh-day Adventists ............................................. 1,065
All Other Denominations ........................................... 9,641
Total Church Membership ........................................... 135,386

-C.E.; Shea.

Idealism, (i-dé'gal-izm (Gr., idein, see). In philosophy this term has various significations. As applied to the philosophy of Plato it signifies his theory that the visible things of this world are merely copies of the perfect realities of another supersensible, ideal world. The idealism of St. Augustine and the Scholastics is the doctrine that the ideal, the type according to which every sensible thing is made, is the idea in the mind of God. In modern times, idealism is the theory which denies reality to the external, physical world, and attributes real existence only to things as they are in the mind. In this sense it is opposed to Realism. In its extreme form idealism is absolute subjectivism denying the existence of anything outside the mind of the thinking subject. More modified theories admit the problematical existence of the material, sensible world, but hold that things are known only as they appear to us and not as they are in themselves.-C.E.; Dubray, Introductory Philosophy, N. Y., 1925; Bradley, Appearance and Reality, Lond., 1897 (a. v. w.).

Idolatry (Gr., eidololatrea, image worship), broadly, extends to all divine worship given to any one or anything but the true God. Opposed to the virtue of religion it bestows reverence due to God alone directly on the image itself or on the creature represented. All religious systems indicate a primitive, pure Monotheistic concept degraded by man and devil. Disordered affections, need of sense images, ignorance of God's excellence, and diabolical agency have led unbridled imagination to attribute divine power to myriad false gods of every kind. Idolatry was Israel's national sin. Absolutely considered, idolatry and atheism are the greatest sins, a direct attempt to despoil and dethrone God and to substitute a creature. Circumstances determine the actual guilt. Inculpable ignorance and right intent divert the worship to the one true God. Catholic veneration of images is not directed to the images as such, but is a form of respect paid to them as representative of the original to whom alone honor is due and attributed.-C.E.

I dwell a captive in His Heart, hymn written by St. Alphonsus (1696-1787). The English title given is by Rev. E. Vaughan.

Ignatius de Azevedo (Lat., igneus, fiery), Blessed, martyr (1528-70), Jesuit missionary, b. Oporto, Portugal. With 39 companions he was martyred off Palma, Canary Islands, by Huguenot pirates. The forty martyrs were beheaded 11 May, 1584. Ignatius is represented standing on a ship's deck; and holding up an image of the Blessed Virgin. Feast, 15 July.-C.E.

Ignatius Loyola, Saint, confessor (1491-1556), founder of the Society of Jesus, b. Loyola Castle, Guipuzcoa, Spain; d. Rome. He was educated in the atmosphere of the Spanish court of Ferdinand and Isabella, entered the army, 1517, and served in several campaigns. While recuperating from injuries received in battle he came to realize the frivolity of his life, and was inspired with zeal to serve Christ. He retired to Montserrat, and later to Manresa where he lived in austerity and prayer; he wrote his religious experiences and later made them the foundation for the spiritual exercises which he drew up for his Order. In 1523 he set out on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, but the Franciscans did not permit him to remain there. He returned to Barcelona, and went to Paris, 1528, where he persevered through sickness and poverty until he received his degree in arts and theology. There he became intimate with Peter Faber, Francis Xavier, James Lainez, Alonso Salmeron, Nicholas Bobadilla, and Simon Rodriguez, who united with him in vows of poverty and chastity, and of going on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. The Turkish war making this journey impossible, the companions offered their services to the pope. Ignatius called his Order the Society of Jesus, and never used the term Jesuit, which was first used in derision by his adversaries. The Society was approved by the pope, 1541, and Ignatius was chosen general. He died of the Roman fever. Patron of retreats. Emblems: a chasuble, communion, a book, apparition of Our Lord. Canonized, 1622. Relics in the Gesu, Rome. Feast, R. Cal., 31 July.-C.E.; Butler; Pollen, Saint Ignatius of Loyola, N. Y., 1922.

Ignatius of Antioch, Saint, martyr (c. 50-107), Bp. of Antioch, b. Syria; d. Rome. He was known also as Theophorus, "God-Bearer," and from that, said to have been the infant whom Christ took up in His arms (Mark, 9). St. Peter appointed Ignatius Bp. of Antioch, and he vigilantly protected his flock during the persecution of Domitian. Trajan sent him in chains to Rome; during this last journey he was welcomed by the faithful of Smyrna, Troas, and other places along the way; he addressed epistles, of supreme interest and value, to various congregations, for, as a disciple of the Apostles, Ignatius testifies to the dogmatic character of Apostolic Christianity. His name occurs in the "Nobis quoque peccatoribus" in the Canon of the Mass. Relics at Rome. Feast, R. Cal., 1 Feb., 1904.

Ignatius of Constantinople, Saint, confessor (c. 790-887), Patriarch of Constantinople, b. Constantinople. He was the son of Emperor Michael I and was called Nicetas. Leo the Armenian imprisoned him in a monastery in 813, and while there he embraced the religious life, adopting the name Ignatius. In 847 he was made Patriarch of Constantinople. For rebuking the profligacy of Michael III and his uncle Bardas, he was exiled and deposed about 858. Ignatius appealed to Pope Nicholas I and despite much duplicity on the part of his enemies was finally upheld by him. It was not, however, until the assassination of Michael II in 867 that he obtained possession of his see. His relics were preserved in the church of Ignorance (Lat., ignorare, to have no knowledge of), the state of being without knowledge; more precisely, the want of knowledge in a subject capable of possessing this knowledge. Taking account of the person in whom ignorance exists, it is either privative or negative. The former is ignorance properly so-called, the absence of that knowledge which one can and should have, as the lack of medical knowledge in a physician. Negative ignorance, or nescience, is the absence of knowledge not required by one's position in life. Ignorance is deemed invincible when it persists in spite of ordinary diligence to dispel it; it is reckoned morally invincible and culpable when it is due to the failure to utilize one's natural resources. Ignorance which is purposely fostered is termed affected; if it is a product of sheer negligence, it is called crass or supine. No ignorance of nullifying laws, e.g., of irregularities or impediments, excuses from their observance: if not affected, ignorance excuses from incurring penalties (can. 2229).—C.E.; Rickaby, Ethics and Natural Law, Lond., 1908.

I H S, originally the first three letters of the name of Jesus in Greek. These letters are very commonly, though erroneously, taken to be the initials of Jesus Homounum Salvator (Jesus, Saviour of men).

—C.E.

Illegitimacy (Lat., in, not; legem, law), not according to the law, the condition of one who is born out of wedlock. See Legitimacy.—C.E.; Leffingwell, Illegitimacy, Lond., 1892.

Illinois, the 23rd state of the United States in size, the 3rd in population, and the 21st state to be admitted to the Union (3 Dec., 1818); area, 56,665 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 6,485,280; Catholics (1928), 1,171,381; Jewish Congregations...33,377; Methodist Episcopal Church...287,031; Lutheran Synodical Conference...121,345; Disciples of Christ...116,639; Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A...134,827; German Evangelical Lutheran General Synod...71,274; Southern Baptist Convention...62,822; Congregational Churches...57,926; Lutheran General Council...42,726; Protestant Episcopal Church...40,725; Jewish Congregations...35,977; Southern Baptist Convention...32,678; Lutheran General Synod...23,224; National Baptist Convention...22,960; United Brethren in Christ...23,000; All Other Denominations...247,062; Total Church Membership...2,522,373.—C. E.; Shea.

Illinois Indians, important confederation of Algonquian tribes formerly occupying Illinois with portions of adjacent states, numbering from 8000-10,000. To both French and English they were friendly, the pioneer Fr. Allouez being the first white man to make their acquaintance. To Fr. Gravier we owe the first grammar and dictionary of the language. The Jesuit missions were suppressed, 1763. The Illinois were receptive but fickle and were ruined by contact with French garrisons.

—C.E.

Illuminati, name assumed by the members of a secret society founded by Adam Weishaupt (1748-1830) of Bavaria. Lay professor of canon law at the University of Ingolstadt (1773), he soon became influenced by rationalism and felt the need of a society to support his principles. Modelling the degrees and ceremonials of his order on Freemasonry and basing its organization on the Society of Jesus, he was joined in 1780 by the Mason, Von Knigge, and together they endeavored to convert the whole Masonic body to the "Illuminated Freemasonry." Its doctrines coincided with the teachings of the "enlightenment" in France and as such exerted an important influence on the intellectual and social development of the 19th century. On account of its anarchistic tendencies the society was suppressed by the Bavarian government in 1787.—C.E.

Illuminative Way, the second degree of perfection in the spiritual life. The soul having advanced in excellence, easily avoids mortal sins, strives more earnestly towards perfection, but is still weak regarding venial sins. The characteristic feature of this state is determined by the soul anxiously hoping to advance in virtue.—Devine, Manual of Ascetical Theology, Lond., 1902. (M. J. W.)

Illyrian College, Rome, founded in the Illyrian hospice, 1863, by Pius IX to prepare priests for Dalmatia, Croatia, Bosnia, and Slavonia. Reorganized by Leo XIII, 1900.

Image of God. Man is made according to the image of God (Gen., 1). This image or likeness lies chiefly in the soul, intellect, and free will distinguishing him from the brute. It overflows from the soul to the body, making him fit to rule over lower creation. Essential likeness is perfected accidentally by natural and supernatural virtues, especially by charity and justice.

Images. Imagination (n. l. m.) or images may be used to adorn, to instruct, to excite to piety by recalling the persons represented. As images of sacred persons, they are treated with becoming reverence, even as the picture of one's mother would be. Their representative character, on account of which the thing is lost sight of in the recollection of the person represented, leads naturally to bestowing upon the image the marks of reverence and love we would bestow upon the person himself were he present. These are the natural foundations of veneration of images. This process can be followed in the practice of the Christian conscience from the earliest times. Images were used from the beginning, in the catacombs, in places of worship, in private homes. In the East, homage paid to the statues of emperors, like our salute to the statue of one's mother would be. Their representative character, on account of which the thing is lost sight of in the recollection of the person represented, leads naturally to bestowing upon the image the marks of reverence and love we would bestow upon the person himself were he present. These are the natural foundations of veneration of images. This process can be followed in the practice of the Christian conscience from the earliest times. Images were used from the beginning. St. Basil (379) enunciated the principle: We must distinguish between absolute and relative veneration; that paid to images is relative, i.e., it refers to the original. When the Iconoclastic heresy forced the Church to declare upon the matter, the Seventh General Council, the second of Nice (787), defined the Catholic position, distinguishing between divine (latreutical) adoration and veneration of honor (Gr., time), between absolute and relative veneration, the latter due to imitatio Christi because referred to the original. It declared the practise of the faithful and of the Church legitimate. In 1562, the Council of Trent (session XXV) restated the doctrine in still clearer terms.—C.E.; Tixeront, History of Dogmas, St. L., 1916. (A. T. Z.)

Imagination (Lat., imagination), the faculty of representing to oneself objects not present, characters not existing in real life, conjunctions of events or circumstances never actually witnessed. This faculty takes the impressions by external objects made on eye, ear, and other senses at one time or other, and presents them in the form of an image to the intellect. It may present them just as they occur to the memory, or it may alter them, combine several together, and even create entirely new images. These may be the result of voluntary and deliberate recollection, as of scenes of the past, or they may spring up spontaneously as in moments of reverie or the familiar day-dream. The imagination exercises a motive force on the intellect and will. It may be a power for evil and for good. It may present a forbidden thing so vivdly and alluringly as to excite passion, darken the intellect, and capture the will. On the other hand, it is a force in meditation helping to focus attention on the person, place, or event, chosen as the subject of meditation. It is the starting point of all our intellectual and moral operations. The intellect depends on it, but should always control it. Unfortunately most people live more by imagination than by intellect; hence the misconceptions, misjudgments, prejudices, and even fears, or phobias, particularly in matters of religion. The new psychology, so called, or the study of the soul which ignores the soul's existence, is largely to blame for this, since it stops at the imagination, or consideration of images, and never rises to the study of intellect and ideas.—C.E.; Moller, Psychology, Lond., 1880.

Imitation of Christ, a devotional book sometimes called the "Following of Christ," published anonymously in 1418. Its authorship, once in dispute, is now attributed to Thomas à Kempis, a Canon of Windesheim, Netherlands, whose autographed manuscript of the work appeared in 1441. It is a series of counsels of perfection written in Latin in a familiar style, and divided into four books: (1) Useful admonitions for a spiritual life; (2) Admonitions concerning spiritual things; (3) Of interior consolation; (4) Of the Blessed Sacrament, usually omitted in Protestant editions. It aims to instruct the soul in Christian perfection with Christ as the Divine Model and, next to the Bible, is perhaps the most widely read spiritual book in the world.—C.E.

Immaculata College, Immaculata, Pa., founded 1920; conducted by the Sisters, Servants of the Immaculate Heart of Mary; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; special, extension, and correspondence courses; summer school; professors, 32; students, 488; degrees conferred in 1929, 42.

Immaculate Conception (Lat., immaculata, stainless). The Blessed Virgin Mary was preserved from the stain of original sin in the first instant of her conception in the womb of her mother. This was a singular privilege and grace of God, granted in view of the fact that Mary, being conceived without stain of original sin, was not susceptible to it. Her immaculate condition is meant not the act or part of her parents in it, nor the formation of her body, nor the conception of Christ later in her own womb; from the moment her soul was created and infused into her body, it was free from original sin and filled with sanctifying grace. Her soul was never stained by original sin, nor by the depraved emotions, passions, and weaknesses consequent on that sin, but created in a state of original sanctity, innocence, and justice. She had at least the graces of the first Eve before the Fall and more. This privilege was bestowing upon the person himself were he present. These are the natural foundations of veneration. This process can be followed in the practice of the Christian conscience from the earliest times. Images were used from the beginning. St. Basil (379) enunciated the principle: We must distinguish between absolute and relative veneration; that paid to images is relative, i.e., it refers to the original. When the Iconoclastic heresy forced the Church to declare upon the matter, the Seventh General Council, the second of Nice (787), defined the Catholic position, distinguishing between divine (latreutical) adoration and veneration of honor (Gr., time), between absolute and relative veneration, the latter due to imitatio Christi because referred to the original. It declared the practise of the faithful and of the Church legitimate. In 1562, the Council of Trent (session XXV) restated the doctrine in still clearer terms.—C.E.; Tixeront, History of Dogmas, St. L., 1916. (A. T. Z.)

Imagination (Lat., imagination), the faculty of representing to oneself objects not present, characters not existing in real life, conjunctions of events or circumstances never actually witnessed. This faculty takes the impressions by external objects made on eye, ear, and other senses at one time or other, and presents them in the form of an image to the intellect. It may present them just as they occur to the memory, or it may alter them, combine several together, and even create entirely new images. These may be the result of voluntary and deliberate recollection, as of scenes of the past, or they may spring up spontaneously as in moments of reverie or the familiar day-dream. The imagination exercises a motive force on the intellect and will. It may be a power for evil and for good. It may present a forbidden thing so vividly and alluringly as to excite passion, darken the intellect, and captivate the will. On the other hand, it is a force in meditation helping to focus attention on the person, place, or event, chosen as the subject of meditation. It is the starting point of all our intellectual and moral operations. The intellect depends on it, but should always control it. Unfortunately most people live more by imagination than by intellect; hence the misconceptions, misjudgments, prejudices, and even fears, or phobias, particularly in matters of religion. The new psychology, so called, or the study of the soul which ignores the soul's existence, is largely to blame for this, since it stops at the imagination, or consideration of images, and never rises to the study of intellect and ideas.—C.E.; Moller, Psychology, Lond., 1880.
Immaculate Conception, Column of, erected by Pius IX to commemorate the definition of the dogma of the Immaculate Conception (1854), is surmounted by a bronze statue of Our Lady and stands in the Piazza di Spagna, the center of the English quarter in Rome, opposite the palace of the Spanish ambassador.

Immaculate Conception, Feast of the, 8 Dec., commemorating the preservation of the Blessed Virgin from the stain of original sin from the moment of her conception. It originated in the East about the 8th century where it was celebrated on 9 Dec. In the Western Church it appeared first in England in the 11th century and was included in the calendar of the universal Church in the 14th century. It has a vigil and an octave and is a holy day of obligation in the United States, Ireland, and Scotland. It is the patronal feast of the United States. —C.E., VII, 677.

Immaculate Conception Theological Seminary, Darlington, N. J., formerly at Seton Hall; founded, 1856; under secular clergy; faculty, 12; students, 86.

Immaculate Heart College, Los Angeles, Cal., founded, 1906; conducted by Sisters of the Most Holy and Immaculate Heart of the Blessed Virgin Mary; college of arts and sciences; professors, 28; students, 132; degrees conferred in 1929, 13.

Immanence (Lat., in, manere, to remain in), the quality of any action which begins and ends within the agent. In modernistic theology immanence has pantheistic connotations. God is in and immanent in the universe. In man God unfolds Himself through the natural processes of the soul. Such doctrines of immanence are destructive of the truths of a personal God distinct from the universe, as also of all things pertaining to supernature.—C.E. (A. J. M.)

Immanent Action (Lat., actio immansens, action remaining in), an operation whose term or effect remains in the agent eliciting the action; e.g., thought, elicited or performed by the mind and terminating in this same faculty. Immanent action is the scholastic definition of life; only organic beings have the capacity for this kind of action. It is opposed to transient action, which is proper to inorganic beings, i.e., action which terminates in an object distinct from the eliciting agent. Immanent action is perfect or imperfect according as it terminates in the same faculty or in another faculty of the eliciting agent. (C. J. D.)

Immense call Condition, or O Great Creator of the Sky, hymn for Vespers on Monday. It was probably written by Pope St. Gregory the Great (540-604). There are 17 translations in existence.

Immensity (Lat., immensus, boundless), the attribute of God by which we understand Him not to be circumscribed by any place. By His substance He is in every place, He permeates all things, in heaven and on earth; and He is infinitely greater so that He, by His very substance could permeate a thousand thousand worlds which might be created by Him.—Pohle-Preuss, God: His Knowability, Essence, and Attributes, St. L., 1921. (A. C. A.)

Immersion (Lat., immergere), the act of dipping or plunging the subject into the water used in the administration of Baptism; called triple or trine immersion when the candidate is dipped three times, in the name of each Person of the Holy Trinity. Immersion was the method generally employed in the early Church. The Greeks still retain it; but though valid, for obvious reasons immersion has practically become obsolete in the Latin Church. It is practised by Brethren (Dunkers) and other religious bodies in America.

Immortality (Lat., immortalis, mortal), ordinarily understood as the doctrine that the human soul will survive after separation from the body, continuing in the perpetual possession of an endless conscious existence. Together with the question of the existence of God, it forms from a practical point of view the most momentous question with which philosophy has to deal. From the practical attitude of a man towards the present life is necessarily affected by the position he takes respecting immortality. Belief in a future life of some sort seems to have been almost universal at all times. Immortality in the strict sense forms the foundation of the whole scheme of Christian faith. The doctrine received its complete philosophical elaboration from St. Thomas Aquinas in the 13th century. Following his lead, Catholic philosophers, with few exceptions, have rightly maintained the demonstrability of immortality without appeal to revelation. They argue on the one hand from the substantiality and especially spirituality of the human soul, on the other from man's innate natural desire of perfect happiness, and from an adequate sanction for the moral law. The first line of argument alone can be summed up here. The objects of the activity of the human intellect are intrinsically independent of matter and material conditions, being concerned with immaterial things, and with material things in universal (general) and intel-
Immutability

(Lat., immutabilitas, unchangeable), attribute of God. Every change implies something new which was not there before, implies, therefore, an imperfection which can not be in God. God is absolutely immutable, in every sense, be it in His substance, His knowledge, His will, His decrees; one simple eternal act is His essence.—Pohle-Preuss, God: His Knowability, Essence, and Attributes, St. L., 1921.

(A. C. A.)

Immutable

(Lat., in, not; mutabilis, changeable), unchangeable, an attribute of God, the same forever and ever, in whom there is not change nor the shadow of alteration (James, 1).—Pohle-Preuss, God: His Knowability, Essence, and Attributes, St. L., 1921.

Impalement (Late., in; parvus, bread), a word coined, like Incarnation, to express the heretical opinion that as Our Lord is God in the flesh, Incarnate, so in the Holy Eucharist He is God in the bread, without change of the substance of the bread into His substance. It was never held by any large number of adherents without variations, and is clearly opposed to the doctrine of transubstantiation.—C.E.

Impediment

(Lat., in; any act committed to place or lay), placing upon, or laying on, of hands. A method of burial by which bodies are enclosed in oven-like chambers constructed of solid masonry. It is sometimes used in places where the soil is such that ordinary burial is impracticable, e.g., Mexico City. Upon clearance of these chambers, bodies are sometimes found mummified. These have been sold and exhibited as “walled-up nuns,” or “victims of the Inquisition.” (2) Voluntary permanent closing-up of the door of the cell of a religious, who continued to receive food, light, and air through a window, and followed the ceremonies of the Church through an opening or “squint” in the chapel wall. Rider Haggard exploited and exaggerated the practise in one of his novels; Enid Dinnis has written charmingly of it in “The Anchorhold.”

Impiety

(Lat., impietas), any act committed against the reverence due to God, or to a person or thing referring to God. The principal forms of impiety are: atheism, blasphemy, sacrilege, simony, and perjury. A book, a work, etc., are only metaphorically said to be impious.

Impiation (Late., impionare, to place or lay), placing upon, or laying on, of hands. A perfectly natural gesture signifying the communication of some favor, blessing, power, or duty; mentioned in the O.T. in connection with patriarchs blessing their children, the consecration of priests, and sacrifice. Christ used it in working miracles; the Apostles, in conferring the sacraments of Confirmation and Holy Orders. Catholic liturgy em-plays it in the sacraments of Baptism, Confirmation, Extreme Unction, and Holy Orders, and in many blessings. In the Mass the priest holds his hands over the bread and wine just before the consecration.—C.E.

Impostors (Lat., imponere, to place or put upon; impose), in the religious significance, various charlatans and false prophets. The Bible foretells them and warns against them in numerous instances, as in Matt., 7; Mark, 13; I John, 4; the fulfilment of such prophecies being attested to in the "Didache" (the Teaching of the Twelve Apostles) and by Justin Martyr c. A.D. 150. Apart from such pseudo-Messias as John of Gischala and Simon Bar-Giora, the first notorious impostor of Christian church history was Simon Magnus, the sorcerer, of whom we read in Acts, 8. Although there is much legend associated with him, such as the story that in attempting to fly by demoniac power he was confounded and brought to earth by St. Peter, there appears to be some foundation in fact for statements that he received Divine honors for his sorcery in Samaria and at Rome.

Of the great number of impostors of the 2nd and 3rd centuries and onward, may be mentioned: Alexander of Abonoteichos, called the oracle-monger, the most notorious impostor of the 2nd century; the Greek mountebank, Marcus; possibly the women, Priscilla and Maximilla; a fanatic of the 6th century mentioned by St. Gregory of Tours; Adelbert and Clement, who opposed St. Boniface in Germany c. 744; Benedict Levita (Benedict the Deacon), author of a forged collection of documents (848-850); Leotardus and Wilgardus, in the 11th century; the Anabaptist John of Leyden (John Bokelzoon), who flourished in 1533 and who was possibly insane; the Pseudo-Isidore (Isidore Mecerator), author of a whole series of apocrypha, including the False Decretals; Paulus Tigrinus, pretended Patriarch of Constantinople, who deceived Clement VII; the Franciscan friar, James of Jülich, who performed all the functions of a bishop without having received consecration; several individuals contemporary with and imitative of Nectarius, Joan of Arc; Sir John Oldecastle, the Wycliffite, possibly deluded; those connected with the veneration of the ashes of Richard Wyre (burned 1440); Johann Böhm, the Hussite, possibly a mere tool; Jack Cade, whose rebellion, however, was of no religious significance any more than that of Wat Tyler; Lambert Simnel (1487); and Perkin Warbeck (1497). Numerous other secular pretenders to royal thrones include Alexis Comnenus; the false Baldwin: the impersonator of Frederick II; and, after the death of Sebastian of Portugal, a whole series of pretenders to the throne. The "false Domestrius," however, was never proved to be an impostor; the six impersonators of Louis XVII were unquestionably such. The fantastic Paracelsus, who illustrates the case of a charlatan who had no need to be one, was followed by Nostradamus and the famous or infamous Cagliostro. Among the most famous of later charlatans was Magdalena de la Cruz (1487-1500), a Franciscan nun of Cordoba, for many years honored as a saint. Others include: Joseph Francis Borro or Borri (1627-95); and Matthew Hopkins (active 1645-48), the "witch-finder"; the cases of the priest Louis Gauffridi, Madeleine Barent, and Urban Grandier are doubtful.

The discovery of the supposed Popish Plot toward the end of the 17th century resulted in an epidemic of religious impostures which included the activities of James Wadsworth and of James La Croche, a supposed natural son of Charles II, who was for a time a Jesuit scholastic. Israel Tonge and Titus Oates are infamous for the concoction of a mythical plot between the pope and the Jesuits; they were emulated by Thomas Dangerfield, an impersonator of the Duke of Monmouth; to these must be added William Fuller, Robert Young (executed 1706) fabricated pretended Jacobite plots, as did Robert Ware, the forger, who remained undetected almost up to modern times; he is characterized by Fr. Bridgett as "this literary skunk." Other impostures, chiefly of a literary turn, number among them that of the expelled Jesuit, the Abbé Zahorowski, author of the notorious "Monita Secreta," a pretended "exposure" of "Jesuitical tricks." The celebrated case of the Pseudo-Joseph or "Fluchformular," a profession of faith supposed to have been exacted of Hungarian Catholic converts, probably the work of one George Lani, although possibly it was a satirical composition taken by him in good faith; the misuse of what was obviously intended as a skit, "The Letter of the Three Bishops." Of the same character are an indulgence supposed to have been granted by Tetzel, and the fabrication of the ex-Capuchin, Norbert Parisot, libeling the Jesuit missions. Of the crowd of impostors flourishing at the beginning of the 18th century the most conspicuous were the ex-Jesuit, Archibald Bower, author of a scurrilous "History of the Popes"; the fantastic Psalmanazar (1679-1763), who, among other activities, calumniated the Jesuits; Joanna Southcott (d. 1814); Richard Brothers (c. 1792); Anna Lee (d. 1784), foundress of the American Shakers; and Joseph Smith (1805-44), the first apostle of Mormonism, who created an entire sect by fraud. A similar impostor was "Leo Taxil" (G. Jogand-Pages), long a professional, illustrating alleged abuses. In modern times perhaps the most cynically unscrupulous impostor was "Léo Taxil" (G. Jogand-Pagès), long known as one of the most blasphemous and obscene of the anti-clerical writers in France. Lastly, in our own day, we have Rasputin, "the mad monk"; Dowis, of "Elijah" fame; Mary Baker G. Eddy, Christian Scientist; Madame Blavatsky and A. P.
Sinnett, prophets of Esoteric Buddhism; and Mrs. Annie Besant; beside the host of mahatmas, yogis, and charlatans of every sort. The bogus Knights of Columbus oath has been circulated freely in spite of much counter-publicity, and, in several cases, court sentences for Protestant committee members who circulated it among their flocks.—C.E.

Impotency, physical unfitness for cohabital union, a diriment impediment to marriage, provided that it is incurable, and that it existed before the attempted marriage. Sterility, or inability to generate or to bear children, is not an impediment. —Ayrinhac, Marriage Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law, N. Y., 1919. (J. P. S.)

Imprecatory Psalms (Ps. 17, 34, 51, 58, 68, 108, 135), those marked by strong expressions and denunciations of the foes of Israel and God. Since these psalms no less than other portions of Holy Writ are Divine utterances, their interpretation must not make God the author of breaches of that love which we are bound to have even with regard to enemies. Not all may be explained in the same way. Many of them express national sentiments which while not intrinsically bad are not on the same spiritual plane as the injunctions of the Sermon on the Mount. They are utterances of a warlike people. Again these so-called imprecations at times refer to the fulfillment of prophecies which God had made concerning the fate of Israel's enemies because of their evil ways and defiance of God. Thus St. Peter (Acts, 1) interprets Psalms 67 and 108. Hatred being excluded, a desire for just vengeance and reparation to be executed by the Almighty is not in itself unlawful. At times the poetic form includes dialogue so that not all statements should be regarded as expressive of the mind of God. Thus Psalm 108, 6-19, may be explained as imprecations uttered by enemies of the psalmist. Finally the implications which individual passages are capable of in our translated idiom, of another time and manner of speech, cannot always be urged as the absolute and native meaning of the Oriental (ancient) words in their poetic setting.—Bird, A Commentary on the Psalms, Lond., 1927. (T. McL.)

Imprimatur, i-mpri-ma'tur (Lat., it may be printed), word placed at the beginning or end of certain things published. It shows that those publishing them have complied with the law of the Church, which requires that writings on given topics, unless they are submitted to an ecclesiastical censor for examination before they are put forth. See Censors of Books.—P.C. Augustine. (W. C. H.)

Improperia (Lat., reproach). Reproaches of the Saviour to the Jews sung by the choir during Veneration of the Cross on Good Friday.—C.E.

Impulse (Lat., in, on; pellere, to drive), a movement, whether of the sensitive or mental faculties, urging the will to make some choice or perform some action, usually without mature deliberation, though often, as with one habituated to virtuous actions, no deliberation is needed. (qo.)

Impurity (Lat., impuritas, lack of purity), one of the seven capital sins. It is any unlawful indulgence in the pleasures of sex: in the unmarried, by wilful desire for or satisfaction in venereal pleasures; in the married, by any violation of marital rights, as by adultery, or by any deliberate sex irregularity of thought or deed; the vice of lust or luxury. (W. O. B.)

Inca, a highly civilized Indian tribe of South America, whose empire comprised Peru, Ecuador, and part of Chile. Manco Capac, who led his people to the valley of Cuzco, is the legendary founder of the Inca dynasty. This empire, called by its inhabitants, Tahuantin Suyo, at the time of its greatest extent (c. 1492) had a population estimated at ten millions. It had a highly organized government, and system of land tenure. Ruins of towns and fortresses indicate an extraordinary knowledge of architecture, engineering, and metal work. Their religion, based upon the reverence of natural phenomena, had an elaborate ritual. All of the Inca tribe were devoted to the worship of the Sun. In 1532 Pizarro invaded the Inca's dominions, captured the Inca Atahualpa, and wantonly slew thousands of his tribe. The city of Cuzco was captured, and Atahualpa executed in 1535. Pizarro founded the city of Los Reyes, now known as Lima (1535). The last of the direct claimants to imperial dignity was beheaded by the Spanish viceroy, 1571.—Robertson, History of the Latin-American Nations, N. Y.

Incantation, the chanting or saying of a magical formula to produce a magical effect. Sometimes employed to force a god to fulfill the magician's will, an incantation often recites the effect intended to be produced. The language of the formula generally differs from that of daily life. The term also denotes the manual act or ceremony performed in connection with the oral rite.

Incardination (Lat., incardinare, to hang on), the absolute and perpetual affiliation of a cleric to a diocese, vicariate or prefecture Apostolic. The ordinary method of incardination is by the reception of first tonsure, whereby the cleric is affiliated to the diocese for whose service he is promoted. A cleric may likewise be validly incardinated into a diocese if he has received letters signed by his own Ordinary freeing him from his own diocese absolutely and perpetually (see EXCARDINATION) and similar letters, signed by the Ordinary who is accepting him into his diocese. The Ordinaries in question are not the vicars general without a special dispensation, unless the cleric is a secularized religious, unless the diocese has been vacant for a year and he has the consent of the cathedral chapter (in U.S.A., consultors). Incardination also takes place if a cleric receives a residential benefice in another diocese with the written permission of his Ordinary, or with the Ordinary's written permission to leave a diocese forever. Secularized religious may likewise be incardinated by a bishop if he accepts them without any conditional trial, or if they have been accepted on trial. If he does not dismiss them after a period of 6 years they are thereby incardinated. The purpose of incardination is to do away with vagrant clerics. An Ordinary is not to incardinate an extern cleric unless the necessity or the utility of the diocese demand it. In such cases he should be assured of the cleric's legitimate excardination, and have sufficient knowledge of the character of the one whom he is to incardinate. The cleric must likewise take an oath before the Ordinary, or his delegate, that he will serve the new diocese perpetually.—C.E.; Ayresham, General Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law, N. Y., 1923.

Incarname College, San Antonio, Tex., conducted by the Sisters of Charity of the Incarnate Word; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; school of music; summer school; professors, 31; students, 639; degrees conferred in 1929, 36.

Incarnation (Lat., in; in; caro, flesh), the word used to express the union of the Divine nature of the Son of God with human nature, in the Person of Jesus Christ. The Apostle, St. John, says: “The Word was made Flesh” (John, 1). The Word is the Son of God; by flesh in Scripture is meant mankind, human nature, man, body and soul, as in Luke, 3: “And all flesh shall see the salvation of God.” The Son of God assumed our flesh and dwelt among us like one of us in order to redeem us. His Divine nature was substantially united to our human nature. In the old calendars the feast of the Annunciation was called feast of the Incarnation. In the Orient the mystery is commemorated by a special feast, 26 Dec. The third verse of the Angelus is: “The Word was made Flesh, and dwelt among us.”—C.E.; Coleridge, The Nine Months, Lond.

Incense, a granulated aromatic resin obtained from certain trees in eastern and tropical countries. When blessed, it becomes a sacramental. It is sprinkled upon a glowing coal in a covered vessel called a censer, and emits a fragrant smoke. The incense is kept in a vessel known as a “boat,” from its shape. Incense has been used in many lands, in worship, and to do honor to kings. In Christian churches of the East its use probably began before the 5th century. In the Latin Rite it is used at Solemn Masses, and at certain other services. Five grains of incense, each incased in a piece of wax resembling a nail, are inserted in the paschal candle, symbolic of the Five Wounds of Our Risen Saviour. When an altar or an altar-stone is consecrated, grains of incense are burned upon it, and other grains are put into the “sepulcher” or cavity in the stone, containing the relics of saints. Incense is a symbolic sacramental. Its burning signifies zeal; its fragrance, virtue; and its rising smoke, prayer going up before the Throne of God.—C.E.; Lambing, Sacramentals of the Holy Catholic Church, N. Y. (J. F. S.)

Incest, carnal intercourse with relatives, of blood or affinity, whom the Church forbids one to marry. The circumstance of relationship adds a special malice to the sin of impurity because, by committing this sin with a relative, one sins also against the virtue of piety which prescribes due reverence towards those who are closely related.—C.E. (W. J. B.)

Inchbald, Elizabeth (1753-1821), novelist, b. Staningley, England; d. Kensington. She married an actor, and had some success both on the stage, and as a playwright. She acquired more fame, however, by her often reprinted novel, “A Simple Story,” one of the first English novels of passion.—C.E.

In Commendam (Lat., in trust), in canon law denotes that an ecclesiastical benefice was collated so that the beneficiary should be entitled to the revenue from the benefice without having any jurisdiction over spiritual matters.—C.E.

Index, or Index of Prohibited Books is simply the list of books which Catholics are forbidden by the highest ecclesiastical authority to read or retain without authorization. An edition was published by the Vatican press, in 1925.—C.E.

Index, Congregation of the. This congregation, so called from the Index or catalog of forbidden books, was created by Pius V, in 1571. Benedict XV suppressed it on 25 March, 1917, its duties being left entirely to the Holy Office. The Congregation of the Index consisted of a number of cardinals, one of whom was its prefect. The Master of the Sacred Palace (a Dominican) was ex officio its assistant, and another Dominican its secretary. There was also a college of consultors whose office was to deliver written opinions on the books submitted to their judgment by the congregation. The congregation censured and condemned books which it considered dangerous to faith or morals. It could grant permission for the reading of a condemned book, or for the publication of corrected editions. The congregation was also charged with the work of seeking out pernicious publications, and, after mature examination, of condemning and proscribing them.—C.E., XIII, 143. (C. E. B.)

India, name applied in general to nearly all the territory of southern Asia, whose total area exceeds 1,800,000 sq. m. It is divided into: (1) British India, which comprises British territory, independent native states, and protected native states, all under varying degrees of control by the British government; according to the census of 1921, area, 1,094,300 sq. m.; pop., 531,952; (2) Portuguese India, which includes Goa, Damão, and Diu; in 1929, area, 1469 English sq. m.; pop., 531,952; (3) French India, which includes Pondicherry, Karikal, Chandernagore, Mahé, and Yanaon; in 1929, area, 196 sq. m.; pop., 287,173. Tradition claims that the body of St. Thomas the Apostle was buried at Mafapure after his efforts to Christianize the Hindus, but nothing certain is known of early missionary work in India until the arrival of the Franciscans from Portugal, c. 1500, who found the natives converted to Nestorianism. Franciscans, Dominicans, Jesuits, and Augustinians were the first missionaries in India. Vicariates Apostolic were established, c. 1637, and admin-istened by European missionaries of different orders and nationalities, assisted by native secular clergy. The hierarchy was established, 1866, and in 1929 included the following ecclesiastical divisions: archdioceses of Agra, Bombay, Calcutta, Colombo, Goa, Madras, Pondicherry, Simla, Verapoly; dioceses of Ajmer, Allahabad, Calcut, Chittagong, Cochin, Com
batore, Dacca, Damão, Din apur, Galle, Hyderabad, Jaffna, Kandy, Krishnagar, Kumbakonam, Lahore, Mai lae, Mangalore, Mylapore, Mysore, Nagpur, Nellore, Patna, Poona, Quilon, Ranchi, Trichinopoly, Trin comalie, Tuticorin, and Vizagapatam; prefectures Apostolic of Assam, and Kafiristan and Kashmir.

Besides these, there are the following divisions which use the Syro-Malabar Rite: the Archdiocese of Er and other missions in 1775 and 1777. It was through the influence of this “patriot priest of the West” that Kaskaskia, Cal okia, and Vincennes were won to the side of George Rogers Clark in the contest between the British and the Americans for the possession of the Northwest Territory. Fr. Gilhaut lived in Vincennes for a time after 1783, building the new church of St. Francis in that year. In 1792, when the church, which had been without a priest since 1789, was put in charge of the Sulpician, Rev. Benedict Flaget, the future

Bp. of Bardstown, he was accompanied from Louis ville to Vincennes by Col. Clark. The first school in Indiana was built, 1799, by his successor, Rev. John Francis Rivet. The state contains the dioceeses of Indianapolis and Fort Wayne (qq.v.). The Catholic influence on the place-names of the state is shown in the following: Carmel, Notre Dame, St.
Anthony, St. Bernice, St. Croix, St. Henry, St. Joe,
St. John, St. Leon, St. Louis Crossing, St. Mary-of-the Woods, St. Meinrad, St. Paul, St. Pierre, Trinity Springs, Vera Cruz. The U. S. Religious Census of 1910 gave the following statistics for church mem bership in Indiana:

- Catholic Church .................................................. 272,288
- Methodist Episcopal Church .................................. 261,228
- Disciples of Christ ................................................. 137,727
- Northern Baptist Convention ................................. 75,974
- United Brethren in Christ ..................................... 59,965
- Presbyterians ..................................................... 59,269
- Lutheran Synodical Conference ............................. 38,309
- Friends (Orthodox) .............................................. 24,658
- German Evangelical Synod .................................. 25,403
- Christian Church (Christian Convention) ............... 20,253
- Churches of Christ .............................................. 16,512
- Church of the Brethren (Conservative) .................. 12,508
- Reformed Church in the U.S. ................................. 10,876
- Lutheran General Synod ...................................... 10,442
- National Baptist Convention ................................. 10,412
- Methodist Protestant Church ................................ 10,367
- Lutheran Joint Synod of Ohio ................................ 9,270
- All Other Denominations .................................. 109,495

Total Church Membership..................................... 1,117,341

---C. E.; Shea.

Indianapolis, Diocese of, Indiana, comprises south half of Indiana, south of Fountain, Montgomery, Boone, Hamilton, Madison, Delaware, Randolph, and Warren counties; area, 18,479 sq. m.; established, 1834; suffragan of Cincinnati.
Bishops: Simon G. Brute (1834-40); Celestine de la Hailan dière (1839-47); John S. Bazin (1847-48); Maurice de St.
Palais (1849-77); Francis S. Chardal (1878-1918); Joseph Chartrand (1918). Churches, 187; priests, secular, 221;

- priests, regular, 102; religious women, 2517; college,
- seminaries, 5; academies, 19; high schools, 10;
- parochial schools, 130; pupils in parochial schools,
- 22,134; institutions, 12; Catholics, 135,775.

Indian Missions, Bureau of Catholic, an in stitution for the protection and promotion of Catho lic Indian mission interests in the United States, established in Washington, 1874, by Abp. Bayley; reorganized, 1894. Supported, until 1887, chiefly by the Catholic Indian Mission Fund, expenses are now paid by an annual contribution from Mother Katherine Drexel, amounting to over one half, and the annual Lenten collection for Indian and Negro missions. Constantly in communication with officials of the Indian Office, the organization supervises the missions, to a limited extent, bishops and missionaries looking to it for support. President Roosevelt, recognizing the value of the Bureau, gave it marked consideration, and by his order contracts producing a yearly income of $100,000 for the benefit of the contract schools, payable out of Indian tribal funds, were granted, 1904, and confirmed by the United States Supreme Court, 1908. Other advantages gained through the Bureau include: the right for the Indian parent to choose a school for his child; restoration, 1906, of rations totaling $20,000, belonging to pupils of mission schools by right of treaty, and denied them, 1901; exemption of Catholic pupils in government schools from Protestant worship and instruction, and provision of Catholic worship and instruction for them; passage of a law granting patents in fee simple for lands on Indian reservations held by the Church as tenant at will.—C.E.

Indian Sentinel, The, a quarterly magazine published at Washington, D. C., by the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions for the benefit of the U. S. Indian missions under Catholic care; founded 1902, circulation, 80,000.

Indiction, chronological epoch used in papal and other documents; conventional periods of 15 years reckoned in East from 1 Sept., 312; in West from 24 Sept., 312. Roman, Papal, or Pontifical Indictions introduced in 9th century made series start from beginning of civil year, either 20 Dec. or 1 Jan.

Indifference, Indifferentism, terms often used as if they mean the same thing in regard to religious matters, though to be precise the former means careless as to practise on the part of those who believe, and the latter professes unconcern about belief as well as practise, denying that there is any duty to believe and practise the true religion. Indifferentism may deny that man need be concerned about religion at all of any kind, and then it is absolute, or it may hold that all religions are equally good, or, again, that any form of Christianity is as true and good as another. A sufficient argument against it is that it had its origin and chief propagating force in rationalism. So far as Christianity is concerned, it is plain that if God revealed truths and moral principles to men they cannot depend on human whim or choice, but must be one and the same always and everywhere, as made known by the Church which He constituted to preserve them and make them known. Indifferentism is culpable if it be due to the fact that one makes no honest effort at examining into religious claims and credentials. To brush aside religion as of no account, especially the Christian religion, for which millions have willingly sacrificed possessions and life, and which has numbered among its adherents the wisest of mankind, is to act with a degree of unreasonableness which no one would be guilty of in other affairs of life. Indifference will vanish, ordinarily, if one acts sincerely and logically in seeking religious truth.—C.E.; McLaughlin, Is One Religion as Good as Another, Lond., 1891.

(M. J. S.)

Indissolubility of Marriage. "What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder" (Matt., 19). When the sacrament of matrimony has been received by a man and woman and ratified by their cohabitation as husband and wife, their union cannot be dissolved except by death. Protestants often quote those other words of Christ in the same chapter, "Whosoever shall put away his wife, except it be for fornication, and shall marry another, committeth adultery"; but it is plain that this permits not a divorce but a separation. It is not a dissolution of the marriage bond, but a putting away of the guilty party; for elsewhere our Lord declares that "He that marrieth her that is put away from her husband committeth adultery" (Luke, 16). St. Paul commands that the wife shall not depart from her husband, "and if she depart, that she remain unmarried, or be reconciled with her husband" (1 Cor., 7). Here there is a distinction between the mere contract of marriage and the sacrament of matrimony. The Church, for grave reasons, can dissolve the contract of marriage when the sacrament has not been received, as explained in the article on the Pauline Privilege (q.v.), but when the sacrament has been received and has been ratified by marital cohabitation, marriage cannot be and never has been dissolved. Because the Catholic Church enforced this law, schism and subsequent heresy invaded one of her choicest realms when a pope refused to grant a divorce to a licentious English King.—Avinhac, Marriage Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law, N. Y., 1910.

Individual (Lat., individuus, indivisibile), a being undivided in itself and distinct from every other being, in such a way that it is incapable of any repetition or multiplication of itself, of any division of itself into other selves, or of any communication of itself to other selves. So it is impossible to divide an individual like Peter into two parts, each of which would be Peter. Only the individual, or groups of individuals can actually exist, universals as such being entities of the mind. Individual (Lat., suppositum) is a genus embracing "things," plants, animals, and persons. Persons are individuals endowed with reason or with intelligence. Individuality is the property by which an individual possesses its unity and separateness from all other beings. It sometimes stands for the group of prominent psychological and ethical qualities which distinguish the character of one man from that of another. The intrinsic principle of individualization, that which constitutes a singular substance the individual it is, is according to St. Thomas the matter endowed with certain definite quantitative dimensions (materia signata quantitate), according to Suarez the whole entity of the singular substance, and according to Scotus an added formality known as kaiosioS (thisness).—C.E.; Coefie, Ontology, N. Y., 1914; Maher, Psychology, N. Y., 1900. (J. F. G.)

Individualism, the tendency to magnify individual liberty, as against external authority, and individual activity as against associated activity. Under external authority are included not merely political and religious governments, but voluntary associations (such as trade unions), and such forms of restraint as are found in general standards of conduct and belief.—C.E.; Donisthorpe, Individualism; A System of Politics, Lond., 1889. (J. R. G.)

Indulgences (Lat., indulgere, to bear kind), the remission of temporal punishment due sin after its guilt has been forgiven, which the Church grants from the treasury of the merits of Christ and His saints. A plenary indulgence is the remission of the whole debt of temporal punishment. A partial indulgence remits only a part of that punishment. An indulgence of 40 days, for example, remits so much of temporal punishment as would be remitted by performing the ancient canonical penances for 40 days. In granting an indulgence to the living, the Church offers satisfaction to God from her treasury of merit, so that such an indulgence is a real juridical absolution from temporal punishment. Indulgences for the dead are gained by way of intercession (per modum suffragii), i.e., the Church offers satisfaction from her treasury of merit and asks God to apply this satisfaction to the souls in purgatory. An indulgence for the living, if all conditions are fulfilled, produces its effect infallibly, while that for the dead because departed souls are not under the Church's jurisdiction, depends on the good pleasure of God. Besides the habitual intention, the state of grace and the performance of the prescribed good works, prayers, alms, visits to a church, etc., are required to gain an indulgence. Confession and Communion are required for a plenary indulgence. Confession twice a month and Communion five or six times a week suffice for all plenary indulgences except for the jubilee indulgence. For illustration of an indulgence Brief, see Brief.—C.E.; Lépicier, Indulgences, their Origin, Nature and Development, Lond., 1895; Beringer, Les Indulgences, Paris, 1867.

Indulgences and Relics, Congregation of, created by Clement IX, 6 July, 1669. Pius X united it to the Congregation of Rites, 28 Jan., 1904. The congregation was established to do away with any chance of abuses in the matter of indulgences and sacred relics. It received the faculty of settling every difficulty which might arise regarding the relics of saints and indivisibility of such donors as did not pertain to a dogma of faith. The congregation had the right and duty of correcting, without the form of trial, any abuses which might arise or be found concerning indulgences and relics, of forbidding the publication of false and indiscreet indulgences, of examining those already published, and, after submitting the case to the pope, of rejecting unworthy ones by his authority. It was to examine and verify newly-found relics, and also to exercise prudent moderation in granting indulgences and distributing relics. (C. E. B.)

Indult (Lat., indultus, leave, permission), a temporary or personal favor granted by the competent ecclesiastical authority. If not revoked and still in use they are not abolished by the Code (can. 4). Thus bishops in the United States received indults for fast and feast days. Being given for a certain time, however, they must be renewed. A personal indult is that of having a private oratory, or of saying Mass in a sitting position.—C.E.; P.C. Augustine. (C. A.)

Indwelling of the Holy Ghost, a special, abiding presence of the Holy Ghost in the person of the just, based upon the inexistence of sanctifying grace. When this grace is produced in the soul, the three Persons of the Blessed Trinity come to dwell therein in a special manner (John, 14). By appropriation, however, this special indwelling is attributed to the Holy Ghost.—Pope-Pius, Grace, St. L., 1917.

Ine (Ixa or Ixt), Saint, confessor (d. 728), King of the West Saxons, d. Rome. He was equally successful as a warrior and legislator, his code of laws being, after the Kentish laws, the earliest extant specimen of Anglo-Saxon legislation. He was an ardent supporter of monasticism and erected the Abbey of Glastonbury, and other foundations at Malmesbury, Wimborne, Nursling, Tisbury, Waltham, and Sherborne. Resigning his throne to devote himself to spiritual things, he made a pilgrimage to Rome, where he founded a hospice for English pilgrims. Feast, 6 Feb.—C.E.

Inefiable (Lat., in, not; effari, to express), inexpressible, used: (1) of God, meaning that His perfections are so great that it is impossible to express them in words; (2) of His Name, Jehovah (Yahweh, Yahweh), which, among the Jews in the O.T. was held in such veneration that only priests were permitted to pronounce it in the sanctuary and even then in a low tone, the people using the substitute Adonai, Lord, Ruler. (Ed.)

In Excelsis (Lat., excellere, to raise up), on high, the highest, occurring in the hymn of the angels to the shepherds at Our Lord's birth, meaning that God is eminently above all things, and perhaps alluding to the idolatrous altars, which occasionally the Jews themselves, and always the people about them, used to build on the "high places," the tops of hills. (Ed.)

Infallibility (Lat., in, not; fallere, to deceive), the preservation of the head of the Church of Christ from teaching error in matters of faith or morals. This preservation is due to the special assistance of the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of Truth, and is given in order that the faithful may be assured of the truth of their belief. In order to exercise this prerogative as doctor and pastor of all Christians in virtue of his supreme authority, not merely as a private theologian; he must teach a matter of faith or morals; he must define, with the manifest intention of obligating to consent; the definition must obligate the universal Church. The efficient cause of this infallibility is the Divine assistance. The object of papal infallibility is the truths contained explicitly or implicitly in the public deposit of Revelation, comprehended in Scripture and tradition. The ex cathedra definitions of the Roman pontiffs are irreformable of their very nature, independently of the antecedent, concomitant, or subsequent consent or concurrence of the Church, i.e., the bishops and the faithful.—C.E.; Gibbons, Faith of Our Fathers, Balt., 1917; Berry, The Church of Christ, St. L., 1927. (C. M. M.)

Infamy (Lat., in, not; fama, reputation), a vindictive, canonical penalty by which one is deprived in whole or part of good name, on account of grave moral fault or crime, often accompanied by public disgrace. Both clerics and laics may be subject to infamy. Canonically there are two kinds, infamia juris (infamy of or by law) and infamia facti (infamy of or by fact). Infamy of law is that resulting from an explicit pronouncement of the law, as a penalty for certain crimes, such as apostasy, heresy, schism. Infamy of fact is that arising from crime committed or immoral character, followed by loss of reputation among serious, right-minded Catholics. Canon law enumerates the grave effects of infamy, such as irregularity, disqualification for ecclesiastical office, exclusion from the Holy Eucharist, etc. Infamy of law ceases only by dispensation of the Holy See; infamy of fact, by penance and amendment, causing reestablishment of lost reputation, in the judgment of the bishop.—C.E.; Taunton, The Law of the Church, Lond., 1906; P.C. Augustin.

Infanticide (Lat., infantis, child; cedere, kill), child murder. Specifically it designates the destruction of pre-natal life. There are many forms of infanticide. Abortion is the ejection of an inviable fetus; craniotomy is the opening of the fetal skull; cephalotomy is the crushing of the fetal head; exsiccation is exenteration of the fetus; brachiotomy is the excision of the fetal arm; cleidotomy is the section of the fetal clavicles. Embryotomy is a general term for surgical cutting of the fetus. All such operations which are aimed at the extinction of fetal life are murder in intent.—C.E.; Ryan, Infanticide, its Prevalence, Prevention, and History, Lond., 1882.

Infessura, Stefano (c. 1433-c. 1500) chronicler, b. Rome. He is the author of a work entitled "Diarium urbis Romae," in which he inserted every fragment of the most preposterous and malevolent gossip current in Roman society, and is therefore not considered a reliable chronicler.—C.E.

Infidel (Lat., in, not; fides, faith), one who has not been baptized; in Christian countries, one who disbelieves in the Divine origin of religion; applied especially to Mohammedans for their hatred of as well as lack of Christian faith.—C.E.

Infidelity, the condition of one who is without the true faith, either because faith, once accepted, was culpably rejected (apostasy); or because faith was never possessed; in Christian countries, one who disbelieves in the Divine origin of religion; applied especially to Mohammedans for their hatred of as well as lack of Christian faith.—C.E.

Infinito, the condition of one who is without the true faith, either because faith, once accepted, was culpably rejected (apostasy); or because faith was never possessed; in Christian countries, one who disbelieves in the Divine origin of religion; applied especially to Mohammedans for their hatred of as well as lack of Christian faith.—C.E.

Infinito, the condition of one who is without the true faith, either because faith, once accepted, was culpably rejected (apostasy); or because faith was never possessed; in Christian countries, one who disbelieves in the Divine origin of religion; applied especially to Mohammedans for their hatred of as well as lack of Christian faith.—C.E.

Infinite (Lat., in, not; finis, bound), without limit. An attribute of God denoting that He has no limit to any of His perfections, wisdom, beauty, power, justice, but has in Himself the fulness of being and of every perfection. According to the Vatican Council, He is infinite in intellect and will and every perfection, really and essentially distinct from the world, infinitely blessed in Himself and through Himself and inexpressibly above all things that can exist and be thought of besides Him.—Pohle-Preuss, God: His Knowability, Essence, and Attributes, St. L., 1921. (F. D.)

Infinity (Lat., infinitus, without end, limit, bound), an attribute of God. God alone is infinite. Whatever there is of good, whatever there can be of good, is necessarily in God. He possesses the most absolute fulness of all perfections in a degree which knows no limit.—C.E.; Pohle-Preuss, God: His Knowability, Essence and Attributes, St. L., 1921.

(A. C. A.)

Infused Virtue, a virtue which is not acquired by repeated acts of our own, as, to some extent, the natural virtues may be, e.g., prudence or temperance, but is caused, or given, or poured into our souls from above and is therefore supernatural, like faith, hope, charity, and also the natural virtues, when sanctifying grace is given to us in order to practise them more easily and perfectly. (F. D.)

Ingelburg, Ingeborg (c. 1176-c. 1237), Queen of France, b. Denmark; d. Corbiel, France. She was a Danish princess whom Philip Augustus of France married in 1193. The very next day, however, he took a violent dislike to her, put her away, and even tried to send her back to Denmark. As she refused to go, she was shut up in a monastery and some courtier bishops declared her marriage invalid, under pretext of a distant relationship with Philip's first wife. Ingeborg appealed to Rome and Celestine III declared null and void the bishops' decision in the king's behalf; in spite of which he married a German princess, Agnes of Meran. An interdict thrown over the kingdom and popular indignation forced him to take back Ingeborg, but she was ill-treated and even imprisoned. Innocent III then intervened in her behalf, but it was only after a residence of 20 years (1193-1213) and after Agnes' death that Philip gave back to Ingeborg the place that belonged to her as wife and only wife.

Ingolstadt, University of, founded by Louis the Rich, Duke of Bavaria, approved by Pope Pius II, 1458, and opened, 1472; modeled on the University of Vienna and having as one of its aims the furtherance and spread of the Christian belief. For its equipment, large endowments were provided from the holdings of the clergy and religious orders. The Popes Adrian VI and Clement VII bestowed revenues on it from additional ecclesiastical property. The Bp. of Eichstatt was appointed chancellor and among the prominent professors of this first period were Conrad Celtes, Jacob Locher, Abensberg, and Joannes Reuchlin. During the Reformation, so effective were the efforts to keep Lutheranism out of the university, principally by Johann Eck, that Ingolstadt did more than any other university to advance the counter or Catholic Reformation. In 1549 Jesuits were appointed professors of philosophy and theology, notable among them being Peter Canisius, Salmeron, and Claude Lejay, and in 1588 a profession of faith was required for admission. In 1598 the faculty of philosophy was entrusted entirely to INGOLSTADT 480 INNOCENT III

the Jesuits; during this period such names as Gregory of Valentia, Jacob Greuter, Christopher Scheiner, and Jacob Balde added to the fame of the university. After the foundation of the Bavarian Academy of Science in Munich, 1759, an anti-ecle-ical tendency sprang up in the university which was transferred to Landshut, 1799, and to Munich (q.v.) in 1826.—C.E.

Ingres, 1780-1867, painter, b. Montauban, France; d. Paris. He was the son of a sculptor, and the pupil of Jacques Louis David. Going to Rome in 1806 he remained in Italy until 1824, his art being much influenced by the study of Raphael. On returning to Paris he became the head of the Classic school as opposed to the younger Romantics. He was in Rome again from 1834-41, as the director of the French Academy there. He left many historical paintings, but his reputation depends more on single figures which exhibit his high attainment in draughtsmanship. Among these are "Oedipus and the Sphinx" and "La Source," both in the Louvre, the latter completed in his seventy-fifth year. In the Louvre also are the ceiling decoration, "The Apotheosis of Homer," "Christ Delivering the Keys to Peter," and "Joan of Arc at the Coronation of Charles VII."—C.E.

Injustice, the violation of another's right to life, well-being, liberty, good name, property, which continues until compensation be made for injury to life or limb, apology or retraction for calumny, restitution for theft. Perhaps its most common form so far as good name is concerned is misjudgment or misrepresentation of another's religion because of culpable ignorance or prejudice.—C.E. (ED.)

In Memoriam (Lat., in memory of), inscription found in the catacombs. The term memoria came to mean a memorial, monument, altar, or church, erected in remembrance of the departed; also called confession. Pope St. Anacletus built a memoria over the tomb of the Apostle Peter. It is not exclusively of Catholic use, but to the Catholic it means pious remembrance of the dead and prayers for their repose and happiness.

In monte olivis consisto, or The Mount of Olives Witnesseth, hymn for Matins on 7 Oct., feast of the Most Holy Rosary. It was written in the 18th century by A. Ricchini. Four translations exist; the English title given is by Mgr. Henry.—Britt.

Inner Life of Mary, the supernatural life which Mary led on earth, particularly her advancement in grace and wisdom, in her intimate union with Jesus, her Divine Son, the Second Person of the Blessed Trinity. St. Luke, in chapter 2, tells us Mary's manner of meditation, how she pondered on the words concerning Jesus and the words spoken by Jesus: "But Mary kept all these words, pondering them in her heart," and "his mother kept all these words in her heart." The feast of the Inner Life of Mary is celebrated by the Sulpicians, 19 Oct. —Suive, Marie Intime. (N. M. W.)

Innocent I, Saint. Pope (402-417), b. Albano, Italy; d. Rome. Energetic, and zealous for the welfare of the Church, he took several Roman churches from the Novatians; aided the Emperor Honorius to oppose the Montanists; settled an Arian schism at Antioch; and condemned the teachings of Pelagius. Among his letters, one addressed to Victricius, Bp. of Rouen, contains 14 rules of discipline; another to the bishops constituting the Council of Toledo, Spain, attacks Priscillianism. During his pontificate his friend St. John Chrysostom died in exile, 407. In 410 Rome was sacked by Alaric. Feast, 28 July. —C.E.

Innocent II (Gregorio Papareschi), Pope (1130-43), b. Rome; d. there. Before his election he was a cardinal-deacon and with Lambert, Card. Bp. of Ostia, helped draw up the Concordat of Worms, 1122. His election was opposed by the antipope Pietro Pierleone who seized Rome. Innocent went to France where he received the support of Louis VI. His election was ratified at a synod at Würzburg, 1131, and in the same year he crowned King Lothair and Queen Richenza at Liége; opened the synod at Reims; and crowned Prince Louis of France. He declared, 1134, that Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Greenland should remain under the jurisdiction of the Abp. of Hamburg. Emperor Lothair escorted him to Rome, 1138; Pierleone died and was succeeded by the antipope Gregorio Conti who submitted within two months. Innocent summoned the Tenth Ecumenical Council, 1139, to remove the consequences of the schism; and acted as mediator in a controversy between Alfonso of Spain and Alfonso Henrique of Portugal.—C.E.; Mann.

Innocent III (Lotario de' Conti), Pope (1198-1216), b. Anagni, Italy, c. 1160; d. Perugia. He was a theologian, jurist, and cardinal-deacon. One of the greatest of the popes he opened his pontificate by restoring the papal power in Rome and in the Papal States, and wresting Italian possessions from the German knights. He reasserted the papal suzerainty over Sicily, which he ruled conscientiously during the minority of his ward Frederick II; was arbiter in Germany between Otto and Philip of Swabia; secured the election of Frederick II, 1211; and formed a truce between France and England. He asserted his papal rights in every large European country at the time, particularly in England, where King John accepted the lawfully-elected Abp. of Canterbury, Stephen Langton. He promoted the Fourth Crusade in which Constantinople was captured against his wishes. He first sent missionaries to, and when they proved obstinate, a crusade against, the Albigenses; he convened the Fourth Lateran Council, encouraged missionary work; and left many important writings. His labors in the government of the Church, while subordinate when compared with his great political achievements, contributed their share to the glory of his pontificate. He died at Perugia on his way to reconcile Genoa and Pisa to further the interests of the Crusades.—C.E.; Mann.

Innocent III, antipope. See Lando dei Frangipani.
Innocent IV (SINIBALDO DE' FIESCHI), POPE (1243-54), b. Genoa, Italy; d. Naples. He was a canonist, cardinal-priest, vice-chancellor of Rome, and Bp. of Albenga. He was elected after an interregnum of more than a year and a half, while the excommunicated Frederick II was in possession of the Papal States. In 1244 he entered into an agreement with Frederick who promised to restore the lands and free the prelates. The latter however proved insincere, secretly inciting rebellion, and the pope fled to Lyons where he remained for six years and where he convoked the Thirteenth General Council. The Council deposed Frederick, and the pope made attempt to secure the election of a candidate of his own. After the death of Frederick he continued the struggle against Conrad IV and Manfred. He returned to Rome and then made a solemn entry into Naples, but Manfred revolted and defeated his troops at Foggia, 1254. Innocent is the author of a commentary on the decretals of Gregory IX.—C.E.; Munich.

Innocent V (PETRUS A TARENTASIA), BLESSED, POPE (1276), b. Tarantaise, France, c. 1225; d. Rome, Dominican, theologian, Abp. of Lyons, Card.-Bp. of Ostia, he was known, prior to his election, as the "most famous doctor." The author of several works on philosophy, theology, and canon law, he sought to bring about peace between the Guelphs and the Ghibelines, Pisa and Lucca, Rudolph of Hapsburg and Charles of Anjou. At the second Council of Lyons he endeavored to consolidate the union of the Greeks with Rome. Feast, 22 June, Rome.—C.E.

Innocent VI (ETIENNE AUBERT), POPE (1352-62), b. near Pompadour, Limoges, France; d. Avignon. He was Bp. of Noyon, and of Clermont, cardinal-priest, Card.-Bp. of Ostia, and Grand Penitentiary. As pope he banished luxury from his court and commanded visiting clergy to leave Avignon and repair to their respective places of residence. Through his legate, Cardinal Gil de Albornoz, the papal authority was restored in the States of the Church. His relations with the German King, Charles IV, were peaceful. He renewed the privileges of the mendicant orders, patronized art, and was noted for his integrity.—C.E.; Pastor.

Innocent VII (COSIMO DE' MIGLIONI), POPE (1404-06), b. Sulmona, Italy, c. 1336; d. Rome. Bp. of Bologna, Abp. of Ravenna, cardinal-priest, he was elected during the Great Schism, with Benedict XIII as rival pope at Avignon. Despite his good will he did practically nothing for the suppression of the schism, owing to the troubled state of affairs in Rome, his distrust of the sincerity of Benedict XIII, and the hostile attitude of Ladislas of Naples. He elevated to the cardinalate his unworthy nephew, Ludovico, who murdered some of his uncle's opponents. Although the pope was in no way responsible, he was obliged to flee to Viterbo, whence he was soon recalled by the Romans.—C.E.; Pastor.

Innocent VIII (GIOVANNI BATTISTA CIDIO), POPE (1484-92), b. Genoa, Italy, 1432; d. Rome. The son of a Roman senator, he took orders and became Bp. of Savona, and of Molfetta, and cardinal-priest, and Bp. of Albenga. He was elected after an interregnum of more than a year and a half, while the pope was in no way responsible, he was obliged to flee to Viterbo, whence he was soon recalled by the Romans.—C.E.; Pastor.

Innocent IX (GIOVANNI ANTONIO FACCHINETTI), POPE (1591), b. Bologna, Italy, 1519; d. Rome. Previous to his election he had been Bp. of Nicastro, nuncio to Venice, and cardinal-priest, and had borne the burden of papal administration during the reign of Gregory XIV. He ruled only two months and during that time supported the Catholic League and Philip II of Spain against Henry IV in France.—C.E.

Innocent X (GIAMBAT'TISTA PAMFILI), POPE (1644-55), b. Rome, 1574; d. there. He was a cardinal-priest, a member of the congregations of the clergy, and cardinal-lector, and Cardinal Mazarin in France. Feast, 10 June, Rome.—C.E.

Innocent XI (BENEDETTO ORESCAGLIA), POPE (1676-89), b. Como, Italy, 1611; d. Rome. After fulfilling many important offices he became cardinal-deacon, cardinal-priest, and Bp. of Novara. Elected pope, he at once directed his efforts to reducing the expenses of the Curia, setting an example by his strict economy. His pontificate was marked by a conflict against witchcraft and lived to see the Moorish power in Spain broken by the conquest of Granada, 1492.—C.E.; Pastor. that he supported William of Orange against the king. He encouraged daily communion, insisted on a high standard of education in the seminaries, condemned immodesty in dress, gambling, and laxism in moral theology.—C.E.

Innocent XII (Antonio Pignatelli), Pope (1691-1700), b. Spinazzolo, Italy, 1615; d. Rome. He was governor of Perugia, nuncio to Poland and Vienna, cardinal-priest, Bp. of Faenza, and Abp. of Naples. As pontiff he founded numerous charitable and educational institutions, secured the repeal of the "Declaration of the French Clergy," and suppressed simony. He inadvertently furnished the cause for the war of the Spanish Succession when, annoyed by the arrogance of the imperial ambassador, Count Martinitz, he advised Charles II of Spain to name the Duke of Anjou, a Frenchman, his testamentary successor.—C.E.

Innocent XIII (Michelangelo dei Conti), Pope (1721-24), b. Rome, 1655; d. there. The son of Duke of Poli, he was nuncio at Lucerne and Lisbon, cardinal-priest, Bp. of Osimo, and of Viterbo. As pope he regulated abuses in Spain, assisted Venice against the Turks with subsidies, decided against the Jesuits in the Chinese Rites controversy, and continued the pension bestowed by his predecessor on the Stuart Pretender.—C.E.

Innsbruck, capital of Tyrol, Austria. The name of the Roman station Velldena was preserved in the Abbey of Wilten which guarded the bridge over the Inn. The present name was first used in 1187. In 1420 it became capital of the countship of Tyrol. Until 1665 the counts were almost independent. Among the buildings of interest are the Franciscan or court church of the 16th century containing the tomb of F. X. of the 16th century and the Royal Imperial Leopold Francis University was founded by Peter Canisius in 1562, as a college and was made a university in 1673. It remained under Jesuit control until suppressed by Joseph II in 1781. It was allowed to be continued as a lyceum and was finally restored in 1826. In 1857 through the efforts of the Bp. of Brixen the theology was given to the Jesuits. There are now faculties of theology, philosophy, law, and medicine. A number of priests in the United States have been educated there.

In Partibus Infidelium, a term formerly used in referring to the non-residential or titular sees (situated in the lands of the unbelievers) to which Latin honorary, auxiliary, or coadjutor bishops are appointed. Some of these sees were in Greece, and in 1886 the Lutheran King George having represented the bridge over the Inn. The present name was first used in 1187. In 1420 it became capital of the countship of Tyrol. Until 1665 the counts were almost independent. Among the buildings of interest are the Franciscan or court church of the 16th century containing the tomb of F. X. of the 16th century and the Royal Imperial Leopold Francis University was founded by Peter Canisius in 1562, as a college and was made a university in 1673. It remained under Jesuit control until suppressed by Joseph II in 1781. It was allowed to be continued as a lyceum and was finally restored in 1826. In 1857 through the efforts of the Bp. of Brixen the theology was given to the Jesuits. There are now faculties of theology, philosophy, law, and medicine. A number of priests in the United States have been educated there.

In Partibus Infidelium, a term formerly used in referring to the non-residential or titular sees (situated in the lands of the unbelievers) to which Latin honorary, auxiliary, or coadjutor bishops are appointed. Some of these sees were in Greece, and in 1886 the Lutheran King George having represented the bridge over the Inn. The present name was first used in 1187. In 1420 it became capital of the countship of Tyrol. Until 1665 the counts were almost independent. Among the buildings of interest are the Franciscan or court church of the 16th century containing the tomb of F. X. of the 16th century and the Royal Imperial Leopold Francis University was founded by Peter Canisius in 1562, as a college and was made a university in 1673. It remained under Jesuit control until suppressed by Joseph II in 1781. It was allowed to be continued as a lyceum and was finally restored in 1826. In 1857 through the efforts of the Bp. of Brixen the theology was given to the Jesuits. There are now faculties of theology, philosophy, law, and medicine. A number of priests in the United States have been educated there.

In Partibus Infidelium, a term formerly used in referring to the non-residential or titular sees (situated in the lands of the unbelievers) to which Latin honorary, auxiliary, or coadjutor bishops are appointed. Some of these sees were in Greece, and in 1886 the Lutheran King George having represented the bridge over the Inn. The present name was first used in 1187. In 1420 it became capital of the countship of Tyrol. Until 1665 the counts were almost independent. Among the buildings of interest are the Franciscan or court church of the 16th century containing the tomb of F. X. of the 16th century and the Royal Imperial Leopold Francis University was founded by Peter Canisius in 1562, as a college and was made a university in 1673. It remained under Jesuit control until suppressed by Joseph II in 1781. It was allowed to be continued as a lyceum and was finally restored in 1826. In 1857 through the efforts of the Bp. of Brixen the theology was given to the Jesuits. There are now faculties of theology, philosophy, law, and medicine. A number of priests in the United States have been educated there.

In Partibus Infidelium, a term formerly used in referring to the non-residential or titular sees (situated in the lands of the unbelievers) to which Latin honorary, auxiliary, or coadjutor bishops are appointed. Some of these sees were in Greece, and in 1886 the Lutheran King George having represented the bridge over the Inn. The present name was first used in 1187. In 1420 it became capital of the countship of Tyrol. Until 1665 the counts were almost independent. Among the buildings of interest are the Franciscan or court church of the 16th century containing the tomb of F. X. of the 16th century and the Royal Imperial Leopold Francis University was founded by Peter Canisius in 1562, as a college and was made a university in 1673. It remained under Jesuit control until suppressed by Joseph II in 1781. It was allowed to be continued as a lyceum and was finally restored in 1826. In 1857 through the efforts of the Bp. of Brixen the theology was given to the Jesuits. There are now faculties of theology, philosophy, law, and medicine. A number of priests in the United States have been educated there.

In Partibus Infidelium, a term formerly used in referring to the non-residential or titular sees (situated in the lands of the unbelievers) to which Latin honorary, auxiliary, or coadjutor bishops are appointed. Some of these sees were in Greece, and in 1886 the Lutheran King George having represented the bridge over the Inn. The present name was first used in 1187. In 1420 it became capital of the countship of Tyrol. Until 1665 the counts were almost independent. Among the buildings of interest are the Franciscan or court church of the 16th century containing the tomb of F. X. of the 16th century and the Royal Imperial Leopold Francis University was founded by Peter Canisius in 1562, as a college and was made a university in 1673. It remained under Jesuit control until suppressed by Joseph II in 1781. It was allowed to be continued as a lyceum and was finally restored in 1826. In 1857 through the efforts of the Bp. of Brixen the theology was given to the Jesuits. There are now faculties of theology, philosophy, law, and medicine. A number of priests in the United States have been educated there.
INSANITY

Insanity (Lat., in, not; sanus, sound) may be defined as a continuous morbid mental condition caused by an affection or abnormality of the brain or nervous system which is accompanied by a lack of control of the will. This does not comprehend such states as are caused by fever or excessive alcoholism such as hysteria, certain types of sexual perversion, etc. Since volitional freedom is necessarily hampered by an insane condition the individual is not morally responsible for his acts, hence one who commits suicide while insane may be accorded a Christian burial. The Church permits those who have always been insane to be baptized and it supplies the intention for the candidate, and also those who were once sane, but who are incurable or in danger of death if they had expressly desired it in a sane interval. An insane individual may not be a sponsor at Baptism. Confirmation may be administered under the same conditions. A candidate for Holy Orders becomes temporarily insane may be ordained if he recovers; one who is so afflicted after ordination may on recovery exercise his privileges. Marriage is forbidden to the perpetually insane, but in the case of an individual who has sane intervals and has contracted a marriage during such an interval, it is valid. The Church countenances segregation of the insane to protect the state from degenerate propagation but condemns such measures as sterilization, which deprive an individual of his rights. From a very early date the Church has made provisions for the welfare of the insane; they were cared for in homes of the bishops, in monasteries, and later in hospitals which were established parallel with the foundation of the Benedictine and Irish monks. It has continued its humanitarian work by establishing large insane asylums such as those under the supervision of the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul.—C.E.; Walsh, The Popes and Science, N. Y., 1913; Church and Peterson, Nervous and Mental Diseases, Phila., 1901; P.C. Augustine.

Inscription: this is impossible in the catacombs are characterized by the belief in the doctrines of purgatory, communion of the saints, and the resurrection of the dead. On the tombs of the martyrs we find such expressions as “Pray for us, because we know that thou art in Christ”; “Atticus, thy spirit is in bliss, pray for thy parents”; “May thy spirit, Victoria, be refreshed in the good God”; and “Eternal light shine upon thee, Timothea, in Christ.” The word “bury” is unknown; the dead are “deposited in peace,” signifying that they are left but for a time till awakened again at the last day.—C.E.

Inscription, a special exercise of the Divine power upon the writers of the books of the Bible in virtue of which God Himself is the principal author of these books and man is the subordinate author. Though God used man as His instrument in writing these books, He did so in harmony with man’s nature, no violence being done to the natural activity of his human faculties. The classical explanation of how God inspired the sacred writers is contained in Pope Leo XIII’s Encyclical “Providentissimus Deus” (The God of all Providence): “For by supernatural power God so moved and impelled them to write, He was so present to them, that the things which He ordered and those only they first rightly understood, then willed faithfully to write down, and finally expressed in apt words and with infallible truth.” This explanation distinguishes four chief elements in inspiration: (1) the things written were those and those only which God ordered to be written, hence God determined the matter to be presented; (2) the intellect of the human writer was illuminated by supernatural light so that he understood these things as matter to be written down; (3) his will was moved by the divine influence so that he resolved to write these things faithfully; (4) in the act of writing he was assisted by God so that he selected words fitted to express these things with infallible truth. All this may take place with such naturalness and gentleness that the author may not be conscious of being inspired just as in the performance of an ordinary act of virtue a good man may give no thought to whether he is swayed by natural or supernatural influences; but it is generally held that most of the sacred writers were aware that they were inspired. Inspiration does not necessarily involve revelation of the matter to be written; still it does not exclude such revelation; many of the sacred writers already knew the matter to be written or were able to learn it by natural means. St. Luke in his preface speaks of the care he had used in investigating his subject.

Inspiration extends to everything written down originally by the human author; during his entire writing he was under the influence of inspiration and so everything he wrote was inspired and stands now as the written word of God revealed to all who read it. If later on others made mistakes or changes in copying his book, these would not be his work and hence would be uninspired. All error is excluded from the Bible since God is its principal Author; if it contained error, God Himself would be responsible. Many of the numerous inscriptions in the catacombs are characterized by the belief in the doctrines of purgatory, communion of the saints, and the resurrection of the dead. On the tombs of the martyrs we find such expressions as “Pray for us, because we know that thou art in Christ”; “Atticus, thy spirit is in bliss, pray for thy parents”; “May thy spirit, Victoria, be refreshed in the good God”; and “Eternal light shine upon thee, Timothea, in Christ.” The word “bury” is unknown; the dead are “deposited in peace,” signifying that they are left but for a time till awakened again at the last day.—C.E.

Installation (Lat., installare, to put into a stall), investing with an office; the ceremony of inducing a cleric into his office; putting a thing in position for use.—C.E.

Institute of Bon Secours (Paris), founded by Abp. de Quelen of Paris, in 1822. The order received legal recognition under the title of “The First Association of Nursing Sisters in France”; definitively approved by the Holy See, 1875. They nurse the sick in their own homes (the poor gratuitously) and conduct 28 houses, including hospitals, clinics, orphanages, day nurseries, homes for crippled children, convalescents, and incurables, and schools in France, England, Ireland, and the United States, the American novitiate being at Baltimore. The mother-house is in Paris; the total number of religious is about 800.—C.E., II, 678.

Institute of Bon Secours (Troyes), founded by Fr. Paul Jean Sebastien Millet at Arcis-sur-Aube, France, 1840, to nurse the sick in their own homes regardless of creed or financial position. The poor are treated gratuitously; those who are able to pay do so. The order has approximately 120 houses, in France, Belgium, and Italy; its novitiate is in France. The mother-house is in Troyes; religious total about 1000.—C.E., II, 678.

Institute of Brothers of Our Lady of Mercy, founded at Mechlin, 1839, by Canon J.B. Cornelius Scheppers for the instruction and care of prisoners and of the sick; constitutions approved, 1872. Since 1855, when they were invited to London by Cardinal Manning, they have established themselves in the archdioceses of Westminster and Cardiff and the dioceses of Brentwood and Portsmouth. The mother-house is at Mechlin, Statistics: 24 houses (including orphanages, colleges, and secondary schools in Belgium, Italy, England, and Canada); 310 religious.—C.E., X, 198.

Institute of Charity (Rosminians), a religious congregation founded in 1828 by Antonio Rosmini-Serbati at Domodossola, Italy. The twofold end of the institute, based on the founder’s own rule of life, is primarily the sanctification of its members by interior charity, or the love of God, hence a contemplative state; secondarily, the indissoluble state for which the first is a preparation, active works of charity, whether spiritual, intellectual, or corporal, undertaken on a neighbor’s behalf and only when clearly manifested by the Divine Will through the voice of the superiors. In general, whenever the help of the institute is sought, it has to be given. Some of its members bind themselves by a special vow to mission work. Parishes, colleges, elementary and industrial schools are directed by the institute. The government is under a provost-general, elected for life, who resides at the Calvario of Domodossola. Statistics: 2 provinces: 31 houses, in Italy, Belgium, England, Ireland, and the United States; 300 religious, including priests, clerics, and lay-brothers.—C.E., XIII, 198.

Institute of Mission Helpers (Servants of the Sacred Heart), a community first founded under the name of Mission Helpers, Daughters of the Holy Ghost, for the catechizing of Negro children, by Mrs. Hartwell in Baltimore, 1890. The name was changed to its present title in 1895 and the members were dispensed from the vow limiting their work to Negroes. The community now has 13 houses, including day nurseries, industrial schools, and schools for the deaf, in the U.S. and Porto Rico. The mother-house and novitiate are at Towson, Md.; the total number of religious is 168.—C.E., VIII, 55.

Institute of Our Lady of Charity of the Refuge, founded by St. John Eudes at Caen, France, 1641, under the name Our Lady of Refuge, for the reformation of immoral women and the preservation of those in danger of sin. In 1835 a branch, the Religious of Our Lady of Charity of the Good Shepherd of Angers (q.v.), was established. The Sisters take a special vow devoting themselves to the reformation of fallen women. The order has 13 houses, including hospitals, clinics, industrial schools, and orphanages, in France, England, Ireland, Italy, Spain, Austria, Canada, and the United States. The houses are independent of one another.—C.E., XII, 712.

Institute of Presentation Brothers, religious congregation founded in 1802, at Dublin, by Edmund Manning, and approved as a diocesan congregation approved by Rome until 1889, when a change was made in the constitution. Leo XIII in 1889 approved the new constitution and it was confirmed in 1899. Since that time the congregation has spread to England and Canada, where it conducts colleges, primary schools, orphanages, and industrial schools. The mother-house is at Mount St. Joseph, Cork, Statistics: 17 colleges in Ireland, 4 in England, and 6 in Canada.—C.E., XII, 399.

Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary (Institute of Mary; in Ireland, Loretto Nuns; in Italy and Germany, the English Ladies), founded by Mary Ward at Rome, 1633; reconstituted from her first congregation suppressed in 1630. Pioneers of the enclosed orders for women, the founder and her companions met with little encouragement before Clement XI approved their Rule, that of St. Ignatius, in 1703, when they numbered six foundations. The work of the Institute is educational (primary, secondary, and university), principally for girls. Owing to a change in the names and the independence of branches and houses, the essential unity of the Institute is not readily recognized, e.g., the Irish branch of Loretto Nuns, founded from the York establishment in 1822, has its own mother-house at Rathfarnham and special constitutions approved by the Holy See. The several generales into which the Institute has been split up are those of Bavaria, Austria, Mainz, Ireland, and Toronto (Canada). The Institute has 228 houses, including training colleges, boarding and day schools, technical schools, an institute for the deaf and dumb, and orphanages in England, Ireland, Germany, Rumania, Hungary, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Spain, Africa, India, Australia, the United States, and Canada; the total number of religious is 7000.—C.E.; Steele, Convents of Great Britain and Ireland, Lond., 1901.

Institute of the Brigidines (SISTERS OF ST. BRIGID), founded by Most Rev. Dr. Delaney, at Tullow, Ireland, 1807, for the instruction of children and of adults in Christian Doctrine, and for the work of general education. The Congregation has (approximately) 30 houses, including primary, secondary, and boarding schools in Ireland, Australia, and New Zealand. The mother-house is at Tullow; religious total over 300—C.E., XVI, 14.

Institute of the Brothers of the Christian Schools, founded 1680 by St. John Baptist de La Salle, then canon at Reims, France. The rule, drawn up at Rouen c. 1705, was approved by Benedict XIII, 1725. The society was suppressed in France, 1792, and was reestablished by Pius VII, 1805. A superior-general, residing at Lembeq-lez-Hal, near Brussels, and twelve assistants, govern by a system of delegated visitors. The founder, struck by the pitiful ignorance of the poor, undertook the work of gratuitous elementary education. As only a religious congregation could furnish a permanent supply of educators teaching without compensation, the institute was formed of young men attracted by the religious life to take the three usual vows but not Holy Orders. They add also vows which attach them permanently to the education of the poor, specializing as catechists. To the founder is due the division into classes corresponding with the various stages of mental development. This "simultaneous method" was then a complete innovation in pedagogy. He also introduced the use of the vernacular for teaching reading, and his successors made further improvements, varying the application of their methods from time to time. Boarding schools were established, differing somewhat from the free schools. The religious, dispersed by the French Revolution and reduced to 20 active members, were restored to community life by the authorization of Napoleon, and they have continued to multiply and flourish, not without reverses, to the present time. The institute suffered its severest blow when the legislation that abolished teaching authority confers a benefice on a candidate presented by a third person enjoying the right of presentation; also episcopal approbation granted to a beneficiary for the exercise of his ministerial functions as a whole, in view of his undertaking the care of souls.—C.E.

Instruments of Martyrdom are often used as symbols of martyr saints; e.g., arrows, for St. Sebastian, a toothed wheel for St. Catherine, a gridiron for St. Lawrence, pincers or forceps for St. Apollonia and St. Leger, a butcher's knife for St. Bartholomew, a cross saltire or St. Andrew's Cross for St. Andrew. Integrity (Lat., in, not; tanger, to touch), immunity from concupiscence. It was a special prerogative of our first parents in Paradise by which the evil impulses of sensuality were kept under perfect control. By it, man's animal passions were completely subordinated to his reason, and fitting relationships established between the flesh and the spirit. Integrity as a preternatural gift was a part of man's initial equipment in the state of original justice. It was lost to the human race as a result of original sin, but by special privilege of God, has been granted in greater or lesser degrees to various saints. Our Lord and His Blessed Mother, completely innocent of original sin, naturally did not suffer from its effects.

---

INSTITUTE OF THE BRIGIDINES

C.E., VIII, 56.

Institute of the Holy Family (SISTERS OF THE HOLY FAMILY OF BORDEAUX), founded in 1820 by the Abbe Pierre Noailles at Bordeaux under the name of Sisters of Loreto. The Institute consists of different congregations, each with its distinctive work, garb, and particular rules, but all under a common constitution and directed by the Superior General of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, assisted by a Directress General. The seven distinct branches of the association are: (1) Sisters of the Holy Family proper, or Solitary Sisters, devoted to contemplation; (2) Sisters of St. Joseph, in charge of orphanages; (3) Sisters of Loreto, conducting private day schools and boarding schools; (4) Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, educational and nursing; (5) Sisters of Hope, care of the sick; (6) Field Sisters, maintaining agricultural orphanages; (7) Sisters of St. Martha, the lay sisters of the above congregations. The Institute has over 200 houses, in France, England, Italy, Spain, Ceylon, India, South Africa, Canada, the United States, and South America. The mother-house is at Bordeaux; religious total over 3000.—C.E., VII, 407; C.E. Suppl., 378.

Institution, the act of founding or establishing; an established practice or custom; an organization for the promotion of public welfare, such as a church, school, hospital, or asylum. Canonical institution is the act by which an ecclesiastical authority confers a benefice on a candidate presented by a third person enjoying the right of presentation; also episcopal approbation granted to a beneficiary for the exercise of his ministerial functions as a whole, in view of his undertaking the care of souls.—C.E.

Institute of the Christian Virgins, society of religious women founded at Su-chenin, China, in 1782, by Fr. John Martin More. They follow the rules of the Congregation of Providence, and devote themselves to the care of the sick and to the Christian instruction of pagan Chinese women and children in their homes. They are still active in the Chinese mission.—C.E., X, 609.

Institute of the Divine Compassion, founded in New York City, 1873, by Rt. Rev. Thomas Preston, for the reformation of erring girls, and the religious, mental, and industrial training of girls in moral danger from ignorance, indecency, waywardness, or dangerous influences. The order has 6 houses, including a college, an academy, two schools, a Catholic Girls' Club, and a house of religious instruction, all in the Archdiocese of New York; the total number of religious is 76. The mother-house is located at White Plains, N. Y.—C.E., V, 92.

Instruments of Martyrdom

---

INTEGRITY

Institute of the Holy Family (SISTERS OF THE HOLY FAMILY OF BORDEAUX), founded in 1820 by the Abbe Pierre Noailles at Bordeaux under the name of Sisters of Loreto. The Institute consists of different congregations, each with its distinctive work, garb, and particular rules, but all under a common constitution and directed by the Superior General of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, assisted by a Directress General. The seven distinct branches of the association are: (1) Sisters of the Holy Family proper, or Solitary Sisters, devoted to contemplation; (2) Sisters of St. Joseph, in charge of orphanages; (3) Sisters of Loreto, conducting private day schools and boarding schools; (4) Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, educational and nursing; (5) Sisters of Hope, care of the sick; (6) Field Sisters, maintaining agricultural orphanages; (7) Sisters of St. Martha, the lay sisters of the above congregations. The Institute has over 200 houses, in France, England, Italy, Spain, Ceylon, India, South Africa, Canada, the United States, and South America. The mother-house is at Bordeaux; religious total over 3000.—C.E., VII, 407; C.E. Suppl., 378.

Institution, the act of founding or establishing; an established practice or custom; an organization for the promotion of public welfare, such as a church, school, hospital, or asylum. Canonical institution is the act by which an ecclesiastical authority confers a benefice on a candidate presented by a third person enjoying the right of presentation; also episcopal approbation granted to a beneficiary for the exercise of his ministerial functions as a whole, in view of his undertaking the care of souls.—C.E.

Instruments of Martyrdom are often used as symbols of martyr saints; e.g., arrows, for St. Sebastian, a toothed wheel for St. Catherine, a gridiron for St. Lawrence, pincers or forceps for St. Apollonia and St. Leger, a butcher's knife for St. Bartholomew, a cross saltire or St. Andrew's Cross for St. Andrew. Integrity (Lat., in, not; tanger, to touch), immunity from concupiscence. It was a special prerogative of our first parents in Paradise by which the evil impulses of sensuality were kept under perfect control. By it, man's animal passions were completely subordinated to his reason, and fitting relationships established between the flesh and the spirit. Integrity as a preternatural gift was a part of man's initial equipment in the state of original justice. It was lost to the human race as a result of original sin, but by special privilege of God, has been granted in greater or lesser degrees to various saints. Our Lord and His Blessed Mother, completely innocent of original sin, naturally did not suffer from its effects.

---
\textbf{Intent} (Lat., \textit{intendere}, to aim at), an act of the will, tending efficaciously to some good, proposed by the intellect as desirable and attainable. It differs from simple willing of the end, which is to desire an end without being concerned about the means. In making the act of intention the will turns to the end as to the completion of its movement; and since in willing the end efficaciously, it necessarily also wills the means, it follows that the intention of the end and the willing of the means, constitute one and the same act. The reason of this is easy to understand. The means is to the end as the intermediate stage to the completion, e.g., to-will-a-remedy-with-a-view-to-health is to accomplish a single act of will. The intention is actual, virtual, habitual, or interpretative. It is actual when one tends efficaciously to an end with the express advertence of the intellect. It is virtual, when through the residual force of an intention which was once actual with regard to an end, means to that end are chosen and willed. The intention has to be actual, but it leaves behind an end, a virtue or force. In the virtual intention a chain of representations and dictates is forged, one leading to another, and thus preserving the force of the original actual intention. The intention is habitual, when in the agent is found a disposition to an end, which nevertheless does not influence the act. This happens when the agent previously intended an end and never retracted the intention; but the act he now performs is not elicited in virtue of that intention. The intention is interpretative, when a person does not actually will a certain end, but it is presumed that he would will it, if he adverted to the matter. The intention is the chief among the determinants of the concrete morality of a human act. Hence, an act which is otherwise good, is vitiated, when one's intention or motive is bad, if the bad intention be the exclusive reason for performing the act. An end which is only venially bad, and which at the same time does not furnish the complete reason for acting, qualifies the act which in other respects was irreproachable, as partly good and partly bad. A good intention can never hollow an action, the content of which is bad. Thus for one to steal in order to assist the poor, is not lawful. The end in view or the intention does not justify the use of bad means.—C.E.; Maher, Psychology, N. Y., 1909. (J. J. D.)

\textbf{Intendment} (for the Sacraments). The minister of a sacrament must determine the purpose of his action by an act of his will, called intention. Therefore for a valid sacrament, the minister must have the intention of making and administering a sacrament, "at least of doing what the Church does;" (Trent, sess. 7, can. 1). This intention must be interior, and at least virtual. The adult recipient of a sacrament must have a positive intention to receive a sacrament, except in the sacraments of Penance and Matrimony, in which cases an habitual intention suffices.—P. C. Augustine. (R. B. M.)

\textbf{Intercession} (Lat., \textit{intercede}, to interpose) is the going between two parties in order to plead before one on behalf of the other. In ecclesiastical usage the office of Mediator belongs primarily to Jesus Christ (Tim., 1; Heb., 7). The Blessed Mother, Mediatrix of all Graces, the angels, the blessed in Heaven, the souls in Purgatory and the faithful on earth can intercede for us sinners by their prayers and merits.)—C.E. (C. J. D.)

\textbf{Interdict} (Lat., \textit{inter}, between; \textit{dieo}, say), a censure by which the faithful, while remaining in communion with the Church, are forbidden the use of certain sacred things, such as liturgical services, some of the sacraments, and Christian burial. It does not, like excommunication, cut one off from Church membership, nor does it always suppose a personal fault. When it is imposed for a fixed period it is a vindictive penalty, e.g., because of some grave act done against the person of the bishop by members of a parish. Interdict may be local, personal, or mixed. The usual services of religion are curtailed but the necessary sacraments are given to the dying; marriages may be celebrated and Holy Communion administered during a general local interdict. A general interdict may be inflicted only by the Holy See or by its order; an interdict on a parish or on particular persons may be inflicted also by the bishop. (can. 2269.)—C.E.; Ayrihac, Penal Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law, N. Y., 1920. (P. J. L.)

\textbf{Interest}, \textbf{Legal} (Lat., \textit{inter}, between; \textit{esse}, to be), the price or rate of premium per unit of time that is paid by a borrower for the use of what he borrows; specifically, a rate percent of money paid for the use of money; also the money so paid. Excessive interest is a sin against justice, unlawful, and illegal.—C.E.; Devas, Political Economy, Lond., 1892. (M. P.)

\textbf{Interims} (Lat., \textit{interim}, meanwhile), three temporary settlements in matters of religion, entered into by Emperor Charles V of Germany with the Protestants. The "Interim of Ratisbon," 29 July, 1541, postponed the adjustment of the religious question, begun in a previous conference, ordered the suspension of judicial proceedings in matters of religion, and enacted that the monasteries should remain intact and that ecclesiastics should retain their possessions. Owing to Protestant opposition to this recess, Charles V secretly made concessions to the reformers which practically nullified all these decrees. The "Interim of Augsburg," concluded 30 June, 1548, comprised statements on doctrine and ecclesiastical discipline, explained in the sense of Catholic dogma, and granted two concessions to the Protestants. The minister of the clergy and communion under both kinds. A modification of this settlement, known as the "Small Interim," later adopted at Leipzig as the "Great Interim," was drawn up at Altzella, Nov., 1548, by Melanchthon and others, explaining justification and other doctrines in a Protestant sense.—C.E.

\textbf{International Catholic Truth Society}, the organization founded in 1899 and incorporated under the Laws of the State of New York in 1900, which has for its object the propagation and the defense of the Catholic faith. The four means by which this object is to be achieved are the public press, pamphlets, Catholic books, and the remailing of Catholic papers. Attacks and misrepresentations of Catholic affairs in the public press are promptly refuted and explained, if possible, in the paper in which the false statements appeared; pamphlets on subjects of Catholic interest are printed and distributed, largely by means of the Catholic clergy; lists of Catholic books are distributed to the officers in Public Libraries and to any one who may apply, that a demand may be created for these standard works and that students may find available fair statements of the Catholic point of view; and the remailing of Catholic papers and magazines is accomplished by individual members of the Society remailing their own copies to people whose names are furnished by the Society, and to whom Catholic periodical literature would not otherwise be accessible. Many fair-minded publishers appeal to the Society, asking revision of text-books written by non-Catholic writers, that nothing incorrect regarding Catholicity, its history or its doctrines, may unwittingly be included in their books. In the first twenty-five years of its existence (1899-1924), the Society distributed over 16,000,000 papers and magazines, over 4,000,000 pamphlets, and about 40,000 lists of books, and contributed nearly 15,000 books to home and foreign missions. The official organ of the Society, "Truth Magazine," is published monthly and distributed to the regular and life members; circulation,1922, 58,058.—C.E., XV, 78.

Internuncio, in-tor-nün'cho (Lat., inter, between; nuntius, messenger), a legate of the Roman pontiff, of lower rank than a nuncio, whose principal duty it is to foster friendly relations between the Holy See and the civil government to which he is permanently accredited, and to inform the pope of his observations regarding the local conditions of the Church (can. 207).—C.E.; Ayrlinac, Constitution of the Church, N. Y., 1925; Lallou, in Ecclesiastical Review, Nov., 1921. (S. B.)

Intinctio Panis (Lat., intingere, to dip; panis, bread), a practise in the early Church of dipping the Consecrated Host in the Precious Blood, in order to communicate by receiving both Sacred Species. It was forbidden in the 7th century and again in the 11th, though permitted for the communion of the erring, however, is wrong for the erring are checked by no certain results, and today, in many quarters, a tendency toward more objective reason­

Intolerance (Lat., in, not; tolero, bear) is a want of reasoned patience and magnanimous forbearance toward those in whom we should recognize an inviolable liberty or grant a reasonable indulgence. Intolerance toward error is not wrong any more than a physician’s intolerance toward disease is wrong, for truth by its nature admits of no compromise with error. Intolerance toward the erring, however, is wrong for the erring are personal and human to whom we are bound by all the laws of charity. See Tolerance.—Vermoechel, tr. Page, Tolerance, Lond., 1913. (F. J. S.)

Intransigence (Lat., in, not; transigere, to transact), to refuse to act or deal with, to yield, or to compromise, a term used chiefly in political parlance of the Church when standing for a principle in which religion is involved, or the rights and possessions of the Church. In clearing away differences of opinion and principle which arose when the Lateran treaty was signed, Pius XI emphasized the distinction between this term and intra­stability,

Introduction, Biblical, a theological science which establishes the principles and proximately prepares the student of Scripture to defend and interpret Holy Writ. It treats of the Divine and human origin and the collection and preservation of the books of the Bible. Introduction may be general or special. General introduction discusses questions concerning the Bible in its entirety. Its scope is usually narrowed considerably by regarding biblical theology, archaeology, geography, and history as distinct sciences. Inspiration (q.v.), the Canon or collection of the sacred books, their text and translations, the laws and history of their interpretation (see HERMENEUTICS; EXEGETIS) are properly regarded today as general introductory questions. Special Introduction discusses the Divine and human authorship, the date and place of composition, the purpose, analysis, and division of contents, the integrity and veracity of each book of the Bible. The method of treatment is literary but at the same time critical and historical, because the Bible is literature and contains and teaches history. Since the Bible is a Divinely inspired book committed to the custodianship of the Church whose duty is to safeguard Holy Writ from misappropria­tion against erroneous, capricious, and wilful treatment, biblical introduction must not be considered merely as a chapter of universal literature, but as a theological science which calls literary and historical criticism to its aid, and thus offers scientific proof that all the books of the Bible are what the Church teaches them to be, canonical and inspired, and preserved to us substantially unaltered and free from falsification. In patristic and medi­eval times questions of biblical introduction were treated incidentally, e.g., by Origen and Jerome; more systematically by Cassiodorus. The separate questions were not grouped into a system until the time of Sixtus of Sienna (d. 1599). The Or­torian, Richard Simon (d. 1712) applied to the subject the critico-historical method. His objective criticism supported by external argument was methodically correct. Since the close of the 18th century rationalistic Bible study has given incentive and impetus to the publication of Catholic works of biblical introduction. Scholars other than Catholic have marred their introductory studies, quite generally, by subjectivism and radicalism. Undue insistence upon internal arguments has led them to no certain results, and today, in many quarters, a tendency toward more objective reason­

Intrusion (Lat., in, in; trudo, thrust) or USUR­PATION, the unlawful taking possession of a benefit, —C.E.
Invention of the Cross. See Finding of the Cross.

Inventor Rutilii Dux Bone Luminis, hymn written by Prudentius (348-413). In the Sarum Use it was sung by two cantors while the candle lit from the new fire struck on Holy Saturday was being carried in procession to the paschal candle.

Inventory of Church Property (Lat. inventarium, list), a detailed and accurate account of church property. All clerical administrators should in the beginning of their office draw up this document in which all goods should be accurately described and their value noted. If there be more than one administrator, all must sign it. Administrators should not accept an inventory already made unless a description of the goods lost or acquired in the meantime has been included in the document. A copy of this inventory must be kept in the local archives and another in the archives of the diocesan curia and any change in the property should be noted.—C.E.

Investiture (Lat. investire, to clothe), the right by which a sovereign granted a fief to his vassal, and the ceremonies which accompanied that grant. From the middle of the 11th century, and perhaps during the first half of that century, the term was used to designate the act and the ceremonies by which princes granted to bishops and abbots, besides their spiritual powers the temporal possessions which constituted their benefices, and the political rights which they had to exercise. The form of investiture consisted in the delivery of the spiritual emblems, ring and crosier, and sometimes also the keys of the church. This privilege of the secular princes dates from the time of Charlemagne. As long as the princes had the welfare of the Church at heart the right of investiture was tolerated, but when ecclesiastical offices began to be bought and sold, and the free elections of bishops were hindered, the Church vigorously opposed lay investiture. As early as the Synod of Reims (1049) anti-investiture legislation had been enacted, but had never been enforced. The most energetic figure in the reform movement in the Church in this regard was Pope Gregory VII. As soon as he became pope he enacted most stringent measures for the repression of simony and proceeded to condemn under excommunication the practise of lay investiture. In order to secure the necessary influence in the appointment of bishops, to set aside lay pretensions to the administration of Church property, and thus to break down the opposition of some of the clergy in Germany, Gregory at the Lenten Synod (Roman) of 1075 withdrew “from the king the right of disposing of bishoprics in the future, and relieved all lay persons of the investiture of churches.” But Henry IV of Germany ignored the prohibition of Gregory and continued to appoint bishops in Germany and Italy until finally Gregory excommunicated him. Henry repented and was freed from the excommunication; but he firmly held to the right of investiture until his death. His son Henry V followed the policy of his father. The strife finally ended in the celebrated Concordat of Worms, 1122, by the terms of which the emperor agreed to give up the form of investiture with the ring and staff, to grant to the clergy the right of free elections and restore all possessions of the Church of Rome which had been seized; while the pope on his part, consented that the elections should be held in the presence of the emperor or his representative; the elected candidate shall receive from him the temporalities (regalia) with the scepter, and shall discharge all obligations entailed by such reception. The Concordat of Worms was a compromise in which each party made concessions, but it ended the investiture quarrel. In England and France the investiture quarrel never reached such great proportions as in Germany and hence was more easily settled.—C.E. (R. J. B.)

Invicta Martyr, unicurn, or Martyr of God, whose strength was steeled, hymn for Lauds for the Common of one martyr. It was written in the 10th century, but it is not known by whom. There are twelve translations; the English title given is by P. Dearmer.—Britt.

Invitatory, the opening summons, or prayer, of the Divine Office, calling on all who recite it to adore and praise God with joy. It is a antiphon by which a sovereign granted a fief to his vassal, and the ceremonies which accompanied that grant. From the middle of the 11th century, and perhaps during the first half of that century, the term was used to designate the act and the ceremonies by which princes granted to bishops and abbots, besides their spiritual powers the temporal possessions which constituted their benefices, and the political rights which they had to exercise. The form of investiture consisted in the delivery of the spiritual emblems, ring and crosier, and sometimes also the keys of the church. This privilege of the secular princes dates from the time of Charlemagne. As long as the princes had the welfare of the Church at heart the right of investiture was tolerated, but when ecclesiastical offices began to be bought and sold, and the free elections of bishops were hindered, the Church vigorously opposed lay investiture. As early as the Synod of Reims (1049) anti-investiture legislation had been enacted, but had never been enforced. The most energetic figure in the reform movement in the Church in this regard was Pope Gregory VII. As soon as he became pope he enacted most stringent measures for the repression of simony and proceeded to condemn under excommunication the practise of lay investiture. In order to secure the necessary influence in the appointment of bishops, to set aside lay pretensions to the administration of Church property, and thus to break down the opposition of some of the clergy in Germany, Gregory at the Lenten Synod (Roman) of 1075 withdrew “from the king the right of disposing of bishoprics in the future, and relieved all lay persons of the investiture of churches.” But Henry IV of Germany ignored the prohibition of Gregory and continued to appoint bishops in Germany and Italy until finally Gregory excommunicated him. Henry repented and was freed from the excommunication; but he firmly held to the right of investiture until his death. His son Henry V followed the policy of his father. The strife finally ended in the celebrated Concordat of Worms, 1122, by the terms of which the emperor agreed to give up the form of investiture with the ring and staff, to grant to the clergy the right of free elections and restore all possessions of the Church of Rome which had been seized; while the pope on his part, consented that the elections should be held in the presence of the emperor or his representative; the elected candidate shall receive from him the temporalities (regalia) with the scepter, and shall discharge all obligations entailed by such reception. The Concordat of Worms was a compromise in which each party made concessions, but it ended the investiture quarrel. In England and France the investiture quarrel never reached such great proportions as in Germany and hence was more easily settled.—C.E.

Inward Grace, any gratuitous gift of God, which is the gift which the person to whom it is given does not sincerely ask for or seek. This grace is the gift which is the result of the work of grace wrought in the human soul, and the work of the Holy Spirit in the soul, and the work of faith in the soul. It is the grace which is the result of the work of grace wrought in the human soul, and the work of the Holy Spirit in the soul, and the work of faith in the soul. It is the grace which is the result of the work of grace wrought in the human soul, and the work of the Holy Spirit in the soul, and the work of faith in the soul. It is the grace which is the result of the work of grace wrought in the human soul, and the work of the Holy Spirit in the soul, and the work of faith in the soul.
first time in Iowa, c. 1832, in the log cabin of Patrick Quigley, in the new settlement of Dubuque, by a visiting priest from Galena, Ill., either Rev. John McMahon or his successor, Rev. Charles Fitzmaurice. The latter gathered money to build a church there but died of cholera, as his predecessor had, before he could go on with it. The actual building of the church, that of St. Raphael, was carried out in 1836 by the Dominican, Fr. Samuel Mazuchelli, who was his own architect and gave all he had to the fund he collected. The next year he laid the corner-stone of St. Anthony’s church in Davenport, and the following year the Rev. August Brickwede of Quincy, Ill., encouraged the building of St. James church, a log structure, on Sugar Creek near Fort Madison; in 1838 St. Joseph’s Mission was founded at Council Bluffs by Fr. Pierre de Smet, S.J. The work of those pioneers was developed under the administration of the first bishop, Rt. Rev. Matthew Loras, a native of Lyons, France. The state comprises the Archdiocese of Dubuque, and the dioceses of Davenport, Sioux City, and Des Moines (qq.v.). Catholic influence on place-names of the state is shown in the following: St. Ansar, St. Anthony, St. Bonedict, St. Charles, St. Donatus, St. Lucas, St. Marys, St. Olaf. The Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in Iowa:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Church Type</th>
<th>Membership</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Catholic Church</td>
<td>262,013</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>126,036</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disciples of Christ</td>
<td>73,237</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.</td>
<td>59,311</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northern Baptist Convention</td>
<td>44,939</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congregational Churches</td>
<td>39,524</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran Synod of Iowa</td>
<td>27,556</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran United Norwegian Church</td>
<td>19,331</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran General Council</td>
<td>14,289</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>German Evangelical Synod</td>
<td>13,353</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Brethren in Christ</td>
<td>12,672</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran Norwegian Synod</td>
<td>10,263</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints</td>
<td>9,878</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Presbyterian Church</td>
<td>9,588</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Protestant Episcopal Church</td>
<td>8,126</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friends (Orthodox)</td>
<td>7,797</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reformed Church in America</td>
<td>7,975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All Other Denominizations</td>
<td>91,571</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Church Membership</td>
<td>967,554</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

—C. E.; Shea.

Ira justa Conditoris, or He who once, in Righteous Vengeance, hymn for Matins on 1 July, feast of the Most Precious Blood. The author is unknown, but it was written in the 17th century. Of the four translations the one given in Britt is by E. Caswall. The fifth verse reads:

When before the Judge we tremble,
Conscious of His broken laws,
May this Blood, in that dread hour,
Cry aloud, and plead our cause;
Bid our guilty terrors cease,
Be our pardon and our peace.

Iraqu (MESOPOTAMIA), independent monarchy of southwestern Asia in the region of the Tigris and Euphrates rivers, between Persia and northern Arabia, comprising the former Turkish vilayets of Baghdad, Basra, and Mosul; area, 143,250 sq. m.; pop., 2,249,282. Christianity was probably introduced among the Mesopotamian Arabs toward the middle of the 2nd century, and flourished in spite of persecution by the Sassanian kings of Persia who subjugated the region. Thenceforth the history of Christianity in Iraq, including the adoption of Nestorianism, followed that of Persia, until Iraq was captured by the Turks in the 16th century, when most of the inhabitants became Mohammedan. The country was freed from Turkish domination during the World War, and in 1928 was established as an independent state. Catholic statistics:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Rite</th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Chrs.</th>
<th>Ps.</th>
<th>Stra.</th>
<th>Cath.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Armenian Rite</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mardin, A.</td>
<td>1850</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>16</td>
<td>6,600</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amida, D.</td>
<td>1859</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>150</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Karpath, D.</td>
<td>1850</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>100</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chaldean Rite</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Babylonia, P.</td>
<td>1681</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>7,260</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amida, A.</td>
<td>1833</td>
<td>9</td>
<td>12</td>
<td>4,180</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kerklit, A.</td>
<td>1855</td>
<td>11</td>
<td>19</td>
<td>6,840</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gesheir, D.</td>
<td>1855</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>6,400</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mardin, D.</td>
<td>1852</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>1,670</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mosul, A.</td>
<td>1860</td>
<td>27</td>
<td>85</td>
<td>31,900</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zakho, D.</td>
<td>1850</td>
<td>20</td>
<td>13</td>
<td>4,880</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Syrian Rite</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bagdad, A.</td>
<td>1862</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>1,200</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mardin and Amida, P.</td>
<td>1888</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>27</td>
<td>3,000</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gesheir, D.</td>
<td>1865</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>2,000</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mosul, A.</td>
<td>1790</td>
<td>50</td>
<td>20</td>
<td>7,100</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Latin Rite</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bagdad, mission</td>
<td>1848</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>54,000</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mardin, mission</td>
<td>1896</td>
<td>9</td>
<td>9</td>
<td>4,000</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mosul, mission</td>
<td>1750</td>
<td>187</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>92,020</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Ireland, an island comprising: the Irish Free State, a self-governing dominion of the British Empire; and Northern Ireland, or the Six Counties (Antrim, Armagh, Down, Fermanagh, Londonderry, Tyrone, and the Parliamentary boroughs of Belfast and Londonderry) with a separate Parliament and executive government. Area: Irish Free State, 26,592 sq. m.; Northern Ireland, 5237 sq. m.; Pop.: Irish Free State, 2,972,802; Northern Ireland, 2,537,632. St. Patrick, the apostle of Ireland, was sent there by Pope Celestine in 432. Arriving in a pagan land he first preached to the leaders, realizing that when they were converted the people would follow. He labored in practically every part of Ireland, built 365 churches, consecrated as many bishops, ordained native priests, founded convents and schools, held councils, and made Christianity the predominant religion. As early as 450 a college had been erected at Armagh, and schools at Kildare, Nobinord, and Louth, where priests were trained. In the 6th century many monastic establishments arose; notably Clonard, founded by St. Finian, Clonfert by St. Brendan, Bangor by St. Comgall, Clonmacnoise by St. Siobhan; Arran by St. Enda; and in the 7th century, Liomore by St. Carthage and Glendalough by St. Kevin. By the 7th century paganism had for the most part disappeared and the monastic schools flourished. Laboring with St. Patrick were many holy bishops, monks, anchorites, and nuns. Among the latter, the names of St. Brigid, St. Ita, and St. Fanecha are famous for their lives of sanctity and sacrifice and the number of convents they founded. St. Columba, who founded the monastery of Iona, Scotland, and numerous other missionaries were natives of Ireland who went to Scotland to spread the true faith. Aidan and his Irish colleagues went into England to surpass the zeal of the Roman missionaries under St. Augustine and to evangelize.
Northumbria, Mercia, and Essex. About 590 St. Columbanus with 12 companions went to France, where they established the monastery of Luxeuil, later labored at Bregenz, Switzerland, and finally built the monastery of Bobbio, long the most prominent of northern Italy. Meanwhile St. Gall was laboring in Switzerland, St. Fridolin along the Rhine, St. Fiacre near Meaux, St. Killian at Würzburg, St. Livinus in Brabant, St. Fursey on the Marne, and St. Cataldus in southern Italy.

When the Danes invaded Ireland they sacked and plundered churches and monasteries, desecrated the altars, and killed priests and monks. Under the Anglo-Norman rulers the Irish were oppressed, their churches and schools were neglected, and their culture ignored. With the accession of Henry VIII conditions grew worse; the king proclaimed himself head of the Church, the clergy were deprived of the right of voting, church property and the monasteries were confiscated. The people, however, could not be won from their faith and refused to accept the apostate clergy and the heretical tenets which Henry offered. His successor, Edward VI, endeavored to make Ireland Protestant, but all traces of his efforts were wiped out by the Catholic Queen Mary, so that at Elizabeth's succession all Ireland was Catholic. Under her, persecution was revived and many holy persons were tortured for their religious beliefs. Intolerance continued under James I; the clergy were banished from the kingdom, Bp. O'Devany of Down and others were put to death, and the Acts of Supremacy and Uniformity were rigorously enforced. Charles I followed the policy of his predecessor. In Aug., 1649, Oliver Cromwell came to Ireland with 10,000 men; there was no opposition to his landing and no attempt made to relieve Drogheda. It was soon captured by Cromwell, and its inhabitants and garrison cruelly massacred; a month later the same fate befell Wexford. When Cromwell left Ireland, May, 1650, Munster and Leinster were in his hands, and within two years his successors reduced the remaining provinces. Cromwell's death in 1658 was welcome news to Ireland, all the more so because Charles II (1660-85) was restored. The Irish had suffered much for attachment to the cause of Charles, and felt assured that the recovery of their property and homes was at hand. By the Act of Settlement, the Catholics were restored to their lands, and more would have been restored if the court of claims had continued its sittings, but through the influence of the Marquis of Ormond, who hated the Catholics, it closed its doors with 3000 cases untried. One of Charles's last acts was to dismiss him from office as an enemy to toleration. He was succeeded by James II, a staunch Catholic. When he ascended the throne, he appointed Catholics to high positions, opened the corporations and universities to them, had a papal nuncio at his court, and suspended the penal laws. This good fortune was only temporary, however, for James was forced to flee and leave the throne to William of Orange, under whom Protestant ascendency was secured. King William's Parliament formed new and more drastic penal laws, yet the Catholics clung to their faith and Catholicity progressed. About the middle of the 18th century the Catholics showed such loyalty in supporting Grattan in his fight for legislative independence, and subscribing money to equip a volunteer force to protect Ireland against invasion, that religious toleration was favored and penal legislation ceased. In 1771 Catholics were allowed to hold reclaimed bog under lease; the oath of allegiance was substituted for the oath of supremacy in 1774; in 1778 Catholics were permitted to hold all lands under lease; and in 1782 they became free to build Catholic schools and to assist at Mass. Parliamentary and municipal franchise was granted to Catholics by the Act of 1793, admitting them to the universities and civil and military positions and removing all restrictions in regard to the tenure of land. By the Catholic Relief Bill of 1829 legal proscription ceased for the Catholic Church and Catholics were placed on a level with other denominations and admitted within the pale of the constitution.

The operation of the Home Rule Act, agitated for so many years, was delayed by the outbreak of the World War. In 1916 the Easter Rebellion roused the national consciousness and the Sinn Fein movement began to spread rapidly. The Republicans, in 1918, established a Parliament of their own, the Dail Eireann or O'Donovan of the Irish Republic. After two years of uprisings and widespread guerilla warfare between British and Irish, a truce was finally declared in 1921. On 6 Dec., 1921, an agreement was signed by a few Republicans and Lloyd George by which an Irish Free State was established, with northeast Ulster remaining a separate state. The following year the Free State was formally constituted a dominion and a constitution was formed by which Ireland is ruled by a governor-general appointed by Britain, an executive council, and a legislature of two houses. The Irish government controls the constitutional, army, education, taxes, excise, post-office, telegraph, and telephone; the British government is permitted the use of certain Irish ports for naval purposes and sites for airplane stations. The members of the Irish Parliament swear allegiance to the Irish Free State as by (British) law established and fidelity to the king. The present condition of the Irish Free State is peaceful and prosperous; its government is imbued with the spirit of the best Catholic rulers of the past, and conserves the moral as well as the material welfare of the people.

Ireland in 1929 comprised the following ecclesiastical divisions: archbishoprics of Armagh, Cashel and Emly, Dublin, Tuam; dioceses of Achenry, Ardaugh, Clogher, Clonfert, Cloyne, Cork, Derry, Down and Connor, Dromore, Elphin, Ferns, Galway (Kilmacduagh and Kilkennora), Kerry (Ardfert and Aghadae), Kildare and Leighlin, Killala, Killaloe, Killmore, Limerick, Meath, Ossory, Raphoe, Ross, Waterford and Lismore (qq.v.). Statistics: 2469 churches, 3226 secular priests, 764 regular priests, 26 universities and colleges, 15 seminaries, 60 high schools, 2760 primary schools, 132 charitable institutions, and a Catholic population of 4,290,219.

--C.E.
IRELAND

1852, and founded, 1854. The Irish hierarchy, acting through a committee, constituted the supreme governing body, and John Henry Newman was appointed rector. University College and the Catholic University school of medicine are now merged in the new University College, Dublin, which is the leading constituent college of the National University, established, 1896.—C.E., XV, 199.

Ireland, John (1838-1918), Abp. of St. Paul, b. Kilkenny, Ireland; d. St. Paul, Minn. He came to St. Paul in 1852 with his parents, and made his ecclesiastical studies (1853-64) at the Seminary of Belley, France. In 1861 he was chaplain of the 5th Minnesota Regiment in the Civil War. Subsequently he was Vicar Apostolic of Nebraska, and coadjutor Bp. of St. Paul, and on 15 May, 1888, was consecrated archbishop. He organized a systematic movement for the colonization of different parts of Minnesota, and various settlements owe their origin and prosperity to his labors. Abp. Ireland was a potent factor in the development of the Church in the Northwest, and he exercised a strong influence at Washington in matters in which religion was concerned, such as the Indian Missions, and the Church properties in Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines.

Irenæus (Gr., peaceful), Saint, martyr, Father of the Church (130-202), Bp. of Lyons, b. Proconsular Asia; d. Lyons, France. Instructed by St. Polycarp, he became a priest at Lyons; in 177 he was sent on a mission to Rome; succeeded to the See of Lyons; and made many converts. Most of his writings are directed against Gnosticism which was then prevalent throughout Gaul; his relation to St. Polycarp, the disciple of St. John, gave greater importance to his works. Head in St. John's church, Lyons. Feast, R. Cal., 28 June.—C.E.; Butler.

Irene, Sister (Catherine Fitzgibbon; 1823-1896), b. London; d. New York. Having emigrated to the United States she joined the Sisters of Charity in 1850. In 1869 she was entrusted with the establishment of what is now known as the New York Foundling Hospital. She also founded St. Anne's Maternity Hospital, 1883, and the Seton Hospital for Consumptives.—C.E.

Iringa, Prefecture Apostolic of, Tanganyika Territory, Eastern Africa; established, 1922, by division from the Vicariate of Dar-es-Salaam; includes the districts of Ugozo and Uchebe; entrusted to the Consolata Missionaries of Turin. Prefect Apostolic: Francesco Cagliero (1922); residence at Tosaamonga. Catholics, 1819.

Irish College (Rome). The idea of foundation, originating with Gregory XIII, was revived, 1825, by the Irish bishops in an address to Urban VIII. Founded, 1628, by Card. Ludovisi, it became known as the nursery of bishops; in 1796 it was closed by order of Napoleon, but revived by brief of Leo XII, 1826. The present building dates from 1835.—C.E.

Irish Colleges (on the Continent), founded to train secular clergy, during the religious persecutions of Elizabeth and James I. They were established at Salamanca, Seville, Madrid, Acaías, Santiago de Compostella, Lisbon, Louvain, Antwerp, Tournai, Douai, Lille, Bordeaux, Toulouse, Nantes, Poitiers, and Paris.—C.E.

Irish Ecclesiastical Record, a monthly journal founded, 1864, by Card. Cullen, with Dr. Conroy and Dr. Moran as editors. As its motto “Ut Christiani, ita et Romani sitis” (As Christians, so also Romans), implies, it was established as a link between Rome and Ireland. Both editors having been appointed bishops, 1871, it passed to other hands and in 1876 was allowed to lapse; publication was resumed, 1880, from Maynooth College where it is still published under episcopal supervision. Among its contributors have been some of the most prominent authorities on Catholic history and doctrine.

Irish Monthly, a Jesuit publication, founded, 1873, having the longest continuous existence of any Irish Catholic magazine. Its success was largely due to Rev. Matthew Russell, S.J., who filled the editorial chair for 38 years. It contains articles on subjects of current interest, short pieces of fiction and poetry; it is credited with the discovery of Oscar Wilde, “M. E. Francis,” Hilaire Belloc, and other prominent writers.

Irish Sisters of Charity, a congregation founded in Dublin, 1815, by Mother Mary Augustine Aikenhead, for the care of the poor and the sick in their own homes and the direction of charitable institutions. The rule followed is that of St. Ignatius. The congregation has about 60 houses, including hospitals, asylums, rescue homes, homes for the unemployed, orphanages, primary and industrial schools and other institutions in Ireland, Australia, and England. The mother-house is at Dublin; the total number of religious exceeds 500, there being 418 in Australia alone.—C.E., I, 234.

Iron Crown of Lombardy, legendary diadem of Constantine preserved at Monza, consisting of an inner iron band 6 in. in diameter, enclosed in a circle of 6 plates of gold, richly decorated with jewels and enamel. The iron band is said to be made from a nail of the Holy Cross.

Irregularity (Lat., irregularitas, irregulum, rule; not according to rule), an impediment introduced by ecclesiastical law preventing one from entering the clerical state, or from the exercise of any orders already received. The Church intends irregularities as pertaining to the common law of the Church.—C.E.; American Ecclesiastical Review, 1927-28; P.C. Augustine. (F. T. B.)

Irremovability (Lat., inremovere, to remove), the quality of not being liable to, or capable of, displacement; in Canon Law, a quality of the tenure of certain offices, e.g., the episcopal or the parochial, in virtue of which an incumbent cannot be removed without a just cause.—C.E.

Irvingites, popular designation of the followers of Edward Irving (1792-1834), a former Scottish Presbyterian minister; their official title is the Isaiah, prophet, son of Amos, and himself father of two sons, called to the office of prophet 738 B.C. as he describes in his prophecy (Is., 6). He was probably a counselor at court under Ezechias. Jewish tradition makes him a martyr for his religion some time after 683. Jerome regards him as more evangelist than prophet because of his frequent explicit references to the Messias and His Kingdom. He prophesied at a time of religious disorder and excitement. Ezechias was suppressing the idolatry fostered by Achaiz. The Assyrians were invading Galilee and Palestine. Babylon fell, 689 B.C. Political parties were advocating relations with Egypt, Babylonia, Ethiopia. It was part of the prophetic office of Isaias to guide Juda in all this. He prophesied the downfall of Israel, Syria, Assyria; the birth of Emmanuel and the coming and days of the Messias; misfortunes of Babylonia, Moab, Egypt, Arabia, Ethiopia, the Messianic Kingdom in Jerusalem, the redemption of Israel. Chapters 36 and 37 are historical. The remaining 19 chapters foretell that Cyrus will liberate Israel from Babylonia, the sufferings of the Messias, and His Kingdom. The historian Josephus narrates that Cyrus knew of the prophecy and was moved by it to free Israel. The Biblical Commission, 29 June, 1908, decided that Isaias is the real author of the book and that he uttered real prophecies, not merely political conjectures. The prophecies are read in the Divine Office during Advent, and are a good preparation for Christmas. They are often quoted and contain many sublime passages concerning the birth, office, characteristics, and Kingdom of Christ, and passages of great paths concerning His Passion.—C.E.

Isidore, SAINT, confessor, Doctor of the Church (560-636), Bp. of Seville, b. Cartagena, Spain; d. Seville. He was younger brother to Sts. Pulcentius of Astigi and Florentina, and succeeded his brother Leander to the See of Seville in 599. During his episcopacy he devoted his energies to promoting science, establishing schools, and converting, and welding into a homogeneous nation the various peoples... composing the Hispano-Gothic kingdom. He presided over the synod of Seville, 673, and the synod of Toledo, 683. He is important for his literary work, and mastered all branches of knowledge of his day. Emblems: bees and a pen. Relics in own church, Leon. Feast, R. Cal., 4 April.—C.E.; Butler.

Isidore the Laborer, Saint, confessor (1070-1130), b. near Madrid; d. there. He was a laborer, employed on a farm outside the city. His wife was St. Maria Torribia. Isidore was favored with eccelesial visions, assisted in his work by angels, and is said to have restored to life the deceased daughter of his master. Many miracles followed after his death. Patron of peasants and day-laborers, also of Madrid, Leon, Saragossa, and Seville. Emblems: a spade and sheaf. Canonized, 1622. Relics in the church of St. Andrew, Madrid. Feast, 15 May.—C.E.; Butler.

Isla de Los Apostolos (Isle of the Apostles), original name of Long Island, N. Y., given to it by the Spaniards in 1525.

Islam (Ar., Aslama, to surrender), the religion of Mohammed and of the Koran; ethically, the surrender of the will to God. Its professors are called Musulman (Muslim, one who has surrendered), believers. Sometimes divided into Iman or Faith, and Din or Practical Religion. See Koran, Mohammedism.—C.E.

Islip, Simon (d. 1306), Abp. of Canterbury, b. Islip, near Oxford, England; d. Mayfield. After holding several important ecclesiastical posts he entered the service of Edward III as one of the royal chaplains, and enjoyed the confidence of the king in diplomatic and political matters. Made Abp. of Canterbury, 1349, he did not hesitate to resist the royal exactions, despite his intimacy with the king, and addressed to Edward a vigorous protest on the subject. He was a munificent benefactor of Oxford and founded a college which was subsequently absorbed by Card. Wolsey in his foundation of Christ Church.—C.E.

Ismael, is'ma-îl (Ishmael), the son of Abraham and the Egyptian Agar (q.v.). In his boyhood he and his mother were sent into the wilderness by Abraham at the request of Sara his wife, a request to which he was directed by God to accede. Ismael was saved by Divine intervention from perishing of drought, lived in the wilderness of Paran, became famous as an archer, and married an Egyptian wife. The Arabs regard themselves as his descendants.—C.E.

Ismaelites, a group of tribes akin to the Hebrews, descended from Ismael, the father of twelve sons. They occupied the wilderness south of Palestine and a large part of central and North Arabia; there are found among them two types of Arabs, the fierce Bedouin and the almost civilized Arab, who engages in commerce. Some were itinerant caravan-traders, and it was to one of these that Joseph was sold by his brethren (Gen., 37).

Israel, iz'ra-îl (Heb., pinesh, he that strives with God), the name given to Jacob after wrestling with the Angel (Gen., 32). His descendants called themselves “Sons of Israel” (Be-ne Yis-ra-el), and spoke of their nation as “Israel.” Their neighbors called them “Hebrews” (Ibh-ri), which name they accordingly adopted when speaking about themselves to others not of their nation (Gen., 39; Ex., 1; 1 Kings, 4). (b. w.)

Israel, Kingdom of, formed by the ten tribes which seceded from Roboam, the son of Solomon (c. B.C., 929). Its history is one continuous warfare. Internal disturbances were frequent; Juda and Syria were a constant menace; finally Assyria invaded the kingdom and destroyed it, after capturing the capital Samaria, B.C. 722 (4 Kings, 17). It is sometimes called the Kingdom of Ephraim or the Northern Kingdom. List of kings: Jeroboam, Nadab, Baasa, Ela, Zambri, Amri, Achab, Ochozias, Joram, Jehu, Joachaz, Joas, Jeroboam II, Zacharias, Selum, Manahem, Phaceia, Phacee, Osee. (b. w.)

Israelites, descendants of the patriarch Jacob, or Israel. See Jews.—C.E.

Issachar, i'sh-ar (Heb., reward), ninth son of Jacob, fifth son of Lia. He was given the name Issachar, by his mother at his birth (Gen., 30). Issachar had four sons: Thola, Phuah, Jashub, and Semron, whose descendants formed the tribe of Issachar (Num., 26). In the time of Moses the tribe counted 54,400 men capable of going forth to battle (Num., 2). The character of the tribe is told in the words of Jacob (Gen., 49): satisfied with the richness of its territory, through which passed numerous caravans, the tribe of Issachar thought only of its own well-being; and so, rendering itself subordinate to strangers, found slavery (rest) preferable to liberty. (Y. J. L.)

Iste Confessor Domini collentes, or This the Confessor of the Lord, whose triumph, hymn for Vespers and Matins for the Common of confessors (bishops and not bishops). This hymn was written in the 8th century by an unknown author. It has 12 translations; the English title given is the first line of a cento from “The Hymner.”—Britt.

Iste quem laeti colimus, or Worshipped throughout the Church to Earth’s far ends, hymn for Lauds on 19 March, feast of St. Joseph; written in the 17th century by an unknown author. Five translations are in existence; the English title given is by E. Caswall.—Britt.

Italo-Greeks, a group of about 50,000 Byzantine Uniates (see Uniat Churches), scattered in southern Italy and its islands, with about 20,000 immigrants in the United States. They comprise the original Greek-speaking inhabitants of southern Italy, which was withdrawn from the jurisdiction of Rome and given to the Patriarch of Constantinople by Emperor Leo the Isaurian in 726. The Byzantine Rite was made obligatory in 968, but the Norman Conquest (11th century) and the attempt to restore the Latin Rite, which began in the 11th century and continued for six centuries, prevented these people from being drawn into the Greek Schism; they always remained faithful to the pope. In 1467, 1506, and 1517 the immigration of the Albanians into lower Italy encouraged those who still clung to the Byzantine Rite. The Italo-Greeks have a famous monastery near Rome (Grottaferrata), and colonies in France, Malta, and Africa. They have churches in New York City and elsewhere in the United States.—C.E.

Italy, independent monarchy of southern Europe; area, 119,714 sq. m.; est. pop., 40,584,585. Christianity was introduced in Rome by St. Peter and St. Paul a few years after the Crucifixion, and was soon extended to all parts of Italy, with converts from all ranks, so that it was strongly established before the time of Constantine. Milan, Aquileia, and Ravenna gained ecclesiastical importance, and synods were frequent during the 4th and 5th centuries, especially in Rome. Unity with Constantinople was broken by the Aecian schism (484-519) which foreshadowed the great Eastern Schism. After a period of occupation by the Goths, Italy again became part of the Roman Empire, subject to the Cesaropapism and later the culpable neglect of the Byzantine rulers, until Pepin and Charlemagne were summoned by the popes to save Rome from the Lombards. Through the gifts of the German rulers, the generosity of the people, and the need of self-defense the States of the Church were established in Italy. In the second half of the 11th century arose the long conflict between the papacy and the German empire which had made use of the episcopal sees in northern and central Italy to maintain its claim to dominion over the peninsula. With the support of the Lombard League of Cities and the Normans in the south, the papacy was victorious in the first phase of the struggle. The second phase, arising from the union of the imperial crown with the royal crown of Sicily, resulted in the ruin of the Hohenstaufens. In the 13th century religious life was strengthened by the foundation of the mendicant orders and the rise of the great universities, as Bologna and Padua, under the patronage of the Hohenstaufens. In the 13th century religious, ecclesiastical, and theological activities in Italy, independent monarchy of southern Europe, reached the height of its temporal power. In the following century with removal of the papal residence to Avignon, Italy became again part of the Holy Roman Empire, subject to the power of despots who dominated for selfish ends the civil government of Italy. In 1929 through the efforts of Benito Mussolini the government signed a pact with the Vatican recognizing the pope's rightful claim to sovereignty, thus settling the Italian question which had been the cause of incessant hostility between Church and State.

The ecclesiastical administration, which comprises 282 sees, is thus divided:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Alto-Adige</td>
<td>1203</td>
<td>167</td>
<td>171</td>
<td>45</td>
<td>147,900</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aosta</td>
<td>968</td>
<td>129</td>
<td>107</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>100,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Padua</td>
<td>1818</td>
<td>104</td>
<td>120</td>
<td>60</td>
<td>96,500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vicenza</td>
<td>1968</td>
<td>91</td>
<td>170</td>
<td>66</td>
<td>67,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Verona</td>
<td>c.239</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>52</td>
<td>43</td>
<td>48,300</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Verona</td>
<td>1844</td>
<td>395</td>
<td>445</td>
<td>225</td>
<td>148,727</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aquapendente</td>
<td>1849</td>
<td>70</td>
<td>62</td>
<td>49</td>
<td>21,816</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Matera</td>
<td>547</td>
<td>77</td>
<td>104</td>
<td>86</td>
<td>35,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aosta</td>
<td>355</td>
<td>62</td>
<td>160</td>
<td>60</td>
<td>25,500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Altamura</td>
<td>1604</td>
<td>80</td>
<td>80</td>
<td>40</td>
<td>42,700</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amalfi</td>
<td>987</td>
<td>271</td>
<td>50</td>
<td>50</td>
<td>50,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ameliea</td>
<td>1987</td>
<td>78</td>
<td>51</td>
<td>64</td>
<td>21,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anagni</td>
<td>1847</td>
<td>50</td>
<td>112</td>
<td>113</td>
<td>45,650</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Umassina</td>
<td>1904</td>
<td>85</td>
<td>110</td>
<td>115</td>
<td>90,694</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Apulia</td>
<td>1876</td>
<td>245</td>
<td>229</td>
<td>100</td>
<td>115,720</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aquino, Sora, and</td>
<td>1826</td>
<td>323</td>
<td>309</td>
<td>90</td>
<td>176,400</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pontecorvo</td>
<td>1828</td>
<td>438</td>
<td>549</td>
<td>147</td>
<td>225,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arezzo</td>
<td>305</td>
<td>229</td>
<td>126</td>
<td>150</td>
<td>130,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assisi</td>
<td>1240</td>
<td>190</td>
<td>299</td>
<td>299</td>
<td>32,815</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aversa</td>
<td>1049</td>
<td>377</td>
<td>650</td>
<td>29</td>
<td>125,900</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bagnoceggi</td>
<td>c.990</td>
<td>107</td>
<td>62</td>
<td>72</td>
<td>30,400</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barl</td>
<td>530</td>
<td>261</td>
<td>290</td>
<td>290</td>
<td>400,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conversano, D.</td>
<td>487</td>
<td>139</td>
<td>121</td>
<td>130</td>
<td>84,986</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ruvo and Bisento</td>
<td>1818</td>
<td>82</td>
<td>69</td>
<td>66</td>
<td>35,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Beattesima Vergine</td>
<td>1928</td>
<td>463</td>
<td>874</td>
<td>129</td>
<td>500,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maria del Santissimo Rosario in Valle di Pompei, P.N.</td>
<td>486</td>
<td>54</td>
<td>58</td>
<td>16</td>
<td>25,140</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td>1070</td>
<td>92</td>
<td>172</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>50,900</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Alfie</td>
<td>1818</td>
<td>109</td>
<td>108</td>
<td>58</td>
<td>70,115</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ariano</td>
<td>907</td>
<td>181</td>
<td>65</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>100,960</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ascelli Simbra and Cetinella, D.</td>
<td>1061</td>
<td>30</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>35,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lainone</td>
<td>960</td>
<td>57</td>
<td>111</td>
<td>26</td>
<td>67,620</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lucera</td>
<td>c.990</td>
<td>110</td>
<td>207</td>
<td>60</td>
<td>190,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ITALY</td>
<td>Emilia</td>
<td>Marche</td>
<td>Sardinia</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------</td>
<td>--------</td>
<td>--------</td>
<td>---------</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aquila</td>
<td>Emilia San Donnino</td>
<td>Abbr. null.</td>
<td>Cagliari</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marsi</td>
<td>Albino</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Iglesias</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frosinone and Atri</td>
<td>Frosinone</td>
<td>Bb</td>
<td>Noto</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Teramo</td>
<td>Teramo</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Trivento</td>
<td>Trivento</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Valva and Sulmona</td>
<td>Valva</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chieti</td>
<td>Chieti</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vasto</td>
<td>Vasto</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lanciano</td>
<td>Lanciano</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ortona</td>
<td>Ortona</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Basilicata and Salernitano</td>
<td>Basilicata and Salernitano</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amalfi</td>
<td>Amalfi</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Campania</td>
<td>Campania</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cava and Sarno</td>
<td>Cava and Sarno</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Metelli and Rapolla</td>
<td>Metelli and Rapolla</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abb. null. SS. Trinità di Cava de' Trenchi</td>
<td>Abb. null. SS. Trinità di Cava de' Trenchi</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acerenza and Matera</td>
<td>Acerenza and Matera</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Anglona and Tursi</td>
<td>Anglona and Tursi</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Potenza</td>
<td>Potenza</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tricarico</td>
<td>Tricarico</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Venosa</td>
<td>Venosa</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conza</td>
<td>Conza</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lacedonia</td>
<td>Lacedonia</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Muro Lucano</td>
<td>Muro Lucano</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sant' Angelo dei Lombardi and Bisaccia</td>
<td>Sant' Angelo dei Lombardi and Bisaccia</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salerno</td>
<td>Salerno</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acerenza and Vallo</td>
<td>Acerenza and Vallo</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Diano</td>
<td>Diano</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Marsico Nuovo</td>
<td>Marsico Nuovo</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nocera dei Pagani</td>
<td>Nocera dei Pagani</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nocera</td>
<td>Nocera</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Policastro</td>
<td>Policastro</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abb. null. Montevergine</td>
<td>Abb. null. Montevergine</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Albano</td>
<td>Albano</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Assisi</td>
<td>Assisi</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ascoli and Acrignola</td>
<td>Ascoli and Acrignola</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Avellino</td>
<td>Avellino</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Campobasso and Rosano</td>
<td>Campobasso and Rosano</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bovino</td>
<td>Bovino</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Suburbarian Sea</td>
<td>Suburbarian Sea</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ostia</td>
<td>Ostia</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Albano</td>
<td>Albano</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frascati</td>
<td>Frascati</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palestra</td>
<td>Palestra</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Porto and Santa Rufina</td>
<td>Porto and Santa Rufina</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabina and Poggio Mirteto</td>
<td>Sabina and Poggio Mirteto</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Velletri</td>
<td>Velletri</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Suburbarian Sea</td>
<td>Suburbarian Sea</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ostia</td>
<td>Ostia</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Albano</td>
<td>Albano</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frascati</td>
<td>Frascati</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palestra</td>
<td>Palestra</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Porto and Santa Rufina</td>
<td>Porto and Santa Rufina</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabina and Poggio Mirteto</td>
<td>Sabina and Poggio Mirteto</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Velletri</td>
<td>Velletri</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Suburbarian Sea</td>
<td>Suburbarian Sea</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ostia</td>
<td>Ostia</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Albano</td>
<td>Albano</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frascati</td>
<td>Frascati</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palestra</td>
<td>Palestra</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Porto and Santa Rufina</td>
<td>Porto and Santa Rufina</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabina and Poggio Mirteto</td>
<td>Sabina and Poggio Mirteto</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Velletri</td>
<td>Velletri</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Suburbarian Sea</td>
<td>Suburbarian Sea</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ostia</td>
<td>Ostia</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Albano</td>
<td>Albano</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frascati</td>
<td>Frascati</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palestra</td>
<td>Palestra</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Porto and Santa Rufina</td>
<td>Porto and Santa Rufina</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabina and Poggio Mirteto</td>
<td>Sabina and Poggio Mirteto</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Velletri</td>
<td>Velletri</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Suburbarian Sea</td>
<td>Suburbarian Sea</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ostia</td>
<td>Ostia</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Albano</td>
<td>Albano</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Frascati</td>
<td>Frascati</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Palestra</td>
<td>Palestra</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Porto and Santa Rufina</td>
<td>Porto and Santa Rufina</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sabina and Poggio Mirteto</td>
<td>Sabina and Poggio Mirteto</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Velletri</td>
<td>Velletri</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Agera</td>
<td>Bc</td>
<td>Piazza Armerina</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Calabria</td>
<td>Campania</td>
<td>Liguria</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>------------------</td>
<td>------------------</td>
<td>----------</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cantanzaro</td>
<td>Caserta</td>
<td>Gaeta</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cosenza</td>
<td>Cosenza</td>
<td>Aversa</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rossano</td>
<td>Cassano all' Ionio</td>
<td>Aversa</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Crotone</td>
<td>Crotone</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lungro (Byzantine Rite)</td>
<td>Eufemiano</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mileto</td>
<td>Mileto</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>S. Marco and Bisignano</td>
<td>Eufemiano</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reggio</td>
<td>Reggio</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bova</td>
<td>Bova</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cassano all' Ionio</td>
<td>Cassano all' Ionio</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gerace</td>
<td>Gerace</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nisastro</td>
<td>Nisastro</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Oppido Manesino</td>
<td>Oppido Manesino</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nicotera and Tropea</td>
<td>Nicotera and Tropea</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Squillace</td>
<td>Squillace</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Santa Severina</td>
<td>Santa Severina</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cariati</td>
<td>Cariati</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gaeta</td>
<td>Gaeta</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aversa</td>
<td>Aversa</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abb. null. Montecassino and Atina (Prelature)</td>
<td>Abb. null. Montecassino and Atina (Prelature)</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cepa</td>
<td>Cepa</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cassano</td>
<td>Cassano</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Calvaro</td>
<td>Calvaro</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Calvi and Teano</td>
<td>Calvi and Teano</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cosenza</td>
<td>Cosenza</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Isernia and Venafro</td>
<td>Isernia and Venafro</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sessa Aurunca</td>
<td>Sessa Aurunca</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Naples</td>
<td>Naples</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Acer$</td>
<td>Acer$</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ischia</td>
<td>Ischia</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nola</td>
<td>Nola</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Positano</td>
<td>Positano</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Our Lady of the Rosary in Valle Pompea (Prelature)</td>
<td>Our Lady of the Rosary in Valle Pompea (Prelature)</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sorrento</td>
<td>Sorrento</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Castellamare di Stabia</td>
<td>Castellamare di Stabia</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Aquino, Sora and Pontecorvo</td>
<td>Aquino, Sora and Pontecorvo</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bagnoregio</td>
<td>Bagnoregio</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Civita Castellana, Orte and Galvania</td>
<td>Civita Castellana, Orte and Galvania</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ferrentino</td>
<td>Ferrentino</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Montefiascone</td>
<td>Montefiascone</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nepi and Sutri</td>
<td>Nepi and Sutri</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Segni</td>
<td>Segni</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tarquinia and Civitavecchia</td>
<td>Tarquinia and Civitavecchia</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Terracina, Sezze and Piperno</td>
<td>Terracina, Sezze and Piperno</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tivoli</td>
<td>Tivoli</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Viterbo and Tuscania</td>
<td>Viterbo and Tuscania</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Abb. null. San Martino al Monte Cimino</td>
<td>Abb. null. San Martino al Monte Cimino</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>fuori e Mura Dd, Santi Vincentio ed Anastasio Dd, Subiaco Dd</td>
<td>fuori e Mura Dd, Santi Vincentio ed Anastasio Dd, Subiaco Dd</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Genoa</td>
<td>Genoa</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bobbio</td>
<td>Bobbio</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brugnato</td>
<td>Brugnato</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chiavari</td>
<td>Chiavari</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Luni and Sarzana</td>
<td>Luni and Sarzana</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Savona and Noli</td>
<td>Savona and Noli</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tortona</td>
<td>Tortona</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ventimiglia</td>
<td>Ventimiglia</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Milan</td>
<td>Milan</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bergamo</td>
<td>Bergamo</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Brescia</td>
<td>Brescia</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Como</td>
<td>Como</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Crema</td>
<td>Crema</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cremona</td>
<td>Cremona</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lodoli</td>
<td>Lodoli</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mantova</td>
<td>Mantova</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pavia</td>
<td>Pavia</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Barletta</td>
<td>Barletta</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Trani and Barletta</td>
<td>Trani and Barletta</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Andria</td>
<td>Andria</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Biscaglie</td>
<td>Biscaglie</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ferrara</td>
<td>Ferrara</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Emilia</td>
<td>Emilia</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bologna</td>
<td>Bologna</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Faenza</td>
<td>Faenza</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Inola</td>
<td>Inola</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ravenna</td>
<td>Ravenna</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bettono</td>
<td>Bettono</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cervia</td>
<td>Cervia</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cesena</td>
<td>Cesena</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Comacchio</td>
<td>Comacchio</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Forlì</td>
<td>Forlì</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rimini</td>
<td>Rimini</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sarzina</td>
<td>Sarzina</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Udine</td>
<td>Udine</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bressanone</td>
<td>Bressanone</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Fiume</td>
<td>Fiume</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Trento</td>
<td>Trento</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Venice</td>
<td>Venice</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Adria</td>
<td>Adria</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Belluno and Feltria</td>
<td>Belluno and Feltria</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ceneda</td>
<td>Ceneda</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chioggia</td>
<td>Chioggia</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Concordia</td>
<td>Concordia</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Padua</td>
<td>Padua</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Treviso</td>
<td>Treviso</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Verona</td>
<td>Verona</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vicenza</td>
<td>Vicenza</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gorizia and Gradisca</td>
<td>Gorizia and Gradisca</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Trieste and Capo d'Istria</td>
<td>Trieste and Capo d'Istria</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Piamonte and Pola (see also Jugoslavia)</td>
<td>Piamonte and Pola (see also Jugoslavia)</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Zara</td>
<td>Zara</td>
<td>Benevento</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
ITALY

THE CATHEDRAL, ALMENGA
JERUSALEM

VALLEY OF THE CEDRON, AND MT. OLIVET
In Italy

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1800</td>
<td>1800</td>
<td>1800</td>
<td>1800</td>
<td>1800</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

In Holy Europe

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1910</td>
<td>1910</td>
<td>1910</td>
<td>1910</td>
<td>1910</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Ives

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>1920</td>
<td>1920</td>
<td>1920</td>
<td>1920</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Oxford Movement, he founded a religious community called the Brotherhood of the Holy Ghost, later dissolved by the convention of his church, which also cited Bishop Ives for teaching Catholic doctrines. In 1852 he went to Rome and made his submission to the pope. On his return he taught rhetoric at St. Joseph's Seminary, New York, and established the Catholic Protectors of which he was first president.—C.E.

Ivo (IVES or YVES), SAINT, confessor (1253-1303), b. Kermartin, Brittany; d. Louannec. Educated at Paris, he practised law at Rennes and Tréguier, and later joined the Franciscan Tertiaries. Ordained, 1284, he was appointed to the parish of Tredrez and later to Louannec, where he served as bishop's judge, and lawyer of the poor. Patron of lawyers. Emblem: a cat. Canonized, 1347. Relics at Tréguier. Feast, 19 May.—C.E.

Ivo of Chartres, SAINT, confessor (c. 1040-1116), Bp. of Chartres, canonist, b. Beauvais, France. Having studied philosophy at Paris, and theology at the Abbey of Bee in Normandy, he was made provost of the canons of St. Quentin at Beauvais, 1080. Consecrated bishop by Urban II (1090), he became one of the best teachers in France and an authority on theology, liturgy, politics, and canon law. His opposition to the adulterous marriage of Philip I won him a prison cell, 1092. His works are divided into three categories: canonical writings like the “Decretum,” the “Panormia,” composed before 1096, and the “Prologus”; letters on religious and political questions of the day (he took a moderate position in the investiture struggle); and sermons which reveal his piety and science. Relics at Chartres. Feast, 30 May.—C.E.

Ivory, the tusks of the elephant and other animals, a tough, white, elastic substance, capable of a high polish. Since prehistoric times it has been used in the arts: diptychs of ivory are among the first examples of Christian art; plaques were made for book covers; cylindrical pyxes were made of carved ivory; bishops’ chairs were overlaid with the same material. During the Middle Ages pyxes, tabernacles, caskets, statuettes, etc., were made of ivory.—C.E.
Jacob, the son of Isaac and Rebecca, third great patriarch of the chosen people, and the immediate ancestor of the twelve tribes of Israel. He secured through a ruse the blessing which Isaac intended for Esau, and thus was confirmed Jacob's possession of the birthright, his struggle for which had begun before his birth. He fled to Haran, the dwelling place of Laban, his maternal uncle, serving 14 years for Laban's daughter Rachel. He finally departed secretly for Chanaan. After stopping at Bethel and Ephrata (Gen., 35), he came to Hebron where he dwelt quietly, leaving it only to rejoin his son Joseph in Egypt, and to spend his last days in the land of Gessen.—C.E.

Jacobins, political club of French Revolution, originating in the Club Breton at Versailles in 1789, named Jacobins because their meetings were held in the refectory and library of the Dominican monastery, rue St. Honoré, Paris, which they rented. The monks who had been called by this name in France from their first house in rue St. Jacques (Lat., Jacobus), are said to have often attended their assemblies. In 1791 the convent was suppressed by the state, and the Jacobins assembled in the chapel. At first the club did not hold advanced views; later the extremist element became dominant. It was closed after death of Robespierre.

The name came to be applied to all holding radical views, and sometimes even to liberals.

Jacob's Well (Heb., Bir Yakub), or THE WELL OF THE SAMARITAN WOMAN (Heb., Bir Ramasrigy), well on the highroad from Jerusalem, one mile and a half from Nabhls, and almost one mile from the village of Askar or Sichar (John, 4). Here Christ met the Samaritan woman. It is called Jacob's Well because the patriarch who "drank thereof himself, and his children, and his cattle" gave it to the tribe of Joseph. The opening of the well lies now in a crypt of a Crusader's chapel, over which the Greeks have built a church. The well itself is 7½ ft. in diameter, lined with masonry, and is still 75 deep. It seems to be fed by an underground rivulet, which occasionally runs dry in summer. (C. L. S.)

Jacopone da Todi or Jacopo Benedetti or Benedetti (c. 1228-1306), poet, b. Todi, Italy; d. Collazzone. He studied law probably at Bologna, and exercised the profession of advocate at Todi. He married a noblewoman, said to have been Vanna, daughter of Bernardino, Count of Collemmedio, whose tragic death changed the tenor of his life. About 1270 he sought admission into the Order of Friars Minor of his native town, and in the struggle in which the Order was then engaged, took sides against the pope. He was taken captive by the papal troops, and imprisoned (1298-1303). He is the author of a large number of sacred songs known as laudi, among them the Stabat Mater, and with St. Francis he stands at the head of Umbrian poets. His prose works consist mainly of short spiritual treatises.—C.E.

Jaffna, Diocese or, Ceylon, comprises the Northern and the North Central provinces, excepting Tamankaduwa division; area, 6500 sq. m.; erected, 1886; suffragan of Colombo. In 1548 St. Francis Xavier sought relief for the Christians of Jaffna from the persecutions of the king of that city. Bishops: Henri Joulain (1893-1919), Jules Brault (1920-24), and Alfred Guyomard (1924). Churches and chapels, 207; priests, secular, 6; priests, regular, 53; religious women, 90; seminary, 1; schools, 125; institutions, 6; Catholics, 52,351.

Jahveh, or Jehovah, modern pronunciation of the name of God, Jehovah (q.v.), a religious and monastic system of India intermediate between Brahmanism and Buddhism. It is a heresy of the former with such resemblance to Buddhism, in monastic system, teaching and texts, that some classify Jainism as an offshoot originating c. 300 B.C. The prevailing view considers it as independent of Buddhism, and possibly older. The few details known of its founder so resemble Bud­ dha's life that a legend is sus­pected. Tradition states that Jina, 6th century B.C., was the son of a local raja, with family name of Juāṭiputra (in Prakrit, Nattaputta), near Benares. He sacrificed all to follow Brahman asceticism, and was called Mahavira, hero, and Jina, conqueror. He rejected the Vedas and Vedic rites, and became a heretic. With disciples he went about preaching his doctrine, and organized his converts under austere monastic discipline. Less ambitious followers became lay Jainists. The propriety of living naked later split Jainism into two sects. The White-Robed Sect of Northwest India is more numerous and includes communities of nuns. The naked ascetics are in Southern India. The total number of Jainists is not over 500,000. The Jainist creed consists of the so-called three jewels, Right Belief, Right Knowledge, Right Conduct. Right Belief embraces faith in Jina as the true teacher, and acceptance of the Jainist scriptures. The White-Robed Sect's canon consists of 45 Agamas or sacred texts in Prakrit with estimated origin c. 300 B.C. Right Knowledge embraces religious views and the end of man. It accepts the Buddhist doctrine of Karma, and its implied rebirths, and views all earthly, bodily existence as misery. Freedom from rebirth is the goal sought. Its affirmation of a final unending conscious state of positive bliss, stamps it as distinctive. Personal effort applied to purifying the soul by austerity, alone attains man's end. The accepted gods are of no help, hence their worship is rejected. Twelve years as a monk and eight rebirths are necessary. Veneration of Jina and other saints constitutes the sole worship. To these, temples are erected. Right Conduct concerns ethical precepts, and the monastic system. It enforces a strict regard for the preservation of all sensitive life; but permits self-destruction to a monk after long efforts at self-control prove vain.

—C.F.; Jacoby, Sacred Books of the East, Lond., 1895; Hopkins, Religions of India, Bost., 1893; Barth, Religions of India, Lond., 1891.

Jair, jā'īr (Heb., enlightened). (1) A contemporary of Moses, son of Segub. He was related to two of the most powerful families of Israel, through his paternal grandfather, Mezon, in the tribe of Judah, and on the maternal side to the tribe of Manasses (1 Par., 2). Jair acquired glory in the conquest of the promised land, to the east of the Jordan. Placed at the head of valiant men, he conquered all the district of Argeb, even to the borders of Machati (Deut., 3). He took 23 cities in Galaad, and named them, Havoth Jair, or “villages of Jair” (Num., 32). Among the posterity of Jair are mentioned Ira the Jairite, priest of David (2 Kings, 20) and Jair, a judge of Israel. (2) Jair of Galaad, a judge of Israel during 22 years (Judges, 10). He was a vigorous and successful leader, who kept such an approach to royal state, that, as Scripture says, his 30 sons rode like princes, on as many ass colts. Jair possessed in Galaad 30 cities, called Havoth Jair. These cities took their name from Jair, son of Segub, of whom Jair was probably a descendant. He was buried in Canaan.

—F. J. L.

Jairus, DAUGHTER OF, child of a ruler of the synagogue, whom Our Lord raised to life (Mark, 5). “He saith to her: Talitha cumi, which is, being interpreted: Damsel (I say to thee) arise.” This is one of the few cases in which the Bible gives the words of Our Lord as He spoke them in His mother tongue.

Jamaica, colony of the British Empire, in the British West Indies, administered by a Privy and a legislative council; area, 4,450 sq. m.; est. pop., 553,788. Christianity was introduced into Jamaica by the Spaniards who built churches and monasteries wherever they settled. After their expulsion in 1655, and particularly after the Toleration Act of 1688 which granted religious liberty to all except Catholics, the spread of Catholicity was retarded. Freedom of worship was not extended until 1792. An Irish Franciscan, Fr. Quigley, arrived in Jamaica in 1798, and labored as a missionary until his death in 1805. He was followed by two more Franciscans, Frs. Rodriguez d’ Arango, and Campos Benito. In 1837, two Jesuits, Fr. Cotham, an Englishman, and Fr. Dupeyron, a Frenchman, came to the island. Fr. Benito became first Vicar Apostolic of Jamaica. He died in 1855, and at his death in 1865, was succeeded by Fr. Dupeyron, the first Jesuit to be Vicar Apostolic. Since the 19th century the missions have been in charge of Jesuits. Four Sisters of the Third Order Regular of St. Francis reached Jamaica in 1857 to teach the colored children, and soon opened a poor school and an academy. During a cyclone in 1860, the Catholic churches and schools were destroyed, but they have been restored through the generosity of Catholics in the United States and England. The Rt. Rev. Charles Gordon, S.J., D.D., who was appointed Vicar Apostolic in 1888, erected a number of schools, improved Holy Trinity Church, and founded “Gordon Hall” for recreation, instructions and meetings. The hall and the church were both ruined by an earthquake in 1907. Dr. Gordon invited the Salesians to Jamaica, and gave them property for an agricultural college.—C.E.

Jamaica, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OF, Kingston, British West Indies; est. 1837, comprises the Island of Jamaica and its dependencies; Vicars Apostolic: Benito Fernandez (1837-55); James Dupeyron, S.J. (1855-72); James Forrest, S.J. (1872-77); Thomas Porter, S.J. (1877-88); Charles Gordon, S.J. (1889-1906); John J. Collins, S.J., who built the stately cathedral (1907-18); William F. O’Hare, S.J. (1920-56); Joseph N. Dinand, S.J. (1927). Churches, 55; stations, 18; priests (Jesuits), 21; religious women, 71; colleges and academies, 10; elementary schools, 97; pupils in elementary schools, 6,010; industrial schools, 2; institutions, 3; Catholics, 45,000.

Jam Christus astra ascenderat, or Now Christ, ascending whence He came, hymn for Matins on Pentecost and throughout the octave; Ambrosian school, 4th century. There are about 15 translations. The English title given is by J. Neste, —Brit.

James, EPISTLE OF SAINT, the first of the seven so-called “Catholic” Epistles. The author calls himself “James, the servant of God and of our Lord Jesus Christ.” According to almost unanimous tradition, this James was one of the Apostles, the son of Alpheus, known as “James the Apostle” (Gal., 1) and “the brother of the Lord” (Gal., 1), the first Bp. of Jerusalem (cf. Acts, 12; 15; 21), and one of the two “pillars” of the Church (Gal., 2). By the epithet “the Less” he is distinguished from the “brother of John,” the son of Zebedee, known as “James the Elder.” The Epistle was addressed “to the twelve tribes which are scattered abroad,” i.e., Jewish Christians, as a warning against half-heartedness and the spirit of compromise in matters of Christian faith and conduct. The readers are admonished that their faith must manifest itself in good works (2, 20), in patience amid the trials of life (1, 2), in self-mastery, as exemplified in the bridling of the tongue (3, 2), and in detachment from the world (4, 4). Prayer obtains true wisdom and the strength to persevere (1, 5; 5, 13). The contents and spirit of the Epistle indicate that it was most probably written before the year 49, since no mention is made of the problem concerning the relation between Jewish and pagan Christians, which called for set-James, Liturgy of Sr., a development of the Antiochene Rite (q.v.), modified at Jerusalem. It is used in Greek once a year by the Orthodox at Zacynthus and Jerusalem, and in Syria by the Jacobites and the Syrian Uniats.

James II (1633-1701), king of England, Scotland and Ireland, second son of Charles I and Queen Henrietta Maria, b. London; d. St. Germain, France. When Duke of York, he embraced the Catholic faith sometime before 1672 when he was forced by the test act to resign the office of Lord High Admiral. His reign beginning in 1685 lasted 3 years. Under the guidance of his confessor Fr. Edward Petre, S.J., he tried to restore the Catholic religion. He favored Catholics, placing them in high positions, allowing them freedom in the exercise of their religion and forbidding the Anglican clergy to preach against Catholicism. In 1686 he issued the Declaration of Indulgence by which all laws against all classes of nonconformists were suspended and liberty of conscience inaugurated. This met with violent opposition from the Protestant clergy, and resulted in an invitation to William of Orange to assume the government. He was the father of the British navy. —Belloe, James the Second, Lond., 1928.

James of Viraggio, Blessed (c. 1230-1298), Abp. of Genoa, b. Viraggio (now Vareze), near Genoa; d. Genoa. He became a Dominican in 1244 and his reputation for piety, learning, and zeal in the care of souls spread rapidly. After several attempts to evade the episcopal dignity, he was elected the archiepiscopal See of Genoa, 1292, his episcopate falling in the period of dissension between the Guelphs and Ghibellines, whom he sought in vain to reconcile. He is the author of a collection of legendary lives of the saints, entitled the "Golden Legend." His works also include a chronicle of Genoa, a collection of 307 sermons, and a defense of the Dominican Order. Beatified, 1816, Relics in S. Maria di Castello, Genoa. Feast, 15 Sept., feast of the Seven Dolors of Our Lady. —C.E.; Butler.

James the Greater, Saint, Apostle, martyr (44 A.D.), son of Zebedee and Salome, elder brother of John the Baptist, called James the Greater to distinguish him from James the Less who was probably shorter in stature. He became a disciple of John the Baptist and later of the Messiah (Matt., 4; Mark, 1). Our Lord called him and his brother John, "Boanerges" (sons of thunder), on account of their fiery zeal (Luke, 9). He with Peter and John were the three among the Apostles present at the raising of the daughter of Jairus, the Transfiguration, and the Agony. James perished by the sword, under Herod Agrippa (Acts, 12). The Spaniards honor him as the first apostle of their country. Compostela among other places claims to possess his body, said to have been miraculously transported there. Patron of Spain and Chile, of druggists, pilgrims, wax chandlers, laborers; invoked against rheumatism and in war. Emblems: pilgrim's staff, shell, key, sword. Feast, R. Cal., 25 July.—C.E.; Butler.

James the Less, Saint, Apostle, martyr (d. 62 A.D.) son of Alpheus and Mary of Cleophas, who was probably the sister of the Blessed Virgin Mary; he was therefore called "brother of Our Lord"; known as James the Less (Mark, 15) to distinguish him from James the Greater. He was called to the apostolate with his brother Jude in the second year of Christ's ministry (Matt., 10; Mark, 3; Luke, 6; Acts, 1). Our Lord appeared to James before the Ascension (1 Cor., 15). He was appointed by the Apostles Bp. of Jerusalem, and was first beside Peter among the Apostles, assisted at the Council of Jerusalem, 61, and is the author of the Epistle of St. James. He was stoned by the Jews and killed with a fuller's club. Patron of fullers and hatters. Emblems: a square rule, halberd, club. Relics in the church of the Apostles, Rome. Feast, R. Cal., 1 May.—C.E.; Butler.

James Thompson (alias James Hudson), Blessed, martyr (1582), d. York, England. He studied at Card. Allen's college at Reims, and by special dispensation received Holy Orders at Soissons, after one year. Sent on a mission to England, he was arrested at York, professed his priesthood, and was imprisoned, and hanged.—C.E.

James Walworth, Blessed, martyr (1587), d. York, England. He was a Carthusian priest of the London Charterhouse, and was executed with Bl. John Rochester. Feast, 11 May.—C.E.

JAM morte victor obruta, or NOW CHRIST, THE CONQUEROR OF DEATH, hymn for Lauds on 7 Oct., feast of the Most Holy Rosary. It was written in the 18th century by A. Ricchini. There are six translations. The English title given is by the Benedictines of Stanbrook.—Britt.

Jam sol recedit igneus, or AS FADES THE GLOWING ORB OF DAY, hymn for Vespers on Saturday. This is the Roman Breviary text of the hymn; the original text is O Lux Beata Trinitas (q.v.). There are 29 translations of the Roman Breviary text.—Britt.

Jam tuto subitus vesper cat polu, or NOW LET THE DARLING EYE, hymn for Vepers on 15 Sept., feast of the Seven Dolors of Our Lady. It is attributed to Callisto Palumbella who lived in the 18th century. There are six translations; the English title given is by Mgr. Henry.—Britt.

Jane Frances de Chantal, Saint (1572-1641), foundress of the Visitation Congregation, b. Dijon;
d. Visitatior Convent, Moulins. She married Baron de Chantal, 1592, and was left a widow with four children, 1601. While visiting at Dijon, 1604, she heard St. Francis de Sales preach; a correspondence began between them, and he became her spiritual director. Having provided for the welfare of her children, she went to Annecy with her two daughters and established the Congregation of the Visitation, 1610. She spent the rest of her life in the cloister, but supervised the growth of the Order. Eighty-six houses were established before her death. Her literary works comprise letters, and instructions on the religious life. Canonized, 1767. Body in basilica near Annecy. Feast, R. Cal., 21 Aug.—C.E.; Butler.

Jansen, or Jansenius, Cornelis (1585-1638), Bp. of Ypres, author of Jansenism, b. Accoi, Holland; d. Ypres, Belgium. Educated at Utrecht and Louvain, he commenced c. 1604 his friendship with Jean du Verger de Hauranne, with whom he pursued ecclesiastical studies for about 12 years. In 1617 he was appointed president of the Collège de Sainte-Pulchérié, Louvain, and in 1619 received the degree of Doctor of Theology and its five heretical propositions concerning grace were solemnly condemned in 1633. Though Jansen's name was attached to the heresy which arose after the circulation of his book, he was not a heretic but lived and died in the bosom of the Church. The original edition of the “Augustinus” contains a statement of his undying loyalty and submission to the Church.

Jansenism, a theological system named after its author, Cornelius Jansenius, Bp. of Ypres (1585-1638). The essential points of the system are these: human nature has been radically corrupted by original sin; man, not free to resist either the delections of grace, or concupiscence, does good or evil irresistibly, though voluntarily, according as he is dominated by grace or by concupiscence; Christ did not die for all, but only for those who are predisposed to salvation; the sacraments can be received only after long and severe preparation; Communion is looked upon as a reward rather than a remedy, and God should be addressed always with fear and trembling. These tenets, which bear close resemblance to Calvinism, were set forth mostly in two books, the “Augustinus” (1540) of Jansenius, so called because it was supposed to contain the pure doctrine of St. Augustine on the fall of man and on grace, and the book on “Frequent Communion” by Antoine Arnauld (1643). Jansenius had died before his book was published, and the true promoters of Jansenism were Duvergier de Hauranne, Abbot of St. Cyran, and the celebrated Arnauld family, notably Mère Angélique, Abbess of Port-Royal (q.v.) of which de Hauranne was the austere and rigorist chaplain. But judging from the works of the Augustinus were condemned in 1653, a condemnation which the Jansenists tried to evade by having recourse to the famous distinction: the propositions are erroneous indeed, but de facto they are not in the Augustinus. At this juncture the “Provincial Letters” of Pascal (q.v.) brought the controversy before the public and were a great asset in favor of the Jansenists by inditing and ridiculing their arch-enemies, the Jesuits. Pope Clement IX granted a kind of amnesty (1659), and the Jansenists made good use of it to spread their doctrines. After the death of Antoine Arnauld, P. Quesnel, an Oratorian, became the leader, and reproduced the teachings of Jansenius and Arnauld in his “Réflexions morales sur le nouveau testament.” The book was condemned in 1713, in the Bull “Unigenitus,” the most famous document bearing on the subject. The Jansenists immediately appealed from the pope to a general council, and were followed by some of the bishops and clergy. Hence the distinction between the “Appellants” who refused to receive the Bull and the “Acceptants” who did receive it. The crisis which lasted for 25 years was intensified by the fact that the sacraments were refused to the Appellants. Priests were, as a result, involved in countless lawsuits and king and parliament were being constantly appealed to. The antics of the “Convulsionnaires” at the grave of the Deacon Paris, in the St. Médard Cemetery (1727-30) made many Jansenians and it declined in the course of the 17th century. However, it survived in Febronianism, Josephinism, and Gallicanism. In France its spirit was found until the middle of the 19th century even in text-books of seminaries. One important group of Jansenists still exists in Holland, where it is governed by the Abp. of Utrecht and the Bps. of Haarlem and Deventer.—C.E. (F. P. D.)

Janssen, Johann (1827-91), historian, b. Xanten, Germany; d. Frankfort-on-the-Main. He was apprenticed to a coppersmith, but was allowed to abandon this trade and follow his aptitude for study. He had a long career as professor of history, devoting his spare time to research. Ill-health prevented his being ordained until 1860. He is the author of many valuable works on historical subjects, the most important of which is his “History of the German People,” 8 volumes of which have appeared; the last 2 were published by his friend and pupil, Ludwig Pastor. Owing to the literary and critical merits of his works, he must be placed among the... foremost Catholic historians of the 19th century.
—C.E.

Januarius and Companions, Saints, martyrs
(c. 305), d. near Pozzuoli, Italy. Januarius, a native of Benevento, was bishop of that city during the persecution of Diocletian. Sosius, deacon of Misenas, Proculus, deacon of Pozzuoli, Eutyches and Aenutius, prominent laymen, imprisoned for the Faith, were visited by Januarius who consoled and encouraged them. He in turn was arrested with his deacon, Festus, and Desiderius, lector. They were beheaded after having been subjected to atrocious torments. The relics of St. Januarius are in a chapel of the cathedral of Naples, where they have wrought many miracles, the greatest of which is the stopping of eruptions of Mt. Vesuvius on several occasions. The famous “Miracle of St. Januarius,” the liquefaction of his blood (which is kept in a glass phial) seldom fails to occur 18 times during the year when the relicary is exposed and placed near his head, and no natural explanation has been found for it. Patron of Naples. Feast, 19 Sept.—C.E.; Butler.

January (Roman god, Janus), month of special devotion to the Holy Name of Jesus.

Japan (empire including a large group of islands near the eastern coast of Asia, together with the peninsula Korea; area, 265,129 sq. m.; pop. (1925), 83,468,405. The first Christian missionaries who arrived in 1549, were St. Francis Xavier, 2 other Jesuits, and 3 Japanese who had become Christians in India. After 27 months, when St. Francis left for China, 3000 Japanese had been baptized. With the aid of some nobles of the feudal régime, the work of missionaries continued to flourish, so that in 1682 there were 250 churches numbering 200,000 Christians. Soon the movement was suspected for fear that it might be preparing the way for conquest of Japan by European countries. Christianity was proscribed, and in 1597 six missionaries and twenty converts were cruified. At this time there were about 300,000 Christians; the missionaries were Jesuits, secular priests, Franciscans, Dominicans, and Augustinians. Persecution continued intermittently, becoming very severe at times. For 2 centuries all Christians were forbidden to come into the country, and missionaries who tried to enter were tortured, put to death or imprisoned. The Japanese were required annually to trample the Cross under foot. Many kept their faith and gave it secretly to their children, so that about 50,000 Christians were discovered when the new missionaries were allowed to come. In the meantime Christianity had been introduced from China into Korea, which belonged to the Diocese of Peking until 1831. In that year the independent Vicariate Apostolic of Korea was created, and the Faith continued to spread in spite of proscription and persecution in which many suffered martyrdom. In 1859, a treaty between Japan and France permitted missionaries to have churches at open ports for foreigners, and gradually their old work was resumed there, although persecution continued and thousands who would not apostatize were exiled. Religious liberty was finally recognized in theory by the constitution of the Empire promulgated in 1889. In Korea various treaties had allowed privileges to missionaries (c. 1884), and the church work gradually organized, forming eventually three of the vicariates Apostolic and one of the prefectures Apostolic of the following:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1891</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>37</td>
<td>10,502</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1891</td>
<td>26</td>
<td>24</td>
<td>2,833</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1891</td>
<td>31</td>
<td>53</td>
<td>52,000</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1891</td>
<td>29</td>
<td>24</td>
<td>6,629</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1891</td>
<td>9</td>
<td>650</td>
<td>8,600</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1901</td>
<td>17</td>
<td>68</td>
<td>106</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1901</td>
<td>72</td>
<td>12</td>
<td>31,457</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1920</td>
<td>19</td>
<td>19</td>
<td>12,412</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1923</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>1,922</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1904</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>8</td>
<td>563</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1912</td>
<td>6</td>
<td>18</td>
<td>477</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1913</td>
<td>28</td>
<td>11</td>
<td>6,362</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1915</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>12</td>
<td>1,711</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1922</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>283</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>5,484</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>1927</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>626</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

—C.E.

Japhet, Jâ'fet (Heb., enlargement), youngest son of Noe, and father of numerous nations (Gen. 9). Because of his filial respect Noe blessed Japhet. This blessing of Japhet depends on that of Sem. Noe promises two blessings to Japhet: first, temporal, God will multiply his descendants in a prodigious manner; second, spiritual, a participation in the spiritual advantages of Sem. “Japhet will dwell in the tents of Sem.” The prediction of Noe has been fulfilled. The descendants of Japhet have possessed widely extended territories and have gained possession of Europe and a large portion of Asia, America, and Australia; and have received spiritual riches from the descendants of Sem. (v. J. L.)

Jared, Jâ'âred a Sethite, father of Henoch, son of Malaeled (Gen. 5). He lived 162 years. Jared should be distinguished from Isreal mentioned in Genesis, 4, as the son of Henoch. In the latter passage is given the genealogy of Cainites, whereas in Genesis, 5, is given the genealogy of Sethites. (F. J. L.)

Jarlath, Saint (c. 445-540), Bp. of Tuam, in Connaught, Ireland. He founded a college at Cloonfush near Tuam, which attracted scholars from all parts of Ireland, the most celebrated of them probably being St. Brendan of Clonfert and St. Colman of Cloyne. He was famous for his fasting, prayer, and mortification. St. Jarlath's College, Tuam, a seminary founded in 1814, was named for him. Patron of the Archdiocese of Tuam. Relics at Kilmainemore. Feast, 6 June.—C.E.

Jaro, Diocese of (Philippine Islands, comprises the provinces of Hilo, Capiz, Antique, Oriental Negros, Occidental Negros, and Romblon; erected 1845; suffragan of Manila; Bishops: Mariano Quarteto (1868-85), Leander Arnez (1885-98), Andrea Ferrero (1898-1903), Frederick Rooker (1903-07), Dennis Dougherty (1908-15), Maurice Foley (1916-vowed that if he should be given the victory over Ammon he would sacrifice to the Lord whosoever should come forth from his house to meet him on the field of battle. When he was later appealed to by the elders of Galaad for help against the Ammonites, he consented to lead them and his men to battle. The Ammonites were defeated, and Ammon was humbled. During the war, Jeremias, the brother of the high-priest Onias III and son of Simon II, had been cast out by King Josias,开 mandate by Judas Machabeus to Rome to make a treaty with the Romans (1 Mac., 8). He had a son Antipater (1 Mac., 12), and later Jason of Cyrene, a prominent figure in the 2nd century BC, was the author of a work, "The Epistles of Jason," which was lost and only survive in fragments. Jeremias also wrote the exploits of Judas Machabeus in five books, from which the author of 2 Machabees has taken his recital (2 Mac., 15). Three years later Jason was forced to flee, and took refuge with the Ammonites. During the second expedition of Antiochus into Egypt, hearing a rumor that the king had died, Jason at the head of the Ammonites besieged Jerusalem, and slew his countrymen without mercy (2 Mac., 5). He was pursued from city to city, an object of contempt and hatred, and he ended his miserable life at Sparta, unlaunted and unburied.

Jeremias, Jérémie (Heb., possibly, whom Jehovah appoints), prophet. He was the son of Helcias (Jer., 1), of a priestly race of Anathoth, a little village of the tribe of Benjamin. He was raised in love and respect for Jewish traditions, and studied with care the utterances of previous prophets, in particular the oracles of Isaiah and Micah. By temperament sensitive and timid, Jeremias became otherwise when there was question of carrying God's message to men; menaces, insults, and torments meant nothing; he became "a fortified city and a wall of brass." It was in the 13th year of the reign of Josias, that the word of God came to Jeremias. Under this king, the activity of Jeremias was moderate, because the piety of Josias held in check the hatred of the enemies of the prophet. Yet the persecutions of his compatriots (11, 21), and the sin that he by his conduct had committed against God (12, 6), menaced his life, and he fixed his definite abode at Jerusalem. Unfortunately, Josias was followed by three unworthy sons, weakening rulers on the throne of David. During the three months' reign of Joachaz, Jeremias reproved the luxury of the royal house (22). King Joakim forgot the God of his fathers and plunged into all sorts of impieties and disorders. It was in such circumstances that Jeremias, yielding to the inspiration of God, placed himself in the court of the Temple, and announced its destruction (26). These words produced a tumult. The priests and false prophets seized him, crying, "Let him be put to death." Happily, Jeremias was saved through the intervention of Ahimelech. With the invasion of Nabuchodonosor, Jeremias pronounced the famous prophecy of the 70 years of captivity (25). Then he received the order to write all that God had revealed to him, since the time of Josias, in a volume, and to have it read on the solemn day by his discipie Baruch. But Joakim, enraged, threw the volume into a fire, and imprisoned Jeremias and Baruch (36). Under Seleucias, Jeremias suffered continual persecutions (38). He tried to return to his native land but was seized, accused of treason, and again imprisoned. With the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple, Nabuchodonosor gave Jeremias the choice of going to Babylon, or remaining at Jerusalem. He preferred to live in the midst of the Holy City. There, over its ruins, he chanted his immortal Lamentations; but the remnant of the Jews fled to Egypt, dragging Jeremias with them. At Daphne, pious tradition says, he was stoned to death for the prediction of God's wrath. It was a fit ending to a life of self-sacrifice. His whole life was a living prophecy of the sufferings of Christ. Like Christ, Jeremias continued to intercede for the Jews; truly, "this is he that prayeth much for the people, and for all the holy city, Jeremias the prophet of God" (2 Mac., 15). The prophecy or Book of Jeremias, was probably put together by Baruch. There are 52 chapters. The Lamentations or Songs, five in number, after the manner of the Psalms or Proverbs, bewail the sor-
Jericho. (1) Ancient Chanaanite city, near Jerusalem, N. of the Dead Sea, taken and destroyed by Josue in a famous battle after the passage of the Jordan (Jos., 6); when restored by Achab (3 Kings, 16) the Israelites settled there. (2) The ancient city had entirely disappeared when Herod founded a new Jericho, where he died. Through this city Jesus passed on His last journey to Jerusalem; at its gates He cured two blind men (Matt., 20) and met the publican Zaccheus (Luke, 19).—C.E.

Jerome, Saint, Confessor, Doctor of the Church (c. 340-420), author of the Vulgate Edition of the Bible; b. Stridon, Dalmatia; d. Bethlehem. He visited Rome, studied at Trier and Aquileia, and in 373 set out on a journey to the East. From 374 to 379 he led a life of seclusion and prayer in the desert of Chalcis. Returning to Antioch, he was ordained a priest. He was a friend of St. Gregory Nazianzus, and through him came to study the Scriptures. After visiting Rome, and journeying through the Holy Land, he retired to a monastery in Bethlehem. There he prayed, fasted and labored on the Vulgate edition of the Bible. He also engaged actively in controversy with Bp. John of Jerusalem, opposing the doctrines of Origen and Pelagius. St. Jerome's remains are interred in the church of St. Mary Major at Rome. Relics in Sistine chapel of St. Mary Major, Rome. Feast, R. Cal., 30 Sept.—C.E.; Butler; Martin, The Life of St. Jerome, Lond., 1880.

Jerome Emiliani, Saint, confessor (1481-1537), founder of the Order of Somaschi, b. Venice; d. Somascha. He joined the army; was taken prisoner, but was miraculously liberated. He studied theology and was ordained priest, 1518. He founded hospitals, orphanages, and institutes for fallen women. In 1532 established a religious society at Somascha for the care of orphans, poor, and sick. Canonized 1767. Feast, R. Cal., 29 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Jerusalem (Heb., salm, peace), ancient city in Palestine, the religious and political center of the Israelites, situated 15 m. w. of the Jordan on the crest of a chain of mountains which traverses Palestine from n. to s. It was originally called Salem, and was the capital of King Melchisedech (Gen., 14) in 2100 B.C. First mentioned in the Bible in Josue, chapters 10, 15, the inhabitants are called Jebusites. In the division of the Promised Land. Jerusalem was assigned to the tribe of Benjamin. Its most famous rulers were David, who brought the Ark of the Covenant into the city, and his son Solomon, who built the Temple, and during whose reign Jerusalem attained the height of its glory and grandeur. Its downfall came (A.D. 70) after a siege of 143 days, in which it is said 600,000 Jews perished, when it was conquered and destroyed by the Romans under Titus. The house which was the scene of Pentecost and the Last Supper was spared, and became the first Christian church, the Cenacle. Jerusalem, because it was the scene of the Passion and Death of Our Lord, is the destination of pilgrims from all over the world.—C.E.; Meistermann, Guide to the Holy Land, Lond., 1907.

Jerusalem, Patriarchate of, comprises Palestine and Cyprus; established, 451; present patriarch (Latin Rite), Louis Barlassina (1920). Churches, 22; priests, secular, 571; regular, 214; seminary, 1; schools, 76; institutions, 11; Catholics, 17,000.

Jerusalem, my happy home, hymn ascribed to Fr. Lawrence Anderton, 17th century.

Jesse (meaning uncertain; rich; powerful; my present), grandson of Booz and Ruth, father of King David. Jesse of the tribe of Juda, lived at Bethlehem (Ruth, 4). He was an old man, when Samuel came to Bethlehem to anoint David, the new King of Israel (1 Kings, 16). In the time of Saul, the family of Jesse occupied a humble condition; for David calls himself poor and unimportant (1 Kings, 18). As descendant of David the Messias is called the "root of Jesse" (Is., 11).

Jesse Window, favorite subject of the glass painters of 12th to 16th centuries, was the representation of the genealogical tree springing from Jesse, father of David, with figures of David and others down to Christ.

Jesuataesces or Sisters of the Visitation of Mary, founded c. 1367, at the suggestion of John Colombini by his cousin Bl. Catherine Colombini of Siena. They spoke only when necessary, fasted rigidly, and chastised their bodies twice daily. Their growth in Italy was rapid, but by 1872 they had entirely disappeared.—C.E., VIII, 458.

Jesuats (Apostolic Clerics of St. Jerome), religious congregation of men founded 1367 at Siena. Italy, by St. John Colombini, for the care of the sick, particularly the plague-stricken, the burial of the dead, prayer, and strict mortification. The name was popularly given them because of their constant use of the words: “Praise be to Jesus.” At first they followed the rule of St. Bonedict, with some modifications, but later they adopted the rule of St. Augustine. Colombini died about a week after the foundation of his society. Under his successors Francesco Mini and Blessed Jerome Dasciano, the congregation spread rapidly throughout Italy. Abuses crept in, however, and the Jesuats were suppressed 1668, by Clement IX.

Jesu corona celsior, or JESU ETERNAL TRUTH SUBLIME, hymn for Lauds for the Common of a confessor not a bishop; Ambrosian school, 6th century. There are eight translations. The English title is given by E. Caswall.—Britt.
Jesu corona Virginum, or Jesu, the Virgins' Crown, do Thou, hymn for Vespers and Lauds for the Common of Virgins. It is attributed to St. Ambrose (340-397). There are 13 translations. The English title given is by J. Neale.—Britt.

Jesu decus angelicum, or O Jesu, thou the Beauty Art, hymn for Lauds on the Feast of the Holy Name of Jesus. It is generally attributed to St. Bernard (1091-1153). There are six translations of the entire hymn; many of this cento. The English title given is by H. Caswall.—Britt.
Jesu dulcis memoria, or Jesu, the very thought of thee, hymn for Vespers on the Feast of the Holy Name of Jesus. A cento of a longer hymn is usually ascribed to St. Bernard (1091-1153). There are six translations of the hymn; more of this cento. The English translation given in Britt is by E. Caswall; the third verse reads:

O Hope of every centred heart,
   To those who fall, how kind Thou art!
   How good to those who seek!

—Britt.

Jesuit, popular name for a member of the Society of Jesus (q.v.).

Jesuit Relations, a collection of letters written by members of the society laboring in foreign missions, to their superiors and brethren in Europe. The custom of writing such letters was based upon instructions given by St. Francis Xavier to Joam Beira directing him to send to Ignatius in Rome, and Rodrigo in Lisbon “such news as when known in Europe would make every one that heard it give glory to God.” The letters were of three kinds: those of an intimate nature, to a relative, friend, superior or the Father General, not to be given publicity; letters to members of the society which were circulated in manuscript among the different houses; these were later revised and translated into Latin and extracts from them were published as “Annual Letters of the Society of Jesus to the Fathers and Brothers of the Same Society”: letters written for publication: this class is generally known as “Relations.” The most noted of these are the letters of the missionaries of New France, which have proved a rich source of information on early American history. Parkman says, “They hold a high place as authentic and trustworthy documents,” and draws heavily from them in his works, as do also Bancroft, Kip, Field, Dr. Finley and other historians of note. Opening with the letters of Biard, 1616, the custom of writing the letters was brought to an end by the order of Clement X which forbidding missionaries to publish matter concerning the missions without permission of Propaganda. Written under the most extreme hardships, their literary form is often crude, but the style is simple and direct, and the contents clear. The complete edition in 73 volumes by Reuben Gold Thwaites includes an account of other well-known editions such as those of O’Callaghan, Shea, Rev. Felix Martin and the Canadian Government’s reprint of the Cramoisy series, with information on libraries and collectors having editions of the originals.—C.E., XIV, 96; Wynn, The Jesuit Martyrs of North America, N. Y., 1925.

Jesuit Rings, rings made of brass or bronze, with an elliptic disk or seal, given by the Jesuit missionaries (c. 1670) to their pupils in Oneida, N. Y., if they could repeat on Sunday what had been taught them the preceding week. As many as 30 have been taken from a single grave, testifying to the faithfulness of their owner.

They displayed many devices, some almost effaced by time; I.H.S., with a cross above, was a favorite, others showed a heart, a monogram with a conspicuous letter M, or the crucifixion. They were of a rude and cheap character, although a few were of good design and finish, and they were not often large, as they were usually given to women and children. None are as early as the middle of the 17th century and few are as recent as its close.

Jesuit’s Bark, Peruvian Bark or Cinchona, a bark yielded by the cinchona tree, a native of South America and a genus of the evergreen tree belonging to the madder family. It is the source of five alkaloids, quinidine, cinchonine, cinchonidine, conquinamine, and, most important of all, quinine which is alleviative and preventative of fever, and an invaluable malaria antidote. To meet the demand for medicinal consumption extensive cinchona plantations are cultivated in South America, Java, India, Ceylon, and Burma. Known as Jesuit’s bark because its value first became known by a Jesuit missionary in South America who was cured of malaria by a native’s use of it. Knowledge of its medicinal properties and use were extended throughout Europe by the Jesuits.—C.E.

Jesu Redemptor omnium [Perpes], or Jesus, the World’s Redeemer, Hear, hymn for Lauds on the Common of one Confessor and Bishop; Ambrosian school, 8th century. It has eight translations. The English title given is by J. Chambers.—Britt.

Jesu Redemptor omnium [Quem], or Jesus, the Ransomer of Man, hymn for Vespers and Matins on the Feast of Christmas; Ambrosian school, 6th century. It has 25 translations. The one given in Britt is by J. Neale, T. Potter, and the Evening Office of 1710; the sixth verse reads:

And we who, by Thy Precious Blood
   From sin redeemed, are marked for God,
   On this the day that saw Thy birth,
   Sing the new song of ransomed earth.

—Britt.

Jesu Rex admirabilis, or O Jesus, King Most Wonderful, hymn for Matins on the feast of the Holy Name of Jesus. St. Bernard (1091-1153) is usually considered the author of the complete hymn, which has six translations. There are more of this cento; the English translation given is by E. Caswall.—Britt.

Jesus, Name of our Lord (Matt., 1, 25). It is the Latin form of the Greek, Iesous; Hebrew, Yeshua, Yeshua, meaning “Jehovah is salvation,” and interpreted by the Fathers as Saviour. The name is celebrated by the Feast of the Holy Name, and venerated especially by the Holy Name Society as a means of correcting the habit of profanity, and cultivating a spirit of reverence. The name by which to invoke God the Father: “If you ask the Father any thing in my name, He will give it to you” (John, 16, 23). The name by which Peter bade the blind man rise and walk (Acts, 3, 6). The New Testament; St. Bernard, sermon 15 on the Canticle of Canticles (Office of the Feast).—C.E. (ed.)

Jesus, Son of Sirach (Heb., Yeshua ben Sirach, author of Ecclesiasticus). Nothing known beyond the information contained in prelude of the book.
A native of Jerusalem, noted for his profound knowledge of the Scriptures, he devoted his life to the study of God and His law (true wisdom). He is judged, from his description of the High-Priest Simon, son of Onias II (Ecc., 50), to be his contemporary, c. 190 B.C. (T. McI.)

Jesus and Mary, Dominican Convent, Galway, founded in Galway, 1847, removed to present position at Taylor's Hill, 1846. It is a boarding and day school for young ladies.

Jesus Christ, See Names of our Lord.

Jesus! my Lord, my God, my All!, hymn written in the 19th century by Rev. F. W. Faber.

Jesus Psalter, The. A devotional book, dear to the forefathers of the English Catholics in the days of persecution, written by Richard Whitford, the Brigittine monk who called himself the "Wretch of Sion." It included 150 invocations of the Name of Jesus, interspersed with verses in imitation of the Psalms. It was printed and sold separately as early as 1620, though no copy exists. The devotion seems never to have spread beyond English-speaking countries, and was never indulgenced.

Jesus, the very thought of Thee, See Jesus Delict Memoria.

Jethro (Raguel), father-in-law of Moses. When a youth, Moses' life was in danger from Pharaoh, he took flight and went to Midian. He found a home with Raguel the priest, and eventually married Sephora, one of his seven daughters (Ex., 2).

There is a tradition that he is buried on the Mount of Beatitudes.

Jetté, Sir Louis Amable, K.C.M.G. (1836-1920), lawyer and statesman, b. l'Assomption, Quebec; d. Quebec. Called to the bar in 1857, he was at the same time editor of "L'Ordre." In 1872 and 1874 he represented East Montreal in the Dominion Parliament; in 1878 was appointed professor of civil law in Laval University and puisne judge for Quebec; he was lieutenant-governor of the province, 1898-1908. He was made commander of the Légion d'honneur in 1898, a member of the Alaskan Boundary Commission in 1903, and chief justice of the province of Quebec, 1909-11. —C.F. Suppl.

Jesus (Yehudi), a name which at first was restricted to the subjects of the Kingdom of Judah, but which after the Babylonian exile became the common name for the race descended from Jacob and for the followers of the Mosaic religion. Before the coming of Christ they were the chosen people of God among whom the Saviour of the world was destined to appear. They were elected by God in the person of Abraham, who left Ur, a city of the Chaldees on the Euphrates River, to settle in southern Chanaan. Jacob, his grandson, during a famine moved with his family to Egypt, where his descendants in the course of about 400 years multiplied rapidly; but when persecuted by the Egyptians, they were led out of Egypt, at God's command, by Moses, who likewise organized them into a theocratic nation. Jesus, the successor of Moses, brought them back to Chanaan, and divided its territory among the 12 tribes, which made up the nation. The land had to be taken by force from the original inhabitants.

During the period of conquest, the union among the tribes was rather loose. There was no central government, but there was a common center of worship. Samuel succeeded in effecting a union among the tribes, which was further strengthened when a kingdom was established and Saul was chosen as its first king. Under his successors, David and Solomon, the nation reached the height of its glory; but Solomon's building activities, and his luxurious mode of life gradually increased taxation till it became oppressive and when Roboam, his son and successor, refused to lighten the burden, the 10 northern tribes revolted, and formed the Kingdom of Israel; the two southern tribes, however, remained faithful to David's house, and formed the Kingdom of Juda. The history of both kingdoms is largely a chronicle of wars and intrigues. The war-like spirit living amongst themselves, and a desperate effort to ward off foreign invaders. After a hectic existence of about 211 years, the northern kingdom was conquered by Sargon in 722 B.C. and annexed to the Assyrian Empire. About 140 years later, the southern kingdom of Juda was overrun by Nabuchodonosor, and Jerusalem was captured and destroyed in 582 B.C. A large number of the inhabitants were carried off as prisoners to Babylon.

After a period of approximately 70 years, Cyrus, King of Persia, gave the exiles permission to return, and about 50,000 Jews followed Zorobabel to Palestine in 538 B.C. Other expeditions came later under Esdras and Nehemias. Jerusalem and the Temple were rebuilt, and a tiny Jewish state was formed, subject to Persia, but under the jurisdiction of the Jewish high priest and a council of elders. After Persia lost the supremacy in the East, Judea changed masters several times, yet the internal government remained undisturbed. Soon, however, Greek-speaking colonies grew up around her, and Hellenic influence began to permeate her community. Intrigue and bribery on the part of members of the high priest's family brought about internal dissension and occasioned a series of Syrian invasions. Antiochus IV (Epiphanes), King of Syria, made a violent attempt to hellenize the Jews; but a priest of Modin named Mattathias, and his sons, Judas Maccabaeus, Jonathan, and Simon, carried on a long and successful struggle against the armies of Syria, and at length, in 143 B.C., gained complete independence for Judea. Its territory was greatly extended by the conquests of John Hyrcanus, Simon's son and successor; then once more dissension and intrigue in the ruling family precipitated a civil war, whereon Rome interceded. Herod, an Idumean, was appointed King of Judea by Rome, and not long after his death Roman procurators assumed control of the government in Palestine. The rapacity and cruelty of these procurators led at length to an organized revolt against Rome, which terminated in the destruction of Jerusalem and of its Temple in the year A.D. 70, and in the dispersion of the Jews of Palestine throughout the civilized world.

Jewish colonies existed long before this date in many states both of the East and of the West. Josephus (Antiquities, xiv, 7, 2) quotes Strabo as saying: "Now these Jews are already in all cities, and it is hard to find a place on the habitable earth that hath not admitted this tribe of men, and is not possessed by it." Since the Jews were forbidden by the Law to mingle with Gentiles, these colonies remained distinct, and formed "a nation within a nation." As a rule, the colonial Jews obtained the rights of citizenship, along with religious liberty and the privilege of governing themselves according to their Law. They had their own magistrates as well as their own courts of justice. They were exempted from military service and from taxes which were incompatible with the Mosaic prescriptions, e.g., tax levies in the Sabbatical year. Add to this the enormous wealth which they everywhere accumulated by their business acumen and tireless industry, and it is easy to understand why they were marked out for hatred and persecution everywhere. What happened in the Roman Empire was repeated in every state where the Jews settled. They grew in numbers and wealth, excited the envy and hatred of the native population, and were persecuted and driven out of the country. After the downfall of Jerusalem, the rabbis gathered at Jabne, near Jaffa, where they reorganized the Sanhedrin, the Council of 71 Elders. Driven from Jabne in the time of Hadrian, c. A.D. 135, they settled in Sephoris, in Galilee, where the Mishna, a collection of the oral traditions about the Law, was published. From Galilee they migrated to Babylonia, which remained for nearly five centuries the chief center of Jewish life. During this period the Talmud, a vast compilation of discussions about the Law and the Mishna, was produced. In the 10th century Spain became the principal center of Jewish activity, where in addition to further commentaries on the Law, books of philosophy, medicine, mathematics, astronomy, and poetry appeared. In Germany the Jews had settlements since A.D. 321, principally along the Rhine, where Jew was synonymous with merchant. In Italy they flourished for many centuries; while in France they were alternately protected and persecuted. Universal persecution of the Jews broke out in Europe at the beginning of the First Crusade, 1096. The Crusaders massacred the Jews of the various German cities through which they passed. Subsequent crusades were occasions for further atrocities. In the course of the 13th century the Jews were exiled from France and England, and in the 14th, severe laws were passed against them and bloody assaults made on them in France (where they had been admitted), in Spain, Germany, and Bohemia. During this and earlier centuries, the popes were the staunchest defenders of the Jews, as the "great day of Jezrael" (Osee, 1). Massacres, by which Jehu signaled the accession of his house to the throne, commenced there. Returning to Jezrael, in order to surprise the king, Jehu killed Joram, who had come out to meet him (4 Kings, 9). Jezebel was put to death by being thrown from a window at the command of Jehu, and the dogs ate her flesh, thus fulfilling the prophecy of Elias.—C.F. Eberlin, A History of the Jews.—C.E.; Margolis and Marx, A History of the Jewish People, Phila., 1927; Bonsirven, Sur les Rouines de Jérusalem, le Paris, 1928.

Jezabel, wife of Achab, King of Israel. She was a Sidonian princess, a fanatical devotee of the Phenician deities, the worship of which she imposed on Israel, persecuting the prophets of Jehovah. She met her death by being thrown from a window at the command of Jehu, and the dogs ate her flesh, thus fulfilling the prophecy of Elias.—C.F. Jean Butler.

Jezrael (Heb. jez'ra-el, Jezreel, Jezeel) (Heb., God to be revered), a city of the tribe of Issachar. In the division of the Promised Land, Jezreel was given to the tribe of Issachar (Jos., 19). Gedeon, arriving from the south, defeated the Midianites and the Amalecites, who had encamped near Jezreel (Judges, 6). Saul, conquered by the Philistines, died there (1 Kings, 31). Achab established a royal residence there and coveted the vineyard of Naboth (3 Kings, 21). Massacres, by which Jehu signaled the accession of his house to the throne, commenced there. Returning to Jezrael, in order to surprise the king, Jehu killed with his own hand Joram, who had come out to meet him (4 Kings, 10). Jezebel was put to death at the very moment when Jehu was making his entrance into the city. Here Jezebel sent from Samaria the bloody trophy of 70 heads of the sons of Achab (4 Kings, 10). With the fall of the house of Achab, the glory of Jezrael disappeared; only once more is the name mentioned, when the prophet Osee named the enumeration of God's chastisements, saving Israel, as the "great day of Jezrael" (Osee, 1).

J. M. J. = Jesus, Mary, Joseph.

Joachim (Heb., the Lord will judge), Saint, father of the Blessed Virgin Mary. Tradition holds that St. Joachim and St. Anne were the parents of the Blessed Virgin, although nothing is known of them, except that they lived in Galilee, and later in Jerusalem, where their traditional tomb was rediscovered in 1889. Feast, R. Cal., 16 Aug.—C.E.; Butler.

Joan, Poppess, name given to a legendary character who appeared in history from time to time as a female pope. The earliest reference by name of this so-called pope occurs in the chronicles of Martin of Troppau, c. 1250, but there is no vacant space in the line of popes in which she could be placed, for there are no grounds to support the claim that she existed. The "Liber Pontificalis" does not mention her, and her picture is not included among the papal portraits. The most accepted explanation is that the fable is a survival of a Roman folk-tale.—C.E.

Job of Arc, Saint, virgin (1412-31), known as "La Pucelle" (the Maid), French national heroine, b. Domrémy, France; d. Rouen. At about 13 years of age she began to hear the voice of her saints, Michael, Margaret, and Catherine, urging her to leave her country from the English. In view of her unimpeachable character and the events of her life, there is no doubt of these supernatural manifestations. She hesitated for more than three years before obeying; then, in spite of violent opposition, she repaired to Chicon where Charles VII was holding court. After overcoming more opposition from churchmen and courtiers, she was given a small army with which she raised the siege of Orleans, 8 May, 1429. Then followed the famous campaign of the Loire during which the English were decisively beaten, and Charles was crowned at Reims 17 July, 1429. This seemed to end the supernatural part of her mission. More than ever she had to face the apathy of the king and the opposition of his advisers. She failed before Paris and was severely wounded. While defending Compiegne, she was taken prisoner and sold to the English. She was judged at Rouen by a tribunal presided over by the infamous Cauchon, Bp. of Beauvais, a tool of the English. Although she astounded her judges by the readiness of her answers, she was condemned to death as a heretic, and burned at the stake, 30 May, 1431. In 1455 her family and the King of France petitioned the pope for a revision of her case. It was granted, and a special commission appointed by Callistus III rehabilitated her. French radicalism in its worst form has never succeeded in eradicating devotion to her from the heart of the people. She receives official honors every year. Patroness of France. Canonized, 1920. Feast, 30 May.—C.E.; Petit de Jullierville, "Jeanne d'Arc," Lond., 1907; Touchet, "La Sainte de la Patrie," Paris, 1927; Lynch, St. Joan of Arc. N. Y., 1919. (P. P. B.)

Job, a dweller in Hus, east of Palestine; not an Israelite, but an upright man who is suddenly the victim of weighty afflictions, losing his goods, and his children and becoming a prey to leprosy. For a time he is patience exemplified. Three of his friends come to comfort him, but their conduct and utterances are so maladroit that his patience gives way and he bemoans his lot and longs for death. The comforters, "Job's comforters," to use the expression they occasioned, insist that he must have provoked God's punishment by his sins. Job protests his innocence. After eight dialogues between them and Job another appears as arbiter, insisting that no one is sinless in the sight of God, that suffering is not necessarily a visitation on account of sin, that it is permitted by God to preserve man from pride and its consequent sins. God Himself intervenes to warn Job that he has not appreciated God's providence in ruling men in His own way, and to rebuke the would-be consolers for their lack of judgment and their harshness. The Book, in 42 chapters, is a revelation of the mystery of suffering. Job is a type of all the faithful, and also of the Redeemer. Many of his utterances have become proverbial. His testimony to immortality as the mainstay of his patience is the climax of the prayers of the Church in the services over the departed.—C.E.; Gigot. (E.D.)

Job, Book of, first of the poetic didactic books of the O.T. in the Vulgate. The author and period of composition are still matters of conjecture, though the evidence for the post-exilic era is insufficient. The original language was Hebrew with perhaps an Aramaic foundation. Containing 42 chapters, it presents an investigation into the causes of evil and human adversity experienced by the just, and inculcates the lesson that man should not attempt a close scrutiny of the ways of Providence; secondarily it depicts Job as a model of faith, fortitude, and patience. Quite apart from the prologue (1; 2), as well as the epilogue (42, 7-16), three parts may be distinguished: (1) three discussions of Job with his friends and two monologues (3-31); (2) four discourses of Eliph, rebuking Job and his friends for some of their views, and extolling the wisdom and justice of God (32-38); (3) utterances of God Himself teaching that His ways are not matters for the curious searching of human intellect (38-42), 6). Composed in the highest style of Hebrew poetry, it indicates great technical skill on the part of the author, and is embellished with rich oriental imagery. Its Divinely inspired character is acknowledged in the Old and New Testaments (Ezech., 14, 14-20; James, 5, 11); it is found from the beginning in the canons of the synaguge and the Church. Correct exegesis satisfactorily explains difficulties in some of the utterances, viz., God's statements and those approved by Him must be regarded as Divinely inspired in themselves; with regard to the rest, it is Divinely inspired that the remarks and sentiments were expressed, but the doctrine contained therein is not thereby approved. The book furnishes Divine consolation and possesses marked dogmatic importance because of the doctrine concerning the mystery of suffering (15, 25-27). There are significant passages concerning God's supremacy, passing human comprehension (38; 39), and Job's humble confession (42, 1-6). In the Roman Breviary lessons from this book are read in the Office for the Dead and in the nocturne of Matins during the first two weeks of Sept. Although sources and descriptions such as the Babylonian poem "Subsimser-Nergal" may have been utilized the book must be regarded as the work of one person acting under Divine inspiration.—C.E.; Seisenberger, tr. Buchanan, Practical Handbook for the Study of the Bible, N. Y., 1911. (r. m. c.)

Joel (Heb., Jehovah is God), second in the list of the twelve Minor Prophets. No definite information about his life has been transmitted to us. We may conclude that he was a Judean by birth, because his ministry seems limited to Juda and Jerusalem. The time when he exercised his ministry is a matter of much dispute. The dates assigned range from 387 B.C. to 400 B.C. The most probable theory attaches his work to the reign of King Azarias, 789-738 n.c., relying on the place traditionally assigned to him in the list of the minor prophets, where he stands between Osee and Amos. The opening verses of both these books name Azarias as the king under whom they preached. Besides which some passages are so identical in Joel, 3, and Amos, 1, as to appear evident citations; after weighing the peculiarities of the context it seems that Amos borrows from Joel. Hence Joel was a contemporary of Osee and Amos, but a little in advance of them. The book of Joel consists of four chapters in the Hebrew; but only three in the English Bible. The Hebrew adds no material; it merely divides our second chapter into two. It opens with a magnificent description of the dreadful havoc wrought by a plague of locusts (1, 1 to 2, 11), then alludes to the Lord promises fertility and victory (2, 18-27); and for a later period, He adds the prospect of the abundant pouring out of the spirit of God on His people, while judgment will be visited upon the everlasting sin in the Valley of Josaphat (2, 28-3, 21). All but a few admire the literary unity of the composition, and infer that the prophet committed his message to writing at the close of his life. His style is almost classic; his thoughts are gracefully woven together; his language is clear, fluent, elegant. The interpretation, however, is quite difficult; not in consequence of the language, but of the things expressed. For instance, whether the plague of the locusts is to be taken in an historical or a metaphorical sense. Joel is the prophet of repentance in view of the Lord's Day. The canonical authority of Joel is proclaimed in the N.T., by St. Peter who quotes Joel, 2, 28 and 32 (Acts, 2); and by St. Paul who quotes Joel, 2, 32 (Romans, 9). Portions of the Book of Joel are used in the Office of the first lesson, 2, 28-32; response, 2, 17; lectio, 2, 12-19; Tuesday in Ember Week of Pentecost, lesson, 2, 23-24 and 26-27; Saturday in Ember Week of Pentecost, first lesson, 2, 28-32.—C.E.; Knabenbauer, Commentarius in Prophetas Minores, N. Y. of Jesu, Zat.

John, Gospel of St., the fourth Book of the New Testament and last of the Sacred Books written. Its author is the Apostle St. John, who wrote the Gospel at Ephesus shortly before his death, about the year 100. He records how Jesus, during His life, manifested His glory and proved Himself to be the Messiah and Son of God. While the first three Gospels are mainly concerned with the human side of the life of Christ and with His ministry in Galilee, St. John is more intent on showing the Divine side of the Saviour's life and treats especially of His ministry in Judea and Jerusalem. The Gospel is characterized by its sublimity of doctrine and diction, and by the many discourses of Jesus which make up the greater portion of the narrative. Consisting of twenty-one chapters, it is written in chronological order and contains: prologue declaring the Eternity and Divinity of the Word made Flesh (1, 1-18); manifestation of Christ's glory as Messiah and Son of God in His public ministry (1, 19 to 12, 50); revelation of His glory to the Apostles on the night before His Passion (15-17); outer glorification of Jesus in His Passion and death (18, 19); manifestation of His Glory as the Risen Lord (20, 21). The Biblical Commission, 29 May, 1907, declared that the constant and universal tradition from the 2nd century, the testimony of the Fathers and ecclesiastical writers, the codices, versions and catalogs of the Sacred Books, all give convincing proof that the Fourth Gospel was written by St. John and that it is a strictly historical document. Chapters specially commendable for reading: 1, Prologue, First Disciples; 2, Cana, Cleansing of the Temple; 4, Samaritan Woman; 6, Promise of the Holy Eucharist; 10, Good Shepherd; 11, Raising of Lazarus; 12-18, Discourses after the Last Supper; 20, 21, the Risen Lord.—C.E.; Maclnroy, Gospel According to St. John, Dub., 1924. (R. P. S.)

John (Heb., Yehohvahan, the Lord graciously gave), antipope (844). While a deacon he had himself proclaimed pope by the rabble in Rome in opposition to Pope Sergius II. He broke into the Lateran palace but was seized by the Roman nobles, who were common-law pope to his residence, and thrust into a monastery.—C.E.; Mann.

John (Sylvester III), antipope (1045-46). He was Bp. of Sabina, and the Roman faction which had expelled Benedict IX, elected him in opposition to the lawful pope after John had given them a large sum of money. Benedict descended on Rome with a body of troops and expelled the antipope who returned to his bishopric from which he continued to put forth claims at intervals during the pontificate of Gregory VI. He attended the synod of Sutri, convened by Emperor Henry III, 1046, was deprived of all sacrodotal rank and condemned to be shut up in a monastery for life.—C.E.; Mann.

John (Callistus III), antipope (1188-78). He was Abbot of Struma, and in opposition to Alexander III was elected at Viterbo to succeed antipope Guido of Crema. Threatened by the people of the town he fled to Albano, where he was attacked by the troops of Abp. Christian de Buch. From Albano he fled to Tusculum where he prostrated himself before Pope Alexander, who forgave him, 1178, and later appointed him governor of Benevento. —Mann.

John I, Saint, Pope (523-526), b. Tuscany, Italy; d. Ravenne. He was obliged by Theodorie, King of the Ostrogoths and of Italy, to head an embassy sent by Theologie to Constantinoplo, 523, to seek a meeting between the two rulers to the advantage of the Arians. He was accorded a brilliant reception by Emperor Justin and said Mass according to the Latin Rite in the church of St. Sophia. That he did not press the cause of the Arians further than counseling discretion and gentleness on the part of the emperor is proved by his subsequent abuse at the hands of Theodoric who incarcerated him at Ravenna, where he was attacked by St. John and that it is a strictly historical document. Chapters specially commendable for reading: 1, Prologue, First Disciples; 2, Cana, Cleansing of the Temple; 4, Samaritan Woman; 6, Promise of the Holy Eucharist; 10, Good Shepherd; 11, Raising of Lazarus; 12-18, Discourses after the Last Supper; 20, 21, the Risen Lord.—C.E.; Maclnroy, Gospel According to St. John, Dub., 1924. (R. P. S.)

John II (Mercurius), Pope (533-535), b. Rome; d. there. He was the first to change his name on assuming the papacy. Little is known of his pontificate except that he caused Contumeliosus, Bp. of Rio, to be confined in a monastery for his crimes. —C.E.; Grisar.
JOHN III (JOANNESE CATELINUS), POPE (561-574), b. Rome; d. there. Little is known of his pontificate, which occurred during the stormy times of the Lombard invasion. To secure aid against the barbarians he appealed to Narses. The latter was unable to subdue the opposition and John sought refuge in the catacombs where he remained for some months, subsequently repairing some of them.—C.E.; Grisar.

JOHN IV, POPE (640-642), b. Dalmatia; d. Rome. As pope he endeavored to alleviate the distress in his native land caused by the invasion of the Slavs; sought to convert the latter from the Greek to the Latin Rite; condemned the Monothelite heresy, and in a letter to Constantine III, defended the memory of Pope Honorius, who had been falsely accused of favoring the heresy. The emperor died but his son Constans II continued the assault on the heresy by withdrawing the Ecthesis (q.v.).—C.E.; Mann.

JOHN V, POPE (685-686), b. Syria; d. Rome. While deacon he represented the Apostolic See at the Sixth Ecumenical Council. A learned and energetic pope, he brought the Church of Sardinia into union with Rome, and gave many generous donations to the clergy and the poor.—C.E.; Mann.

JOHN VI, POPE (701-705), b. Greece; d. Rome. During his pontificate he secured a cessation of Lombard attacks upon different parts of Italy, confirmed Brithwald as Abp. of Canterbury, settled the claims of St. Wilfrid, and excommunicated him in his bishopric at York.—C.E.; Mann.

JOHN VII, POPE (705-707), b. Greece; d. Rome. A learned and eloquent man of a distinguished family, he regained for the papacy the Alpine patrimonies which had been confiscated by the Lombards, and built and restored many churches in Rome.—C.E.; Mann.

JOHN VIII, POPE (782-882), b. Rome; d. there. He was an archdeacon before his election and is considered one of the greatest popes of the 9th century. He confirmed the permission granted by Adrian II to St. Methodius to use the Slavonic language in the liturgy of the Church; endeavored to restore the Bulgarians to the jurisdiction of the Holy See; and condemned the schismatic Photius. Finding ecclesiastical offices in the hands of disreputable nobles, he excommunicated them and drove them from Rome. He supported Louis II and later Charles the Bald, and secured the imperial throne for his candidate Charles the Fat. He was constantly attacked by Guido of Spoleto and the Saracen. Against the latter he made war, patrolling the coast in person. Later, attacked by Lambert of Spoleto he fled to Florence where he crowned Louis the Stammerer King of France, 878. Unceasing in his attempts to promote peace in Christendom, and to destroy the Saracen influence, the pope journeyed from one kingdom to another, sent legates to rulers, and aided their enterprises with subsidies.—C.E.; Mann.

JOHN IX, POPE (808-900), b. Tivoli, Italy; d. Rome. A Benedictine, he was ordained priest by Pope Formosus. During his pontificate the papal authority once more extended to the ends of the earth. He held several synods at Rome to correct the prevalent disorders in Christendom, condemned the synod of Stephen (VI) VII, which was held in 897; and sanctioned a hierarchy for the Moravians against the wishes of the German bishops.—C.E.; Mann.

JOHN X, POPE (914-928), b. Tossignano, Italy; d. Rome. He was a deacon, then Abp. of Ravenna. An active and energetic ruler he crowned Emperor Berengarius, 915; endeavored to end the Saracen invasions; sought to bring the Slavs of Dalmatia into closer union with Rome; and was active in ecclesiastic and political affairs in Italy, Germany, and France. He was seized and incarcerated by the powerful Marozia of Rome, daughter of Theophylactus, who feared that her power was menaced by the alliance which he had contracted with her enemy, Hugh of Burgundy.—C.E.; Mann.

JOHN XI, POPE (931-936), b. Rome; d. there. He was elevated to the papacy through the influence of his mother, Marozia, who held immense power in Rome. His brother, Alberic II, angered at his stepfather, Hugh of Provence, overthrew the government and seized absolute control in Rome, 933. Benedictho pope. John was free to perform the sacred duties of his ministry only.—C.E.; Mann.

JOHN XII (OCTAVIUS), POPE (955-964), b. Rome, c. 937; d. there. A son of Alberic II, his election was secured by his father. He opened his pontificate with an appeal to Otto I for aid against Berengarius, King of Italy. He crowned Otto emperor, 962, and shortly after received the Ottonian Diploma which confirmed the papacy in its possessions. John now turned against Otto who was assuming papal prerogatives, but was forced to flee before the latter's army. A synod convened in St. Peter's, 963, summoned the pope to answer for his crimes. He refused to recognize it and was deposed, while a layman, the antipope Leo VIII, was elected in his stead; the proceeding was uncanonical and the election regarded as invalid. John took sanguinary measures of reprisal, but died as Otto was preparing to return to Rome.—C.E.; Mann.

JOHN XIII, POPE (965-972), b. Rome; d. there. Upon his election to the Holy See, he was imprisoned in the Castle of Sant'Angelo by the Italian nobles who resented the fact that he was the choice of Emperor Otto I. Having escaped, he took refuge with Prince Pandulf of Capua, until restored, 966, by the intervention of Otto, whose son, Otto II, he crowned joint emperor with his father, 967. He confirmed the See of Magdeburg, was active in organizing and extending the hierarchy, and decided numerous questions of ecclesiastical law.—C.E.; Mann.

JOHN XIV (PETER CAMPANORA), POPE (983-984), b. Pavia, Italy; d. Rome. Prior to his election, he was Bp. of Pavia and chancellor of the empire under Otto II. After the death of Otto, the pope was incarcerated by the antipope, Boniface VII, in the Castle of Sant'Angelo where he died, possibly by violence.—C.E.; Mann.

JOHN XV or XVI, POPE (985-996), b. Rome; d. there. Some papal catalogues give, as the immediate successor of the antipope Boniface VII, a John, son of Robert, who is listed as John XV. Although he never existed, the fact that he has been catalogued has thrown into disorder the numeration of the pope named John, and the true John XV is often called John XVI. John XV (XVI), who before his election was a cardinal-priest, remained throughout his pontificate under the influence of John Crescentius. His mediation in the quarrel between King Æthelred of England and Richard of Normandy resulted in the Peace of Rouen, 991. During his pontificate a serious dispute occurred, 988, over the archiepiscopal See of Reims, to which its legitimate archbishop, Arnulf, was restored by the pope, 997; and the first solemn canonization of a saint, that of Bp. Ulrich of Augsburg, took place, 993.—C.E.; Mann.

John XVI or XVII. See Philagathius.

John XVII or XVIII (John Sicco), Pope (1003-09), b. Rome; d. there. Elected by the party of John Crescentius, he reigned less than six months. Little is known of his pontificate.—C.E.; Mann.

John XVIII or XIX (Phasianus), Pope (1003-09), b. Rome; d. near there. As pope, elected through the influence of John Crescentius, he conferred ecclesiastical privileges on the reestablished See of Mersburg, and consented to the Roman Synod of 1007 and to the establishment of the See of Bamberg. He was recognized only as Bp. of Rome in Constantinople, where the patriarch claimed the primacy.—C.E.; Mann.

John XIX or XX (Romanus), Pope (1024-32), b. Rome; d. there. A brother of Benedict VIII, he was a layman at the time of his election. As pope he refused the request of the Eastern emperor, Basil II, to allow the Byzantine patriarchs to assume the title "Ecumenical patriarch"; crowned Conrad the Salian emperor, 1027; allowed the subjects of King Canute of Denmark and England to travel to Italy free of customs duties; and settled a dispute between the archbishops of Milan and Ravenna in favor of the former. A patron of art, he encouraged the musician, Guido of Arezzo, and decorated many buildings in Rome.—C.E.; Mann.

John XX. See John XIX or John XXI.

John XXI or XX (Petrus Hispanus), Pope (1267-77), b. Lisbon, Portugal, between 1210-20; d. Viterbo, Italy. His interest in medicine at the University of Paris led to his appointment as professor at the University of Siena, where he wrote his "Compendium of Logic," a favorite textbook for almost three hundred years. He was ordained priest, 1678, and in 1680 took his doctorate in theology. He was occupied with the direction of the Sisters of the Holy Infant, an order devoted to the instruction of poor girls, and in 1681 the organization of Brothers, and guided it through the vicissitudes which naturally befell a newly-founded society. The first novitiate was founded, 1691, at Vaugirard; in 1705 it was moved to Saint-Yon, Rouen; there he revised the rule he had drawn up in 1693. Canonized, 1900. Feast, R. Cal., 15 May.—C.E.; Brother Leo, Story of Saint John Baptist de la Salle, N. Y., 1921.

John XXII (Jacques d'Euse), Pope (1316-34), b. Cahors, France, 1249; d. Avignon. Bp. of Fréjus, chancellor to Charles II of Naples, Bp. of Avignon, Card.-bp., of Porto, he was elected after an interregnum of over two years and took up his residence at Avignon. During his pontificate he was involved in controversies with the Franciscans and Conventionals, and with Louis of Bavaria whom he admonished not to exercise his rights until the legitimacy of the election had been approved. The subsequent action of Louis brought on his excommunication and, with the protection of the Colonna family, he came to Rome, 1328, declared John deposed and set up the antipope Pietro Rainalducci (Nicholas V) who later came to Avignon, penitent, and was absolved, 1330. As pope John enlarged, and partly reorganized, the papal Curia, and was very active in the administration of the ecclesiastical revenues.—C.E.; Pastor.

John XXIII. See Corsa, Baldassare, antipope.

John and Paul, Saints, martyrs (Rome, 362). They were Romans, servants of Constantia, daughter of Constantine. Refusing to join the household of Julian the Apostate when he became emperor, they were secretly beheaded in their own home. Their bodies were interred under the present basilica of Sts. John and Paul, which was formerly the house of the senator Pammachius. Their names occur in the "Communicantes" in the Canon of the Mass. Invoked against lightning, rain, hail, and pestilence. Feast, R. Cal., 13 June.—C.E.; Butler.

John Baptist de La Salle, Saint, confessor (1651-1719), founder of the Institute of the Brothers of the Christian Schools, father of modern pedagogy, b. Reims, France; d. Rouen. After completing his education, he decided to serve the Church, was instated as a canon of the metropolitan See of Reims, 1667, ordained priest, 1678, and in 1680 took his doctorate in theology. He was occupied with the direction of the Sisters of the Holy Infant, an order devoted to the instruction of poor girls, and in 1681 the organization of Brothers, and guided it through the vicissitudes which naturally befell a newly-founded society. The first novitiate was founded, 1691, at Vaugirard; in 1705 it was moved to Saint-Yon, Rouen; there he revised the rule he had drawn up in 1693. Canonized, 1900. Feast, R. Cal., 13 May.—C.E.; Brother Leo, Story of Saint John Baptist de la Salle, N. Y., 1921.

John Baptist de Rossi, Saint, confessor (1698-1764), b. Voltaggio, Italy; d. Rome. He was ordained in 1721, but having through indirect practices of mortification contracted spells of epilepsy, he fulfilled the duties of the sacred ministry by instructing and preaching to the poor of the Campagna, thus becoming known as the apostle of the abandoned, and winning many sinners to repentance. In 1731 he established near St. Gall a house of refuge for the homeless. In 1735 he was compelled to accept a canonry at St. Mary in Cosmedin, vacated by the death of a relative. He was subsequently induced to hear confessions and was given the unusual faculty to do so in any of the churches

John Baptist Mary Vianney, Saint, confessor (1786-1859), Curé d'Arôs, b. Dardilly, near Lyons, France; d. Arôs. Overcoming the difficulties caused by a meager primary school education and defective talents, he was ordained in 1815 and sent for a time to Ecully. In 1818 he was made parish priest at Arôs, a remote French hamlet, where his exercise of the sacred ministry, especially in the direction of souls, made him known throughout the Christian world. Persons of all ranks and conditions of life sought his advice and in 1855 the number of pilgrims to Arôs had reached 20,000 a year. He led a life of extreme mortification and performed numerous miracles. Canonized, 1925. Feast, R. Cal., 9 Aug.—C.E.; Ghôn, tr. Sheed, The Secret of the Curé d'Arôs, Lond., 1929; Monnin, tr. Wolferstan: The Curé of Arôs, Lond., 1924.

John Beche (alias Thomas Marshall), Blessed, martyr (1539), Abbot of St. Werburgh, Chester, and of St. John's, Colchester. He was educated at Oxford, and received his degree of Doctor of Divinity in 1515. In 1534 he took the Oath of Supremacy, but later incurred the king's resentment by expressing admiration for the martyrs, Bl. John Fisher and Bl. Thomas More. After a trial for treasonable utterances, he was convicted and executed. Beatified, 1893.—C.E., II, 301.

John Berchmans, Saint, confessor (1559-1621), b. Diest, Brabant; d. Rome. He studied at Mechlin and entered the Society of Jesus, 1616. Having been sent to Rome in 1619, he fell ill in 1621, immediately following his public disputation in philosophy, and died shortly afterward. His short religious life was distinguished by a faithful observance of the Rule of the Order, which brought him quickly to perfection. Patron of youths; altar boys' societies are named after him. Emblems: the Rule of St. Ignatius, a cross, and rosary. Canonized, 1888. Relics in S. Ignazio, Rome, Feast, 13 Aug.; in S. J., 27 Nov.—C.E.; Daly, Saint John Berchmans, N. Y., 1921.

John Bosco (Don Bosco), Blessed (1813-88), founder of the Salesian Society, b. Beechi, Piedmont, Italy; d. Turin. A priest at Turin, he decided to devote his life to neglected orphan boys, and in February, 1842, he formed the Oratory, an association of twenty youths, whose numbers grew rapidly and for whom he built night-schools, technical schools, workshops, and a dormitory. This was the foundation of the Salesian Society, which now cares for thousands of boys all over the world, and was approved by Pius IX in 1874. He was declared Venerable by Pius X, 24 July, 1907, and Blessed by Pius XI, 2 June, 1929.—C.E., II, 689; Lecouy, Venerable Don Bosco, New Rochelle, N. Y., 1927.

John Cantius, Saint, confessor (1397-1473), b. Kempten, Peisheim; d. Krakow. He studied philosophy and theology, and received the degrees of bachelor, master, and doctor, was ordained priest, occupied the chair of theology at the Academy of Krakow, and was appointed parish priest at Olkusz, but resigned after a short time to teach Sacred Scripture at Krakow. He made one pilgrimage to Jerusalem and four to Rome on foot. Renowned for his humility and charity, and the practice of mortification, many miracles are ascribed to him. Canonized, 1767. Relics at Krakow, Feast, R. Cal., 19 Oct.—C.E.

John Capistran, Saint, confessor (1385-1456), b. Sulmona, Italy; d. Hungary. He received his degree of Doctor of Laws at Perugia, was affiliated with the Ghibelline party, appointed governor of Perugia under King Ladislaus of Naples, and imprisoned by Malatesta who was at war with Perugia. In 1416 he became a Franciscan and traveled through Italy after his ordination, preaching and performing miracles of healing, and assisting St. Bernardino of Siena in reforming the Order. In 1431 he was made commissary general of that branch of the Franciscans known as Observants. He defended himself and his companions against the charge of heresy. He was employed as papal legate on numerous occasions, and was the leading spirit in the crusade against the Turks in Hungary where he led the left wing of the Christian army at the battle of Belgrade. Canonized, 1724. Relics in Orthodox monastery of Bistritz, Rumania. Feast, R. Cal., 28 March.—C.E.

John Carroll University, Cleveland, Ohio, founded 1886; conducted by the Jesuits; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; extension courses; professors, 18; students, 305; degrees conferred in 1929, 33.

John Charles Cornay, Blessed, martyr (1809-37), b. Loudun, France; d. Sontal, Indo-China. He joined the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, and was ordained 1834. Sent to China, Fr. Cornay was placed in charge of the parish of Baumo in Tonkin. In 1837 he was seized, placed in a cage, and carried to Sontal. Here he suffered severe torture for promoting the Christian religion. Finally on 20 Sept., he was decapitated and his hands and feet cut off. His head was secured by some Christians, and his entire remains later received honorable burial in the Christian parish of Schioung. Beatified, 1906.—Wegener, Heroes of the Mission Field, Techyn, III., 1924.

John Chrysostom, Saint, Doctor of the Church (c. 347-407), Abp. of Constantinople, b. Souta, near Constantinople, d. Comana, Pontus. He studied under the pagan Libanius, most famous orator of his day; devoted himself to an ascetic life; was baptized c. 369; and ordained reader. For two years he lived in a cave near Antioch, but his health being impaired by austerity, he returned to the city. He ordained priest in 386, and in the twelve years that followed was engaged chiefly in preaching and writing. His oratorical powers swayed the whole Eastern Empire, meriting the name Chrysostom, “Golden Mouthed.” In 398 he was elevated to the See of Constantinople, where he incurred popular resentment by his sweeping reforms, and was deposed and exiled, 403, by Theophilus, Patriarch of Alexandria. Recalled by the empress, he was exiled again in 404. Patron of orators. Emblems: bees, dove, pan. Relics in choir chapel of St. Peter's, Rome, Feast, R. Cal., 27 Jan.—C.E.; Butler.

John Climacus, Saint, confessor (c. 525-605), abbot, b. Syria; d. on Mount Sinai. The name Climacus was given to him from the title of his book “The Ladder (Climax) of Paradise,” but he is also known as Scholasticus, or the Sinai. He lived for many years as a solitary at the foot of Mount Sinai, and in 600 acceded to the request of the monks on Sinai to rule them as abbot, resigning this charge after four years. Emblem: a ladder. Feast, 30 March.—C.E.; Butler.

John Colombini, Blessed, confessor (1300-67), founder of the Jesuits, b. Siena, Italy; d. on the way to Aespasenadale. He belonged to an old patrician family and his wealth enabled him to hold a position of great prominence and influence, but his married life was marred by his avarice, ambition, and proneness to anger. After a passionate outburst he was converted by reading the Life of St. Mary of Egypt. Thereafter he was distinguished for humility, meekness, and liberality to the poor, culminating in his dividing among them all his possessions. With Francis Mini he established a society of laymen for the practise of charity, based at first upon the Rule of St. Benedict, later on the Rule of St. Augustine, and called Jesuits (q.v.). Many miracles occurred at his tomb. He is represented upon the Rule of St. Benedict, later on the Rule of St. Augustine, and called Jesuits (q.v.). Many miracles occurred at his tomb. He is represented in the earth beneath his feet. Feast, 31 July.—C.E.

John Damascene, Saint, confessor, Doctor of the Church (676-770), b. Damascus, Syria. His father, though a Christian, was esteemed by his Saracen countrymen, and was chief financial officer for the caliph. John was educated by the monk Cosmas; after his father’s death he was made chief councilor of Damascus. He vigorously opposed the Iconoclast persecution propagated by Leo the Isaurian, and retired to the monastery of St. Sabas, near Jerusalem, where he was ordained priest by John V, Patriarch of Jerusalem. He was the last of the Greek Fathers. His contributions to theology are encyclopedic rather than original; he is considered by some the precursor of the Scholastics, by others the first Scholastic. He is regarded as the first theological encyclopedist, and as the prince of Greek hymnodists. Feast, R. Cal., 27 March.—C.E.; Butler; Bardenhewer, tr. Sahmian, Patrology, St. L., 1908.

John Davy, Blessed, martyr (1537), d. Newgate prison, England. He was a deacon in the London Charterhouse. Refusing to take the oath of supremacy, he was imprisoned at Newgate, where he starved to death. Beatified, 1886.

John de Brebeuf, Blessed, martyr (1593-1649), b. Normandy, France; d. Canada. In 1617 he entered the Society of Jesus; arrived in Quebec 1625; and established the first mission at Ichonatiria, near Georgian Bay, 1626. He returned to France in 1629 after the surrender of Quebec to the English, but went back to Canada after the restoration of the French colony, 1633. Having taken his spiritual vows as coadjutor, he arrived at his old mission, 1634. After fifteen years of strenuous labor he was seized by the Iroquois during their raid on the St. Louis mission, 16 March, 1649, and with Fr. Gabriel Lalemant was horribly tortured, burned, and beheaded. Relic at Hotel-Dieu, Quebec. Beatified, 21 June, 1925. Feast for Canada, 16 March; in U. S., 26 Sept.—C.E.; Butler.

John de Britto, Blessed, martyr (1647-93), b. Lisbon, Portugal; d. Oreiur, India. A Jesuit missionary in Madura, India, he was expelled from the country and returned to Portugal 1688, as deputy to the triennial Congregation of Procurators. Resuming the Archbishopric of Cranganore, he returned to India, 1691. A repudiated wife of a converted Maravese prince began a general persecution, and John was martyred. Beatified, 1853.—C.E.

John Eudes, Saint, confessor (1601-80), b. Ri, France; d. Caen. He was instructed in religion and learning by the Jesuits at Caen, and ordained, 20 Dec., 1625. Working valiantly among his pagan countrymen, he became known as one of the greatest missionaries of his day. He established the Congregation of Our Lady of Charity, and in 1643 the Society of Jesus and Mary. Through his efforts, devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus and the Holy Heart of Mary became widespread. He wrote a great many religious books. Canonized, 1925. Feast, R. Cal., 19 Aug.—C.E.

John Felton, Blessed, martyr (1570), d. St. Paul's Churchyard, London. He was a wealthy gentleman of Norfolk extraction. Arrested for affixing to the gates of the palace of the Bishop of London a copy of the Bull of St. Pius V, excommunicating the queen, he was taken to the Tower, racked three times, hanged, and quartered. Beatified, 1888.—C.E.

John Fisher, Blessed, martyr (1459-1535), Cardinal and Bp. of Rochester, b. Beverley, Yorkshire, England; d. Tyburn. He received his degree of B.A. from Cambridge, 1487, and his M.A. in 1491. He occupied the vicarage of Northallerton, 1491-94, when he became a proctor of Cambridge University. In 1497 he was appointed confessor to Margaret Beaufort, Countess of Richmond and Derby, mother of Henry VII. Consecrated Bp. of Rochester, 1504, he served as chancellor of Cambridge and tutor of Prince Henry (Henry VIII). He opposed Henry in his divorce proceedings against Catherine, and resisted the enthronement of the king on the Church. Refusing to take the oath of succession which acknowledged the issue of Henry and Anne as legitimate heirs to the throne, he was sent to the Tower, 1534. In 1535 he was created cardinal by Pope Paul III. Henry retaliated by having him beheaded. His works consist chiefly of ascetical and controversial treatises, Relics in St. Peter's Church in the Tower. Beatified, 1888.—C.E.; Wilby, The Story of Bl. John Fisher, 1929.

John Forest, Blessed, martyr (1471-1538), b. Oxford, England. He was a Franciscan friar who became chaplain and confessor to Catherine of Aragon and from the first resolutely opposed the divorce. He was burned at Smithfield, the fire being
JOHN FOREST

John Francis Regis, Saint, confessor (1597-1640), b. Fontecouverte, France; d. at Louvoue. He entered the Society of Jesus, 1616, and was ordained, 1630. Gifted with a marvelous talent for missions, he labored for the conversion of the Huguenots, assisted the needy, and aided in the rescue of wayward women. On the site of his death the Institute of the Sisters of St. Regis of the Cenacle was founded in 1888. Canonized, 1739. Body at Louvoue. Feast, 16 June.—C.E.; Butler.

John Gabriel Perboyre (1603-40), Blessed, missionary and martyr, b. Puech, France; d. Outchang-Pou, China. As a priest of the Congregation of the Mission in 1835 his superiors, already impressed with his sanctity, granted the permission he had sought for 14 years and sent him to the Chinese mission. After 5 years of zealous, and successful labors, he was subjected to unparalleled tortures and slain.—C.E.

John Gualbert, Saint, abbot (c. 985-1073), founder of the monastery of Vallymbara, b. Florence, Italy; d. Passignano. He entered the Benedictine Order at San Miniato, despite his father's opposition. He practised the most austere asceticism, and in 1038 retired to Vallombrosa, establishing there his new religious society which received papal recognition in 1070. He adopted the Benedictine Rule with several changes, making it more rigorous, excluding manual labor, and organizing a body of lay brothers. He founded houses at San Salvi, Moscetta, Rozzuolo, Monte Salario, and Passignano. Canonized, 1193. Feast, R. Cal., 12 July.—C.E., XV, 292; Butler.

John Hallow, Blessed, martyr (1535), d. Tyburn, England. He was a secular priest, a Fellow of King's Hall, Cambridge, and Vicar of Isleworth. He suffered martyrdom with the Carthusian priors at Tyburn. Beatified, 1888.

John Houghton, Blessed, martyr (1487-1535), b. Essex; d. Tyburn. He was educated at Cambridge, graduating LL.B., 1497, and later L.L.D. and D.D. Ordained priest in 1501, he entered the Carthusian novitiate at the London Charterhouse, and was professed in 1516. Refusing to take the Oath of Supremacy, he was imprisoned in the Tower and hanged. Beatified, 1888.—C.E.

John Larke, Blessed, martyr (1543), d. Tyburn, England. He was rector of St. Ethelburga's, London, of Woodford, Essex, and of Chelsea, and the parish priest and friend of Thomas More. He was executed for being a priest. Beatified, 1888.—C.E.

John Louis Bonnard, Blessed, martyr (1824-52), b. St. Christot, France; d. West Tonkin, Indo-China. He entered the seminary at Aix, later studied at Lyons, and joined the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, being ordained priest, 1848. Two months after his ordination Fr. Bonnard went to Hong Kong, and in May, 1850, he arrived at Tonkin, the field of his future apostolic labors. He was appointed to the districts of Kebang and Ketrinh. In 1852 he was arrested at Boasujan, taken to Nadin, and put in chains. After several examinations he was finally beheaded, 1 May, 1852. His blood-covered garments, links of his chain, and his hands and beard were kept by the heathen soldiers and later sold to the Christians. His body was thrown into the river but immediately recovered by the Christians and placed in the college of Vinhtri. Beatified, 1900.—Wegener, Heroes of the Mission Field, Techny, Ill., 1924.

John Nelson, Blessed, martyr (1534-77), b. Skelton, England; d. Tyburn. He was ordained priest by the Archbishop of Cambrai in 1576 and the next year was sent on the English mission, his labors being centered at London. He was arrested, and committed to Newgate as a suspected Papist, tried for treason, and hanged. Beatified, 1888.—C.E.

John Nepomucene, Saint, martyr (c. 1340-1393), b. Nepomuk. The legend recounts that his election as vicar-general of Bohemia aroused the rage of King Wenceslaus, who had him tortured and finally drowned in the river Moldau because he had refused to reveal to the king the queen's confession. Patron of Bohemia, and of confessors. Canonized in 1729. Feast, 16 May.—C.E.; Butler.

John of Avila, Blessed, confessor (1500-1569), apostolic preacher of Andalusia, b. Almodovar del Campo, Spain; d. Montilla. He studied law at Salamanca, but through motives of piety gave it up to study theology at Alcalá. Impressed with John's extraordinary sanctity the Archbishop of Seville induced him to become apostolic preacher. During John's apostolate of forty years he attracted by his preaching and by his saintly life notable disciples, as Sts. Theresa, John of God, and Francis Borgia, and spread the spirit of the Jesuits throughout Spain. His best known works are "Audi Fili," a tract on Christian perfection, and his "Spiritual Letters." Beatified, 1893. Feast, 10 May.—C.E.

John of Austria, Don (1545-78), Catholic hero, b. Ratisbon, Bavaria; d. Namur, Belgium. The natural son of Charles V, by Barbara Blonlberg, daughter of an affluent family, he was recognized later by his half-brother, Philip II, as a member of the royal family. Having distinguished himself in conflicts with the Algerian pirates, 1568, and the Moriscos in Granada, 1569-70, he was made admiral of the Spanish and Austrian fleets, combined by the advance of the Turks to the west after their conquest of Cyprus. The great victory of Lepanto, where 35,000 Turks were slain and 15,000 Christian slaves freed, inspired Don Juan to work for his own and Christianity's establishment in non-Christian countries, but he was thwarted by the jealous Philip, and made governor-general of the Netherlands, 1576, only to encounter the opposition of William of Orange, all-powerful there. Even after signing the "Perpetual Edict," 1577, his position remained nominal, so he withdrew shortly to Namur. Staging the attack, led by Farnese, on Gembelours, 1578, he could not follow up the brilliant victory for lack of funds, and after a period of inactivity, his health failed and he died, broken-hearted.

John of AUSTRIA

John of Beverley, Saint, confessor (d. 721), Bp. of Hexham, afterwards of York, b. Harpham, England; d. Beverley. He joined the Benedictine Order, lived for some time in the monastery at Whitby, and was consecrated Bp. of Hexham, 687. He founded a monastery at Kinderwood (later Beverley), which became an important ecclesiastical center, and there he spent the last years of his life. Canonized, 1087. His relics were preserved in Beverley cathedral. Feast, 7 May.—C.E.

John of God, Saint, confessor (1495-1550), Founder of the Brothers Hospitallers, b. Montemor Novo, Portugal, d. Granada, Spain. His early life was unsettled and nomadic. He worked as a shepherd in Castile. After serving in Charles V's army he lived in Africa for some time and later, returning to Spain, peddled religious books and pictures in Gibraltar. The Infant Jesus, appearing to him, addressed him as "John of God," and bade him go to Granada. There, won over to the religious life by the teaching and example of Blessed John of Avila, he devoted himself to caring for the sick, and founded, for that purpose, the Grand Hospital at Granada and the Brothers Hospitallers. Patron of the sick and of hospitals, of printers and booksellers. Emblems: alms, a heart, crown of thorns. Canonized, 1690. Relics at Granada. Feast, R. Cal., 8 March.—C.E.; Butler.

John of Matha, Saint, confessor (1169-1213), founder of the Trinitarians, b. Faucon, France; d. Rome. He was educated at Aix and Paris. Feeling that his vocation was to devote his life to helping Christian captives, he became attached to St. Felix of Valois, the hermit, and founded the Order of Trinitarians to carry on the work of releasing captives; it was approved in 1209. Relics in Madrid. Feast, R. Cal., 8 Feb.—Butler.

John of Montecorvino (1246-1328), Abp. of Peking and founder of the Catholic mission in China, b. Montecorvino, Italy; d. Peking, China. His early missionary work was in Persia, from which he went to India, and finally to China, 1294. In spite of the opposition of the Nestorians, he built a church at Peking and, in 1303, another opposite the royal palace. At the same time he familiarized himself with the Chinese language and translated the N.T. and the Psalms into that tongue. Pope Clement V was so pleased with his success that he sent envoys who consecrated John Abp. of Peking, in 1308. He is honored as a saint by the Christians and heathens alike.—C.E.

John of Sahagun (San FAgonz), Saint, confessor (1419-79), hermit, b. Sahagun, Spain; d. Salamanca. Educated at Salamanca and Burgos, he was ordained, 1445, and made canon in the cathedral at Burgos. Desiring a more thorough knowledge of theology, he entered the University of Salamanca, where he took his degree in divinity. Then joining the Order of Hermits of St. Augustine, 1463, he was made prior of the community, 1471. He is said to have been poisoned by a woman whose companion in sin he had converted. Patron of Salamanca. Relics in Spain, Belgium, and Peru. Canonized, 1696. Feast, R. Cal., 12 June.—C.E.; Butler.

John of Salisbury (JohanneS DE SARESBERIA, surnamed PARVUS; c. 1155-80), scholar, philosopher, and historian, b. near Salisbury, England; d. probably Chartres, France. He was educated in France under some of the most brilliant scholars of the time, including Abelard, Alberic of Reims, William of Conches, and Theodoric of Chartres. Returning to England, he became secretary to Theobald, Abp. of Canterbury, and was sent on various diplomatic missions. Like his friend Thomas Becket, he incurred the displeasure of Henry II and was forced to leave England for six years. His attempts to reconcile Becket with the king failed, and in 1170 he witnessed the tragic death of the bishop. He became treasurer of Exeter cathedral in 1174, and two years later Bp. of Chartres. His works include the "Metalogicus," a philosophical treatise, the "Policratus," a miscellaneous compilation of philosophy and diplomacy, and the "Entheticus," a Latin elegiac poem.—C.E.

John of the Cross, Saint, doctor of mystic theology, b. (1542) and hospital at Granada and the Brothers Hospitallers. Patron of the sick and of hospitals, of printers and booksellers. Emblems: alms, a heart, crown of thorns. Canonized, 1690. Relics at Granada. Feast, R. Cal., 8 March.—C.E.; Butler.
Douglas, he was ordained priest in 1575 and went on the English mission the next year. In 1581 he was arrested in Warwickshire, tortured, and put to death. Beatified. 1888.—C.E.

John Peter Néel, Blessed, martyr (1832-62), b. Sainte-Catherine-sur-Rivière, France; d. Kai-chou, China. He joined the Society of Jesus, was sent to China, 1858, and was beheaded while laboring for the propagation of the faith. Beatified, 1909. Feast, 18 Feb.

John Rochester, Blessed, martyr (c. 1498-1555), b. probably Terling, Essex, England; d. York. He was a choir monk in the Charterhouse of London. He was hanged for opposing the new doctrine of royal supremacy. Beatified, 1888.—C.E.

John Rugg, Blessed, martyr (1539), d. Glastonbury, England. He had been a fellow of the two St. Mary Winton colleges, and the first holder of the Wykelical prebend “Bursals,” at Chichester, but was living in retirement at Glastonbury, where he was executed with his abbot, Bl. Hugh Farningdon, for refusing to take the oath of supremacy. Beatified, 1895.

John Ruysbroeck, Blessed, confessor (1293-1349), greatest Flemish mystic, prior of Groenedael, b. Ruysbroeck, near Brussels; d. Groenedael. With his uncle John Hinkaert and Francis van Condeburg, both canons of St. Gudule’s, Brussels, retired to a hermitage at Groenedael in 1343; this was erected into a community of canons regular in 1349. He led a life of extreme austerity, became famous as a sublime contemplative, and a skilled director of souls, and was called the Admirable Doctor and the Divine Doctor. His most characteristic treatise on mystical life is “The Spiritual Espousals.”—C.E., XIII, 250.

John Sarkander, Blessed (1576-1620), martyr of the seal of confession, b. Skotschau, Austrian Silesia; d. Olmiitz. He received his degree of master of philosophy at Prague, 1603, and was ordained, 1607. He was at Holleschau, formerly belonging to the Bohemian Brethren, now a Jesuit College, when Moravia was invaded by the Polish troops, and induced them to spare the college. The Protestants, therefore, accused him of bringing the enemy into the country, put him on trial, and tortured him when he refused to reveal what Lobkowitz, the governor of Moravia, had confessed to him. He died in prison. Beatified in 1860. Relics in the Cathedral of Olmiitz.—C.E.

John Shert, Blessed, martyr (1582), b. Cheshire, England; d. Tyburn. He was educated at Oxford (B.A., Brasenose), taught school in London, and was ordained at Rome, and was sent to the English mission. He was executed with Bl. Thomas Ford. Beatified, 1888.

John Stone, Blessed, martyr (1539), d. at the Dane-John, Canterbury. He was an Austin Friar of Canterbury and a doctor of divinity, and was executed for denying the royal supremacy. Beatified, 1888.—C.E.

John Story (or Stokey), Blessed, martyr (1504-71), d. Tyburn, England. He was president of Broadgates Hall, now Pembroke College. Entering Parliament in 1547 he was imprisoned for opposing the Bill of Uniformity. He went to Louvain, but returned in 1553, and became chancellor to Bishop Bonner. Once more in Parliament, he was again imprisoned, this time for opposing the Bill of Supremacy. He fled to Antwerp, was arrested there, brought to England, and put to death in the Tower, for his faith. Beatified, 1886.—C.E.

John the Almsgiver (Joannes Eleemosynarius, Joannes Misericors) Saint (c. 550-616), Patriarch of Alexandria (606-616), b. Amathus, Cyprus; d. there. The son of the governor of Cyprus, he entered the religious life at the death of his wife. During his patriarchate at Alexandria, he became widely known throughout the east for his liberality to the poor. At the fall of Alexandria, he fled to his native land, where he died. Patent of the Hospitaliers. His relics were preserved in the cathedral at Presburg. Feast, 23 Jan.—C.E.; Butler.

John the Baptist, Saint, precursor of Christ. The son of Zachary and Elizabeth, the details of his miraculous life are related in Luke, 1. After spending his youth in the desert, at the age of 30 he reappeared in Judea, near the Jordan (Luke, 3). He announced that the Kingdom of God was at hand (Luke, 3; Matt., 3). He baptized Our Lord in the Jordan (Matt., 3). Publicly censoring Herod Antipas for having taken to himself Herodias, the wife of his brother, Philip, he was imprisoned and beheaded at the request of the dancing daughter of Herodias (Mark, 6). Patron of farriers. Emblems: a lamb, head cut off on a platter, a skin of farriers. Feast, 29 Aug.—C.E.; Butler.

John the Evangelist, Apostle (d. c. 101), brother to St. James the Greater, son of Zebedee and St. Salome, engaged in fishing with his father and brother. A disciple of St. John the Baptist, when called by Christ he became His “beloved disciple.” He alone of the Apostles remained faithful to the Master during His Passion. To him Christ entrusted the care of the Blessed Virgin. After Christ’s Ascension and the Descent of the Holy Ghost, John, with Peter, was prominent in organizing the Church. He later went from Jerusalem to Asia Minor, where he supervised the establishment and government of churches. Exiled to Patmos, he wrote the Apocalypse or Revelation there; after his return to Ephesus he wrote his Gospel and Epistles. He lived to an advanced age, and is believed by some to be immortal, this belief being founded on the passage in Scripture (John, 21), "So I will have him to remain till I come, what is it to thee?" Patron of Asia Minor. Emblems: eagle, chalice, kettle, armor. Feast, R. Cal., 27 Dec.; before the Latin Gate, 6 May.—C.E.; Butler.

John the Silent (Hesychastes, Silentiarus), Saint, confessor (452-558), Bp. of Colonisa, Armenia, b. Nicopolis, Armenia; d. near Jerusalem. His life of mortification and self-denial continued even when he was Bishop of Colonisa. His last days were spent in seclusion and perpetual silence in the desert near Jerusalem. Represented holding his finger to his lips, signifying his love of silence. Feast, 13 May.—C.E.; Butler.

John Thorne, Blessed, martyr (1539), d. Glastonbury, England. He was a monk at Glastonbury, and was tortured with the Abbot Whiting, being fastened to hurdles, dragged by horses to the top of Tor Hill, and hanged. Beatified, 1865.

Joliet, Louis (1645-1700), French Canadian explorer, b. Quebec; d. Canada. He received minor orders in 1662, but became interested in exploration. In 1672 Governor Frontenac dispatched him to explore the Mississippi. Together with Marquette, he started out at Fox River, crossed Wisconsin, and sailed down the river as far as 30° 40’ N. lat. Shipwrecked at Lachine on his homeward journey, he lost the journal of his voyage, but this was supplied by his verbal report and the journal of Marquette.—C.E.

Joliette, Diocese of, Quebec, comprises Joliette, Berthier, Montcalm, and part of L’Assomption counties; established, 1904; suffragan of Montreal. Bishops: Joseph A. Archambault (1904-13), William Forbes (1813-28), Joseph A. Papineau (1928). Churches, 57; priests, secular, 163; priests, regular, 24; religious, women, 612; normal school, 1; seminary, 1; academies and schools, 40; parochial schools, 275; institutions, 16; Catholics, 64,500.

Jonas (Heb., dove), a Minor Prophet. One of the best sources for information about him is found in 4 Kings, 14. The home of Jonas is now identified with El Meshed, about 5 m. N.E. of Nazareth, in the tribal territory of Zebulon; thus he belonged to the northern kingdom. The period of his ministry is determined by its connection with the reign of Jeroboam II (753-743 B.C.), practically coinciding with the era of decline in the Assyrian Empire which came between the two powerful rulers, Adadnirari III (810-782 B.C.) and Shalmaneser III (745-728 B.C.). Consequently we can account for much in Jonas’s career: that he could foretell the destruction of Ninive, Jonas is the prophet of God’s mercy upon the Gentile nations. The composition of the Minor Prophets is generally ascribed to the prophet himself, but more recent scholars regard it as written after the destruction of Ninive in 612 B.C. Moreover the quotations of psalms in the canticle of Jonas, and the language of the book, which contains Aramaic, would rather indicate a date about 450 B.C. A few Catholic writers have taken the view that the story of Jonas is a parable and was intended to teach certain religious truths, e.g., that man is subject to God, that God in His mercy and goodness calls all men, even pagans, to salvation, etc., but the traditional view, commonly held by Catholics, is that it is a real history. On this point the Church continues the Jewish tradition which has always accepted this book as historic and canonical. Christ Himself proves its authenticity in Matthew, 12, when He puts several facts on the same line of truth: Jonas in the whale’s belly, the Judgment, the visit of the Queen of Saba to Solomon. The Book of Jonas is used in the Breviary on the Saturday of the fourth week in November, and in the Missal on the Monday in Passion Week. The tenth prophecy on Holy Saturday is taken from Jonas, 3, 1-10.—Seisenberger, tr. Buchanan, Practical Handbook for the Study of the Bible, N. Y., 1911.

Jonathan (Heb., Jehovah has given), name of several personages in the O.T. (1) A Levite, son of Gersam the son of Moses, who started an idolatrous worship in the house of Michas and then in the tribe of Dan when it migrated northward (Judges, 17; 18). (2) Eldest son of Saul and friend of David, noted for his bravery against the Philistines (1 Kings, 13; 14), his loyalty to David, and his glorious death on Mt. Gelboe (1 Kings, 19). (3) The youngest son of Mathathias and brother of Judas Machabeus. He took an important part in the Machabean revolt, and was chosen leader after Judas’s death. He became master of Judea for several years and was appointed high priest. Treacherously seized by Tryphon, he was murdered at Ptolemais (1 Mac., 12).—C.E. Suppl.

Jones, Arthur Edward (1838-1918), ethnologist, b. Brockville, Canada. He entered the Jesuit Order at Amiens, France, taught in several of the American colleges, and was named president of the English College at Montreal. Appointed archivist of St. Mary’s in that city, he assisted Thwaites in publication of the Jesuit Relations, and was awarded grand prize for his archaeological exhibit at the St. Louis Exposition, 1904. His works on the Huron country were published by the Ontario government. He gave valuable aid to the vice-postulator of the cause of the Martyrs Jogues, Brebeuf, and companions.—C.E. Suppl.

Jordan (Heb., Yarden, from the root Yarad, to descend), the great river of Palestine, mentioned many times in the Bible. It issues from three sources on Mount Hermon, and after a course of 200 m. empties into the Dead Sea. It was the scene of several miracles: the passage of the Israelites under Josue (Jos., 3); the crossing, dry-shod, of Elias and Eliseus (4 Kings, 2); and the healing of Naaman by Eliseus (4 Kings, 5; Luke, 4). It was also the scene of the ministrations of St. John the Baptist and the baptism of Our Lord (Matt., 3).—C.E.

Josaphat, See Barlaam and Josaphat.

Josaphat Kuncetyc, Saint, martyr (1580-1623), Abp. of Polotsk, b. Volodymyr, Lithuania; d. Vitebsk, Russia. Of noble Ruthenian stock, he was educated in his native town. He entered the Basilian monastery of the Trinity at Vilna, was ordained priest, 1609, and subsequently became superior in several monasteries, Bp. of Vitebsk (1617), and Abp. of Polotsk (1618). He prayed constantly for the extinction of the Eastern Schism, and labored zealously for the union between Rome and the Greco-Slavie Church in Russia and Poland, and the political rights of the Ruthenian clergy. He was martyred in 1623. Emblems: crown, chalice, winged deacon. Relics at Polotsk. Feast, R. Cal., 14 Nov.—C.E.

Josaphat, Valley of, a place which the prophet Joel tells us is to be the scene of the Last Judgment (Joel, 3). Identified by some with the Valley of the Cedron, a ravine situated between Jerusalem and the Mount of Olives, regarded as the valley of judgment, probably because since the times of the kings of Judah, it was the principal cemetery of Jerusalem.—C.E.

Joseph (Heb., may God add), patriarch, eleventh son of Jacob, first-born of Rachel, immediate ancestor of the tribes of Manasses and Ephraim. His father's favorite, he was hated by his brothers, who sold him into bondage to the Ismaelites (Gen., 37). Taken into Egypt, he was kindly treated and became the personal attendant of his Egyptian master, Putiphar, eunuch of Pharaoh (Gen., 39). His skill in interpreting dreams brought him to the notice of Pharaoh who made him keeper of the royal seal and second in power in Egypt. During the famine predicted by him his brothers came from Chanaan to buy grain in Egypt and failed to recognize him. At Joseph's insistence they returned with Benjamin (q.v.) whereupon Joseph disclosed himself and invited his father and brothers to settle in Gessen (Gen., 47). He died at the age of 110, and his bones were later removed to Sichem in Chanaan (Jos., 24).—C.E.

Joseph, Saint, spouse of the Blessed Virgin Mary and foster-father of Our Lord, b. probably Bethlehem; d. probably Nazareth. All that we know about this saint is that he was a direct descendant of David, that he was a just and pious man, and that he was a poor man and an humble carpenter. The Gospel relates that he was espoused to Mary and that he was thinking of putting her away when an angel revealed to him the Mystery of the Incarnation (Matt., 1). From that time, he took care of the Mother and Child and provided for their necessities. When he died is not known, but it is probable that he was not living when Our Lord began to preach. Public recognition of St. Joseph is first found among the Eastern Copts in the 4th century; the Church began to celebrate his feast in the 6th century. Among the saints who had a special devotion to him are St. Francis de Sales. The solemnity of his patronage of the universal Church, declared in 1870, by Pius IX is kept on Wednesday of the second week after Easter. Wednesday is the day of the week and March the month given over to devotion to him. Patron of carpenters and of a happy death. Emblems: rod and plane. Feast, R. Cal., 19 March.—C.E.; Butler; Thomson, Life and Glories of St. Joseph, Lond., 1891.

Joseph II (1741-90), German emperor, b. Vienna; d. there. He was the son and successor of Maria Theresa and Francis I. After 1765 he acted as emperor and co-regent with his mother in the Habsburg dominions, and upon her death, 1780, became sole ruler. His desire to make Austria dominant in central Europe led to the Bavarian War of Succession, the first partition of Poland, and an alliance with Russia against the Turks in 1788. In order to weld the different peoples of his kingdom he made German the official language and united the administrations of the provinces into one central council in Vienna. He abolished serfdom and the death penalty, made the courts of justice independent and impartial, abolished censorship, and created the Austrian marriage law. Joseph II was the most celebrated exponent of Josephinism, or the policy of secular interference and state supremacy in ecclesiastical affairs, so called after the emperor. He consolidated almost the entire property of the Church and merged all the religious funds into one great Religionsfond for the requirements of public worship. To accomplish his purpose he suppressed all the monasteries and secularized them. For meddling in Church affairs, even to the regulation of candles, he was called the “Sacristan Emperor.”—C.E.
Joseph Calasanctius, Saint, confessor (1556-1648), founder of the Piarist Order, b. Petralta, Aragon; d. Rome. He received the degree of Doctor of Laws; and was ordained in 1583. He became attached to Bp. della Figuera to whom he rendered invaluable service as secretary and theologian. Upon the death of the bishop, he journeyed to Rome, and as a member of the Confraternity of Christian Doctrine he began his work of caring for and educating homeless children. In 1597 he established a free school, the first in Europe, and five years later founded the Order of Piarists to continue his charitable work. Canonized, 1767. Feast, R. Cal., 27 Aug.—C.E.; Butler.

Joseph Cottolengo, Blessed (1786-1842), b. Bra, Italy; d. Chieri. He became a canon of the Church of Corpus Christi at Turin, where, in imitation of St. Vincent de Paul, he worked among the poor and sick, and completed the Casa della Providenza, a group of hospitals and asylums with accommodation for 7000 patients. In connection with this work he established houses of the Sisters of St. Vincent de Paul, of St. Thais, of Carmel, of Suffrage, of Mary of the Seven Dolors, of the Good Shepherd, of Brothers of St. Vincent de Paul, of Hermits of Gassin, and of Fathers of the Holy Trinity. The Blessed Virgin appeared to him twice. Beatified, 1917. Feast, at Alba Pompea, O.F.M., and at Turin, 30 April.

Joseph Marchand, Blessed, martyr (1803-35), b. Passavant, France; d. Cochín China. He entered the seminary at Orsan, 1821, was transferred to Besançon, and was ordained a priest of the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris. Appointed to Cochín China he reached the field of his Apostolic labors, 1830. After two years in that country, he was offered the position of head of the Foreign Mission Seminary at Paris. He declined this offer, and for his disinterested zeal received a larger district in the province of Binh-Thuean. In 1833 a decree was issued for the arrest of all European missionaries. Fr. Marchand was made prisoner and taken to Saigon, where he was held for 18 months. Saigon was besieged 1835, Fr. Marchand was put in chains, and accused of high treason. He was conducted in a cage of Hû, tortured with hot pincers, and finally brought to the Christian village of Thoduck, and cut into pieces. His dead body was chopped up and thrown into the sea; his head, after three days' exposure, was treated in the same way. Beatification, 1860.—Wegener, Heroes of the Mission Field, Techyn, Ill., 1924.

Joseph of Arimathæa, Saint (1st century), b. Arimathea, Palestine. He was a wealthy Israelite and a disciple of Christ. He requested from Pilate the body of Jesus and with the help of Nicodemus placed it in the tomb. The legend which tells of his coming to Gaul, A.D. 63, and subsequently to Great Britain, where he is supposed to have founded the first Christian oratory at Glastonbury, is fabulous. Patron of the church at Glastonbury. Feast, 17 March.—C.E.; Butler.

Joseph of Cupertino, Saint, confessor (1603-63), mystic, b. Cupertino, Italy; d. Osimo. Of lowly origin and no education, he was apprenticed in his youth to a shoemaker. In 1620 he became a lay brother in the Capuchin monastery near Tarento; was later admitted as an oblate at the Franciscan convent near Cupertino, and was ordained priest, 1628. Throughout his life he was favored with heavenly visions, and practised the most austere mortifications. Many miracles were effected through him. Canonized, 1767. Buried in the chapel of the Conception, Osimo. Feast, R. Cal., 18 Sept.—C.E.; Butler.

Josephism. See Joseph II.

Josephinum, Pontifical College, endowed seminary for assignments to the United States, founded in Columbus, O., 1888. It is immediately subject to the Holy See, and under secular clergy. Students, 188.

Josephites. See Sons of St. Joseph.

Josephus, Flavius (37-c. 101), Jewish historian, b. Jerusalem. He went to Rome, 64, and on his return joined the Jewish revolt, holding out against Vespasian in Jotapata until the fall of the city, 67. After being held prisoner until 69, he regained his freedom and joined the retinue of Emperor Vespasian. Having become a follower of Titus, he was an eye-witness to the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple, and returned to Rome as a Roman citizen. His historical works include "The Jewish War," a description of the Jewish war of independence (66-73), the "Jewish Antiquities," a history of the Jews from the Creation to A.D. 66, and his "Autobiography."—C.E.

Josue, son of Nun, of the tribe of Ephraim, Moses's successor, the commander of the army of Israel in its battle with Amalec, and one of the spies sent into Chanaan.—C.E.

Josue, Book of, the sixth book of the Bible, treating of the conquest of Chanaan by the Israelites under Josue. After crossing the Jordan and capturing Jericho the Israelites defeated the Chanaanites and divided the conquered territory among the 12 tribes. Before his death Josue addressed the assembled people urging them to remain faithful to their God. The book itself was written in great part by an eye-witness, and the mention of memorials of Josue himself. The precise knowledge of lesser details, the ancient names of Chanaanite towns, the treating of Rahab as a living contemporary, and the mention of memorial stones as still in the Jordan (4, 9), justify this view, which both the Jews and the Fathers upheld. A later writer is responsible for the account of Josue's death, for additional explanatory glosses, and, in general, for the editing of the book. The historical value of the narrative is substantiated by its fidelity to older geographical names and to some circumstances of the time which archaeology is able to control. No Catholic exegete will regard the miracles recorded in Josue as an objection to its historical veracity. Sts. Paul, James, and Stephen accepted the facts narrated as history, and this has ever been the opinion in the Catholic Church.—C.E.; Seisenberger, tr. Buchanan, Practical Handbook for the Study of the Bible, N. Y., 1911. (H. J. G.)

Jouffroy, Claude François Dorothee de, Marquis d’Arbans (1751-1832), mechanician, b. Ab-bans, near Besançon, France; d. Paris. In 1776 he constructed an experimental steamboat and ran it on the River Doubs. He designed an improved model, which he put to sea trial, 1801, ran up the Saône in Lyons against the current. This boat continued to ply on the river for 16 months. Further experiments were checked by the outbreak of the Revolution. In 1816 a patent was granted. Jouffroy, however, failed to obtain financial support and died, discouraged and poor, at the Invalides, the home for old soldiers. Robert Fulton, the American inventor of the steamboat, acknowledged his indebtedness to Jouffroy.—C.E.

Jouin, Louis (1818-99), linguist, philosopher, author, b. Berlin; d. New York. The son of French Huguenot parents, he became a Catholic and in 1841 entered the Society of Jesus. After studying at the Roman College, he was forced by the Revolution to flee to America, 1848; here he taught theology and other subjects at Fordham College and scholasticate, with short intervals passed in Canada and St. Francis Xavier's College, New York. An accomplished linguist and skilled moralist, for many years he presided over the theological conferences of the Archdiocese of New York. His works include "Exegetes of Religion" and a number of excellent text-books on philosophy and ethics.—C.E.

Jovianus, Flavius Claudius (c. 332-364), Roman emperor, d. Dadastana, Bithynia. He was captain in the imperial bodyguard of the army, which was warring against Persia, and was proclaimed emperor at the death of Julian the Apostate, 363. In order to protect his army from further molestation in its retreat to the right bank of the Tigris, he relinquished the four satrapies east of the Tigris. A zealous and orthodox Christian, he reintroduced the religious toleration proclaimed by Constantine in his Milan Edict, 313.—C.E.

Joy, the passion opposed to sadness, and arising from the possession of a desired or coveted object; one of the fruits of the Holy Ghost; an effect also of contemplating the sacred mysteries of the Resurrection, Ascension, and Coming of the Holy Ghost.

Joys of the Blessed Virgin Mary, a pious devotions to commemorate particular joyous events in the life of Our Blessed Lady. At first there were five occasions of her joy commemorated. Present practise commemorates seven: the Annunciation, Visitation, Nativity of Christ, Adoration by the Magi, Finding in the Temple, Resurrection, and Assumption. Originating in the Middle Ages, this devotion was popular in old Catholic England. The Franciscans have propagated it through their Rosary or beads of the Seven Joys. There are several minor feasts under this title, one on the Monday after Low Sunday.—Vassall-Phillips, Mary, The Mother of Christ, N. Y., 1928. (N. M. W.)

Juiblee, derived probably from the Hebrew jubel, ram's horn, which was used to proclaim certain times of rejoicing, confused with the Latin jubilo, to shout; a time of joy, and of pardon: "Thou shalt sanctify the fiftieth year, and proclaim remission to all the inhabitants of thy land: for it is the year of jubilee" (Lev., 25). Every fiftieth year absent members of a household met together, Hebrew slaves were freed, debts remitted, and land returned to its former owners. Every seventh year was also observed and this is the spirit of jubilees in the Church, the first of which is traced to 1300, marked by pilgrimages to Rome, special services there and throughout Christendom. These jubilees have been repeated, when possible, at regular intervals and on occasions of extraordinary rejoicing, as during the year 1929, the fiftieth anniversary of the priesthood of Pius XI. The chief ceremony is the opening at the beginning, and the closing at the end, of the "holy doors" in each of the basilicas the pilgrims visit in Rome, two of them being St. Peter's and St. John Lateran. This ceremony symbolizes the right of sanctuary, which goes back to pagan times and which is actually then observed on the site of the Lateran.—C.E.

J. U. D. = Juris Utriusque Doctor [Doctor of Both Laws (Civil and Canon)].

Juda, patriarch, reputed forefather of the Tribe of Juda. The story of his life is contained in Gen., 29-49. He was a son of Jacob by Leah. He saved the life of Joseph by interceding with his brethren, proposing that he be sold to the Egyptians. On the second journey to Egypt he persuaded Jacob to consent to the departure of Benjamin, for whom he pleaded before Joseph after the incident of the cup, thus forcing Joseph to reveal his identity. To him were born five sons, to one of whom, Phares, is traced the Messianic lineage.—C.E.

Juda, king of, founded after the death of Solomon c. 929 B.C., by the one tribe of Juda and a small portion of the tribe of Benjamin. Its area was probably 1400 sq. m. The king resided at Jerusalem. Though free from internal dissensions, it was often invaded by hostile neighbors, and was finally conquered by Nebuchadnezzar, 588 B.C., and annexed to the Babylonian Empire (4 Kings, 25). List of kings: Roboam, Abiam, Asa, Josaphat, Joram, Ochozias, Athalia, Jos, Amasias, Azarias, Joatham, Achaz, Ezechias, Manasses, Amon, Josias, Joachaz, Joakim, Joachin, Sedecias. (H. W.)

Juda, Tribe of, the largest of the tribes of Israel. In the Desert of Sinai it numbered 74,600 fighting men (Num., 1), and in the plains of Moab, 76,500 (Num., 26). The territory assigned to the tribe by Josue lay in the southern portion of Palestine (Jos., 15).—C.E.

Judaizers (Gr. Judyazi, adopt Jewish customs), a party of Jewish Christians in the early Church who advocated the retention of certain Jewish ordinances in the Christian law. The main principles on which they insisted were circumcision, abstinance from unclean food, and the observance of certain Jewish festivals. In the preamble to the meeting of the Apostles and priests at Jerusalem to consider the matter, the Pharisees "that believed" expressed the formula of the Judaizers: "They must be circumcised and be commanded to observe the law of Moses" (Acts, 15). Some of the Judaizers were men of evil principles infected with the foul Gnostic heresies, but many of them were of good faith, who labored under the difficulty of digesting their minds of traditionalism. St. Peter himself in his great vision at Jaffa recoiled at first from the idea of eating the flesh of animals which were declared unclean by the Mosaic Code. The Judeo-Christian who came to Antioch of Syria and declared: "except you be circumcised after the manner of Moses, you cannot be saved," persuaded St. Peter to separate himself from the Ethnico-Christians (Acts, 15; Gal., 2).—C.E.; Prat, tr. Stoddard, The Theology of Saint Paul, N. Y., 1896. (A. E. B.)

Judas Iscariot, one of the 12 Apostles, who betrayed Our Lord for 30 pieces of silver. When the priests refused to take back the silver, he cast the pieces down in the Temple and "went out and hanged himself with an halter" (Matt., 27).—C.E.

Judas-light, a wooden imitation of the paschal candle.

Judas Machabeus (Heb., makeb, hammer), son of the priest Mathathias (1 Mac., 2) and leader of the Jewish army, who waged a war of independence against Syria and delivered his people from the Syrian yoke. He sent messengers to Rome to secure protection against the oppression of the Syrians, but before their success became known in the East, he was defeated and slain, 161 B.C., on the battlefield at Laisha (1 Mac., 4-9; 2 Mac., 10-15). His deeds are the subject of an oratorio by Handel. The books of Machabees are so called because they contain the history of the Jews under Judas Machabeus and his brethren.—C.E.

Jude, or Jude, Saint. Apostle, brother of St. James the Less, and one of the "Brothers of Jesus" (Luke, 6; Acts, 1; Matt., 10; Mark, 3). He is not to be confused with Thaddeus of Edessa, one of the 72 disciples, Judas Jacobi, or Judas Simon, disciples of the Apostles. After the Lord's Supper, Judas asked Christ why He would not manifest Himself to the world (John, 14). Judas's missionary work was performed principally in Palestine, also in Syria, Mesopotamia, and Persia. The place of his death is unknown; Boeotia and Arad in Phenicia have been mentioned as possible places, and there is a tradition that he suffered martyrdom. His Epistle, addressed to all the churches in the East, and to the Jews in particular, is in some parts coincident with 2 Peter. Patron of desperate cases, and hospitals. Emblems: a sword, a square rule, and a club. Relics in St. Peter's, Rome, and at Toulouse. Feast, R. Cal., 28 Oct.—C.E., VIII, 542; Butler.

Jude, Epistle of Saint. When rising heresies endangered the faith of the Hebrew Christian communities, the Apostle Jude, with the surname Thaddeus (Matt., 10), the brother of James the Less (Luke, 6) and one of the "brethren of the Lord" (Matt., 13), addressed to them his "Catholic Epistle" as a warning against the false prophets. With picturesque forcefulness the author expresses a wealth of practical doctrine in this singularly brief document. The Illustrations are mostly drawn from the O.T. and, what is remarkable, from the Jewish apocalyptic literature, i.e., The Assumption of Moses (v.9) and the Book of Enoch (v.14). The historical proofs of divine punishment (5-7) are a prophetic assurance that a like punishment is awaiting the depraved teachers. Hence the readers must be faithful to the teaching of the Apostles. The Epistle was most probably written in Jerusalem after the death of its first bishop, James, to whose authority the author makes appeal in v.1, and before the destruction of the city, hence about A.D. 65.—C.E.; Pope.

Judea, that part of Palestine adjacent to Jerusalem, its capital, and inhabited by the Jews after their return from captivity. It lay between Bethoron on the N., Emmaus on the w., Bethsura on the s., and the Jordan on the e. Under Herod, its king, Our Lord was born at Bethlehem (Luke, 1). The evangelization of Judea began during Christ's life (Luke, 23; Matt., 23). He journeyed through the land more than once and had friends there, and it was one of the first provinces to benefit by the preaching of the Apostles (Acts, 2, 26).—C.E.

Judge, Ecclesiastical, an ecclesiastical with power to sit in judgment and to pronounce sentence. The bishop is the ordinary judge in his diocese for all cases not withdrawn from his authority by common law. Civil law allows him to act as judge in matters subject to him, he is recommended to allow the officialis or chief justice to try cases together with the associate justices. All judges appointed by the bishop take an oath on assuming their office and should be above suspicion and be well versed in canon law. Some cases require five judges, others three, and some only one. Sentence is pronounced by majority vote. The judge of appeal from a diocesan court is the archbishop's court, or the Rota in Rome.—C.E.; P.C. Augustine. (P. J. L.)

Judges, Book of, the seventh book of the Bible. It is thus called because it relates the deeds of those temporary leaders who, under the name of "judges" (practically they were dictators), ruled over a part at least of the Tribes of Israel, between the death of Josue and the days of Samuel. The book may be divided as follows: (1) Introduction describing the political and religious conditions of the Jews after Josue's death (1-3). (2) Selected episodes of the judges' reign. Judah is in some parts coincident with 2 Peter. Patron of desperate cases, and hospitals. Emblems: a sword, a square rule, and a club. Relics in St. Peter's, Rome, and at Toulouse. Feast, R. Cal., 28 Oct.—C.E., VIII, 542; Butler.

Judgment, a function of the intellect; that act of the mind which is the key to the whole history of the Jewish people, viz., that their apostasies are invariably punished and their fidelity to God invariably rewarded.—C.E.; Gigot. (P. P. D.)

Judgment, a function of the intellect; that act by which we predicate one thing of another. St. Thomas has defined it as the act by which the mind combines or separates two terms by affirmation or denial. A judgment always implies the presence of two ideas in the mind, a comparison of these two ideas, and the affirmation of their agreement or disagreement. It is expressed verbally by the proposition, such as, “Snow is white.” Judgment is the chief act toward which all thought converges, since it alone is true or false. The most important division of judgments is that which distinguishes analytical and synthetical judgments. According to the conception of the Scholastics, if the predicate may be inferred from the consideration of the subject, because it is already contained in its nature or essential relations, the judgment is analytical, or necessary, e.g., “The whole is greater than any of its parts.” If the predicate adds something to the subject which cannot be stated previously to the experience of it, something which no mere analysis of the subject would reveal, the judgment is synthetical or contingent, e.g., “This book has 600 pages.”—Crumley, Logie: Deductive and Inductive, N. Y., 1926. (L. C.)

Judgment, General, Universal, Last, or Final, that Divine judgment following the general Resurrection, wherein all men, good and bad, will be judged according to their works, in such a manner that the justice of the sentence of each will be manifested to all (Matt., 25; 2 Cor., 5; Athanasian Creed). The General Judgment is clearly and repeatedly foretold in Holy Scripture. That there will be a General Judgment is an article of faith. The judge will be Christ (Matt., 24). It is almost the universal teaching of theologians that every sin and good deed of every human being will be manifested to all. In this way the justice, goodness, and wisdom of God will be manifested and will be recognized by all men. Although this Judgment is distinct from the Particular Judgment, the sentence pronounced at the Particular is in no wise changed at the General Judgment.—C.E., VIII, 552; St. Thomas, Summa Theologica, N. Y., 1925; Wilmers, Handbook of Christian Religion, N. Y., 1921. (A. L. F.)

Judgment, Particular, that Divine judgment, immediately following death, in which the eternal lot of each separate soul is justly determined. That this is an article of faith is clearly implied in the Union Decree of Eugene IV (1439). The existence of the Particular Judgment may be inferred from the parable of Lazarus and Dives (Luke, 16), from the promise of Christ to the penitent thief (Luke, 23), and from other passages in Holy Scripture where it is clearly indicated that the soul’s eternal lot will be determined immediately after death. After this judgment, the soul will enter heaven, hell, or purgatory. Souls of those who die in the state of sanctifying grace will be saved (see Heaven; Purgatory). Those in the state of mortal sin will be condemned (see Hell; Mortal Sin). For the destiny of unbaptized infants, see Limbo.—C.E., VIII, 550; St. Thomas, Summa Theologica, N. Y., 1925; Wilmers, Handbook of Christian Religion, N. Y., 1921. (A. L. F.)

Judith, The Book of, is an Old Testament chronicle which takes its name from the valiant woman who by her courage, resourcefulness, and confidence in God saved the city of Bethulia from destruction at the hand of Holofernes, general of Nabuchodonosor, king of Nineveh. The present state of the text is very confused. It is highly probable that the Greek version is derived from a Hebrew or Chaldaic original. The two Hebrew versions now extant are different, one of them agreeing with the Greek. St. Jerome wrote his Vulgate translation with the help of a Chaldaic version, but the admitted carelessness of this work makes it difficult to determine which of the two texts, the Greek or the Chaldaic, is closer to the original. The geographical and historical references in the Book are also a source of much confusion and debate. For instance, Scripture scholars find it difficult to identify the city of Bethulia with any ancient town in the Plain of Esdraelon where the writer of the Book locates it. And again, how could Nabuchodonosor, who became a king 605 B.C., have ruled in Nineveh, which was destroyed the year before? The blame for many of these inaccuracies has been laid at the feet of careless translators and inaccurate copyists. The confusion has been such as to lead most non-Catholic commentators to reject the Book of Judith as a narrative of facts; for them it is an allegory. On the other hand, Catholic tradition from the earliest times has always considered the Book as historical, and the Council of Trent has defined its character as an inspired writing by placing it among the canonical books of the O.T. The chronicle ends with a beautiful hymn of thanksgiving which has found its place in the Wednesday Lauds of the Roman Breviary.—C.E.; Gigot. (T. H. M.)

Juduggle, parti-colored yoke of ribbon binding together the newly married pair, mentioned by St. Isidore of Seville (560-636) and probably identified with the velum or flammeus of the bride in Roman marriage.

Jugoslavia. See Serbia, Croatia, and Slovenia State.

Juliana Falconieri, Saint, virgin (1270-1341), foundress of the Servite Tertiaries, b. Florence; d. there. She was a niece of St. Alexis Falconieri; through his influence she consecrated herself from early youth to the religious life. In 1285 she received from St. Philip Benizi, General of the Servites, the habit of the Third Order of the Servites. In 1305, with several companions, she founded the first convent of the Sisters of the Third Order of Servites, where she remained superior until her death; the purpose of the congregation was the care of the sick. Canonized, 1737. Relics at St. Annunziata, Florence. Feast, R. Cal., 19 June, —C.E.; Soulier, Life of St. Juliana Falconieri, Lond., 1898.

Juliana of Norwich (b. probably c. 1342), mystic. She was probably a Benedictine nun, living as a recluse in Norwich, England. She is known as author or recipient of the vision contained in the “Sixteen Revelations of Divine Love,” the most perfect fruit of later medieval mysticism in England.—C.E.; Troubles, Lady Julian, N.Y., 1924.

Julian Calendar, an attempt made by Julian Caesar to adapt the calendar year to the time actually required for the earth to make one complete revolution around the sun. He estimated that time as 365 ¼ days, and therefore every 4th year he added a day to the 365 days of the year. His calendar was inaccurate because the time for the earth’s journey is a little shorter than 365 ¼ days. This was superseded in 1582 by the Gregorian Calendar devised under the direction of Pope Gregory XIII.—C.E., III, 168.

Julian the Apostate, or Flavius Claudius Julianus (331-363), Roman Emperor, b. Constantius, the half-brother of Constantine the Great. He received a Christian training which was modified by his interest in neo-Platonism and other philosophy, chiefly Hellenic. In 353 he was presented to the army as Caesar and he married Helena, sister of the Emperor Constantius, who was his cousin, and was sent as Governor to Gaul. There he completely routed the Alamanni near Strasbourg. He demanded higher recognition and, when Constantius refused, advanced to Illyricum. Constantius died on the way to meet him, in 361; Julian advanced in triumph to Constantinople, and immediately ordered a return to pagan worship and issued many decrees against Christians. He died of wounds during the Persian war in 363. The dying words attributed to him are (of Christ): “Thou hast conquered, O Galilean.”—C.E.

Julie Billiart, Blessed, virgin (1751-1816), foundress and first superior-general of the Congregation of the Sisters of Notre Dame of Namur; b. Cuvilly, France; d. Namur, Belgium. Her early life was marked by great piety, which increased after a paralytic stroke in 1775. Aided by Françoise Blin de Bourdon, Viscountess of Gézaincourt, and Fr. Varin, Superior of the Fathers of the Faith, she founded the Institute of the Sisters of Notre Dame, at Amiens (1803), a society having for its primary object the salvation of poor children. Cured of paralysis, 1 June, 1804, she spent the rest of her life founding convents in France and Belgium, and removed the mother-house to Namur in 1809. Beatified, 1906. Relics at Namur. Feast, 8 April.—C.E.

Julius I, Saint, Pope (337-352), confessor, b. and d. Rome. His pontificate is celebrated for his judicious and firm intervention in the Arian controversies. He convened a synod at Rome for the purpose of judging Athanasius and, in spite of the refusal of the Arian bishops to attend, he acquitted and reestablished Athanasius and Marcellus of Ancyra. The catalog of the feast-days of saints probably came into use during his pontificate. He erected two basilicas in Rome and three churches outside the walls of Rome. Feast, 12 April.—C.E.

Julius II (Giuliano della Rovere), Pope (1503-15), b. Albissola, Italy, 1443; d. Rome. He became a Franciscan and was made cardinal-priest. He held 12 episcopal sees and one archiepiscopal see; with the income from these and other benefits he patronized the firm establishment and extension of the temporal power. Previous to his reign, which opened the 16th century gloriously for the papacy, he was familiar, as either diplomat or soldier, with the most powerful princes in Christendom. His interest centered in the temporal glory of the Church, and to this end he joined the League of Cambrai, 1509, and later formed the Holy League, 1511, to free Italy from French rule. As a result he gained Parma, Bologna, Reggio, and Piacenza for the Papal States. One of the most famous administrative acts of his reign was the promulgation of a Bull condemning and invalidating simoniacal papal elections. He convoked the Fifth Lateran Council, 1512. A famous patron of art, he encouraged Raphael, Bramante, and Michelangelo, and began the Basilica of St. Peter.—C.E.; Pastor.

Julius III (Giulio Maria della Rovere), Pope (1530-55), b. Rome, 1487; d. there. He was Abp. of Siponto, Bp. of Pavia, Prefect of Rome, cardinal-priest, Card.-Bp. of Palestrina, and first president of the Council of Trent, 1545. As pope, he concluded a two-year truce with France; supported the rising Jesuit Order; sent Cardinal Pole to Queen Mary of England to aid in the Catholic restoration; reopened the Council of Trent; and despatched a cardinal to represent Catholic interests at the Religious Peace of Augsburg.—C.E.; Pastor.

Julius Africanus, Sextus (c. 160-c. 240), chronographer, b. Africa. He is thought to have been of Roman descent; he studied at Alexandria and restored the city of Emmaus in Palestine and called it Nikopolis. His “Chronicle,” in five books, covered the time from the Creation to A.D. 221, and was the first Christian attempt at universal history and the source of later Christian chronography; his “Embroideries,” or “Puzzles,” is a kind of encyclopedia of sciences, much esteemed by the Greek Fathers. A letter to Origen, disputing the authenticity of the story of Susanna, is his only complete work extant; another letter of which only fragments exist deals with the genealogy of Christ.—C.E.

July (in honor of Julius Caesar), MONTH OF, is given over to special devotion to the Precious Blood.

June (Roman gentile name, Junius), MONTH OF, is given over to special devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus.

Junias, a Christian at Rome, mentioned by St. Paul, along with Andronicus (Rom., 16). Andronicus and Junias are called by St. Paul "my kinsmen and fellow prisoners." Although many moderns regard Junias as a man, the Greeks and Latins celebrate the feast-day of Andronicus and Junias, as husband and wife, on 17 May. (E. F. D.)

Jurisdiction, Ecclesiastical (Lat., jus, right, power; docere, to say), the right to guide and rule the Church of God, the exercise of authority in regard to the three-fold office of the Church, teaching, priestly or ministerial, and pastoral. When this jurisdiction is exercised over the relations of man to God, as in the Sacrament of Penance, or in dispensing from vows, it is spoken of as jurisdiction of the forum (court) of Heaven, or of the internal forum. When it regulates external ecclesiastical relations it acts in the external forum only. When permanently attached to an office, it is called ordinary. This ordinary jurisdiction the Pope has by divine right for the whole Church, and a bishop for his diocese. Others have such authority by human right in matters over which they are placed. In this way a parish priest exercises jurisdiction in the internal forum. When jurisdiction is attached to an office, such as that of Vicar General, which may not be permanent, it is quasi-ordinary or vicarious. It is delegated, or extraordinary, when granted with limitations as to time or function.—C.E.; Berry, The Church of Christ, St. L., 1927.

Jus primae noctis (Right of the first night) or Droit de Seigneur (Right of the Lord), a vulgar fable for which there is not the slightest foundation in legend, or in the historical records of any Christian country.

Just, The, Our Lord, according to Acts, 3. (ed.)

Just Branch, A designation of the future Messianic king. God says: "I will raise up to David a just branch: and a king shall reign, and shall be wise: and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth" (Jer., 23). The use of this expression for the future son of David is probably suggested by Is., 11, where the Messiah is represented, "a rod out of the root of Jesse, and a flower shall rise up out of his root." The ideal king of the future will be characterized by justice and deserves to bear the name "The Lord our just one" (Jer., 23). (w. s. n.)

Justice, among men is ordinarily understood as a virtue by which we give to every one what is his due, what we owe him. God does not owe, nor can He owe anything to any one. Whatever there is outside of God is the creature of God, and the Creator cannot owe anything to His creature. The justice of God is in this, that He loves good and hates evil, and hence He rewards the good and punishes the evil. He does so necessarily, because both His love and His hatred are necessarily operat­ive not merely in affection.—C.E. (A. C. A.)

Justification, a notion by which he is transfmred from the state of enmity with God to the friendship of God. As an act it is the gratuitous work of God alone; but in the adult cooperation, moral preparation, e.g., faith, contrition, etc., is required. As a habit it is the continued possession of sanctifying grace. The removal of sin and the infusion of grace constitute one and the same act. Removal of original sin by Baptism is called first justification; forgiveness, in the Sacrament of Penance, of mortal sin committed after Baptism, is called second justification. By an act of perfect contrition man can be justified before actual reception, but not without the desire, of the Sacrament.—C.E.; Poehle-Preuss, Grace: Actual and Habitual, St. L., 1921. (B. M. J.)

Justinian I (c. 483-565), Eastern Roman Emperor, b. Tauresium, Illyricum. He was the nephew of Justin I, whom he succeeded. During his reign of 38 years, the most brilliant period of the Byzantine Empire, he warred against the Persians, over­came the Goths and Vandals, conquered Spain, Italy, Sicily, Dalmatia, and Africa, and crushed the Nika revolt in Constantinople. His most enduring work was his codification of the laws, forming the "Corpus Juris Civilis" (System of civil law). Through the influence of his wife, Theodora, he was friendly to the Monophysites, particularly in the quarrel of the Three Chapters and in the Second Council of Constantinople in 553. Famous as a patron of the arts, he built the churches, now mosques, of Our Lady at Jerusalem and Santa Sophia in Constantinople.—C.E.

Justin Martyr, Saint, martyr (c. 100-c. 165), Christian apologist, b. Flavia Neapolis, Palestine; d. Rome. Converted to Christianity c. 130, he devoted himself to the propagation and defense of Christianity in Asia Minor and at Rome, retaining the garb of philosopher. His only extant works are his two "Apologies" and his "Dialogue with the Jew Tryphon." Emblems: a book, a pen, a sword. Relics in the Capuchin church, Rome, Feast, R. Cal., 14 April.—C.E.
K

Kabbala (Heb., gabbalah, reception), name applied, specifically, to a system of esoteric theosophy which was peculiar to Judaism in Europe after the 10th century. It attained prominence in Spain in the 13th century, was disseminated at the time of the expulsion of the Jews from that country, and became identified with Palestine. It has often erroneously been used as an argument to induce Jews to accept Christianity. Its doctrines are contained in the two books "Sefer Yezirah" and "Sefer Zohar." The doctrinal contents of the latter are: God, the Supreme, Endless, and Infinite Being, can be conceived of only in so far as He manifests Himself through, or in, the ten Sephiroth (Heb., lit. "enumerations"), or potencies, which emanate from Him and which form with Him, strict unity. They are said to have formed the first world, from which proceeds the second world, that of creation, with its ten Sephiroth of more limited potency. From this proceeds the third world, of formation, with its ten immaterial Sephiroth. The fourth world, of matter, in turn proceeds from the third world. Man was created by the Sephiroth and his pre-existent soul returns to God through transmigration. When the Messiah is eventually born at the end of days the world will return to the bosom of the Infinite Source, Hell will end and bliss begin. The hermeneutical methods, borrowed from the Gnostics, by which to perceive these doctrines supposed to be embodied in the Hebrew Scriptures are (1) Temurah, the transposition of the letters which make up a word, (2) Gematriah, number combinations translated to words, (3) Notarikon, the reconstruction of a word by using the initials of the words in a sentence. The theurgical element of the "Zohar" supplies formulas to the initiated by means of which they are able to communicate with the invisible powers. To the Kabbalist, redemption was possible by a mystic influence on God and the world of light through a rigid observance of the law, asceticism, etc. To the Christian, redemption is possible only through the merits of Christ. Kabbalism exerted a high moral influence upon its adherents and drew to the Christian Faith such men as Riccio, Conrad, Otto, Rittangel, Jacob Franck, etc.—C.E.

Kafiristan and Kashmir, Prefecture Apostolic of, British India, embraces a large portion of the northern extremity of India; established 1887; entrusted to St. Joseph's Society of Mill Hill, respectively. The introduction of Christianity into Kashmir was made by a Dominican chaplain, 1541, is thought to have shed his blood within the limits of the present Kansas, although the exact spot has never been determined.

He is known to have accompanied the Spanish expedition under Francisco de Coronado which reached the central plains of Kansas from Mexico, 1541, looking for the mythical treasures lands of Quivira, and turned back disillusioned. The missionary remained in New Mexico and then retraced his steps to the northeast, with a few companions, and was killed as he knelt in prayer, somewhere on the plains. Among the Indians mentioned by Father Marquette in 1673 were the Kanzas, as he called them. About 1821 a band of Spaniards, accompanied by a Dominican chaplain, were massacred by the Indians near the site of Fort Leavenworth. Successful missions were only established after the United States government had begun, c. 1825, to transplant beyond the Mississippi many eastern tribes of Indians who aroused the zeal of devoted Jesuits. Among the latter the leader was the Belgian Fr. Charles Van Quickénborne who had gone west from Maryland to St. Louis, 1821, and ministered to the Indians of Kansas as early as 1827. His first permanent mission, that of St. Francis Xavier, was established among the Kickapoos near Fort Leavenworth, 1826. St. Mary's Mission on the Kansas was established 12 years later by Fr. Pierre de Smet. At about the same time Fr. Schoenmakers founded a mission for the Osages on the Neosho...
River. When white settlers began to enter Kansas, their needs were looked after by Rt. Rev. John Mitez, S.J., appointed Vicar Apostolic of the so-called Indian Territory (including Kansas), 1850. By 1855 the Church of the Immaculate Conception in Leavenworth was built. Included in the state are the Dioceses of Leavenworth, Concordia, and Wichita (qq.v.). Catholic influence on the place-names of the state is shown in the following: Holyrood, Olivet, St. Clare, St. Francis, St. George, St. John, St. Marys, St. Paul. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in Kansas:

- Catholic Church: 128,948
- Methodist Episcopal Church: 151,348
- Disciples of Christ: 67,554
- Northern Baptist Convention: 46,906
- Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A: 45,263
- United Brethren in Christ: 19,924
- Congregational Churches: 16,856
- Lutheran Synodical Conference: 15,081
- Lutheran General Council: 8,651
- Friends (Orthodox): 7,086
- Evangelical Association: 6,641
- Protestant Episcopal Church: 5,677
- Churches of Christ: 4,111
- All Other Denominations: 6,410

Total Church Membership: 610,347

—C.E.; Shea.

KANSAS City, Diocese of, Missouri, comprises that part of the State of Missouri south of the Missouri River, and west of the eastern boundary of the counties of Monticello, Miller, Camden, Laclede, Wright, Douglas and Ozark; area, 23,539 sq. m.; suffragan of St. Louis. Bishops: John J. Hogan (1880-1913); Thomas F. Lillis (1880-1913). Churches, 119; priests, secular, 108; priests, regular, 51; religious women, 720; colleges, 2; seminary, 1; academies, 14; parochial schools, 57; pupils in parochial schools, 8,896; institutions, 13; Catholics, 80,000.—C.E.

Katolyckyj Provid, a Catholic weekly paper published in Philadelphia, Pa., in the Ukrainian language by the Ukrainians' Catholic bishop; founded 1927; circulation, 10,000.

Kavanagh, Edward (1795-1844), statesman and diplomat; b. Newcastle, Maine; d. there; prominent in the Maine Legislature from 1826 to 1831 when he was elected to Congress. As chargé d'affaires at Lisbon (1835-41) he negotiated a favorable commercial and navigation treaty with Portugal. He was a member of the commission which negotiated preliminaries of the Webster-Ashburton Treaty, and governor of Maine for nine months after the resignation of Fairfield.

—C.E.

Kavirondo, Prefecture Apostolic of, Kenya Colony, British East Africa; established 1925; bounded on the west by the civil line between Kenya and Uganda, and comprising the little islands of Lake Victoria; to the north, east, and south, the limits of the Vicariate of the Upper Nile; entrusted to the Foreign Missionaries of Mill Hill. Prefect Apostolic: Gorgon Brandis (1925), residence at Kisumu.

Keevatin, Vicariate Apostolic of, Manitoba; comprises the northern parts of Manitoba and Ontario; suffragan of St. Boniface; established 1916. Vicar Apostolic: Ovide Charlebois, O.M.I. (1916), residence at Le Pas, Manitoba. Churches, 38; priests, secular, 3; priests, regular (Oblates), 23; religious women, 69; Catholics, 6000.

Kelly, William (1811-88), inventor, b. Pitts­burgh, Pa.; d. Louisville, Ky. He invented several improvements in the manufacture of iron, and first converted cast iron into malleable steel by what is now known throughout the world as the Bessemer process. Bessemer's application for patents in America was refused on the ground that Kelly's process was identical and his patents anticipatory. It was claimed that workmen returning from Kelly's mills in Kentucky to England first interested Bessemer in the process.

Kenedy, P. J., and Sons, publishers, established 1826. The company has been carried on in the ownership and active management of 3 generations of one family. John Kenedy, born in Ireland, founded the house in Baltimore, transferring to New York, 1838. The first books bearing a New York imprint were on Catholic biography and doctrine and several on Ireland, most important of which was "The History of the Irish Insurrection of 1798." Patrick John Kenedy, succeeding his father, 1866, received from Leo XIII the honorary title, "Publisher to the Holy Apostolic See," 1895. The firm name changed to P. J. Kenedy & Sons, when Arthur and Louis Kenedy joined (1903), and on his father's death (1906) Arthur succeeded him as president, with Louis as vice president. Together they have given a strong impetus to the Catholic book trade and have made the "Official Catholic Directory," which they purchased, 1911, an up-to-date source of information on diocesan statistics.

Kenosis (Gr., an emptying). St. Paul (Philip., 2) says of Christ that He "emptied Himself." This emptying of self is to be properly understood of the abasement involved in the fact of the Incarnation, wherein the Second Person of the Trinity, retaining in the full sense His Godhead, assumed a lower nature with its limitations and imperfections. Often wrongly interpreted to mean that the Second Person voluntarily surrendered, for the time being, certain divine attributes which seemed incompatible with existence on a human plane.—C.E.; Lattey, The Incarnation, St. L., 1925.

Kenrick, Francis Patrick (1797-1863), b. Dublin; d. Baltimore. Ordained at Rome where he distinguished himself in the study of the Scriptures. While professor of theology at Bardstown Seminary, Kentucky, he was active as missionary and educator. As Bp. of Philadelphia (1830-51), he began erection of a seminary and the cathedral of St. John the Evangelist, erected at Holy Cross by the Dominican, Fr. William Whelan, who built a log hut on Pottinger's Creek near Bardstown, 1811. When Rt. Rev. Benedict Flaget, who had visited Louisville on his missionary journey, 1812, arrived at his See at Bardstown, 1811, as the first bishop of the whole North-west Territory he found about 10 log churches in central Kentucky, and one of brick built at the Irish settlement of Danville on land given by Daniel McEwion. In 1813 the bishop established his seminary in a log building at St. Stephen's. Included in the state are the Dioceses of Louisville and Covington (q.v.). Catholic influence on the place-names of the state is shown in the following: Cardinal, Christmas, Gethsemane, Holy Cross, Loretto, Mount Carmel, Nazareth, Sacramento, St. Catherine, St. Charles, St. Helen's, St. John, St. Joseph, St. Mary, St. Mary's City, St. Paul, St. Vincent, Trappist, Trinity. The U. S. Religious Census of 1910 gave the following statistics for church membership in Kentucky:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Church</th>
<th>Members</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Catholic Church</td>
<td>100,185</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Southern Baptist Convention</td>
<td>255,544</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disciples of Christ</td>
<td>129,912</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church, So.</td>
<td>114,785</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>National Baptist Convention</td>
<td>98,052</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>30,147</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Churches of Christ</td>
<td>24,536</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church in U.S.</td>
<td>22,242</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Baptists</td>
<td>17,165</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church in U.S.A.</td>
<td>14,604</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cumberland Presbyterian Church</td>
<td>11,827</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>African Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>10,387</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Protestant Episcopal Church</td>
<td>9,583</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All Other Denominations</td>
<td>73,023</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Church Membership</td>
<td>967,602</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

—C.E.; Shea.

Kenwood, See SACRED HEART, ACADEMY OF THE.

Kerkuk, Archdiocese of (Chaldean Rite), Kurdistan, Iraq, erected a bishopric, 1854, and archbishopric, 1863. Christianity was introduced at an early date, several persons having been martyred there, 318. Hormisdas Dibhi was appointed to the see, 1817, succeeding Theodore Mesakeh (1904-17). The archbishop holds the title Archbishop of Sulaiman, Churches, 9; priests, secular, 15; priests, regular, 3; elementary schools, 9; Catholics, 5840.

Kernan, Francis (1816-92), lawyer and statesman, b. Steuben Co., N. Y.; d. Utica. He held important offices in New York State, was congressman, 1863-65; first Catholic U. S. Senator from the state, 1876-82. He represented Georgetown College at the Catholic Congress of laymen at Baltimore in 1889. Received L.L.D. from Georgetown.—C.E.

Kerry, Diocese of, includes Kerry and part of County Cork; suffragan of Cashel; formed by the union of the ancient sees of Ardfert and Aghadoe before 1110. St. Benignus preached there, 450, and St. Erc of Slane (d. 512), tutor of the patron of Kerry, St. Brendan, was probably first bishop. St. Finnan Cam, the first to build a church at Aghadoe, also established the monastery and school of Innisfallen. The ancient cathedrals of Ardfert and Aghadoe are in ruins; the modern cathedral at Kerry... founded by St. Brigid in the 5th century; became The school of Kildare for men and women was suffragan of Dublin; unified in 1678. Distinguished in its early history were Sts. Patrick and Fiacc.

land, includes Carlow, and parts of Kildare, Leix, Lorrha, Quin. The oratory of St. Lua was the first bishop; St. Brigid established a home of sanctity and learning; suppressed during Elizabethan persecution; the Round Tower is all that remains. St. Laserian (d. 639) was the first Bp. of Leighlin; St. Conleth (c. 490), of Kildare; Dr. Leverous (1555-77) was one of the noted successors of the latter. Present bishop, Matthew Cullen (1927), succeeded Patrick Foley (1896-1927); residence at Carlow. The old cathedral of Leighlin has been a Protestant church since the Reformation; that of Kildare is now a Protestant cathedral.

The ruins of 240 churches and 63 religious houses attest the persecution of that period. Churches, 164; priests, secular, 137; priests, regular, 23; seminary, 1; colleges, 4; high schools, 6; several primary schools; institutions, 8; Catholics, 127,913; others, 20,768.—C.E.

Keyes, ERASMUS DARWIN (1810-95), soldier and convert, b. Brimfield, Mass.; d. Nice, France. He was graduated from West Point 1832, was military aide to Gen. Scott (1837-41), and brigadier-general of volunteers in the Civil War. For bravery at the Battle of Fair Oaks he was made brigadier-general in the regular army, a post he resigned in 1864. He wrote “Fifty Years’ Observation of Men and Events,” N. Y., 1884.—C.E.

Key of David. Christ according to Apocalypse, 1, has the Key of David. The expression is suggested by Isaias, 22, where Elijah is represented as having “the Key of the house of David” slung over his shoulder, as a symbol of power. Christ is set over the House of God (Eph., 1; Heb., 3), and exercises all authority in heaven and on earth (Matt., 28) and even in the nether world (Apoc., 1). The reference to David recalls the prophecies fulfilled in the exaltation of Christ.—The Apocalypse of John, ed. Swete, N. Y., 1922. (w. s. k.)

Keys, a symbol of the power and office of the Pope, the successor of Peter, to whom Our Lord said: “And I will give to thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven” (Matt., 16). Also a symbol of the Sacrament of Penance. In art they are associated with Sts. Peter and Genevieve. St. Peter is represented sometimes with one, the key of heaven; with two, either of gold or silver, to absolve and to bind; with two, either of gold or iron, to open the gates of heaven and hell; and again with one, symbolizing dominion over heaven, earth, and hell. St. Genevieve carries the key or keys of Paris.—C.E.

Khartum, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OP. 1846, as the Vicariate Apostolic of the Sudan, name changed, 1913; entrusted to the Sons of the Sacred Heart of Jesus of Verona. Vicar Ap. Tranquille Silvestri (1926); residence at Assuan or Khartum.

Kikuyu Affair, an incident occurring in Kikuyu, 1913. The Anglican Bps. of Mombasa and Uganda participated in a communion service with Presbyterian missionaries and otherwise compromised the traditional Anglican position. Dr. Frank Weston, Anglican Bp. of Zanzibar, an extreme “ Anglo-Catholic,” protested in an open letter to the Abp. of Canterbury, denouncing these bishops as guilty of heresy and demanding their trial. The incident created a wide stir in ecclesiastical circles and threatened for a time to convert, b. Brimfield, Mass.; d. Nice, France. He was graduated from West Point 1832, was military aide to Gen. Scott (1837-41), and brigadier-general of volunteers in the Civil War. For bravery at the Battle of Fair Oaks he was made brigadier-general in the regular army, a post he resigned in 1864. He wrote “Fifty Years’ Observation of Men and Events,” N. Y., 1884.—C.E.

Keyes, ERASMUS DARWIN (1810-95), soldier and convert, b. Brimfield, Mass.; d. Nice, France. He was graduated from West Point 1832, was military aide to Gen. Scott (1837-41), and brigadier-general of volunteers in the Civil War. For bravery at the Battle of Fair Oaks he was made brigadier-general in the regular army, a post he resigned in 1864. He wrote “Fifty Years’ Observation of Men and Events,” N. Y., 1884.—C.E.

Key of David. Christ according to Apocalypse, 1, has the Key of David. The expression is suggested by Isaias, 22, where Elijah is represented as having “the Key of the house of David” slung over his shoulder, as a symbol of power. Christ is set over the House of God (Eph., 1; Heb., 3), and exercises all authority in heaven and on earth (Matt., 28) and even in the nether world (Apoc., 1). The reference to David recalls the prophecies fulfilled in the exaltation of Christ.—The Apocalypse of John, ed. Swete, N. Y., 1922. (w. s. k.)

Keys, a symbol of the power and office of the Pope, the successor of Peter, to whom Our Lord said: “And I will give to thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven” (Matt., 16). Also a symbol of the Sacrament of Penance. In art they are associated with Sts. Peter and Genevieve. St. Peter is represented sometimes with one, the key of heaven; with two, either of gold or silver, to absolve and to bind; with two, either of gold or iron, to open the gates of heaven and hell; and again with one, symbolizing dominion over heaven, earth, and hell. St. Genevieve carries the key or keys of Paris.—C.E.

Khartum, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OP. 1846, as the Vicariate Apostolic of the Sudan, name changed, 1913; entrusted to the Sons of the Sacred Heart of Jesus of Verona. Vicar Ap. Tranquille Silvestri (1926); residence at Assuan or Khartum. Churches, 4; priests, 47; college, 1; high schools, 2; numerous primary schools; institution, 1; Catholics, 800.

Kikuyu Affair, an incident occurring in Kikuyu, 1913. The Anglican Bps. of Mombasa and Uganda participated in a communion service with Presbyterian missionaries and otherwise compromised the traditional Anglican position. Dr. Frank Weston, Anglican Bp. of Zanzibar, an extreme “Anglo-Catholic,” protested in an open letter to the Abp. of Canterbury, denouncing these bishops as guilty of heresy and demanding their trial. The incident created a wide stir in ecclesiastical circles and threatened for a time to disrupt relations between high and low Churchmen in all parts of the world. (F. K.)

Kildare and Leighlin, lîld'lîn, DIOCESE OP, Ireland, includes Carlow, and parts of Kildare, Leix, Offaly, Kilkenny, Wicklow, and Wexford counties; suffragan of Dublin; united in 1678. Distinguished in its early history were Sts. Patrick and Fiacc. The school of Kildare for men and women was founded by St. Brigid in the 5th century; became Kililin, kil-i-lîn, SAINT, MARTYR (c. 640-689), Apostle of Franconia, b. Ireland; d. Franconia. He is said to have been a monk and later a traveling bishop. About 686 he left Ireland for the continent where he became an active missionary in East Franconia and Thuringia. He converted Duke Gozbert and was murdered by the duke’s unlawful wife, Geilana. Patron of Würzburg. Relics in St. Peter church, Würzburg. Feast, 8 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Kilmina-Njaro, VICARIATE APOSTOLIC OP, East Africa, formed from the northern part of the Vicariate Apostolic of Bagamoyo, 1910, comprises eight districts; entrusted to the Fathers of the Holy Ghost and the Immaculate Heart of Mary. Mgr. Munsch was appointed vicar Apostolic, 1910; succeeded by Henry Gogarty, 1922; residence at Kilima. Catholics, 4500.

Killala, kil-lâlâ, DIOCESE OP, Ireland, includes portions of Mayo and Sligo; suffragan of Tuam; founded by St. Patrick, who created St. Muredach first bishop. Noted among the bishops of the diocese was John Mchale, subsequently Abp. of Tuam. His successors included the Dominicans Dr. Finan (1838), Thomas Feeney (1838-73), Dr. Connoy (1893-1911), and James Naughton (1912); residence at Ballina. The French under General Jean Humbert landed at Killala, 1798. Monastic ruins of the diocese include the beautiful Abbey of Moyne. Churches, 44; priests, 47; college, 1; high schools, 2; numerous primary schools; institution, 1; Catholics, 106,142; others, 3096.—C.E.

Killaloa, kil-lâl-â, DIOCESE OP, comprises portions of Clare, Tipperary, Offaly, Galway, Limerick, and Leix counties; suffragan of Cashel. St. Flannan was the first bishop (c. 640). Since the 12th century it has included the old dioceses of Roscrea and Inismacal. The remains of the cathedral of Inismacal and a round tower may still be seen. Brrr, the island of Iniscaltra, and Terryglass became celebrated centers of learning. Famous monasteries included those of Lorha, Ennis, and Quin. The oratory of St. Laurence on Friar’s Island is also of interest. St. Flannan’s cathedral has been in Protestant hands since the Reformation. The list of bishops includes Constance O’Brien (1179), who attended the Council of the Lateran; Conor O’Heney, present at the Council, 1215; Cornelius Ryan (1576-1617); John O’Moloney (1671-1702); Michael Fogarty (1894); residence at
KILMALOE | 530 | KINGS

Ennis. Churches, 143; priests, secular, 141; priests, regular, 24; religious women, 277; colleges, 2; high schools, 4; numerous primary schools; institutions, 10; Catholics, 126,320; others, 3,883.—C.E.

Kilmore, Diocese of, Ireland, comprises nearly all Cavan, and part of Leitrim, Fermanagh, Meath, and Sligo counties; suffragan of Armagh. First known bishop, St. Fedellen (or Fidelman); 6th century. The abbey was founded by Conchobhar (d. 1310). His successors included Andrew MacBrady (1445-55), Richard Brady (1580-1607), Hugh O'Reilly (1625-28), Andrew Campbell (1753-69 or 70), Patrick Finegan (1910); residence at Cavan. Ruins of several abbeys may be seen in the diocese, including that of Creevelea, Drumlane, and the Abbey of the Holy Trinity, on Trinity Island, a carved doorway of which may be seen in the Protestant cathedral of Kilmore. Churches, 90; priests, 125; college, 1; numerous primary schools; institutions, 5; Catholics, 102,253; others, 22,045.—C.E.

Kilwinning Abbey, Ayrshire, Scotland, founded between 1140 and 1162 by Hugh de Morville, Constable of Scotland, who introduced Tyronesian Benedictines from Kelso; it was one of the most opulent and flourishing monasteries in Scotland for nearly four centuries. The last abbot, Gavin Hamilton, was killed, 1571; the confiscation and destruction of the abbey soon followed. The Earls of Eglinton are in possession of the ruins.—C.E.

Kimmerley, Vicariate Apostolic of, Australia, comprises the northeastern part of Western Australia; area, about 120,000 sq. m.; established 1887; suffragan of Perth; entrusted to the Fathers of the Pious Society of Missions, Vicars Apostolic: Pius Torens (1910-14), John Creagh (retired), William Kelly (d. 1921), Ernest Coppo (1922-28), retired 1928), Otto Raible (1928); residence at Bromelton, which may be seen in the Protestant cathedral of kilmore. Churches, 90; priests, 125; college, 1; numerous primary schools; institutions, 5; Catholics, 102,253; others, 22,045.—C.E.

King's, Books of. In the Douay Bible these number four, corresponding to Samuel and Kings in the original Hebrew Bible, according to the nomenclature given in the Talmud: “Our rabbins teach: the order of Nebim is: Joshua, Judges, Samuel, Kings.” Protestant versions follow the Hebrew, but divide each book into two, as do Jewish Bibles since the 16th century (Romberg editions). The Clementine Vulgate follows the Septuagint, but substitutes “Kings” for “Kings.” Thus, the nomenclature is as follows:

- Original Hebrew
  - Samuel
  - Kings

- Vulgate and Douay
  - 1 and 2 Samuel
  - 1 and 2 Kings

- Septuagint
  - Kings A and B
  - Kings G and D

- Protestant Versions
  - 1 and 2 Samuel
  - 1 and 2 Kings

“Kings” are the rulers of the united and divided Hebrew kingdom (c. 1040-561 B.C.), 1 Kings treats: the life of Samuel, last of the judges; the foundation of the monarchy; and the first king, Saul. 2 Kings treats the reign of David. 3 Kings treats... of the reign of Solomon and the divided kingdom till the departure of Elias. 4 Kings gives us the remainder of the history of Israel till the Assyrian captivity and the history of the kingdom of Juda to the Babylonian captivity. The books are the works of at least two authors. 1 and 2 Kings mention no sources except the "book of Jashar," but they probably contain notes from the pens of Samuel, Nathan, and Gad. The present form can not be dated earlier than the divided kingdom (933). If some passages be from a later reductor, it is not improbable that these books are the work of Nathan. 3 and 4 Kings were finally edited after Merodach-Baladan (591-559). As author later tradition assigns Jeremias, which is probable, if a later editor added here and there.—C.E.; Pope; Seisenberger, tr. Buchanan, Practical Handbook for the Study of the Bible, N. Y., 1911; Simon, Scripture Manual, N. Y., 1924.

King's Evil (or SCROFULA) is so called from the legend according to which the power of healing this disease was bestowed by St. Remigius upon the French Kings. Edward the Confessor was the first King of England to cure by his touch this affliction. It is tuberculosis of the lymphatic glands and sometimes of bones and joint surfaces, with slowly suppurating abscesses and fistulous passages, the inflamed structures being subject to a cheesy degeneration.

King's Sons Free from Tribute, parable of the (Matt., 17) (not used liturgically), is very important. It implies Christ's claim to Divine Sonship (admitted by all commentators except such extremists as hold that the Christ of the Synoptists holds out no such claim). The time is after the Transfiguration; the place Capernaum, probably the house of Peter; the occasion: the attempt to collect from Christ the annual temple tax, ordained by "the Law" (Ex., 30). Peter had hastily assured the collector that his master would pay it. Christ coming into the house confronted Peter (ere he could inform him of the incident) with the question: whether the king's sons must pay tribute and custom. The answer supposed is: No. Thus Christ plainly declared that he claimed to be "the son of Jehovah, the God of Israel, to whom the temple tax was due." By theological reasoning the parable may be proved to teach, moreover, that the apostles, too, as Christ's family, are free. Hence the "we" in Christ's answer: "that we may not scandalize." This may teach us further that the law of evangelical freedom must not be abused so as to scandalize the little ones. (Chrys.).—Fonck, tr. Lebhy, Parables of the Gospel, N. Y., 1915.

Kingston, Archdiocese of, Ontario; diocese, 1826; archdiocese, 1889; comprises the territory from the eastern line of Dundas County to the western boundary of Hastings Co.; also Addington, Dundas, Frontenac, Grenville, Hastings, Leeds, Lennox, Prince Edward, and part of Lanark Counties; suffragans: Alexandria, Peterborough and Sault Ste-Marie. Bishops: Alexander McDonnell (1820-40); Remigius Gaulin (1840-57); Patrick Phelan, S.S. (May, 1857-June, 1857); Edward John Horan (1858-75); John O'Brien (1875-79). Archbishops: J. V. Cleary (1880-98); C. H. Gauthier (1898-1910); Michael J. Spratt (1911). Churches, 69; priests, secular, 67; priests, regular, 12; religious women, 305; college, 1; academy, 1; parochial schools 46; institutions, 5; Catholics, 45,000.—C.E.

Kinloss Abbey, Morayshire, Scotland, founded, 1150 or 1151, by David I and colonized from Melrose. It was approved by Alexander III, 1174. The abbots were mitred with a seat in Parliament. Robert Reid, abbot from 1535-41 was the most illustrious of the 24 and became Bp. of Orkney, 1541. His successor Walter confers into Protestantism and alienated most of the lands which are now possessed by the family of Brodie of Lethen.—C.E.

Kino (K'un), EUSEBIUS 1644-1711), Jesuit missionary, b. Welsh Tyrol; d. California. He founded the mission of Lower California, and the first accurate knowledge of that section is given in the reports of his explorations. According to a Jesuit MS. he was killed by rebel Indians. His "Historical Memoir of Pimeria Alta" has been translated by Bolton and published in Cleveland, 1919. —C.E.

Kirchenlexikon, the name of one of the first modern encyclopedias to treat comprehensively in one work everything that had any connection with Catholic theology. Published in Germany, 1856, by Karl Herder who had safeguarded its production in the midst of ecclesiastico-political troubles from 1840, it is considered the outstanding achievement of his career as a publisher. The first successful attempt to unite all the Catholic German savants in the composition of one great work, it secured the noteworthy efforts of such men as Hergenröther, Hefele, Funk, church historian, Thalhofer, Wetzer, the orientalist, who named the completed work and edited it jointly with Canon Welte, the exegete, Drs. Kaulen, Abfaller, and Streber.

Kircher, Athanasius (1001-80), Jesuit scientist, b. Geisa; d. Rome. The results of his important studies of the volcanoes of Etna, Stromboli, and Vesuvius, were published in "Mundus Subterraneus," a valuable contribution to the explanation of subterranean forces. His collections of antiquities and ethnological remains were the foundation for the Museum Kircherianum in the Roman College. A pioneer in the science of deciphering hieroglyphics, he furthered the study of comparative philology. He also perfected the speaking tube and the Zollan harp, and invented the magic lantern.—C.E.

Kirk, form of the word church in northern England and Scotland. It was the name applied to the Church of Scotland at the time of the Western Assembly and is also used to distinguish the Established Church of Scotland from the Catholic, Anglican, and Reformed churches.

Kiss, Liturgical Use of. As enjoined. by St. Peter and St. Paul, early Christians terminated any reading of Scriptures with a kiss. 2. At High Mass the celebrant kisses the altar, and presents his left cheek to the deacon’s, saying Pax tecum (peace be with you); the deacon conveys the salute to the sub-deacon, thence to the other clergy. This is called the Kiss of Peace. 3. The celebrant kisses the altar nine times during Mass as a symbol of respect. 4. Kissing the pope’s foot is a salute of respect in solemn papal Mass, at the “veneration” of the pope by cardinals, and in a private audience. 5. A bishop kisses those he has just ordained priests.—C.E.

Knights of Columbus, a fraternal benefit society for Catholic men founded and incorporated in New Haven, Conn., in 1882, for the purpose of developing a practical Catholicity among its members, of promoting Catholic education and charity, and of furnishing at least temporary financial aid to the families of deceased members, by means of its insurance department. The order has grown rapidly and is now established in every one of the United States, in Mexico, Cuba, Panama, the Philippine Islands, Newfoundland, and Canada; its statistics as stated on 30 June, 1929, show a membership of 247,046 in the insured class and 390,682 in the associate class divided among 2,544 subordinate councils and represented by 63 State councils. These subordinate and State councils are governed by the Supreme Council, the legislative body of the order, and by the Board of Directors, the executive body. The society publishes “Columbia,” a monthly magazine of general interest, and many of the councils have their individual publications. The charitable accomplishments of the Knights of Columbus include beds endowed in Catholic hospitals, scholarships provided in Catholic colleges, the maintenance of free employment bureaus, distinguished services during the World War, the foundation of a chair in American History at the Catholic University of America, etc.—C.E.

Knights of Father Mathew, total abstinence and semi-military body, instituted at St. Louis, Mo., 1872. Membership is either active or honorary. The society promotes temperance and frugality, and provides for the families of its deceased members a life-insurance feature which was adopted in 1881. “Ladies Auxiliaries of the Knights of Father Mathew” are instrumental in promoting temperance among the young, and active in charitable work among the poor. The Knights and the ladies auxiliaries were affiliated with the Catholic Total Abstinence Union of America in 1895. They have councils in Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, and Kansas.

Knights of St. Gregory, Order of, a pontifical order of knighthood founded by Pope Gregory XVI, 1 Sept., 1831, as a decoration for meritorious services of subjects of the States of the Church, under the patronage of St. Gregory I. It has both a civil and a military division, each of which is divided into four classes: (1) Grand Cross Knights, First Class; (2) Grand Cross Knights, Second Class; (3) Commanders; (4) Knights. Membership in the Order is not now confined to any country, or to Catholics, but is a reward for any meritorious public service which benefits religion and the Holy See.—C.E., IV, 607.

Knights of Pythias. See Secret Societies.

Knowledge, the act or state of knowing. By reason of its primordial character knowledge cannot be strictly defined, but only described. Philosophically the term implies the consciousness of any object which can be attained by the cognitive faculties, whether this be simply the consciousness of sense experience, or the understanding of general laws and principles. The latter, considered as the fruit of a demonstrative process of reasoning, is properly termed science. From a psychological point of view, knowledge is effected by the vital union of an object with a knowing subject.—C.E.; Mahler, Psychology, N. Y., 1909; Ladd, The Philosophy of Knowledge, N. Y., 1897. (L. C.)

Knowledge of Jesus Christ. Our Lord as God is omniscient, since this is a property of the Divine nature. His human knowledge is finite, like us, He acquired knowledge by experience, information, reasoning: otherwise the Gospel would be unintelligible. But, besides this experimental knowledge, He had also what theologians call infused knowledge, such as the prophets of old received. It is only natural that His human nature, being hypostatically united to the Word of God, would receive a participation of God’s knowledge; but He regulated it according to the needs of His mission. During His mortal life, He even had the beatific vision which the elect enjoy in heaven. This too as a consequence of His Hypostatic Union. The Church has lately insisted on the truth of this theological doctrine as to the threelfold human knowledge of Christ, a doctrine which involves no contradiction and is in no real opposition to any text from the Holy Scriptures, although some delicate problems may be connected with the explanation of various texts.—C.E.; Pohle-Preuss, Christology, St. L., 1922.

Knownothingism, term used to designate a lawless and unconstitutional movement in American politics, 1852-68. It was an outgrowth of the Native American movement (q.v.) and aimed to deprive foreigners and all Catholics, particularly Irish Catholics, of private and civil rights. The property and persons of its innocent victims, who received no aid from the civil authorities, were subjected to revolting exactions and mob violence. The leaders of the movement, mostly lawless bigots, and later called “Know-Nothings” from their habit of answering “I don’t know,” to all questions relating to their affairs, were united in New York City, 1852, under the title “National Council of the United States of North America.” They swore an oath of secrecy in regard to their order, its membership, aim, etc., and promised to vote into public office only native-born Americans who were neither Catholic, nor married to Catholics. Their political prestige in the beginning was extraordinary. By 1855 they had seventy-five avowed Know-Nothings in Congress and had carried the elections in nine states; but they declined in power after their defeat by the National Democratic party, 1856, and gradually disappeared.—C.E.

Knox, John (c. 1505-72), Presbyterian leader, b. Haddington, Scotland; d. Edinburgh. The facts of his early life are uncertain. His writings show that he had a knowledge of Latin, French, Greek, and Hebrew, and law and theology. He was a priest, and served as private tutor in 1547, when he was imprisoned in connection with the murder of Cardinal Beaton. In 1554 he was married, and visited Calvin at Geneva, from whence he returned, 1555, to begin his preaching career in Scotland. He was forced to leave for Geneva because of his hostility to Queen Mary of England but returned, 1559, upon the accession of Elizabeth. The Queen Regent of Scotland, Mary of Guise, died in 1560, and Knox and the Protestant party were triumphant. The Mass was abolished, and the death penalty was incurred by those who assisted at the sacrifice. Knox was commissioned by the Lords of the Congregation to compile a new creed, and produced the famous "Scottish Confession." He violently opposed the policies and religion of Mary, Queen of Scots, who had entered Scotland, 1561. In 1569, five years after his second marriage, he suffered an apoplectic stroke from which he never fully recovered. Knox was the greatest Protestant writer in the Scottish vernacular of his time. His preaching gloriously, austere, and unforgiving as the creed he preached.—C.E.

Kohlmann, Anthony (1771-1836), educator and missionary, b. Kaiserberg, Alsace; d. Rome. He was ordained priest after completing his theological studies at Fribourg, and joined the Congregation of the Fathers of the Sacred Heart, 1796. After two years as a military chaplain he became the director of a seminary and a college. In 1803 he joined the Society of Jesus, in Russia, and was sent to the U. S., where he became assistant to the master of novices at Georgetown, Md., 1804. He was selected by Bp. John Carroll, 1808, to accomplish necessary educational reform in New York City. He founded the N. Y. Literary Institution and a school for girls. He became involved in a lawsuit in N. Y. after he had been instrumental in restoring stolen goods, which he had received under the seal of the confessional, to a man who demanded to know the thief. Naturally Fr. Kohlmann refused to betray the guilty man. The decision rendered in Fr. Kohlmann's favor, justifying the seal of Confession, was embodied in the state law, 1828. He was administrator of the diocese of N. Y. until the arrival of the first bishop; returned to Georgetown as master of novices, 1815, and became superior, 1817. He was then called to Rome where he taught theology at the Gregorian University for five years. His essay on Unitarianism is classic. Kohlmann Hall, N. Y., is named for him.—C.E.

Kolping, Adolph (1813-65), surnamed the "journeymen's father" (Gesellenleiter). He showed an early inclination to study, but, as his parents were poor, he was obliged to learn the trade of shoemaker. He became a priest in 1845, and was sent as chaplain to Elberfeld, where a choral society founded by some journeymen carpenters grew rapidly into a Young Workman's Society. Father Kolping was elected president of this society; with Cologne as his headquarters, he visited the industrial centers of Germany, Austria, Hungary, and Switzerland, and established a widespread organization of some 800,000 members (society of young journeymen), throughout the German-speaking world, with a priest at the head of each. These societies exist primarily for the purpose of cultivating the religious and moral sense of the members, who are also instructed in mercantile and technical subjects; lectures are given on various topics, and social entertainments are allowed in moderation. In Europe the Gesellenvereine have 400 houses and 2,654,000 members; in the United States, 5 houses and 1,200 members; in S. America, 3 houses, and about 200 members.—C.E., VI, 538.

Koran or Quran (Ar., qura'a, to read), the sacred book of Mohammedans esteemed by them as Divine revelation. Supplemented by the Hadith or tradition, it is the foundation of Islam, and the final authority in matters religious, social, and legal. It consists of 114 suras, or chapters, varying from two sentences to lengthy ones. It lacks chronological or logical order. Containing history, fiction, religious belief and practices, laws, descriptions, etc., it is a combination of fact and fancy. It is written in rhymed Arabic prose with matter mostly borrowed from Old and New Testament and apocryphal writings, from later Judaism and Rabbinism, from Christian heresies, and from Arabian, Babylonian, and Persian heathenism. Some of the suras were delivered at Mecca before the Flight, A.D. 610-622; others afterwards at Medina, A.D. 622-633. Mohammed is the admitted author, though whether penned by him or delivered orally and later written down by others is uncertain. After Mohammed's death, A.D. 633, all fragments were collected into one volume by his disciple, Zaid ibn Thabit. Later revised in phraseology, it constitutes the present Koran. See Mohammed and Mohammedanism.—C.E.; Muir, The Koran, Lond., 1903; Tisdall, Original Sources of the Qur'an, Lond., 1905; Hirschfield, New Researches in the Quran, Lond., 1902.

Kosciuszko, Tadeusz (1752-1817), b. Lithuania, Poland; d. Solothurn, Switzerland. Having served in Washington's army during the American Revolution, he was made brigadier-general and was voted the thanks of Congress. He headed the revolution of Poland in 1794, was captured by the Russians, who imprisoned him for two years, and was finally released by Emperor Paul.—C.E.

Kottayam, Diocese of, India, comprises the churches and chapels of the Syriac Catholic Syrian Christians on the coast of Malabar; established from the Vicariate Apostolic of Kottayam, 1923; suffragan of Ernakulam. Alexander Chalappadomhi, vicar Apostolic from 1914, was created bishop, 1923. Churches, 34; priests, 46; religious women, 68; seminary, 1; high school, 1; elementary schools, 42; institutions, 2; Catholics, 34,891.

Krishtnagar, Diocese of, India, comprises five districts of the province of Bengal; established, 1886; suffragan of Calcutta; entrusted to the Salesians. Bishops: Francisco Pozzi (1887-1905), and Sanctinus Tavaggin (1906). Churches and chapels, 166; priests, secular, 21; religious women, 23; educational institutions, 57; charitable institutions, 10; Catholics, 17,782. See DIBAJPUR, Diocese of.

Kroonstad, Prefecture Apostolic of, Orange Free State, Union of South Africa (British possession); established 1923; comprises the civil districts of Kroonstad, Heilbron, Vrede, Lindley, Senekal, Bethlehem, Ficksburg, Harrismith, Vrede and half the districts of Hoopstad, Wimburg, and Ladybrand, the whole extending from the Vaal River and Transvaal District on the north to the Vet River and the line from the Vet to Masern on the south; entrusted to the German Missionaries of the Fathers of the Holy Spirit. Prefect Apostolic: Leon Klerlein, C.S.Sp. (1924). Churches, 4; stations, 36; priests, 10; Catholics, 700.

Ku Klux Klan, term assumed at two distinct periods in the history of the United States by secret organizations. (1) Order of the Ku Klux Klan (1866-69), a secret organization of men founded at Pulaski, Tenn., by former Confederate soldiers primarily for purposes of amusement. The social disorders of the Reconstruction period, and the attempts made to Africanize the South led the members to the more serious task of "regulating" human conduct. The Klan claimed to be "an institution of Chivalry, Humanity, Mercy, and Patriotism," with a threefold purpose: to protect the weak, defend the Constitution, and to assist in the execution of Constitutional laws. It grew so lawless and violent that President Grant had to employ federal troops to suppress it in the fourteen southern states which it had embraced. The Klan continued to exist in a semi-organized fashion throughout the Union after 1870, gradually acquiring a name for lawlessness. (2) Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, a secret fraternal organization, falsely claiming to be the Klan of 1866, which was "reborn" at Atlanta, Ga., 1915, as a national politico-religious body professing to uphold the Constitution by extra-legal means, as well as to promote 100 per cent. Americanism. It sought to accomplish this purpose by an opposition to Catholics, Jews, Negroes, and the foreign-born. A lawless, reforming organization, it instituted a campaign of terrorization which gradually brought it into disfavor among right-thinking Americans. This, together with scandals within the Klan, caused a decline in its power after 1926. An attempt at reorganization was made, 1928, when its members assumed the title "Knights of the Green Forest."—Fry, Modern Ku Klux Klan, New York, 1922.

Kulturkampf, the name given to the political struggle for the rights and self-government of the Catholic Church carried on chiefly in Prussia, Baden, Hesse, and Bavaria. It was the distinguished Liberal politician and scientist, Professor Rudolph Virchow, who first called it the Kulturkampf, or struggle for civilization. The principal leaders in the Kulturkampf were Bismarck, the Chancellor, and Falk, minister of worship, both of whom were supported by the enemies of the Church within and without Parliament. The aim was to destroy Ultramontanism and the papal influence in Germany and to set up a national Church subject to an omnipotent state.

The causes of the Kulturkampf were various but especially might be mentioned: (1) the political party-life of Germany. There were the Prussian Conservatives who represented the Orthodox Protestants holding fast to the principle of a Protestant Prussia as formerly constituted (i.e., up to the German Revolution of 1848). This party was led by Marx, Blum, v. Falk, minister of worship, both of whom were supported in Parliament for an anti-Roman policy. There were also the German Liberals who were the real instigators of the onslaught on German Catholicism. This party was composed of anti-clerical disciples of French Deism or Austrian Josephinism, of enthusiastic admirers of German poetry and philosophy, strictly opposed to dogmatic and ecclesiastical Christianism as represented by Rome. With the help of legislation and State schools they hoped to secure for "free and independent science" (die freie Wissenschaft) an absolute control over the intellectual life of the whole German nation. Shortly after 1860 the Liberals of Prussia and of other states gained the ascendancy in Parliament, and under pressure of Bismarck, the Minister, began more and more to enroach on the rights of the Church. (2) A second cause that led to the Kulturkampf was the strong feeling that the national unity was incomplete so long as the Germans were divided in religion. Both the Protestant and the Liberal Party united in the opinion that a permanent political unity of Germany depended absolutely on unity of religion, language and education. On this ground they proclaimed the Catholic minority a foreign element to be either assimilated or exterminated. (3) A third cause for the Kulturkampf was the powerful Chancellor himself, Otto von Bismarck, who after the Franco-Prussian War of 1870 was dominated by the fear that new wars would soon be necessary to maintain the unity of Germany. In this temper he was deeply concerned lest the growing inimical party of Catholics should receive support from possible anti-Prussian elements and prove a positive danger to the new German Empire. He therefore
The progress of the Kulturkampf briefly was as follows: Bismarck abolished the Catholic section of the Prussian Ministry of Worship, 8 July, 1871, and appointed mostly Protestant officials to conduct all matters pertaining to the Catholic Church and her schools. Education was put exclusively into the hands of the state and the Jesuits were expelled from the empire, 1873. A year later a like expulsion was decreed against the Redemptorists, Lazarists, Fathers of the Holy Ghost, and Religious of the Sacred Heart as being communities allied with the Jesuits. Then followed the May Laws of 1873 dealing with the training and nomination of the clergy, the powers of ecclesiastical superiors, the establishment of a secular court for deciding ecclesiastical questions and bestowing on it the right of dismissing the clergy from their posts, curtailing the Church's power of punishing, and prescribing rules for those desirous of leaving the Church. Upon refusal to obey these laws bishops and priests were fined and imprisoned and the laws became more severe. In 1874, Divinity students were declared non-exempt from military service, and it was decided that ecclesiastics who refused to obey the May Laws could be expelled from the empire. Civil marriage became compulsory, 1875, and all religious communities except those devoted to the care of the sick were expelled from the empire. It was not long before most of the sees and hundreds of parishes were bereft of their tenants, thus rendering Catholic worship impossible.

The efforts of the "Iron Chancellor" were in vain. The great majority of clergy and laity remained loyal to the episcopate, and their power of resistance grew with the progress of the conflict. Under the able leadership of Ludwig Windthorst, the Catholic Center Party, strengthened by the accession of Protestants who were above bigotry and persecution, increased its membership both in the Prussian Diet and in the Imperial Parliament. Soon the government was compelled to retreat, and Bismarck was forced to "Canossa." A twofold attempt on the life of Emperor William demonstrated that by suppressing the Church and religion, the basis of the social order had suffered. The growth of socialism convinced Bismarck that the State had a far greater enemy in this revolutionary movement than in the conservative Catholic Church.

With the election of Pope Leo XIII in 1878, the restoration of peace began. One by one the noxious laws were either repealed or accorded milder interpretation. In 1882 Prussia established an embassy at the Vatican. Under William II Catholic students of Divinity were again declared exempt from military service in time of peace; in 1891 the accumulated funds of the dioceses were restored to their owners; the Redemptorists were readmitted in 1894, and the laws against the Jesuits were modified in 1905. The Kulturkampf finally resulted in consolidating the Catholics into a powerful political party which proved a bulwark against German socialism and enabled its members to participate more earnestly than heretofore in the public life of the Fatherland. —C.E.; Funk, A Manual of Church History, St. L., 1913; Weber, A General History of the Christian Era, Wash., 1920.

St. Kunigunde

The great majority of clergy and laity remained loyal to the episcopate, and their power of resistance grew with the progress of the conflict. Under the able leadership of Ludwig Windthorst, the Catholic Center Party, strengthened by the accession of Protestants who were above bigotry and persecution, increased its membership both in the Prussian Diet and in the Imperial Parliament. Soon the government was compelled to retreat, and Bismarck was forced to "Canossa." A twofold attempt on the life of Emperor William demonstrated that by suppressing the Church and religion, the basis of the social order had suffered. The growth of socialism convinced Bismarck that the State had a far greater enemy in this revolutionary movement than in the conservative Catholic Church.

With the election of Pope Leo XIII in 1878, the restoration of peace began. One by one the noxious laws were either repealed or accorded milder interpretation. In 1882 Prussia established an embassy at the Vatican. Under William II Catholic students of Divinity were again declared exempt from military service in time of peace; in 1891 the accumulated funds of the dioceses were restored to their owners; the Redemptorists were readmitted in 1894, and the laws against the Jesuits were modified in 1905. The Kulturkampf finally resulted in consolidating the Catholics into a powerful political party which proved a bulwark against German socialism and enabled its members to participate more earnestly than heretofore in the public life of the Fatherland. —C.E.; Funk, A Manual of Church History, St. L., 1913; Weber, A General History of the Christian Era, Wash., 1920. the one hour laborer was entitled to as much as with Mme. de Maintenon. The tract of land given hiring men at different hours of the day even up France. Rector of the Jesuit College at Lyons, and the full day laborer. The householder is evidently him in Paris is now the famous Pere La Chaise of Christ (Matt., 20), in which the householder 1709), confessor of Louis XIV, b. Aix, d. Paris, the wage, "a penny" meaning a piece of money, as they were dismissed of Mme. de Montespan, and his marriage of Christ (Matt., 20), in which the householder 1709), confessor of Louis XIV, b. Aix, d. Paris, with the care of the standard.—C.E.
Labbe, PHILIPPE (1607-67), historian, b. Bourges; d. Paris, France. Entering the Society of Jesus, 1623, he taught classes of rhetoric, and philosophy, and for five years filled the chair of among his principal works are "Tirocinium Linguae Graecae," novelship in the Greek language, "La Geographie royale," Royal Geography, and "Concilia conciliorum ad agnisionem exacta," Royal edition of the sacred counclers.—C.E.

Laborers in the Vineyard, one of the parables of Christ (Matt., 20), in which the householder hiring men at different hours of the day even up to the eleventh, or last, gives each of them the same wage, "a penny" meaning a piece of money, as if the one hour laborer was entitled to as much as the full day laborer. The householder is evidently meant for Christ as head of His Kingdom to do as He sees fit with his gifts, to give those who cannot find work to do as much as those who are more fortunate; to bless those who have to struggle for the faith as much as those to whom it comes easily, as if by inheritance, or with mother's milk. Many would see in the parable an economic meaning, and it seems to justify the principle of a living wage the right of all men to have enough to live on;
provided they seek and perform their share of labor honestly.—Ollivier, tr. Leahy, Parables of Our Lord, Lond., 1927; Fonck, tr. Leahy, Parables of the Gospel, N. Y., 1915. (ED.)
La Bruyère, la bru-yar, JEAN DE (1645-96), critic and moralist, b. Paris; d. Chantilly. In 1684 he became tutor of the young Duke of Bourbon, grandson of Condé, and subsequently remained in the family as "Gentilhomme to the Duke." His principal work is the famous book of "Caractives," in which he depicts his times in a clever, epigrammatic style. The book abounds in portraits drawn with picturesque accuracy. The last two chapters on "Preaching" and on "The Atheists" send special attention.—C.E. (F. P. D.)
Lace, Hand-made lace is either needlepoint or bobbin-point. The first has three divisions: lacia, made on netting; drawn-work, made on a foundation of linen; punto di aria, made without foundation. The second, made by bobbins on a pillow, or by crochet, netting, or knotting threads by hand, includes peasant lace where the bobbin is not cut off from the pillow, laces such as Milanese where the patterns are made on the pillow and afterwards joined, laces such as Valenciennes where the same bobbins are used for both pattern and ground.
Specimens of lace are found among Egyptian antiquities. In Christian times the finest laces were made for ecclesiastical use. In the 8th century the geometric patterns were modified probably through the influence of realistic ornamentation that had been introduced in illuminating MSS. The earliest pattern books, dated 1527, prove that the art was then at an advanced stage. In the 16th century Venetian lace-makers introduced needlepoint into France. Pillow lace flourished in the Netherlands from the 15th to the 18th century. Bobbin lace has been made in England since the 16th century.
Ireland is noted for both needlepoint and crochet.
Lace machines originated in England and were perfected in France. All kinds of modern laces are made by machinery.—C.E.; Pollen, Seven Centuries of Lace, Lond., 1908.
La Chaise, la-shaz, FRANCOIS D' AIX DE (1624­ 1709), confessor of Louis XIV, b. Aix, d. Paris, France. Rector of the Jesuit College at Lyons, and later provincial, his influence led to the king's dismissal of Mme. de Montespan, and his marriage with Mme. de Maintenon. The tract of land given him in Paris is now the famous Père La Chaise cemetery.—C.E.
La Chine, la-shen, city, the island of Montreal, province of Quebec, Canada. The Canal of La Chine is used to avoid the Sault-St-Louis, the largest rapid of the St. Lawrence river. The name was given by early explorers who thought the St.
Lawrence flowed into the China Sea. In 1689 the town was destroyed by the Iroquois. Just below the rapids is the famous Caughnawaga where Catherine Tekakwitha spent her last years. Population, 11,000.
Lacordaire, la-kor-dar, HENRI DOMINIQUE
(1802-61), pulpit orator, b. Soreze, France. Ordained, 1827, he was a collaborator of Lamennais for a while on the newspaper "L'Avenir," but after his master's condemnation he separated from him and returned to Paris where he began his famous conferences at Notre­ Dame (1855). In 1840 he joined the Dominican order, and restored it in France, 1843; the confer­ ces were then resumed and continued until 1852.
Elected member of the Chamber of Deputies, 1848, he founded a newspaper, "L'Ère Nouvelle," which had only a brief existence. He soon retired from political life and became superior of the Military School of Soreze, where he died. A member of the French Academy (1860), his most celebrated work, the "Conférences," met with great success; his biographies of St. Dominic and Mary Magdalen, among of little historical value, are popular, as are also his "Letters to young men."—C.E.; Chocarne, The Inner Life of Père Lacordaire, Lond., 1901. (F. P. D.)
La Crosse, Diocese of, Wisconsin, comprises the following counties: Adams, Buffalo, Chippewa, Clark, Crawford, Dunn, Eau Claire, Grant, Iowa, Jackson, Juneau, La Crosse, Lafayette, Marathon, Monroe, Pepin, Pierce, Richland, Sauk, Trempealeau, Vernon, and Wood; area, 17,299 sq. m.; erected, 1869; subdivided, 1905; suffragan of Milwaukee. Bps. Michael Heiss (1868-81), Kilian Caspar Flasch (1881-91), James Schwebach (1892-1921), Alexander J. McGavick (1921). Churches, 229; priests, secular, 180; priests, regular, 41; religious women, 2,161; colleges, 2; academies, 3; high schools, 12; parish schools, 88; pupils in parochial schools, 13,737; institutions, 9; Catholics, 117,152.

Ladies of Charity, an association of "women of the world" who endeavor by coordinating their charitable work to accomplish greater and more desirable results than would be possible by individual isolated efforts. The organization owes its inception to St. Vincent de Paul and Bl. Louise Marillac. In 1617 there were only two branches with 52 members; now the number of branches spread over the world totals 1720 with a membership of many thousands. Their aim is to participate effectively in what has been called "The Apostolate of the Laity," paying special attention to the needs of women and children. The association is not merely philanthropic; built up on the basis of Catholic charity, in all its works it seeks to benefit both body and soul of those for whom it labors, the good works being regarded as a means of the personal sanctification of its members. In England the Ladies of Charity had special encouragement from Card. Vaughan, and under his guidance much excellent social work was inaugurated and is still carried on: e.g., settlement work; visiting the poor in their homes, hospitals, and infirmaries; organization of girls' clubs; relief work; teaching Catholic doctrine to children who attend non-Catholic schools; after-care committee work. The associates are either active or honorary; the former personally engage in some form of the active works of the society; the latter contribute financial aid; both participate equally in the spiritual favors granted to the association. In New York, they are connected with the Catholic Charities; 1997 members.

Ladislaus, Saint (1040-95), King of Hungary, b. Poland; d. Neutra, Hungary. His father was Bela I and upon the death of his brother, Geza I, the nobles chose Ladislaus to succeed him rather than Solomon, the son of Andrew I. He enlarged his kingdom by the conquest of Croatia and Dalmatia and expelled the Huns, Tatars, and Russians, making Christianity the national religion. In the government of his realm he followed the illustrious example of St. Stephen, thus winning the respect and love of his subjects. Canonized, 1198. Relics at Varadin. Feast, 27 June—C.E.; Butler.

Lady Chapel, a chapel dedicated to Our Lady, often attached to the choir of a church at the end opposite the nave, or forming a separate small building joined to the church by a covered passage. In the English cathedrals it was usually a deep chapel prolonging the main axis to the east; in France the largest and easternmost of the chevet chapels, i.e., the crown of chapels.—Henry, Catholic Customs and Symbols, N. Y., 1925.

Lady Day (Dies Mariae Deiparae, the Day of Mary Mother of God), a title still commonly used in Ireland and elsewhere for the feast of the Assumption, 15 Aug. "Day of Mary Mother of God" is the primitive title for the feast. The old Armenian calendar (5th cent.) carried it for the date corresponding to 15 Aug. under the title of the "Annunciation of the Mother of God" referring to the decree of the Council of Ephesus (c. 431) which declared as a dogma of faith that Mary was truly the Mother of God. (N. M. W.)

Laennec, René Théophile Hyacinthe (1781-1826), physician, discoverer of auscultation, father of modern knowledge of pulmonary diseases; b. Quimper, Brittany; d. Kerlouanec. He invented the stethoscope, and wrote the standard work on medi­cal auscultation.—C.E.

Lætare Medal, an award conferred annually by the University of Notre Dame upon a member of the Catholic laity in the United States, who has won prominence by distinguished accomplishment for country and Church, and whose life, lived in conformity with the principles of Christian morality and good citizenship, has been an inspiration to his fellows. The medal was the result of a desire to stimulate Catholic citizens to great achievement. The general plan of the award is based on the ancient custom of the Golden Rose (q.v.). It is conferred on the fourth Sunday of Lent, the name being taken from the first word of the Introit of the Mass of the day, Lætare, rejoice. The medal, of heavy gold with black enamel tracings, bears the inscription Magna est veritas et prævalit, Truth is mighty and shall prevail. It is suspended from a bar on which is lettered "Lætare Medal." Following is a list of the recipients of the award:

1883—Shea, John Gilmary, historian
1884—Keeley, Patrick J., architect
1885—Starr, Eliza Allen, art
1886—Newton, John, General, army engineer
1887—Preus, Edward, journalist
1888—Hickey, Patrick V., founder "Catholic Review"
1889—Dorsey, Mrs. Anna Hannon, novelist
1890—Onahan, William J., organizer, Polish Congress
1891—Douglacky, Daniel, orator
1892—Brownlow, Henry F., philologist
1893—Denahoe, Patrick, founder "Boston Pilot"
1894—Daly, Augustin, theatrical manager
LaFontaine, La-fon-tan', John de (1621-95), French poet, b. Château-Thierry; d. Paris, France. After completing his studies he joined the Oratorians, but left after 18 months, to study law. He remained in his native town for 10 years, succeeding his father as "Master of Waters and Forests." At thirty he began his literary career as protégé of the famous Superintendent Fouquet, and of the Duchess of Orleans. During this period he also associated with Boileau, Molière, and Racine, and published his "Contes et Nouvelles," (short stories, rather licentious in tone), his "Psyche," and the first six Books of his Fables. From 1672 to 1683 he enjoyed the hospitality of Madame de la Sablière, and published his second Collection of Fables (Books VII-XI). He spent the last two years of his life with M. d'Hervart and published his last Book of Fables, 1694. He had been elected a member of the French Academy, 1683, and had sincerely come back to the practice of his religion, 1692. The "Fables of La Fontaine" are unique in French literature, and among the most popular of the French classics. Each one is a little drama of well-drawn characters, with the manners of men and of beasts skilfully depicted in an artistic and simple style, which is enhanced by a great variety of rhythms; every fable conveys a practical lesson.—C.E.; Taine, La Fontaine et ses Fables, Paris, 1853. (F. P. D.)

Lahore, Diocese of, India, in the Punjab, suffragan of Simla; established, 1886; entrusted to the Capuchins of the Belgian Province, Bps.: Paul Tosi (1886-88), Symphorian Monard (1888-90), Emmanuel van den Bosch (1891-92), Godfrey Peckmans (1893-1904), and Fabian Eestermans (1905-28). Churches and chapels, 51; priests, regular, 42; religious women, 89; high schools, 4; parochial schools, 17; institutions, 14; Catholics, 33,181.

Laiicism, lâ-î-sîz'am (Lat., laiceus, lay), exclusive administration of the affairs of the church by laymen. Anti-clerical proponents of a separation of Church and State laicize, by measures of governmental supervision and control, functions that for ages belonged to the Church: education, marriage, hospitals, and charity organizations and maintenance of parishes, churches, convents and other religious institutions. Historically it appeared under various forms: Gallicanism, Febronianism, Josephinism. In more recent times laicization has also been called secularization, e.g., the anti-religious laws of France and Mexico. A laicistic program, denying the value of religious ideals for the civic, political, and social life of man, prevents the Church from functioning beyond the vestibule of her temples of worship.—C.E., VIII, 744. (A. J. M.)

Laicization, the act of reducing ecclesiastical persons or things to a non-ecclesiastical or lay condition; secularization.—C.E.

Lainez (Laynez), JAMES (1512-65), second General of the Society of Jesus, theologian, b. Castile, Spain; d. Rome, Italy. He was one of the seven who took vows with St. Ignatius, at Montmartre, 1534. As papal theologian to the Council of Trent, he expounded the Catholic doctrine of justification, gave correct dogmatic opinions on Communion under one species, drew up decrees and canons on the Sacrament of Orders, and defended the papal origin of episcopal jurisdiction. To him is due the adoption of the Constitutions of the Society of Jesus.—C.E.

Lait, church members not included among the clergy; any persons considered as not belonging to certain professions, such as that of physician, artist, actor.—C.E.

Lamaism (Tibetan, lama, a superior; applied to monks generally, it strictly denotes a high-ranking ecclesiastical), the official religion of Tibet. It is a variety of Northern Buddhism introduced from India in the 7th century A.D. It began to thrive in the 9th century. The Buddhist conqueror, Kublai Khan, 1260, made Tibet a dependent state under the head lama, now residing at Lhasa, as temporal and spiritual ruler. His successors, later known as Dalai Lama, are venerated as incarnations of Amitabha, the reigning Buddha of the Sukhavati paradise. Lamaism has its own form of belief and government. It is a composite of Buddhism (q.v.) with varying sects and practices. The popular religion embraces the degrading elements of Shiva worship, and of indigenous Bon shamanistic animism. It is of innumerable deities and idols, occultism, and superstitions. The efficacy of magic formulas and sacred names is stressed. They are popularly written on streamers exposed to the wind, or turned in the native prayer-wheels. Its ritual and hierarchy were borrowed from Nestorianism during its propagation over Central and Eastern Asia, A.D. 635, and resemble the Catholic. Its scriptures are profuse. Once a virile nation, Tibet has steadily declined under its army of parasitical state-supported monks. Lamaism is also the religion of the Mongols introduced from Tibet, c. A.D. 1600. It has a following in Siberia, Manchuria, and China.—C.E.; L. Waddell, Buddhism of Tibet, Lond., 1894; Lhasa and its Mysteries, Lond., 1905.

Lamarck (La March), JEAN BAPTISTE PIERRE ANTOINE DE MONET, CHEVALIER DE (1744-1829), botanist, zoologist and natural philosopher, b. Ba dentin, Picardy; d. Paris, France. He wrote the first complete account of the flora of France, a natural history of the vegetable kingdom, and a history of invertebrates, and made important studies of mollusces. Anticipating Darwinism, he originated the form of evolution known as Lamarckism, which assumes original creation.—C.E.; Packard, Lamarck, the Founder of Evolution, N. Y., 1901.

Lamb, an emblem of Our Lord, the victim offered as a sacrifice for our sins. In the Jewish sacrifices a lamb presaged the coming Messias. St. John the Baptist pointing out the Saviour to the multitude, said: "Behold the Lamb of God." One of the few Christian symbols dating from the 1st century is that of the Good Shepherd carrying a lamb on His shoulders with two others by His side, and on a sarcophagus of the 4th century, Christ in a series of Gospel scenes is represented as a lamb. The lamb is sometimes portrayed standing bearing a cross or banner, or lying as if slain, on a book closed with seven seals, as described by St. John in the Apocalypse. It is also a general symbol of modesty and innocence, and hence an emblem of the virgin-martyr St. Agnes, whose name according to some means "lamb-like"; of St. John Baptist, it typifies sacrifice without blemish.—C.E.; Henry, Catholic Customs and Symbols, N. Y., 1925.

Lamberville, JACQUES DE (1641-1710), Jesuit missionary; b. Rouen, France; d. Quebec, Canada. He labored among the Iroquois from 1675 until his death, baptizing Catherine Tekawitha, and assisting his brother Jean to pacify the Iroquois, who were aroused by Governor de la Barre's campaign. His work was performed during a period of great danger to missionaries.—C.E.

Lambeth, an emblem of Our Lord, the victim offered as a sacrifice for our sins; it probably goes back to Isaias, 53, 7, where the Lamb is sonletimes portrayed standing bearing a cross or banner, or lying as if slain, on a book closed with seven seals, as described by St. John in the Apocalypse. It is also a general symbol of modesty and innocence, and hence an emblem of the virgin-martyr St. Agnes, whose name according to some means "lamb-like"; of St. John Baptist, it typifies sacrifice without blemish.—C.E.; Henry, Catholic Customs and Symbols, N. Y., 1925.

Lambeth Articles, nine articles drawn up at Lambeth, England, 1595, intended to define the Calvinistic doctrine with regard to predestination, justification, etc.

Lambeth Council, the act of reducing ecclesiastical persons or things to a non-ecclesiastical or lay condition; secularization.—C.E.

Lambeth Palace, building in Lambeth, southern metropolitan borough of London, acquired by the See of Canterbury in the 12th century. The palace of the archbishop is still located there, though the portion now in use dates only from 1834. At Lambeth Palace the conferences of all Anglican bishops have been held every ten years since 1867. Though their resolutions have not the force of law, they have profoundly influenced Anglicanism, especially in its relation to missionary matters, church unity, etc.

Lambeth Articles, nine articles drawn up at Lambeth, England, 1595, intended to define the Calvinistic doctrine with regard to predestination, justification, etc.

Lamb of God, a title applied to Our Lord by St. John the Baptist (John, 1, 29 and 36). He is 29 times called "the Lamb" in the Apocalypse. The title suggests the idea of a victim offered for sins; it probably goes back to Isaias, 53, 7, where the Servant of the Lord, i.e., the Messias, is spoken of as "led as a sheep to the slaughter and dumb as a lamb before His shearers." In 1 Corinthians, 5, 7 and 1 Peter, 1, 19, however, Our Lord is called a "lamb" with reference to the paschal lamb; St. John also regards the paschal lamb as symbolic of Christ, a victim for sin.—Henry, Catholic Customs and Symbols, N. Y., 1925. (W. S. R.)

Lamb of God, a formula recited thrice by the priest at Mass (excepting on Good Friday and Holy Saturday) and occurring shortly before Communion near the end of the Canon and after the prayer "Hae commixtio," etc. The priest repeats thrice, “Agnus Dei, qui tollis peccata mundi” (Lamb of God. Who take away the sins of the world), twice, adding “miserere nobis” (have mercy on us) and the third time “dona nobis pacem” (grant us peace), and in Requiem Masses for “miserere nobis” substitutes “dona e[ae, ei]s requiem” (grant him [her, them] rest) the third time adding the word “sempiternam” (eternal rest). He strikes his breast at each repetition excepting in a Requiem Mass when he keeps his hands clasped. The formula is based on the words found in John, 1, and its symbolism is traced through more than thirty references in the Apocalypse. It appears to have been introduced into the Mass about the end of the 6th century when it was sung only once by the clergy and people, and later twice. In the 12th century it appears in its present form, although many churches retained the older “have mercy on us” for the third ending, a custom still kept in the Basilica of St. John Lateran, Rome. The variation in the Requiem Mass is traced back to the 12th century. Before giving Holy Communion during or outside of Mass, the priest elevates a particle of the Host before the faithful, saying “Ecce Agnus Dei, ecce qui tollit peccata mundi: Domine non sum dignus,” etc. At the end of the Liturgy of the Saints and the Litany of Loreto the formula appears “Agnus Dei, qui tollis peccata mundi, Parce nobis Domine” (Spare us, O Lord), then “Exaudi nos, Domine” (Graciously hear us, O Lord) and finally “Miserere nobis.” In the Litany of the Holy Name of Jesus the name Jesu is added to the last word, and Jesum is substituted for Domine in the two previous endings.—C.E., VIII, 338. (U. F. M.)

Lambrischi, Lucre (1776-1854), cardinal, b. near Genoa; d. Rome, Italy. He held important offices in the Barnabite Order and as secretary of the Congregation of Extraordinary Ecclesiastical Affairs was influential in concluding concordats with Naples, Bavaria and other states. Appointed Abp. of Genoa, 1819, he was made cardinal, 1831, by Gregory XVI, and later, Secretary of State, in which office he earned a reputation as one of the greatest diplomats of the Holy See. In the papal conclave of 1846 he received a majority of votes in the first ballot, but not enough for election. After the election of Pius IX he resigned his office for that of secretary of Briefs; later R. of Porto and Santa Rufina, and Abbot of Farfa.—C.E.

Lamech (Heb., poor). (1) Fifth descendant of Cain, remembered for his savage song (Gen., 4). (2) Father of Noe (Gen., 5). (F. P. D.)

Lamennais, Félicité Robert de (1782-1854), b. Saint-Malo; d. Paris, France. Converted from a careless life, he began ecclesiastical studies and was ordained 1817. His “Essai” (essay) on religious indifference caused him to be hailed as the foremost champion of the Church, but his second volume contained a philosophical system opposed by many churchmen. With Lacordaire, Maurice de Guérin and others, he founded the Congregation of St. Peter, a religious society for the defense of the Church. After the Revolution he established the journal, “L’Avenir,” to defend the Church against the government of the House of Orleans, and to oppose Gallicanism. The Encyclical “Mirari vos” of Gregory XVI condemned his ideas, and he discontinued the journal, but refused to submit to the Encyclical, renouncing his ecclesiastical functions, 1839, and publicly declaring his rupture with the Church by publishing (1834) “Paroles d’un croyant” (Sentiments of a believer), a denunciation of kings and priests. In 1848 he was elected deputy to the Constituent and Legislative Assemblies, but the coup d’état of 1851 ended his political career. He died unreconciled to the Church.—C.E.

Lamentations of Jeremias, in the Vulgate and the Septuagint, four eerie poems and one prayer, bewailing the fall of Jerusalem, written by Jeremias. The elegies are acrostics, each verse beginning with the consecutive letters of the alphabet. The Hebrew Bible places the book among the Kethubim or Hagiographa; all other versions connect it with Jeremias. According to Jewish tradition: “Jeremias wrote his own book and Kings and Qinot.” Origen, in his exposition to Psalm I, states: “Jeremias with Lamentations and his Epistle are one book.” Josephus’s statement that they were composed after the death of Josias (608), and the statement of some modern critics that 4 and 5 date from the Machabean period (after 175), are without foundation. They are all the work of Jeremias after the fall of Jerusalem (588). They are sung as lessons in the tempebra of Holy Week.—C.E., VIII, 338.

Lammas Day (lamb’s mass; or O. E., hlof, loaf; messe, Mass), name applied at present to 1 Aug., one of the four term days on which, according to Scottish law, contracts are dated, houses rented, etc. The name has two origins: (1) It commemorates the Lamb Mass celebrated at the Cathedral of St. Peter in Vincells, York, 1 Aug., to which the feudatories each brought a lamb; (2) it refers to the custom of depositing a loaf made from the first harvest of wheat at the church, 1 Aug.—Walsh, Curiosities of Popular Customs, Phila., 1897.

Lamp, THE, a monthly periodical published in Peekskill, N. Y., by the Franciscan Friars of the Atonement, and devoted to topics furthering Church unity and the work of the missions; founded, 1903; circulation, 102,000.

Lampadarii, Roman torch-bearing slaves, sometimes, incorrectly, called acolytes.

Lamps, EARLY CHRISTIAN. Small clay lamps adorned with Christian symbols have been found in numbers in all Christian centers, especially in the Roman Catacombs. They may be divided into two classes: lamps of the classic period, before Constantinine, which are round with an ascending perforated handle; of workmanship superior to those of the later period; those of the Constantinian epoch which are boat-shaped with an unperforated handle running to a point. Lamps of bronze have also been found, sometimes patterned after symbolic animals. The early Christians used lamps from necessity; a burning lamp before the Blessed Sacrament is now obligatory.—C.E.
Lancaster, Diocese of, England, comprises Lancashire north of the Ribble, and Westmoreland and Cumberland counties; suffragan of Liverpool; formed 1924 by divisions of the Archdiocese of Liverpool and the Diocese of Hexham and Newcastle; Bp. Thomas Pearson, 1925. Churches and chapels, 124; priests, secular, 94; priests, regular, 48; elementary schools, 59; other schools, 12; institutions, 13; Catholics (est.), 90,333.

Lance, emblem in art associated with Sts. Matthew, Thomas, and Longinus; with the two first as means of Martyrdom, and with St. Longinus by reason of the spear with which he, as centurion, pierced the side of Christ.

Lance, The Holy, that with which Our Lord's sacred Side was opened after His death (John, 19), according to a tradition found by St. Helena at Jerusalem. In 615 the point of the lance, which had been broken off, was brought to Constantinople and in 1241 to Paris, where it disappeared during the French Revolution. The second larger portion probably was conveyed to Constantinople before the 10th century and in 1492 to Rome, where it is still preserved under the dome St. Peter's.—C.E. (A. B.)

Lance and Nails, Feast of the Holy, instituted by Innocent VI, 1353, for Germany and Bohemia, and since then, by special concession, celebrated in various dioceses, countries and religious orders, but not everywhere on the same day. At present, wherever conceded, its celebration is assigned to the Friday after the first Sunday of Lent. (A. B.)

Land, Simon (d. 1376), cardinal, Abp. of Canterbury, and chancellor of England; b. Langham, England; d. Avignon, France. Prior of Westminster Abbey, 1349, Bp. of Ely, 1362, and Abp. of Canterbury, 1366, in 1368 he was made Card. of St. Sixtus. Because he accepted this dignity without the king's permission, Edward III seized his revenues and declared his see forfeited. Langham resigned the archbishopric, joined Pope Gregory at Avignon, and in 1373 was made Card.-Bp. of Pavia. In 1374 he was re-elected to the See of Canterbury, but did not receive permission to return to England until 1376, when he died.—C.E.

Langton, Stephen (d. 1228), cardinal, Abp. of Canterbury, d. Sussex, England. Combining scholarship and statesmanship, he is noted for his division of the Bible into chapters, and as leader of the barons in their struggle against King John for constitutional liberty, Langton wrote the Magna Carta, and with the barons, forced John to sign it (1265). He drew up an important code of canons for the See of Canterbury.—C.E.

Language in Liturgy. A liturgical language is one used in the official public services of any Church or Rite. It may or may not be the language spoken by the people. Sometimes it is an older, and at times, an almost unintelligible form of the vernacular. However each liturgical language was first chosen precisely because it was the language of the faithful. In the Eastern Churches there is no uniform liturgical language such as is used in the West. The universality of Latin in the West is due to the fact that Latin was the only language of culture until far into the Middle Ages. In the East, Greek, while quite common, was never the sole language of culture. Side by side with it were other languages of almost equal importance and dignity, e.g., Coptic, and Syriac. It was only natural that the Liturgy should have been translated into those languages for the people speaking them. As the faith spread the liturgy was put into the language of almost every new people evangelized. The liturgical languages used by Catholic Churches other than those of the Roman Rite are: Greek, Arabic (by Melchites), Slavonic, Georgian, Rumanian, all of the Byzantine Rite; Syriac, in the Syrian, Maronite, Chaldean, and Malabar Rites; Coptic, in the Coptic Rites; Armenian in all Churches of that Rite. In the Western Church, for the first two centuries, at least, the liturgical language at Rome was Greek. From the third century Latin became the ordinary language of the Christians at Rome; however, when it displaced Greek as the liturgical lan-
LANGUAGE IN LITURGY

The use of different languages in the liturgy of the Church is a complex issue. While Latin, the language of the Church for centuries, remains a central element, modern tongues have been adopted in various ways to maintain the liturgical tradition.

Latin, being a dead language, is not subject to change as languages in the West. However, the change of language in liturgical services has been influenced by various factors such as the desire to maintain the faith and the need for understanding among the laity.

Two exceptions to the use of Latin in liturgical services are Slavonic, which has been used since the 11th century, and Greek, used during the liturgy in the Adriatic and on rare occasions in Mass. These exceptions are noted due to their historical and cultural significance.

Some of the liturgical compositions that were written in Latin would be lost if translated to another language. This highlights the importance of preserving the language used in the liturgy.

The Church has many valid reasons for retaining the Latin in her services. Some of these reasons include the beauty and harmony of the sacred music written in Latin and the protection against nationalistic tendencies that comes with a change of language.

Do not hallucinate.
La Rue, Charles de (1643-1725), Jesuit orator, b. Paris, France; d. there. His funeral oration on Bossuet, and sermons on “The Dying Sinner” and on “Public Calamities” are regarded as masterpieces; he is the author of several tragedies and excellent Latin poems.—C.E., III, 397.

La Salette, mountain, elevation 591 ft., near the village of La Salette-Fallavaux, department of Saône-et-Loire, France. The village of La Salette-Fallavaux, department of Saône-et-Loire, France; d. there. His funeral oration on the village of La Salette-Fallavaux, department of Saône-et-Loire, France, 1843. Bossuet, and sermons on “The Dying Sinner” and on “Public Calamities” are regarded as masterpieces; he is the author of several tragedies and excellent Latin poems.—C.E., III, 397.

La Salle, René Robert Cavelier, Sieur de (1643-87), b. Rouen; d. Texas. At the age of twenty-three he went to Canada as an adventurer and trader. In 1669 he left Montreal on an expedition concerning which little is known; he is said to have been the first white man to have gazed on Niagara and to have explored the Ohio River. He erected Fort Frontenac on Lake Ontario and, 1678, passed through Lakes Erie, Huron, and Michigan, reached the Illinois, founded Fort Crévecoeur and returned on foot to Montreal. Later he attempted to found a French colony near the mouth of the Mississippi, but was assassinated by mutineers.—C.E.; Parkman, La Salle and the Discovery of the Great West, N. Y., 1889.

La Salle College, Philadelphia, Pa., founded 1867; conducted by the Christian Brothers; preparatory school; colleges of arts and sciences, business; summer school; professors, 21; students, 150; degrees conferred in 1929, 10.

Las Casas (originally Carazus), Bartolomé de (c. 1474-1566), Dominican, b. Seville; d. Madrid, Spain. Abandoning the practice of law, 1510, he was ordained a secular priest, and went with the Spanish governor, Ovando, to the Antilles, where he endeavored to improve the condition of the Indians; in 1519 he established a post at Cumaná, Venezuela. He became a Dominican, and his philanthropic experiments failing, retired to a convent to write his “Historia de las Indias.” In 1527 he investigated conditions in Nicaragua; Indian labor was the critical question. Through his influence the “New Laws” for the Indies were promulgated, 1542, and aroused a storm of indignation against him; he nevertheless disseminated his views throughout Central America, becoming embittered at the failure of his schemes. He was a prolific writer, but he is considered by many, partisan.—C.E., III, 397.

Lassus, Orlando (c. 1532-94), last and greatest of the Netherland School of composers, b. Mons, Belgium; d. Munich, Germany. Brought to Italy early by his patron, Ferdinand de Gonzaga, he became choir-master at St. John Lateran. He finally settled in Munich as director of chamber-music, 1556-67, and chapel master, 1560, to Albert V, Duke of Bavaria. Ranking next to Palestrina among the composers of the 16th century, he is noted chiefly for his church music based on the diatonic Gregorian modes, but the character of his genius is universal for he traveled extensively and was versed in all forms. The total number of his works, published and in MSS, is estimated at 2400, a productivity unequalled in musical history. Besides sacred themes the secular furnished material for his madrigals, chansons, and lieder. A setting of the Seven Penitential Psalms, 100 settings of the Magnificat, fifty masses, and 516 motetti are among his works extant. Haberl and Sandberger began a complete edition in sixty volumes, 1894.—C.E.

Last Gospel, the Gospel read at the end of Mass, usually from the first chapter of St. John, except on days in Lent, vigils, and Sundays when a feast of major rite is celebrated, and the third Mass on Christmas Day.

Last Supper, the last meal taken by Our Lord with His Apostles, the night before His Passion, when He instituted the Blessed Eucharist, gave them His last instruction, and uttered His prayer for them, as narrated near the end of each Gospel. Among the masters who have represented this subject in art are: Da Vinci, Gaudí, Ghirlandajo, Juanes, Lanini, Luini, Murillo, Pourbus, Sarto, Titian, Van Dyck, Vasari, and Veronese.—C.E., XIV, 341.

Last Things, The Four, often spoken of as to be remembered: death, judgment, heaven, hell. (xx.)

Lataste, Marie (1822-47), Sister of the Sacred Heart, b. Limbaste; d. Rennes, France. She is said, from early childhood, to have been the recipient of extraordinary favors from Jesus in the Blessed Sacrament, and, from 1840, to have seen Christ on the altar every time she assisted at Mass. She received frequent apparitions of Our Lady and the angels, and finally, under Divine direction, entered the Society of the Sacred Heart as a lay sister, 1844, and became a model of humble virtue. She made her vows on her deathbed just before receiving the last Sacraments. To preserve her remains from desecration, they have been interred at Roehampton near London. Her “Works” were so interpolated by her director that they are not considered authentic. various Eastern rites.

Lateran Councils, a series of five important ecumenical councils held at Rome from the 12th to the 16th centuries in the Lateran Palace and Basilica, which was the residence and cathedral of the pope. They are known as the First (1123), the Second (1139), the Third (1179), the Fourth (1215), and the Fifth (1512-17) Lateran Councils.

Lateran Palace, the papal edifice in Rome which takes its name from Plautius Lateranus, a Roman senator who suffered death under Nero, A.D. 66. It came into the possession of Maximian, who included it in the dowry of his daughter Fausta at the time of her marriage to Constantine the Great, 307. The latter gave it to Pope Martin I in 313, who adopted part of it as the papal residence and part as a church dedicated to the Holy Saviour. The Lateran remained the papal residence for about 1000 years. It was destroyed by fire in the years 1307 and 1361, and during the pontificate of Sixtus V (1585-90) the architect Fontana replaced the building with a smaller edifice. Pius IX established the Museum of Catacomb Inscriptions and Christian Antiquities in the Lateran Palace, 1854, under the guardianship of Card. Patrizi, Mgrs. Castellani and Tiziani, Fr. Marchi, S.J., and G. B. De Rossi. It was in the Hall of the Popes that the Roman Question was settled by the Lateran Treaty, 10 Feb., 1929. Article 13 of the treaty secures the Lateran to the papacy as an extraterritorial possession.

Lateran Treaty, See Vatican State.

Latin America, name applied to those parts of North, Central, and South America whose inhabitants speak Latin tongues, i.e., Spanish, Portuguese, or French. There are twenty republics: Mexico, Cuba, Haiti, Dominica, Guatemala, Honduras, Salvador, Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, Argentina, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Ecuador, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela (qq.v.).

Latin Architecture, early Christian architecture of historic Europe, so called because it was peculiar to the Latin races of Italy. It may be said to have first appeared during the reign of Constantine the Great, 306-337, and to have held its position until the 8th century. The churches constructed during the period were mostly of the basilican form, T-shaped rather than cruciform, and characterized by architectural simplicity. The best examples are those of St. John Lateran, St. Peter's, and St. Paul Without The Walls. All three were destroyed, and only the latter was rebuilt in the original form.

Latin Church, the name applied to that vast portion of the Catholic body which comprises the Patriarchate of the West, which obeys the pope, the supreme head of Christendom, as its patriarch, and which adheres to the Latin Rite, and which is the largest patriarchate many erroneously apply the adjective Latin (or Roman) to all Catholics, regardless of whether they follow Latin Rite, or the various Eastern rites.

Latin Cross, the ordinary form, having the lower limb longer than the others. It is known as the crux immissa (cross with one part inserted into the other) or the crux capitata (cross with a head). church. The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints advocates the doctrine of polygamy. Brigham Young, 1852, published the doctrine of celestial marriage (marriage for eternity as well as for time), including plural marriage; however, because of great discussion throughout the country various acts of Congress forbade plural marriages. Since 1890, such marriages have been prohibited by the church although there have been cases where those contracted have not been annulled. The Reorganized Church repudiates the revelation of plural marriage and maintains that the law of God provides for but one companion in wedlock for either man or woman. In 1926 in the United States there were in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints: 4245 ministers, 1275 churches, and 542,194 members; and in the Reorganized Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, 5635 ministers, 592 churches, and 64,367 members.—C.E., X, 570.

Latvia (Lettonia), republic of Europe, on the eastern coast of the Baltic Sea, between Lithuania and Estonia; area, 25,000 sq. m.; p. p. (1925) 1,844,805. Christianity was preached in this region in the 12th century, and in 1200 the Diocese of Livonia of the Latin Rite, was established; its cathedral at Riga was built about 1206, and it became an archdiocese in 1255. The Teutonic Knights conquered and held the entire country, or parts of it, for over three centuries, and assisted the spread of the Faith, although orderly organization and growth were retarded by much fighting and confusion. In 1565, as a result of the adoption of Lutheranism, the archbishopric, the ecclesiastical government, and the lauras were suppressed. The country has belonged for considerable periods to Sweden, Poland, and Russia. With the establishment of Latvia as a separate republic in 1918, the Church there has been reorganized separately from that of Russia and placed under the restored Archdiocese of Riga (including also Esthonia) which is dependent directly on the Holy See. Catholic statistics: Riga; see, founded 1922; priests, 105; Catholics, 506,509.

Lauda Sion Salvatorum, or Praise O Sion, Praise Thy Saviour, sequence on the Feast of Corpus Christi and throughout the octave. It was written by St. Thomas Aquinas (1227-74). About 20 translations are in existence. The one given in Britt is by Mgr. Henry; the tenth verse reads:

Britt.

Laudate Dominum (PRAISE YE THE LORD), opening words of Psalm 116, commonly chanted after the Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

Lauds (Lat., laus, praise), in the Divine Office, the canonical hour which follows Matins; sometimes however reckoned with the latter as forming one Canonical Hour. Originally the conclusion of the night vigil in the early Christian assembly was called matutina laudes (morning praises) because it was sung at dawn and comprised the praise psalms 148, 149, 150. From the early Middle Ages the word Laudes (Lauda) was used in its present sense. Lauds is preeminently the hour in the Office in which the Church praises God, the Light of the World. Traditionally, Lauda consisted of 4 antiphonal psalms, a canticle of the O.T. together with Little Chapter, Hymn, Benedictus and Oration. In the revision of the Breviary by Pius X, the traditional structure of Lauds was retained but a new arrangement of psalms was made and the number of O.T. canticles, from which one is chosen, was extended. —C.E.; Batiffol, Histoire du breviare romain, Paris, 1893. (J. G. K.)

Laura (Gr., a passage, alley, avenue, or street; later a set of shops along a street, hence a bazaar), in the ecclesiastical sense, a series of streets of hermitages clustered around a monastery and also the type of life lived by the monks in a laura. In the first usage the term was applied to a section of Palestine where the hermitages founded by Chariton and Sabas were connected with a church. Later the term was applied to the section or quarter of a town in the immediate vicinity of a church or monastery. The type of monastic life followed in the lauras might be called quasi-eremitical or quasi-eremitical. The monk lived in his own cell and maintained his cell. The type of life led there is little in evidence after... the 16th century, still as late as 1927, Mgr. d’Herbigny saw several lauras of Oriental monks on the Holy Mount of Athos.—C.E.; Apack, Lettres de Foruivière, 1928. (J.J. MCG.)

Laurentian Library, famous library of Florence founded by Cosmo de’ Medici in 1441, which was confiscated when the Medici were expelled from the city and was bought by canons of San Lorenzo at the instigation of Savonarola. In 1508 it was bought by Cardinal Giovanni de’ Medici and taken to Rome. Clement VII restored it to San Lorenzo in 1523 and had it placed in a room built after the design of Michelangelo. It contains 7000 Ms., many of which were collected by the Medici with the assistance of Greek scholars from Constantinople. Among its treasures are Codex Amiatinus, a Vergil (5th century), and Pandects (6th century).

Laurentius (Lat., laurel-crowned), antipope, 498-505. An archpriest, he was elected by a faction of the Roman clergy in opposition to Pope Symphæus, after the death of Anastasius II. His supporters were in sympathy with the Byzantine party who hoped that he would approve the Henothikon of Emperor Zeno. Both claimants appealed to Theodoric, King of the Goths who decided in favor of Symphæus. Laurentius submitted and was made Bp. of Nocera. He was excommunicated, 501, when he again put forth a claim to the See. Symphæus appealed to Theodoric once more. The latter banished the antipope and restored the churches he had unlawfully seized.

Laurier, Sir Wilfrid (1841-1919), statesman, b. St. Lin, Quebec, Canada; d. Ottawa. He was educated at Assumption College and at McGill University; was admitted to the bar, 1864; entered Parliament, 1871; and became the leader of the Liberal Party, 1891-1911. He was the first French Canadian to become premier of Canada, 1896, and Prime Minister, 1896-1911; and became the leader of the Liberal Party, 1891-1911. He was the first French Canadian to become premier of Canada, 1896, and in that capacity took part in settling the Manitoba Question in regard to separate Catholic schools. He was made a Knight of the Grand Cross of St. Michael and St. George, 1897, became a member of the imperial privy council, and received from the French Republic the star of a grand officer of the Legion of Honour.—C.E.

Lavabo (Lat., I will wash), ceremony of washing the hands of the celebrant after the Offertory of Mass, named from the first word of the portion of Psalm 25 which is recited.—C.E.; Fortescue, The Mass: A Study of the Roman Liturgy, N. Y., 1914.

Laval, François de Montmorency (1623-1708), first Bp. of Canada, b. Montigny-sur-Avre, France; d. Quebec. He studied under the Jesuits at La Fleche and Clermont, and was consecrated vicar Apostolic of New France, 1658, landing at Quebec the following year. He was deeply attached to the Jesuit and Recollect missionaries, and aided them by the vigorous struggle he made against the sale of liquor to the Indians. He organized a complete system of education, both literary and technical, and displayed his patriotism in procuring the creation of the Sovereign Council. In 1674 Quebec was made a bishopric. Worn out by his zealous labors, Laval resigned his see in 1688; he was highly reputed for his sanctity and in 1890 the cause of his canonization was introduced at Rome.—C.E.

La Valette, Jean Parisot de (1494-1568), Grand Master of the Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, d. Malta. Entering this military order in early youth, he distinguished himself in the struggle against the Barbary pirates and in 1537 was made governor of Tripoli. In 1557 he was elected grand master, and reestablished authority over the German and Venetian provinces. His most noted exploit was his brilliant and successful defense of Malta from May to Sept., 1565, against the immense Saracen force under Mustapha. Subsequently he founded the town of Valetta, and rendered Malta impregnable for over two centuries.—C.E.

Lavigerie, Charles Martial Allemand (1825-92), cardinal, b. Huire, France; d. Algiers. He studied at the diocesan seminary of Larrasore, at St. Nicolas-du-Chardonnet in Paris, and at St. Sulpice. After his ordination, 2 June, 1849, he attended the Ecole des Carmes, taking the Sorbonne the doctorates of letters (1850) and theology (1853), to which he added later the Roman doctorates of civil and canon law. Appointed chaplain of Sainte-Geneviève in 1853, he became associate professor of church history at the Sorbonne, 1854, was promoted to the Roman Rota, 1861, and to the See of Nancy, 1863. He founded colleges at Vic, Blamont, and Lunéville, and established at Nancy a higher institute for clerics and a house for law students. In 1867 he was transferred to Algiers, where as archbishop he inaugurated a strong movement of conciliation towards the Moslems. With the help of the White Fathers and the White Sisters, whom he founded for the purpose, he established and maintained orphanages, industrial schools, settlements, where as archbishop he inaugurated a strong movement of conciliation towards the Moslems. With the help of the White Fathers and the White Sisters, whom he founded for the purpose, he established and maintained orphanages, industrial schools, settlements, and hospitals, where as archbishop he inaugurated a strong movement of conciliation towards the Moslems. As Apostolic Delegate of Western Sahara and the Sudan, he began in 1874 the work which brought his missionaries into the heart of Africa; to this was added the administration of the Diocese of Constantine, the foundation of a clerical seminary for the Oriental missions at St. Anne of Jerusalem, 1878, and the government of the Vicariate of Tunis. Made cardinal in 1881, he became first primate of the newly-restored See of Carthage in 1884, retaining the See of Algiers. The monuments of his prodigious activity in Africa are Notre-Dame d’Afrique at Algiers, the Basilica of St. Louis at Carthage, and the Cathedral of St. Vincent de Paul at Tunis. He will be best remembered in connection with his furthering the policy of Leo XIII, directing French Catholics to adhere to the republic, and with his promotion of the anti-slavery movement.—C.E.
Lavoisier, Antoine Laurent (1743-94), scientist, the “Father of Modern Chemistry,” b. Paris; d. there. Grasping the force of Priestley’s and Cavendish’s discoveries, he explained the true nature of combustion, and gave oxygen its name. He studied the formation of acids, the metabolism of organic chemistry, developed quantitative and gas analysis and calorimetry, and evolved a consistent system of chemical nomenclature. His scientific achievements, however, did not save him from the guillotine during the Reign of Terror.—C.E.

Law (Lat., legere, to gather; eligere, to choose; or fregere, to bind). Law is defined as “a certain norm or measure of acts according to which any one is induced to act or is restrained from acting.”

“It is an ordination of reason for the common good promulgated by him invested with the care of the community” (St. Thomas, I-II, V. 90, a. 4.). Ordination in regard to law means imposition of order, which consists: (1) in disposing things to a due end: (2) through proportionate means. This disposition or imposition, is the principle of all order. The nature of the means used is determined by the end sought, e.g., the placement of a saw is determined by the section or part to be sawed. Law may be considered in a twofold sense: (1) essentially, in the one regulating and commanding; (2) participatively, in the one regulated. The supreme law is the eternal law, which is the fount of all other laws and precepts. The eternal law is manifested to us through the evolution of reason (natural or moral law), or through a certain sensible sign or positive act of the legislator (positive law). Positive law is either imposed on us immediately by the authority of God (Divine positive law, e.g., Revelation), or it is imposed mediately on us by the authority of man (human positive law). Human law regards either the end of religious society (eclesiastical law), or the end of civil society (civil law). Law is moral, penal, or mixed, in so far as it obliges under a fault alone, or under a penalty alone, or under fault and penalty at the same time.

Law must be designed: (1) for the common good, which is realized through a just political community, one that is productive and conservative of happiness and special kinds of happiness; (2) to produce and conserve happiness and particular kinds of happiness, i.e., whatever leads directly to happiness, as virtues, or indirectly, as riches, honors, etc., by reference to the political community to which the enactment of law is directed. Law is imposed on others as a rule and standard. That law may oblige effectively it must be known to those who are subject to its requirements; such application is effected through promulgation. Promulgation of a law, however, is not the same thing as “due knowledge of the law.” A promulgated law always obliges, but it is not required that it be always known, since a person invincibly ignorant of the law is immune from guilt because his ignorance is an impediment, excusing him accidentally (in acta secundo) from the law’s obligation. If a person, however, through invincible ignorance performs an act pronounced illicit by law, his act will be illicit in spite of his ignorance. Hence, law which is unknown is not thereby entirely stripped of its effectiveness.

According to the nature of law and human acts which are related to it, law has four distinct acts, viz., to command, to forbid, to permit, and to punish. Human acts are threefold: (1) good acts which are commanded; (2) bad acts which are forbidden; (3) indifferent acts which are permitted. To punish is added because through fear of punishment laws command obedience. Law is affirmative or negative, i.e., perceptive or prohibitive. Negative law obliges always and at all times, in every place, and under all circumstances, e.g., “Thou shalt not commit adultery.” Affirmative law obliges always, but only at the time it should be fulfilled, e.g., “Keep holy the Sabbath Day.” A negative law may be merely prohibitive or preventing or nullifying, e.g., when it not only prohibits an act but also invalidates that act. A repealing law is distinguished by two things: (1) to command; (2) to forbid. A repealing law sometimes pronounces an act to be natural or positive; complete or incomplete, e.g., “Rethink, Moral Philosophy, Lond., 1888; J. Duties and Rights of Man, Lond., 1888. (J. J. McC.)

Law, Civil, Influence of Church on. Since Christianity is an ethical religion it must influence the rules of human conduct. Ecclesiastics have assisted in legislation, government, and the administration of justice from the beginning of the Christian Era. They aided in framing laws for barbarians, e.g., the Lex Romana Visigothorum; dispensed justice in civil and criminal matters; and advised rulers, e.g., the lord chancellor of England was usually an ecclesiastic. The Church revolutionized legislation in regard to slavery, marriage, paternal authority, and legal procedure. The right of sanctuary and the “Truce of God” were innovations by the Church; and trial by ordeal was condemned by the Fathers of the Church: St. Isidore, c. 560; St. Gregory the Great (590-604); St. John Chrysostom (347-407); St. Augustine (354-430); and, finally, by the Council of Trent (1545-63).—C.E.

Law of Guarantees (It., La Legge delle Garanzie), a law passed by the Italian Parliament, 13 May, 1871, granting certain prerogatives to the pope, and outlining the relations between the Italian State and the Church consequent to the occupation of Rome by the Piedmontese troops, 20 Sept., 1870. Some of its provisions were: inviolability of the Pope’s person, an annuity of three and a quarter million lire (5022,425), extra-territoriality of the Vatican and Lateran Palaces and Castel Gandolfo. This law was never accepted by Pius IX and his successors because, amongst other reasons, it presupposed the subjection of the pope to the Italian ruler, a status which could never be admitted by one whose supreme spiritual authority extends to the Universal Church.—C.E., VII, 48; Carrère, tr. Chambers, The Pope, N. Y., 1926. (M. E. B.)

Lawrence, SAINT, martyr (d. 258), a deacon, victim of the Valerian persecution, and one of the most honored of Roman martyrs. Probably a native of Spain, he became one of the seven deacons of the Roman Church, and distributed alms from the monastery of St. Cyriaca. According to tradition St. Lawrence was roasted to death on a red-hot gridiron over a slow fire. He was buried in the cemetery of St. Cyriaca on the road to Tivoli, and his tomb was opened by Pelagius II to place in it the body of St. Stephen, the Protomartyr. Patron of the poor, of cooks, against fire and lumbago; titular of the cathedrals of Genoa, Perugia, Cortona, Kulum, and of the Escolania, the Spanish royal palace. Emblems: gridiron, cross, Book of the Gospels, Relics; head in the Quirinal Chapel, gridiron in San Lorenzo in Lucina, garments in Our Lady's Chapel in the Lateran Palace, etc. His name occurs in the Canon of the Mass. Feast, R. Cal., 10 Aug.—C.E.; Butler.

Lawrence Justinian, SAINT, confessor (1381-1456), first Patriarch of Venice, b. Venice; d. there. He was a descendant of the Gisini, a Venetian patrician family which numbered several saints among its members; he entered the Canons Regular of St. Augustine on the Island of Alga near Venice; ordained in 1406, he was elected prior of the community, and shortly after general of the Order, of which he is generally considered the founder because he drew up the constitution. He was made Patriarch of Venice, 1451; was renowned for his charities and reforms. Canonized, 1690. Feast, R. Cal., 5 Sept.—C.E.; Butler.

Lawrence Mary Joseph Imbert, Blessed, martyr (1797-1839), Bp. of Korea, b. Calais; d. Korea. He entered the Foreign Mission Seminary at Paris, 1818, and was ordained a priest of the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, the following year. Selected for the Chinese mission, the Province Szechuan was the first scene of his apostolic labors. In 1836 he was consecrated Bp. of Korea, where he spent the remainder of his life with his two companions, Frs. Chastan and Maubant. These three devoted themselves entirely to the evangelization of the heathen until 1839, when they gave themselves up to the government, were cast into prison, and beheaded on 21 Sept. of that year. Their bodies remained exposed for several days but were finally buried on Mountain Nuku. Beatiﬁcation, 1857.—Wegener, Heroes of the Mission Field, Techuy, Ill., 1924.

Lawrence of Brindisi (Julius Caesar Rossi), SAINT, confessor (1559-1619), b. Brindisi, Italy; d. Lisbon. He entered the Capuchin Order, 1575 and after brilliant studies in which he was noted for his linguistic gifts, mastering Italian, Latin, Greek, Hebrew, German, Bohemian, French, and Spanish, he eventually became head of the Order. He was most successful as a missionary, particularly among the Jews, and by his address to the Christian soldiers, whom he led, cruciﬁx in hand, he contributed to the great defeat of the Turks at Stuhlweissenburg. He was sent by the pope, 1605, to evangelize Germany, and induced Philip III to join the Catholic League. Represented the Christian army against the Turks, and receiving the embrace of the Child Jesus. Canonized, 1881. Feast, 6 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Lawrence O’Toole (Lawcan Ua Tadhghal), SAINT, confessor c. 1128-80, Abp. of Dublin, b. Co. Kildare, Ireland; d. Eu, France. He studied at Glendalough, and became Abbot of St. Kevin’s in 1154. Eight years later he was made Abp. of Dublin, his appointment marking the liberation of his see from obedience to Canterbury. He attended the Lateran Council, 1179, and died visiting Henry II of England in Normandy, seeking a favorable terms for King Roderic O’Connor of Connacht. Represented looking at a church surrounded with light. Canonized, 1226. Relics principally in the abbey of Our Lady of Eu. Feast, 14 Nov.—C.E.; Butler.

Lawrence Richardson (alias Johnson), Blessed, martyr (1582), d. London. He was of an ancient family of Co. Lancaster, England, celebrated for its devotion to the Faith. Educated at Oxford, he studied for the priesthood at Donni, and was ordained, 1577. He was sent to England, where he was arrested, 1581, accused of complicity in the pretended Reims and Rome plot, and hanged.

Lay Baptism is that administered by any layman, in case of necessity. The one baptizing pours natural water over the head of subject, while saying, “I baptize thee in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.” He must intend “to do what the Church does.”—C.E., II, 204.

Lay Brothers (Gr., talcoes, of or from the people), religious occupied solely with the secular affairs of a monastery or friary, as distinct from the choir monks or brothers. They originated probably in Italy early in the 11th century when it became necessary to differentiate between ecclesiastics and their non-clerical brethren, who were ignore of Latin and therefore incapable of performing choir duties or attaining to Holy Orders. They looked after the sacristy, buildings, farms, household cares, and visitors, thus affording the choir religious more time for the Office and study, while all classes of persons might be enabled to embrace religion, taking the usual vows. They are now found in most religious orders. They were often artists and skilled craftsmen, contributed greatly to the prosperity of the order, and whenever possible they rendered real apostolic services as St. Rodriguez with St. Peter Claver. A slight difference in habit usually distinguishes them from the choir monks.—C.E.

Lay Communion, the state of a layman in communion with the Catholic Church, i.e. not excommunicated. Since it includes his fitness to receive the Holy Eucharist, the term is sometimes taken to mean the state of a priest or cleric, excluded from the celebration of Mass or other functions of his order, but permitted to receive Holy Communion.—C.E. (L. P. F.)

Lay Confession, a custom prevalent in the Middle Ages of conferring one's sins to a lay person, when danger of death was imminent and no priest could be obtained. Although lay confession was highly cOlnrniled by theologians of that epoch as an act of humility and of penance, it was not regarded as possessing the sacramental efficacy of confession made to a priest.—C.E.; Teetaert, La Confession aux Laiques, (F. J. C.)

Layman (Lat., laicus, laic), one who is not in clerical orders and therefore not capable of clerical functions, such as administering the Sacraments, preaching, and pastoral duties. In temporal matters laymen may be appointed to administer the fiscal affairs of an institution, but always dependent on the bishop. A layman may be appointed by the pope as commissary Apostolic to pass judgment or take information in ecclesiastical matters; also as assessor or counselor to a judge in ecclesiastical matters. For a time in the Church laymen were often appointed to benefices attached to abbeys and held them in commendam (in trust), deriving the revenues therefrom, but engaging clerics to look after the spiritual affairs of the monks. They were known as commendatory abbeys or abbeys in commendam. This gave rise to grave abuses and the system, after long struggles on the part of the popes, was abolished. From St. Augustine's time, and very likely earlier, they have been associated with members of religious orders as confratres or oblates with the Benedictines, Franciscans, Oblates of St. Ambrose and St. Charles, doing various works of mercy, visiting the sick and the poor, teaching the ignorant, reconciling enemies, and defending the faith. Perhaps the most distinct order of laymen were the Beghards who for the most part were members of the city craft guilds and who became a refuge for worn-out workingmen. Organizations of laymen have always been a powerful arm of the clergy, and individual laymen in every country have been distinguished champions of religion in political life, journalism, literature, education, and social and professional matters.—P.C. Augustine. (Ed.)

Lay Sisters (Gr., laikos, of or from the people) are to be found in most of the orders of women. They seem to have been instituted earlier than the lay brothers, according to a life of St. Denis written in the 9th century in which they are first mentioned. They originated through the same necessity as that of the brothers. In some orders they recite daily the Little Office of Our Lady, but usually their office consists of a certain number of Paters, Aves, and Glorias. Frequently they are skilled in artistic handicrafts, and some make efficient administrators of temporal possessions. Sister Marie Lataste of the Society of the Sacred Heart is an illustrious example of the type generally characterizing this class of religious.

Lazarists. See Congregation of the Mission of St. Vincent de Paul.

Lazarus (Heb., God hath helped). (1) The beggar in the parable set forth by Christ (Luke, 16). (2) The brother of Martha and Mary of Bethany, and a beloved friend of Jesus (John, 11). He was raised from the dead by Our Divine Lord. Many of the Jews believed in Jesus because of Lazarus. According to a tradition in the Western Church, Lazarus became the first Bp. of Marseilles and died a martyr.—C.E.; Ollivier, tr. Keogh, The Friends of Jesus, St. L., 1903. (J. M. N.)

Lazarus, a hospice, or Jesus' leper hospital, a military order originating in the leper hospital of Jerusalem, founded in the 12th century; when it became military is uncertain. Sanctioned by successive popes, in 1490 Innocent VIII suppressed it. Frequent efforts toward reestablishment were made until the French Revolution permanently abolished it.—C.E.

Lazarus and the Rich Man, one of the most graphic parables of Christ (Luke, 16), describing the beggar at the rich man's table. The name Lazarus (Heb., God hath helped) has become synonymous the world over and for all time with misery in any form. The rich man is not named because, as St. Cyril remarks, God's way of treating the rich who are heartless is: "nor will I be mindful of their names by my lips" (Psalm 15). The rich man feasts sumptuously every day, Lazarus gets scarcely enough scraps from the table to satisfy hunger; the dogs, a name for filthy animals, lick his sores. Lazarus dies and is carried by angels into Abraham's bosom, a name for heaven; the rich man dies and was buried, in hell, as the text implies. Then come the pleadings of the rich man to Father Abraham to send Lazarus to cool his tongue with a finger-tip dipped in water. He is refused. He pleads that his five brethren may be warned by sending Lazarus to tell them of his torment. He is reminded they have ample warning in Moses and the prophets. He insists on a message from the dead. He is told: "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they believe, if one rise again from the dead." The parable is a lesson on the enormity of injustice, the evils of inequality in the distribution of this world's goods, the heartlessness that too often develops from the acquisition of wealth, and the assumption of the rich man that money can command anything, even a special revelation if necessary.—Ollivier, tr. Leisy, The Parables of Our Lord, Lea, Diocese of, South Dakota, embraces the counties of Harding, Perkins, Corson, Butte, Meade, Ziebach, Dewey, Lawrence, Pennington, Haakon, Armstrong, Stanley, Caster, Jackson, Lyman, Fall River, Washington, Washabaugh, Mellette, Tripp, Gregory, Todd, Bennett, Shannon; area, 41,759 sq. m.; established, 1902; suffragan of St. Paul. Bishops: John Starlin (1902-09); Joseph F. Busch (1910-15); John J. Lawler (1916). Churches, 188; priests, secular, 86; priests, regular, 18; religious women, 158; academy, 1; parochial schools, 9; pupils in parochial schools, 1154; Indian schools, 4; pupils, 1100; institutions, 4; Catholics, 39,435.

League, German Catholic, a confederacy of the Catholic states of the Empire in Germany. After the inauguration of the Protestant Union (1608), Duke Maximilian of Bavaria began negotiations for the formation of this league. An alliance was finally concluded in 1609 at Munich by Augsburg, Constance, Passau, Ratiberg, and Würzburg. The confederates promised to defend the Catholic religion within the Empire, and prevent encroachments from the Protestants. In 1611 the league won the support of Spain and the Pope, and began to gather an army, but its foundation was shaken by the formation in 1617 of a separate confederation of Bavaria, Electorate of Wurzburg, and the Prince-abbey of Ellwangen by Archduke Maximilian of Austria, a war-director of the league. However, in 1610, the league was reconstrued in two groups: the Rhenish under the Elector of Mainz, Archbishop John Cronenburg (1604-26); and the Oberland under Bavaria. The league army totalled about 30,000 men, while that of the Protestant Union numbered only 10,000. After its first victory over the Bohemians, the history of the league, whose strength lay principally in the personality of Maximilian of Bavaria, is closely involved in that of the Thirty Years War.—C.E.

League, The, political and religious organization formed by the French Catholics in the 16th century to protest against the encroachments of the Huguenots and to prevent the accession of the Protestant Henry de Navarre to the throne. The equivocal attitude of the frivolous Henry III, the extraordinary advantages granted to the Huguenots by the Edict of Nantes (1576), the defections of several fortified towns, aroused the Catholics and prompted them to band together for the defense of their faith. A local league was started in 1576 at Pérone, one of the towns ceded to the Huguenots; the general league in which not only the nobility and the clergy, but also the people participated, was organized in Paris in 1585, with a Council of 18 members, Henry de Guise, Duke of Lorraine, who had personal designs on the throne of France, was selected military leader. Then began “the War of the Three Henrys,” the principal episodes of which were: the battle of Coutras (1587), won by Henry de Navarre; Barriadeys day (12 May, 1588), which witnessed the triumphal entry of Henry de Guise in Paris; assassination of Guise by order of Henry III (23 Dec. 1588); the joint campaign of Henry III and Henry of Navarre against Paris, and the former’s murder by a fanatical monk (1589); the nomination of Cardinal de Bourbon as King of France under the name of Charles X; the abjuration of Henry of Navarre in 1593, and his coronation at Chartres in 1594. He entered Paris on 22 March in the midst of popular applause, and the league, having no more object, was dissolved after the absolution of all censures granted to the new king by Pope Clement VII.—C.E.; De l’Epinois, La Ligue et les Papes.

Leage of the Cross, The, English Catholic total abstinence society founded in London by Card. Manning, 1873. Its chief centers are London and Liverpool; it has branches in Great Britain, Ireland, Australia, and Canada.—C.E.

Leander of Seville, Saint, confessor (c. 534-601), Bp. of Seville. He was the brother of St. Isidore who succeeded him, and St. Fulgentius of Cartagena. He became a Benedictine monk, and, in 579, Bp. of Seville. He was distinguished for his opposition to Arianism, which glistens white in the distance. It is the peak of the highest mountain range of central Syria, which is about 95 m. long, and consists of two parallel mountain chains of the same formation; the western, or Lebanon proper, and the eastern, or Anti-Lebanus; Mount Hermon reaches the height of 9300 ft. Lebanon is often mentioned poetically in the O.T. (Osee, 14; Nah., 1), and is noted for its abundance of wood, especially the cedar (Zach., 11; 1 Esd., 3), which was used by Solomon in building the Temple (3 Kings, 5).—C.E.

Lebwin, Saint, confessor (d. c. 770), Apostle of the Frisians, b. England; d. Deventer, Holland. He was a monk at Ripon, and after his ordination he resolved to devote himself to missionary labors in Germany. He preached in the districts along the Yssel River, and built churches at Hulipa and Deventer. Relics at Deventer. Feast, 12 Nov.—C.E.; Butler.

Le Caron, Joseph (1586-1632), missionary, b. near Paris; d. France. Entering the Recollects when already ordained, he was one of the first four missionaries sent to Canada, and the pioneer among the Hurons. He evangelized the Montagnais of Tadousac, in 1622. In 1629 he was sent back to France by the English after they captured Quebec. Le Caron is the author of the first Huron dictionary.—C.E.

Leclercq, Christien, a Franciscan Recollect, b. Flanders; one of the most zealous missionaries to the Canadian Miemaes, among whom he labored from 1675 to 1686. Returning to France, he wrote two important historical works on the beginnings of the Faith in New France.—C.E.

Leclercq, Henri (1869-1929), writer, historian. He was educated at Notre Dame College, Tournai, Belgium, became a French citizen, 1888, and was a sub-lieutenant in the French army, 1893. Entering the Benedictine Order, he was ordained, 1898, and was stationed at St. Michael's Abbey, Pembroke, England, and the Italian Hospital, Queen's Square, London. He was a contributor to the Catholic Encyclopedia, and the author of many works, including "Monumenta Ecclesiae Liturgica," "Les Martyrs," "L'Afrique chrétienne," "Manuel d'archéologie chrétienne," and "Histoire des Conciles."—(M. J. R.)

Lectern or Letturn (Lat., legere, to read), a book-stand or reading-desk to support the sacred books used in liturgical ceremonies. One permanent stand was first used for this purpose; later, two were erected on opposite sides of the choir. In some churches the sermon was preached at a third lectern. Marble and wood were used in their construction, and they were sometimes elaborately decorated and set with precious stones. That found in Thessalonica in the court of the church of St. Pantalamon is considered the oldest. For movable stands, wood, bronze, and brass were employed. In England, lecterns in the form of eagles with open wings became popular in the 13th and 14th centuries, and are still conspicuous in Anglican churches. The missal-stands used during Mass and in other ceremonies are perhaps the most common form now in use.—C.E.

Lectionary. (1) In a wide sense any liturgical volume containing passages read aloud in services of the Church. (2) Collection of scriptural readings chanted by deacon, sub-deacon, or lector during Mass. (3) Book from which readings for Matins were taken.—C.E.

Lector (Lat., reader), clerk in minor orders, second in the Roman Rite.—C.E.

Ledochowski, Mieczlas Halka (1822-1902), count and cardinal, b. Gorki, Russian Poland; d. Rome. After 19 years in the ecclesiastical diplomatic service, he was made Archbishop of Gnesen-Posen. During the Kulturkampf he opposed the German Government's attempt to suppress religious teaching in Polish, and after being repeatedly imprisoned was cast into the dungeon of Ostrowo, 1874. A few weeks later Pius IX raised him to the cardinalate. In 1876, he was released from gaol and exiled, but continued ruling his diocese from Rome, till he resigned on being named secretary of papal briefs, 1885. In 1892 he was appointed Prefect of the Propaganda.—C.E.

Leeds, Diocese of, comprises the West Riding of Yorkshire, and the city of York s. of the Ouse; suffragan of Liverpool, formed 1878 by division of the Diocese of Beverley. Bishops: John Briggs (1850-60), Robert Cornthwaite (1861-90), translated to Leeds, 1878, William Gordon (1890-1911), and Joseph Cowgill (1911). Churches and chapels, 189; priests, secular, 181; priests, regular, 38; elementary schools, 84; other schools, 11; institutions, 16; Catholics, 155,000.

Lefebvre, Camille (1831-95), Apostle of the Acadians, b. St. Philippe, Quebec; d. St. Joseph, New Brunswick. He entered the Congregation of the Holy Cross, and was appointed to the Acadian parish of Memramcook, N. B., 1864. He began the erection of St. Joseph's College. He was the principal agency, because of his indomitable energy and confidence in God, in raising the Acadians, who for over a century had been deliberately held down as woodcutters and water carriers, to a position of genuine equality and freedom in intellectual, social, and commercial life.—C.E.

Legal Relationship, resulting from adoption, may be a matrimonial impediment, either impedient or diriment, depending on the nature of the civil law on the subject in the region where the marriage takes place. If, according to that law, the marriage is valid although unlawful, the Church regards it in like manner, and the impediment is merely of the impedient or hindering class. If the civil law holds that such a marriage is invalid, the Church makes the impediment a diriment one. She may dispense from either.

Legate a Latere, a cardinal appointed by the pope to represent the Roman Pontiff at a specific ecclesiastical function.—C.E., IX, 119. (D. R.)

Legends of the Saints, certain popular biographical stories of the saints. The word legend is not used here in the modern sense, describing what is entirely fictitious, but is intended to convey the idea of a story which possesses a substratum of truth under considerable fanciful embellishment. In these legends there is a certain original truthfulness, fact, or facts, which gradually has been obscured by imagination and credulity. Hagiographers have discovered certain similarities in these romantic details. Further research has shown the origins of these fanciful details to be pagan rather than Christian, being drawn from the tales of the pagan deities and heroes. After the age of the martyrs, the original truthful Acta were gradually encrusted with these details, so that, with the popular credulity, the romantic elements have quite buried the truthful facts. The fact that the honoring of Christian saints took the place of the honoring and adoring of the local pagan gods and demigods, afforded an opportunity for the abuse of attributing to the saint the deeds of the pagan demigods. There is however no proof that any pagan deity was metamorphosed into a Christian saint.

Some of these marvelous details became common, so that they were applied in various forms to the lives not only of the martyrs of the first centuries but of the saints of the medieval period. The task of Catholic historical scholarship is to detect and discard that which is fictitious, and to attain to the original truthful account. This was first attempted by Fr. Rosweyde, S.J. (1629) and later carried on with great success by the Bollandists. The legends are not to be entirely rejected. They are a source of history when their fundamental assertions agree with more accurate sources. There is much of truth in them.—C.E.; Delehaye, tr. Crawford, The Legends of the Saints, N. Y., 1907.

Legitimation (Lat., make right or lawful), removal of the irregularity due to birth out of wedlock. In canon law all children of marriage are presumed to be legitimate even though the marriage be invalid but reputed valid, or declared null after the birth of the children. Illegitimacy is removed if the parents marry, provided they were entitled to marriage at the time of the conception or birth or at some intermediate time, and this removal extends to children already deceased, and to their descendants. Legitimation does not depend on the will of the parents. The sovereign pontiff has the power of legitimating anyone born out of wedlock and includes 40 fasting days, which are weekdays. The date of Lent varies according to the date of Easter. The origin of this penitential season is obscure; its length has varied in different ages, but the principle of a fast of 40 days (Lat., quadragesima; It., quarrasima; Fr., carême) has been recognized since the 4th century.—C.E.; Fueger, tr. Shepherd, The Liturgical Year: Lent, Lond., 1923. (M. P. H.)

Lehmkuhl, Augustinus (1834-1918), theologian, b. Hagen, Westphalia, Germany; d. Valkenburg, Netherlands. He was educated at a primary school in Hagen, later at Essen-Ruhr, Rheinland, and at several Jesuit scholasticates. Entering the Society of Jesus, 1853, he was ordained, 1862, and appointed professor of Holy Scripture, of dogmatic theology, and of moral theology at the Jesuit scholasticates, Maria-Laach, Germany, and Ditton Hall, England. Much of his time was devoted to writing, and besides articles in the Catholic Encyclopedia, some of his important works include "Theologia moralis," "Compendium theologiae moralis," and "Casus conscientiae."—The Catholic Encyclopedia and its Makers, N.Y., 1917.

Lemaître, lē-mātr', Jules (1853-1914), literary critic and playwright, b. Venezy, France; d. Paris. After teaching for a few years he devoted himself entirely to literature, and became editor of Art Journal, "Revue Blanche" and dramatic critic of the "Journal des Débats." His "Contemporains" and "Impressions de Théâtre" constitute a captivating literary history of France in his day. He wrote several successful plays, as "Révoltés," "Le Député Leveau," "Marriage Blanc," and is recognized as one of the masters of lucid, witty French.—C.E. Suppl.

Le Moyne, one of the most illustrious families of the New World, famous in Canadian history. Its founder was Charles Le Moyne (1626-83), b. Dieppe, France; d. Montreal. He reached Canada in 1641, and after encouraging immigration was created Sieur de Longueuil in recognition of his success against the Five Nations. Pierre, Sieur d'Iberville (1661-1706), founder of the colony of Louisiana. Jean-Baptiste, Sieur de Bienville (1658-1729), French Governor of Louisiana and founder of New Orleans. Charles Le Moyne (1655-1729), Governor of Three Rivers and Montreal. Jacques, Sieur de Sainte-Hélène (1659-90), Paul, Sieur de Maricourt (1663-1704) accompanied d'Iberville in his Hudson Bay campaign. Simon, second Sieur de Sérigny (1668-1724), Governor of Rochefort, France. Charles Le Moyne, second baron de Longueuil (1687-1755) Governor of Montreal. Joseph-Dominique-Emmanuel Le Moyne (1738-1807).—C.E.

Le Moyne, Simon (1604-65), Jesuit missionary, b. Beauvais; d. near Three Rivers. Sent to Canada in 1638, he acquired a thorough knowledge of the Huron-Iroquois language, and the Indian character, and diplomacy. He was the first European to penetrate among the Onondagas. While on an embassy to the Cayuga Iroquois, he was seized and tortured, barely escaping death to which he had been sentenced.—C.E.

Lent (A.S., leneten, spring), a season of penance set apart by the Church in memory of the forty days' fast of Our Lord in the desert, and as a means of sanctification for her members. It begins on Ash Wednesday, consists of 6½ weeks preceding Easter, and includes 40 fasting days, which are weekdays. The Sundays are a part of the Lenten season, but are not days of fasting or abstinence. The date of Lent varies according to the date of Easter. The origin of this penitential season is obscure; its length has varied in different ages, but the principle of a fast of 40 days (Lat., quadragesima; It., quarrasima; Fr., carême) has been recognized since the 4th century.—C.E.; Fueger, tr. Shepherd, The Liturgical Year: Lent, Lond., 1923. (M. P. H.)

Lentulus, Publius, a fictitious person, said to have been Governor of Judea before Pontius Pilate, and to have written a letter to the Roman Senate descriptive of Christ. The letter, which is apocryphal, agrees with the Abgar picture of Our Lord, hereafter among the Onondagas. While on an embassy to the Cayuga Iroquois, he was seized and tortured, barely escaping death to which he had been sentenced.—C.E.

Leo I (Lat., leo, lion) (the Great), Saint, Doctor of the Church, Pope 440-461, d. Rome. A deacon, he was sent to Gaul as mediator by Emperor Valentinian III. Elected when the Western Empire was disintegrating and heresy rife, his chief aim was to sustain church unity. To gain this end he established the vicariates of Arles, as the center of the Gallican episcopacy; and Thessalonica, as the center of Eastern Illyria. He established closer relationships between distant episcopal see and Rome, and had the primacy of the Bishop of Rome over the whole Church recognized in an edict of Emperor Valentinian, 445. He combated Pelagianism, Manicheanism and Prisclianism; upheld the decision of the Patriarch of Constantinople against Eutyches by a dogmatic letter confirming the doctrine of the Incarnation. Later in the general council held at Chalcedon this epistle was accepted as an expression of Catholic Faith concerning the Person of Christ. He reformed Church discipline; built and restored churches; protected Rome from the Huns under Attila and the Vandals under Genseric. He left many sermons and epistles of great historical value. Feast, R. Cal., 11 April.—C. E.; Mann; Butler.

Leo II, Saint, Pope (682-683), b. Sicily; d. Rome. He confirmed the Acts of the Sixth Ecumenical Council and condemned Honorius I, not for teaching heresy, but for neglecting to oppose it. He secured from Emperor Constantine Pogonatus a revocation of the edict of Constans II which proclaimed the bishops of Ravenna free from the direct jurisdiction of the Bishop of Rome. Feast, R. Cal., 28 June.—C. E.; Mann; Butler.

Leo III, Saint, Pope (795-816), b. and d. Rome. A cardinal-priest. When consecrated, he sent Charlemagne the keys of the confession of St. Peter and the standard of the city to show that he regarded him as the protector of the church. From the king he received a portion of the treasure captured from the Avars and with this he benefited churches, institutions, and encouraged ecclesiastical art. A plot to render Leo unfit to hold his sacred office was formed by Leo's personal enemies. In the procession of the Greater Litanies (799) he was attacked by a body of armed men. Seriously injured, he fled to the Monastery of St. Erasmus, where he recovered in a miraculous manner. Escaping from the monastery he went to Germany. A few months later he returned to Rome under the protection of Charlemagne, and was received with great demonstrations of joy. His enemies were tried by Charlemagne's envoys, and sent to France as prisoners. A year later when Charlemagne and an assembly of bishops sentenced the leaders to death, Leo requested that their sentence be commuted to one of exile. On Christmas Day, 800, Charlemagne was crowned emperor. By this act Leo revived the Empire of the West, and in theory, the world was divided into two parts. The Pope and the Patriarch of Constantinople against Eutyches by a dogmatic letter confirming the doctrine of the Incarnation. Later in the general council held at Chalcedon this epistle was accepted as an expression of Catholic Faith concerning the Person of Christ. He reformed Church discipline; built and restored churches; protected Rome from the Huns under Attila and the Vandals under Genseric. He left many sermons and epistles of great historical value. Feast, R. Cal., 11 April.—C. E.; Mann; Butler.

Leo IV, Saint, Pope (847-855), b. and d. Rome. A cardinal-priest. As pope he fortified Rome against a body of armed men. Seriously injured, he fled to the Monastery of St. Erasmus, where he recovered in a miraculous manner. Escaping from the monastery he went to Germany. A few months later he returned to Rome under the protection of Charlemagne, and was received with great demonstrations of joy. His enemies were tried by Charlemagne's envoys, and sent to France as prisoners. A year later when Charlemagne and an assembly of bishops sentenced the leaders to death, Leo requested that their sentence be commuted to one of exile. On Christmas Day, 800, Charlemagne was crowned emperor. By this act Leo revived the Empire of the West, and in theory, the world was divided into two parts. The Pope and the Patriarch of Constantinople against Eutyches by a dogmatic letter confirming the doctrine of the Incarnation. Later in the general council held at Chalcedon this epistle was accepted as an expression of Catholic Faith concerning the Person of Christ. He reformed Church discipline; built and restored churches; protected Rome from the Huns under Attila and the Vandals under Genseric. He left many sermons and epistles of great historical value. Feast, R. Cal., 11 April.—C. E.; Mann; Butler.
and worldlings, who made the papal court a center of amusement. His charity was unlimited, and his private life was irreproachable, but he was an insincere politician, frequently changing from a French to a German alliance. The way for Gallicanism was paved when he signed a concordat with France, revoking the Pragmatic Sanction of Brouges but granting the French King the right of nomination to all the sees, abbeys, and priories of France. The reform measures proposed by the Lateran Council were not enforced. Wars among the surrounding princes disturbed his reign, and he failed to grasp the seriousness of the religious situation which was ripe for Luther's revolt.—C.E.; Pastor; Roscoe, Life and Pontificate of Leo X, Lond., 1883.

Leo XI (Alessandro Ottaviano de'Medici), Pope (1605), b. Florence, Italy, 1535; d. Rome. Of a famous Florentine family he held the position of ambassador at the court of Tuscany for 15 years; then he was elected Bp. of Pistoia, and Abp. of Florence. As cardinal he was sent to the French court of Henry IV where he was instrumental in repressing Huguenot influence. Later he was made Card.-Bp. of Porto, and of Palestrina. St. Philip Neri was his adviser in many important matters. He reigned less than one month and accomplished no important acts.—C.E.

Leo XII (Annibale Francesco della Genga), Pope (1823-1829), b. near Spoleto, Italy, 1760; d. Rome. He was appointed Titular Abp. of Tyre, and sent as nuncio to Lucerne, 1792; to Cologne, 1794; to the Diet of Ratisbon, 1805. As pope, he combated the indifferentism and Protestant proselytism of the period, and stimulated the devotion of the Catholic world by the jubilee of 1825. The persecution of the Netherland Catholics was overcome, and the emancipation of the Catholics of the British Isles was secured three months after his death. The Roman College was restored to the charge of the Jesuits, 1824. Freemasonry and other secret societies were condemned, the Vatican printing-press was restored, and the Vatican Library enriched.—C.E.; Wiseman, Recollections of the Last Four Popes, Lond., 1858.

Leo XIII (Gioacchino Vincenzo Pecci), Pope (1878-1903), b. Carpigneto, near Anagni, Italy, 1810; d. Rome. He studied under the Jesuits at Viterbo and at the Roman College, acquiring that classical facility in Latin and Italian, later justly admired in his official writings and poems. He entered the Academy of Noble Ecclesiastics and the University of Sapienza, and was ordained in 1837. As civil governor of Benevento he stamped out brigandage and reformed the system of taxation. As governor of Perugia, he reformed the educational system and established a savings bank and loan system to help the workers. A month after he was appointed nuncio at Brussels, 1843, he was consecrated titular Abp. of Damietta. He promoted union among the Belgian Catholics and inspired the foundation of the Belgian College, Rome, 1844. Appointed Bp. of Perugia, retaining, however, the title of archbishop, he inspired his clergy with increased zeal for learning, catechizing, preaching, and missionary work. He defended the temporal power, and protested against state interference in ecclesiastical affairs when Piedmont had unjustly annexed Perugia and Umbria. He was made a cardinal, 1853. As pope he evinced marked administrative and executive ability. He found the church in a difficult position with respect to civil power, yet by his tact he improved relations everywhere. He called on French Catholics to accept the Republic loyally, and inspired the Franco-Russian alliance. He secured an amelioration of the laws against Catholics in Russia, Prussia, Switzerland, and renewed diplomatic relations with Germany, finally bringing that country into accord with the papacy. French jealousy respecting the Eastern missions prevented the establishment of relations with China. In regard to Italian affairs, Leo remained a prisoner in the Vatican, like his predecessor. In 1855 he acted as arbitrator between Spain and Germany regarding the Caroline Islands. The hierarchy was restored in Scotland and India; Anglican Orders were definitely declared invalid. In the United States his action regarding the Knights of Labor met with approval and an Apostolic delegation was established at Washington, 1892. Six years later the erroneous tendencies of "Americanism" evinced by the Catholic clergy were condemned in an Apostolic letter. A letter to the Brazilian bishops pointed out the evils of slavery. The missionary field was enlarged and strengthened and new sees (248) and vicariates Apostolic (49) established. The Uniat Armenian schism was ended, the Basilian Order reformed, and ecclesiastical colleges were established for Ruthenians, Armenians and Bohemians at Rome, and for Chaldeans at Mossul. The study of scholastic philosophy was urged, and a Biblical commission established in 1902. Most of the Vatican archives were thrown open to scholars, 1883. Among Leo's great encyclicals are those dealing with socialism, capital and labor, Christian marriage, Freemasonry, the Christian basis of political life, and the true idea of liberty. His reign may be fittingly entitled the "Era of Peace."—C.E.; The Great Encyclicals of Leo XIII, ed. Wynne, N. Y., 1902.

Leon, former kingdom in the northwestern part of the Iberian peninsula, now a civil province of Spain. As a Roman military colony in the Asturias, it was called Legio Septima, Gemina, which was modified to Leon. Christianity was early introduced, and there were bishops in the 5th century. The numerous martyrs in the Roman persecutions included Sts. Facundus (from which Sahagún is derived), Sts. Marcellus and Nonia with their sons Claudius, Victorius, and Lupericus, St. Vincent, and St. Ramirus. In the 4th century a monastery was built on the site of the death of Claudius and his brothers. Leon fell into the hands of the Moors, but was recovered by Alfonso I the Catholic, and again by Ordoño I (850-66). In the 10th century under Ordoño II Castile was subjungated, the cathedral of Leon founded, and Leon became the leading Christian state of western Spain. In 983 it fell into the power of Almanzor but was recovered by Alfonso V, and given a charter by the politico-ecclesiastical Council of Leon establishing the right of benefactors by which a vassal could bind himself to any lord. In 1029 Leon and Castile became the possessions of Ferdinand I of Navarre, and from this time the leadership passed to Castile with which Leon was finally incorporated in 1230. In 1063 the relics of St. Isidore were transferred from Seville to the church of San Juan Bautista which was rebuilt and renamed for the Sevillian Doctor. In 1135 Alfonso VIII was proclaimed Emperor of Spain in the basilica of Sta. Maria.—C.E.

Leonard of Port Maurice, Saint, confessor (1676-1751), missionary and ascetic writer, b. Porto Maurizio, Italy; d. Rome. A pupil of the Jesuits, he entered the Riformella, a branch of the Franciscans, 1697, and spent his life giving missions in Tuscany, Central and Southern Italy, and Corsica, which were crowned with wonderful success. He advocated in particular, the devotion of the Way of the Cross, and erected the celebrated stations in the Colosseum. His writings are numerous, consisting of sermons, letters, ascetic treatises, and books of devotion. Represented with the Blessed Virgin. Canonized, 1867. Feast, 26 Nov. —C.E.

Leonine City, name given to that part of Rome, situated on the right bank of the Tiber, which is so called in honor of Pope St. Leo IV, who surrounded it with a wall, 848-852, when the Saracens were menacing the city. It contains the Basilica of St. Peter and the Vatican.

Leonine Sacramentary, the oldest of the Sacramentaries or liturgical books. Only one MS. is known, dating from the 7th century. Found in the library of the Cathedral Chapter of Verona, it was published by Joseph Bianchini in 1735 in the fourth volume of his edition of "Anastasius Bibliothecarius" and was by him arbitrarily attributed to Pope Leo I (440-461). On the strength of this attribution the book was included by the Ballerini in their edition of Leo (Venice, 1753-57), and still bears the name Leonine. It contains neither Canon nor Ordinary of the Mass, but a collection of Proper (Collects, Secret, Prefaces, Postcommunions, and Orations super Populum), of various Masses, together with ordination farms arranged according to the civil year and with much disorder.—C.E., IX, 297; Fortescue, The Mass: A Study of the Roman Liturgy, N. Y., 1914.

Leopoldina, Empress of Brazil, daughter of Francis I of Austria. Pope Leo XII gave it his approval.—C.E., XVI, 52.

Lepanto, Italian name for Naupactus, a titular metropolitai see of ancient Epirus. The see of Naupactus was suppressed in 1900, and replaced by the see of Acharania and Naupactus. Naupactus was an Athenian military station 5th century B.C., and was taken from the Venetians by the Turks in 1498. In 1827 it became part of the new Greek realm. In Oct., 1827, in the Straits of Lepanto, occurred the celebrated victory of the combined Christian fleets under Don John of Austria, over the Turks. Thousands of Christians were liberated, and the infidels, completely destroyed, suffered their first great defeat at sea. —C.E.

Lepers, plural of leer, those suffering from leprosy, a chronic disease of an infectious nature, caused by the germ bacillus leprae, which produces bodily deformations and mutilations, including destruction of tissue, and bodily decomposition, motor paralysis, anesthesia, etc. It is fatal in the majority of cases although various methods of treatment, including the application of chaulmoogra oil which has met with appreciable success, have reduced the mortality. Bad nutrition and insanitary conditions are favorable to its generation and propagation, and it is endemic in certain localities, as parts of Africa, Arabia, China, Japan, India, Italy, Spain, etc.; it is also found in the United States, particularly in Louisiana and California. It was carried to the Western world from Egypt where it was believed to be contagious and hereditary (2 Kings, 29) and entailed exclusion from the community, the afflicted being shunned as "unclean." The N.T. contains references to the miraculous cure of lepers by Our Lord, notably the healing of ten at one time (Luke, 17). In the early Christian era it was peculiarly prevalent in Europe and strict regulations regarding lepers were adopted; they were prohibited from public meeting places and churches, although in some of the latter they were permitted to watch services celebrated on the main altar by means of a hagioseope, or small opening in the chancel wall of the church. They were obliged to carry wooden clappers to signal their approach, and were gradually segregated in leper houses or "Lazaries," under the administration of religious communities, each of which had its own churchyard, chapel, and ecclesiastics. The view that leprosy is due to the consumption of fish and that hence the Church is responsible for much of the disease is exploded by the fact that it is not as prevalent in Catholic as in other localities, and Catholics, though obliged to abstain from meat, are not obliged to eat fish. The Church which from Leprosy (Gr., lepo, peel), a chronic disease of an infectious nature, caused by the germ bacillus leprae, which produces bodily deformations and mutilations, including destruction of tissue, and bodily decomposition, motor paralysis, anesthesia, etc. It is fatal in the majority of cases although various methods of treatment, including the application of chaulmoogra oil which has met with appreciable success, have reduced the mortality. Bad nutrition and insanitary conditions are favorable to its generation and propagation, and it is endemic in certain localities, as parts of Africa, Arabia, China, Japan, India, Italy, Spain, etc.; it is also found in the United States, particularly in Louisiana and California. It was carried to the Western world from Egypt where it was believed to be contagious and hereditary (2 Kings, 29) and entailed exclusion from the community, the afflicted being shunned as "unclean." The N.T. contains references to the miraculous cure of lepers by Our Lord, notably the healing of ten at one time (Luke, 17). In the early Christian era it was peculiarly prevalent in Europe and strict regulations regarding lepers were adopted; they were prohibited from public meeting places and churches, although in some of the latter they were permitted to watch services celebrated on the main altar by means of a hagioseope, or small opening in the chancel wall of the church. They were obliged to carry wooden clappers to signal their approach, and were gradually segregated in leper houses or "Lazaries," under the administration of religious communities, each of which had its own churchyard, chapel, and ecclesiastics. The view that leprosy is due to the consumption of fish and that hence the Church is responsible for much of the disease is exploded by the fact that it is not as prevalent in Catholic as in other localities, and Catholics, though obliged to abstain from meat, are not obliged to eat fish. The Church which from very early times has promoted the spiritual and temporal welfare of the leper continues the work in various leper colonies, including Carville, Louisiana, where the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul minister to them, and Molokai, residence of the heroic labors of Father Damien (q.v.) and "Brother" Joseph Dutton.—C.E.; Wayson, "Leprosy," in "Journal of the Pan-Pacific Research Institution," July, 1929; Walsh, The Popes and Science, N. Y., 1913.

Leslie, John (1527-96), historian, Bishop of Ross, Scotland; d. Kingussie, Inverness, Scotland; d. Guirtenheim, Belgium. From 1561 he was in the service of Mary Queen of Scots, and never wavered in his fidelity. He spent several years in prison at Ely and the Tower for having favored the projected marriage of Mary with Norfolk, but in 1573 was exiled to the continent. He assisted in revising and publishing the laws of Scotland, but is chiefly remembered for his Latin history of his native land.—C.E.

Lessius, Leonard, Venerable (1554-1623), Jesuit theologian, b. Brecht, Belgium; d. Louvain. Having gained his doctorate of philosophy at Louvain when only seventeen, he entered the Society of Jesus, 1578. He studied theology in Rome, and was sent as professor of theology to Louvain where he remained for 15 years, acquiring a reputation for learning surpassed only by the esteem he was held in for his practice of virtue. His first writing "Theses theologicae" (1586), provoked a violent controversy over his doctrine of efficacious grace and biblical inspiration. A brief apologetic work on the true religion effected many conversions. His most valuable treatise, however, is his "De justitia et jure," marked by clearness of mind, sound judgment, and common sense. Among his ascetical works are treatises on the Supreme God, the Divine Perfections, and the Names of God; the last named was translated by T. J. Campbell and published in New York, 1912.

Lessons (Lat., lectio, reading aloud). Designated portions of the Scriptures read at Mass, from Old and New Testament, more frequently from the Epistles (letters) in the latter, and therefore called Epistle; also in the Ironic office (see Lessons of the Roman Breviary).—C.E.; Fortescue, The Mass: A Study of the Roman Liturgy, N. Y., 1914.

Lessons of the Roman Breviary may be divided into three groups: scriptural, historical, and patristic. From Apostolic days the books of Scripture, as well as non-canonical writings, were read in the Christian assemblies. Considerable diversity existed regarding the choice, number, and length of the scriptural lessons, though undoubtedly their suitability to the various feasts and seasons of the Christian year determined the choice of many of the lessons. The definite order which emerged in the 4th century and became traditional by the 7th century is still retained in the Roman Breviary. It is uncertain when scriptural lessons were introduced into the Roman Breviary though we find the traditional order observed in the 7th century. The scriptural lessons from the O.T. and N.T., recited in the first nocturn of Matins, are usually three in number; the three historical lessons, recited in the second nocturn, contain a brief biography of the saint or an account of the feast that is celebrated; the third group of three lessons, recited in the third nocturn, and Molokai, residence of the Fathers of the Church on the Gospel proper to the feast of the day. The short lesson recited at Prime is generally the same as the Collect of None.—C.E.

Lesueur, lê-syär', François Eustache (c. 1685-1760), Jesuit missionary, b. probably near Coutances, France; d. Montreal. He labored nearly 38 years among the Abenaki Indians in southern New Brunswick, compiled a large Abenaki dictionary and wrote a valuable account of the Calumet dance.—C.E.

Le Tellier, lê têl-yâ, Michel (1643-1719), Jesuit, b. Vast, France; d. La Fleche. He was one of the founders of the "Journal de Trevoux," and wrote against Jansenism in addition to participating in the discussion on the Chinese Rites. In 1709 he became confessor to Louis XIV. Scientific history is now revising the calamitous portrait of him left by Saint-Simon. Le Tellier was not responsible for the destruction of Post-Royal; nor was he relentlessly oppressive in his advice on ecclesiastical matters. His views in advising episcopal nominations; his views on the levying of tithes were legitimate considering the dire necessity of the state; equally exaggerated is Saint-Simon's account of his conduct towards De Nolles, Quesnel, and the Oratorians. Louis XIV's will selected Le Tellier as spiritual director of the youthful Louis XV, but through the influence of Saint-Simon and the Jansenists Le Tellier was requested by the regent to withdraw from Paris.—C.E.

Levate (Lat., levare, to arise), the response of the subdeacon to the deacon's "flectus genua," or of the server to priest at Low Mass on ember days.

Le Verrier, lê vêr-yâ, Urbain Jean Joseph (1811-77), astronomer, b. Saint-Lô, France; d. Paris. He was successively professor at the École Polytechnique, the Collège Stanislas, and the University of Paris. In 1839 he published a calculation of the planetary orbits from 100,000 b.c. to a.d. 100,000, proving the stability of the solar system. In 1853 he succeeded Arago as director of the Paris Observatory. He founded the International Meteorological Institute, and organized the French weather bureau service. He was a fervent Catholic and did not hesitate to condemn publicly the materialistic and sceptical tendencies of so many modern scholars.—C.E.

Levi, lê'vî (Heb., attached to), third son of Jacob, by Lia (Gen., 29). With his brother Simeon he cruelly avenged the humiliation of their sister Dina (Gen., 34), for which they were severely rebuked by Jacob (Gen., 34, 49). Head of the tribe that was set apart for the service of the Lord (Jos., 21). See Levites. (F. P. D.)

Leviathan (Heb., probably tawah, to bend or twist), an enormous beast. The term is found in the Latin Vulgate in Job, 3, 8; 40, 20; Isa., 27, 1. The same Hebrew term lievathan, is found in Ps. 73, 14; 103, 26. In these two last places the Vulgate renders it draco, a dragon. Buxtorf gives the first meaning, whale. The generally accepted meaning is crocodile. It may have had the indefinite signification of a monster, which at times was applied to the crocodile, and at other times to the whale. In Ps. 103, 26; Job, 3, 8; 40, 20, it surely means the whale, especially in Ps. 103, 25, 26, where the home of leviathan is “the sea great and wide.” (A. E. R.)

Levirate Marriage (Lat., levir, a husband’s brother), a Hebrew ordinance, by which the brother of a man who died without male issue was obliged to marry the widow. As a religious ordinance Levirate existed solely in Israel, though ethnologists claim that a similar custom, subject to various modifications, has been found in many tribes. The Hebrews express the law by the specific term Yibhem. A dispensation from the law was made possible by a rite, which they call kalashah. Both the ordinance and the mode of being dispensed from the law are described in the N.T. (Deut., 25). The custom existed before the Mosaic legislation, for Judah gave Thamar to Onan by this custom, and acknowledged that he should have given her to Sela (Gen., 38). The term brother signifies the nearest of kin in the collateral line, and the obligation passed down the line to a terminus not now discernible. The object of the law was to keep up by inheritance in the same family, and prevent the extinction of heads of families. The son begotten of the levirate marriage inherited the name of the deceased man and his possessions. To be held by this law, the levir must be unmarried. God permitted, but never commanded, polygamy.

Levitation, term used by Spiritists to designate the physical phenomena by which objects are suspended in the air by supposed supernatural means; the experience of certain ecstatics, lifted from the ground when at prayer.

Levites, the descendants of Levi, the third son of Jacob by Lia, the eldest tribe of Levi by the command of God was set apart for the service of the sanctuary. Therefore in the apportionment of the land of Chanaan, the tribe of Levi received no tribal territory (Jos., 13). In lieu of land they received the tithes (q.v.) and also four cities with suburban pasture lands from each of the other tribes of Israel. As most of their duties required a man’s full strength, the Levites usually entered active service at 30. At the exodus from Egypt the male descendants of Levi from a month old and upward numbered 22,000. In the journey through the wilderness the number of the Levites from 30 years up to 50 years, the year of superannuation, was 8080 (Num., 4). Aaron and his sons were chosen for the priesthood (Exod., 8); the subordinate offices of the Temple and many other public services were assigned to the rest of the tribe.—C.E. (A. E. R.)

Leviticus, the third Book of the Bible, named from its contents, as it deals exclusively with the service of God and the religious ceremonies of the O.T. as carried out by the members of the tribe of Levi, both priests and Levites. It may be divided as follows: The Rites of the New Year (1-22), consecration and installation of the priests (8-10); the laws of purity (11-18); the law of holiness (17-22); religious institutions (23-26); blessings and curses (26), forcibly illustrating the character of the Mosaic law of fear.—C.E.; Pope. (F. P. D.)

Lia, or Leal (Heb., weary), elder daughter of Laban, married by stratagem to Jacob, who had no love for her (Gen., 29); mother of Ruben, Simeon, Levi, Juda, Issachar, Zabulon, and Dina (Gen., 29, 30). She was buried in the cave of Machpelah, beside Sara and Rebecca (Gen., 49). (F. P. D.)

Lia Fail (Gael., Stone of Destiny), sacred stone of the kings of Tara. It was later removed to Scone, Scotland, and the Scottish kings were seated upon it at their coronation, until its seizure by Edward I of England, who had it placed under the coronation chair in Westminster Abbey, where it still remains. Legend claims it to be the stone on which the patriarch Jacob pillowed his head.

Libellatici (Lat., libelli, bearers of certificates), term applied to lapsed Christians of the 3rd century who secured libelli, or certificates of conformity, to attest that they had conformed to the religious tests required by the edict of Decius. In many cases these certificates were merely purchased from the Roman officials, without an accompanying declaration of paganism. Libelli paesi were certificates of innocence addressed to confessors or martyrs petitioning that their merits be applied to remit the temporal punishment incurred by the lapsed Christians. —C.E.

Liberalism (Lat., liber, free). Up to the 18th century the liberal signified “worthy of a free man,” hence the terms liberal arts, liberal occupations. Since the 18th century it means generally a political system or tendency opposed to centralization and absolutism. The principles of the French Revolution form the basis of modern liberalism, which advocates absolute freedom of thought, religion, conscience, speech, press, and politics, thus denying any authority derived from God. Although liberalism was first formulated at Constant, the Genevese (Necker, Rousseau, etc.), it spread to the world from France, developing with the different revolutions in Europe, and is classified as follows: (1) Anti-ecclesiastical liberalism which includes: the original drawing-room variety of Mme. de Staël and Constant; doctrinaire liberalism, the ramifications of political philosophers, originating from the lecture-hall of Royer-Collard and the salon of the Duc de Broglie; bourgeois liberalism of the property-tied and moneyed classes, and the dispossessed clergy and nobility. This variety flourished in France under Louis-Philippe, 1830-40, in Germany as “national Liberalism,” and in Austria as “political liberalism in general.” In the main it stresses the sordid material ideal. Under anti-ecclesiastical liberalism come also: Liberal “parties of progress,” opposing Conservatives and Liberals of moneved classes; Liberal Radicals, advancing progressive ideas without regard to any existing order or rights; Liberal Democrats, who attempt to make the people, particularly the middle classes, sovereign; and socialism, the liberalism of self-interest nurtured by all the foregoing, and espoused by the proletariat, its main branches being communism, radical social democracy (of Marx, common in Germany and Austria), moderate socialism (in England and France), and anarchism, liberalism's logical and most radical development. (2) Ecclesiastical liberalism includes: modern Liberal Catholicism seeking to regulate Church, State, and modern society according to Constant, founded, 1828, by Lamennais, and defended in part by La- cordaire and Montalembert; a theological and religious form of Liberal Catholicism, preceded by Jansenism and Josephinism, aiming to reform eccle- siastical doctrine in accordance with the Protestant atheistical "science and enlightenment" theory of the time. Recent forms have been condemned by Pius X as modernism. Liberalism was condemned by the Church, explicitly and in detail in the en- cyclical and syllabus of Pius IX, 1864, in the Vatican Council, 1870, in the encyclicals of Leo XIII, in the allocution of Pius X, 1907, and in the Libermann, FRANCIS MARY PAUL, VENERABLE censures of the Vatican Council, 1870, in the encyclicals of Leo XIII, in the allocution of Pius X, 1907, and in the decree of the Congregation of the Inquisition, 1907. The definition of papal infallibility was in itself a condemnation.—C.E.; Pallen, What is Liberalism?, Paris. The son of a Liberia, republic on the western coast of Africa, between 4° 22' and 8° 25' N. lat.; area, about 43,000 sq. m.; pop., between 2,000,000 and 2,500,000; founded, 1820, by the American Colonization So- ciety, as a colony for freed slaves, and declared a sovereign state, 1847. Among the early settlers from the United States were some Catholic Negroes. In 1842 three missionaries arrived from America, the Rev. Edward Barron, Vicar-General of Phila- delphia, the Rev. John Kelly, and a lay catechist, Denis Pindar. The country became part of the Vicariate Apostolic of the Two Guineas; and the Congregation of the Holy Ghost and the Immacu- late Heart of Mary, the Company of Mary, and the Priests of the African Missions have sent most of the missionaries. Because of the fatal effect of the climate on white men, the work has been very diffi- cult and several missions have had to be abandoned. The statistics of the Prefecture Apostolic of Liberia, established 1903, are: churches, 12; priests, 10; Catho- lic population, 2550.—C.E.

Liberia, Prefecture Apostolic of, republic of Liberia, western Africa; comprises the republic of Liberia; established, 1903; entrusted to the African Missionaries of Lyons. Prefect Apostolic: Jean Ogé, M.A.L. (1910), residence at Monrovia. (In 1928 the prefect's appointment as pontifical chargé d'affaires marked the beginning of official relations between the republic and the Holy See.) Catholics, 2550.

Liberius, Pope (352-366), a deacon, b. Rome; d. there. At the time of his election, the Christian world was perturbed by the exiling of St. Atha- nasius and the activities of the Arians. Emperor Constantius wished to force a modified Arianism on the whole Church and endeavored to have the bishops of Gaul condemn Athanasius. The pope upheld the Nicene Creed and the exiled saint, who visited him, 353. Liberius was then dragged to Milan and banished to Berea in Thrace. The anti- pope Felix II was elected but met with little support and Liberius returned after two years. Both early and recent historians hold conflicting views on the allegation that he condemned Athanasius, and signed an Arian formula; certain docu- ments discrediting him are forgeries. In any case it is certain that he signed no document freely and so the papal infallibility is not involved.—C.E.

Libermann, Francis Mary Paul, Venerable (1804-52), founder of the Congregation of the Im- maculate Heart of Mary, b. Saverne, Alsace; d. Paris. The son of a Jewish rabbi, he was baptized at Paris, 24 Dec., 1826, and entered St. Sulpice, 1827. An attack of epilepsy delayed his ordination till 18 Sept., 1841. Meanwhile his association with two creole seminarians had inspired him with the thought of establishing an institute for the con- version of negroes. After several years of prayer and patience, the Congregation of the Immaculate Heart of Mary was authorized at Rome and the novitiate opened at La Neuville near Amiens 27 Sept., 1841. The missions in Africa, practically the first since the downfall of the early Church, have been crowned with success. In 1848 the institu- tute was amalgamated with the revived Congre- gation of the Holy Ghost, which had a similar object, and Father Libermann was chosen superior general of the united societies.—C.E.; Goepfert, Life of the Venerable F.M.P. Libermann, Dub., 1880.

Liberty in Scripture, In the O.T. the idea of liberty was almost entirely absent, religion meant the "fear of the Lord" (Ps. 33), servant was the object, and Father Libennann was chosen superior general of the united societies.—C.E.; Goepfert, Life of the Venerable F.M.P. Libermann, Dub., 1880.

Liberty, the liberty of the glory of the children of God" (Rom. 8).

Liborius, Saint, confessor (d. 396), Bp. of Le Mans, France. Of a noble family of Gaul, he joined the priesthood, and was ordained Bp. of Mans, 348,
He was a friend of St. Martin of Tours. During the 45 years of his episcopacy he built many churches. Patron of Paderborn; invoked against gravel and the stone. Emblems: pebbles, and a peacock. Relics at Paderborn and at Amelia in Umbria. Feast, R. Cal., 23 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Libraries, collections of books accumulated and made accessible for public and private use. Public libraries existed in the ancient civilizations of Babylon, Assyria, Egypt, Greece, and Rome. After the introduction of Christianity each church became the nucleus of a library, as a collection of books was needed for church services. Among the earliest accumulations was the library founded at Jerusalem principally by Bishop Alexander, c. 250, which contained letters and historical documents. More important was the library of Cesarea in Palestine collected by the martyr Pamphilus (d. 308), which contained a number of manuscripts used by Origen in Rome. Pope Damasus (366-384) built a record office (archicum) in Rome which served as a depository of official documents, a library, and chancery, and was connected with the Basilica of St. Lawrence. Pope Agapetus (535-536) erected a building on the Celian Hill, later known as the Library of St. Gregory. At the breakup of the civilization of the Roman Empire monasticism became the great influence which contributed more than anything to preserve in the West some remnants of learning of the classical period. The Benedictine monks especially were the collectors, translators, and book-makers of the early Middle Ages. Notable is the fact that liberal regulations were framed for rendering the books in the monastic collections accessible to the reading public. The monastic libraries of England were outstanding. Those of York, Croyland, Whitby, and Durham possessed good collections at an early date. Among the famous libraries in Europe may be mentioned those of the monastic communities of Fulda, Corvey, and St. Gall in Germany, Monte Cassino in Italy, and Fleury and Cluny in France. With the revival of classical studies and secular literature, book-collecting became popular among rulers and private persons and there was a decline in the monastic learning in Europe. In England the destruction of the monasteries during the Reformation resulted in the loss of many valuable collections. Foremost among the agencies which have contributed to the collection and preservation of books in later times is the papacy. Popes have founded numerous libraries and enriched them with manuscripts and documents. They have also indirectly established libraries by founding universities. Among the famous libraries are: the Vatican, Rome, founded by Pope Nicholas V, 1450; the Ambrosian, Milan, founded by Cardinal Federigo Borromeo, 1603-09; the Angelica, Rome, founded by Angelo Rocca, O.S.A., 1614; the Casanatense, Rome, founded by Cardinal Girolamo Casanata, 1699; the Mazarin, Paris, founded by Cardinal Mazarin, 1643; the Mediceo-Laurenziana, Florence, founded by Clement VII, 1571, and the library of Louvain University, founded 1627, on a collection bequeathed to the university by Beyerliuc. It was destroyed by the Germans, 1914, but has since been reconstructed.—C.E.

Libya, lib'ya, Italian colony on the northern coast of Africa, between Tunis and Egypt, comprising Tripolitania and Cyrenaica. The name was applied in ancient geography to the continent of Africa. Libyans from Cyrene were present at Pentecost (Acts, 2).

Lichfield, ancient diocese, England, founded 7th century, by transference from Mercia, with St. Chad as first bishop, and later restricted, although increasing in political importance, by the creation of Hereford, Worcester, and Dorchester. After the Conquest the see was removed to Chester, and later to Coventry, but Lichfield's three-spired cathedral was rebuilt by the Norman bishop Roger de Clinton, and re-dedicated to St. Chad. The last Catholic bishop was Ralph Bayne (d. 1550).

Lidwina (LIJIVINE, LIDWID), SAINT, virgin (1380-1433), b. Schiedam, Holland; d. there. From her early youth she showed remarkable devotion to the Blessed Virgin. When 15 years of age, she broke a rib while skating, the wound causing gangrene to set in and to spread over her whole body. Her fortitude and patience in the excruciating suffering which lasted for 38 years was rewarded by an extraordinary gift of prayer, and many miracles were wrought at her bedside. Her grave became a popular place of pilgrimage. Patroness of skaters. Represented, receiving a branch of roses and a flowering rod from an angel. Equinoplit canonization, 1890. Relics at Schiedam. Feast, 14 April.—C.E.; Butler.

Liechtenstein, monarchy of Europe, between Switzerland and Austria; area, 65 sq. m.; pop. (1912), 10,716. The principality was created, 1719, and has been part of the Holy Roman Empire and the Rhine and German Confederations; it is now independent. The inhabitants are almost all Catholics and belong to the Diocese of Chur (see Switzerland).

Ligé (Ger., LÜTICH; ancient VICUS LEUGICUS), city, Belgium, and former principality of the Holy Roman Empire. The first bishop, St. Servais, installed c. 345, was succeeded by many saints, Domitian and Monulphus (6th century), Theobald, Pope Hugh of St. Char in 1252 established a feast of Immaculate Conception, 1580, and authorized the observance of All Souls' Day. Notger (972-1008) secured for his see, the title of which was changed from Tongres to Lüge, the feudal authority of a countship and it became a principality of the Holy Roman Empire. During eight centuries until the French Revolution, the prince-bishops maintained temporal jurisdiction over the practically independent Prince-Bishopric of Liége which comprised a considerable territory, including Liége and its district, the counties of Loz and Hoorn, the Marquisate of Fanchimont, and the Duchy of Bouillon. In the 11th century this principality became famous as a center of learning, but for five centuries its history is a continual struggle involving the bishops, the nobles, and the citizens. Liége gave to the Church four popes, Stephen IX, Nicholas II, Urban IV, and Gregory X. The city was active in devotional practises. Notger authorized the observance of All Souls' Day. Hugh of St. Char in 1252 established a feast of obligation in honor of the Blessed Sacrament and John of Troyes, later Pope Urban IV, extended the feast of Corpus Christi to the whole Church. During the Revolution, the principality was united to France, in 1815 it became part of the Netherlands, and finally, in 1830, a province of Belgium. The Church of St. Paul, now the cathedral, was built by Notger (10th century). The present diocese, re-established in 1802, of which Liege is the seat, has a Catholic population of 1,215,000; 655 parishes; about 700 churches and chapels, including 493 religious houses; 1500 secular priests; 200 regular priests; 5000 sisters; 22 colleges and normal schools.

Life, the perfection in virtue of which an agent is capable of immanent action. Bodies as natural units are found to be possessors of a perfection of power; organic or living bodies have an organized structure of heterogeneous parts; inorganic bodies are homogeneous in structure. Organic bodies through the action of the physical and chemical forces inherent in them produce effects which always pass from the agent to some object distinct from it; these activities are called transient. The organized bodies, however, besides exercising transient activities, are endowed with other activities never found in the inorganic, e.g., nutrition, growth, reproduction; some organized bodies are also capable of consciousness and the various local motions arising therefrom; living man is conscious of forming judgments, of reasoning, and of striving for the attainment of non-sensible good. All of these activities are living, vital, and in the corporeal universe are found to be the exclusive properties of bodies which we call living. The definition of life, then, must be found in some quality common to all of these functions and to these alone. Analysis shows that every one of them results in a term which remains, and must of its nature remain, as a perfection of the natural unitary whole producing it. Hence the name immanent activity, also called self-movement. It involves three essential elements: the unit of activity must be a natural unitary whole, not merely an artificial unit (see Nature); the efficient cause immediately elicits the activity must be a power within this unit; the immediate term of the activity must remain as a perfection of the unit. Thus an organism in nutrition by its own active processes produces as a term the anabolism within the cells comprising the organism.—C.E.: Windle, What Is Life?, Lond., 1908; Foster, History of Physiology, Camb., 1901; Maher, Psychology, N. Y., 1909.

Life, The, Our Lord's own way of naming Himself before raising Lazarus from death (John, 11). (Ed.)

Ligamen (Lat., ligare, to bind), signifies an existing marriage bond, and is a diriment impediment to another marriage. It is often known as the impediment of previous marriage. It endures until the death of the wife or husband has been legally attested or is morally certain. But in the case of a valid marriage dissolved by the Church under the Pauline Privilege (q.v.) or of a non-consummated Christian marriage dissolved by the pope (see DISSOLUTION), the previous marriage, although it was valid, no longer exists, and consequently is no longer an impediment.—C.E. (J. F. S.)

Light of the World, Parable of (John, 3), Gospel for Monday of Octave of Pentecost. In the nightly visit of Nicodemus Christ explained the mystery of redemption. Means to it is faith in Jesus as the Christ. The unbeliever is already judged (v.18) because he remains in darkness by his own free will (v.19). Moral corruption prevents him from coming to the light (Jesus), lest his rottenness become exposed. Rather than face this he would deny revelation. Light is the symbol of joy (luminous thoughts give us thrills), of life (light vivifies living creatures), of happiness (days of light are days of happiness). Jesus is the giver of light; in redemption He brings to the believer truth, blessing, and peace. The evangelist called the Word Light. "In him (the Word) was life and the life was the light of men," and "The light shineth in darkness and darkness did not comprehend it" (refused to be enlightened). Christ himself repeatedly announced: "I am the Light of the world" (John, 8:12). As a natural unitary whole we must believe in Christ, to be possessed of the light of life. But this light must likewise be our moral guide, and reveal the otherwise unfathomable mystery of unbelief.—Foneck, tr. Leahy, Parables of the Gospel, N. Y., 1915. (U. F. M.)

Lights are used in Christian ceremonial not only from necessity but also to signify joy, splendor, etc., and as symbols of Christ, Light of the World.—C.E.

Lights, Feast of. See Dedication, Feast of.

Lillooet Indians ("wild onion"), an important tribe of Salishan linguistic stock in southern British Columbia, now settled upon reservations attached to Williams Lake and Fraser River agencies. The beginning of Christianity and civilization among them dates from 1837, when Fathers Norbert Blanchet and Modeste Demers came among them. At later periods Fathers Nobili and Granddidier labored in this field. The entire tribe is now officially reported as Catholic. Twelve villages have churches, while a number of children are being educated at St. Mary's Mission under the Oblate Fathers and the Sisters of St. Anne.—C.E.

Lily, as a symbol of chastity because of its spotless whiteness, found in representations of the Annunciation, to indicate the purity of Mary; of St. Joseph, whose staff (according to an ancient legend) bloomed into lilies; of Catherine of Siena, and of other saints notable for purity. (J. F. S.)

Lily of the Mohawk. See Tekakwitha, Catherine.
Lima, capital of Peru, founded, 1535, by Pizarro, who laid the first stone of the cathedral, now a minor basilica. Lima was made the seat of a diocese in 1543 and was raised to metropolitan rank in 1545, the Dominican Loaysa being the first bishop and archbishop. The University of San Marcos, the first in America, was founded, 1551. The Jesuits arrived at Lima in 1567, founded schools and colleges, and introduced the printing press, from which a catechism, the first book printed in the New World, was issued. The church of Santo Domingo, built by Pizarro, contains a relic of the True Cross, and in the Convent of Santa Rosa is preserved the body of St. Rose, Lima's patron saint. A great Catholic ceremony at which the President of Peru presided. Two precious crosses, one formerly belonging to St. Rose and the other brought from Spain by Pizarro, were displayed. The archdiocese unveiled on the top of St. Cristobal in a truly magnificent ecclesiastical suit in the Church of England, for two centuries the bishops were English or of English descent. The cathedral and churches were taken by the Protestants at the Reformation. The first known bishop was Remigius of Fécamp, 1075, who built the cathedral, rebuilt under St. Hugh (1186) and Robert Grosseteste. In 1356 occurred the "Pilgrimage of Grace," an armed protest against religious changes. The last Catholic bishop, as also the last in England, was Thomas Watson (d. 1584).

Lincoln, ancient diocese, England, founded 678, with St. Theodore as first bishop, by transference from Sidnaecaster (now Stow), which was united to Leicester in the 10th century. The first Norman bishop was Remigius of Fécamp, 1075, who built the cathedral, rebuilt under St. Hugh (1186) and Robert Grosseteste. In 1536 occurred the "Pilgrimage of Grace," an armed protest against religious changes. The last Catholic bishop, as also the last in England, was Thomas Watson (d. 1584).

Lindisfarne, ancient diocese, England, founded, 635, with St. Aidan as first bishop, the episcopal succession of 16 bishops, including St. Cuthbert and ending with Eardulf, being continued by Durham. See Lindisfarne Gospels, a copy of the Four Gospels in Latin with an Interlinear Anglo-Saxon translation or gloss, written c. 700, in round characters by Faðfrid, Bp. of Lindisfarne (698-721), ornamented with exquisite tracery and illumination by Ethelwold (724-740), and enclosed in a jewel-studded metal cover wrought by Bilfrid, the anchorite. Over the Latin words, the priest Aldred wrote the Saxon, c. 950. One of the most beautiful books in the world, it is preserved in the British Museum. Many Lindisfarne words, although not often in the same order or spelling, are found in our versions, e.g., my yoke is sweet and my burden is light (Mt 11).—C.E., IX, 269. (J. T. S.)

Linorest, Benedictine Abbey, Fife, Scotland, founded c. 1191, by David Earl of Huntingdon and inhabited by Tironensian Benedictines. It was sacked by the Protestant mob, 1543, 1559, and in 1600, was created a temporal lordship.—C.E.

Lingard, John (1771-1851), historian, b. Winchester, England; d. Hornby. Entering Douai in 1782, he returned to England during the French Revolution and was ordained at York, 1795, after his appointment as vice-president and professor at Crook Hall seminary (transferred to the Irish, 1787). He was later the editor of the Irish Quarterly Review, 1826-44, and was a delegate to the Council of 1829. He was a controversial tract writer, devoting many years to research, and composed his eight-volume "History of England to the Accession of William and Mary" (1819-30; eighth ed., 11 vols.; New York, 1913, supplementary vol. by H. Bello). Lingard successfully negotiated the reopening of the English College, Rome, and as the trusted adviser of the episcopal played a very important part in the 19th-century revival of Catholicity in England. The historical work of the Lingard Society of London honors his memory.—C.E.; Hughes, John Lingard, Carthach, the Younger. Two of its distinguished scholars are the famous St. Cathaldus and Bishop Hughes, 1907; Ryan, in Church Historians, ed. Guilday, N.Y., 1926.

Linctum. See Veil.

Linum, Saint, Pope (64 or 67—76 or 79), d. Rome. It is generally considered that he was the successor of St. Peter and ruled for 12 years. According to Irenæus he is the Linus mentioned by St. Paul (2 Tim., 4). His name is mentioned in the prayer "Communicantes" in the Canon of the Mass. Feast, R. Cal., 23 Sept.—C.E.; Butler.

Lion, a symbol of Our Saviour, "the Lion of the fold of Juda" (Apoc., 5); also of St. Mark (see Evangelists, Symbols of the), St. Jerome, and St. Blaise. Being emblematic of solitude, it is sometimes shown in pictures of hermit saints, (J. P. S.)

Lipa, Diocese of, Philippine Islands; comprises the civil provinces of Batangas, Laguna, Tayabas, Marinduque, and Mindoro; area, 12,208 sq. m.; established 1910; suffragan of Manila. Bishops: Joseph Petrelli (1910-15); Alfredo Verzosa (1917). Churches, 98; priests, secular, 75; priests, regular, 21; seminaries, 11; colleges for girls, 9; schools, 81; pupils, 1795; Catholics, 900,000.

Lippi, Fra Filippo (1406-69), painter, b. Florence; d. Spoleto. Educated as an orphan in the Carmelite convent near Florence, he joined the order at 16. His later life showed his lack of vocation and, 1468, Pius II released him from his vows. He was one of the first to humanize religious art. One of his earliest paintings was the "Madonna" of the Uffizi, painted c. 1456, for Cosimo de' Medici. The "Coronation of the Virgin," into which he introduced his own portrait, 1441, is now in the Florence Academy. Two of his first works are "The Vision of St. Bernard" (National Gallery, London) and "The Death of St. Stephen" in the cathedral of Prato. The "Annunciation" in the National Gallery shows the influence of Fra Angelico. His son, Filippino (1458-1575), extraordinary gifted, was taught by Botticelli. His masterpiece is "The Vision of St. Bernard" (Badia, Florence.—C.E.

Lirippium. See Hood.

Lisbon, Irish College of, Jesuit college, founded by Royal Charter, 1593. The celebrated Stephen White, S.J., was one of its earliest pupils. In 1769 it was closed and confiscated by Pombal, but Dr. Michael Brady restored it 1778. It was closed during the civil war in Portugal in the 19th century.—C.E., VIII, 159.

Lismore, Diocese of, Australia, comprises part of the Eastern Coast District of New South Wales; established as the Diocese of Grafton, 1887, and the name changed later; area, 11,627 sq. m.; suffragan of Sydney. Jeremiah Doyle (1887-1909) was the first bishop, succeeded by John Carroll (1910). Churches, 74; priests, secular, 43; religious women, 237; primary schools, 36; other schools, 31; institutions, 2; Catholics, 30,128.

Lismore, School of, the most celebrated school in the South of Ireland, founded, 635, by St. Carthach, the Younger. Two of its distinguished scholars are the famous St. Cathaldus of Tarentum and St. Cuanna. There are two memorials of Lismore, the crosier, and "Book of Lismore."—C.E.

Liszt, lst, Franz (Ferencz; 1811-86), pianistic virtuoso and composer, b. Raiding, Hungary; d. Bayreuth, Germany. After his first performance in public at Oedenburg when nine years of age, his musical education was continued under Czerny and Salieri, and he became a conspicuous figure in Vienna and Paris. Brilliant concert tours in Switzerland and England were followed by a period of unfortunate associations with Lamartine, Victor Hugo, Heine, and George Sand at Paris, when he became intimate, 1834-44, with the Countess d'Agoult (Daniel Stern). Of three children born to them, Cosima married Richard Wagner. More beneficial to his art was the friendship then begun with Meyerbeer and Chopin. Entering upon a pianistic career comparable to that of Paganini with the violin, he raised pianoforte technique to unparalleled heights. A creative period began with his retirement to Weimar, 1849, where he assumed the directorship of musical affairs, introducing Wagner's "Tannhäuser" and "Lohengrin" and training his many pianoforte pupils. In 1858, repenting of his early laxity, he became a Franciscan tertiary and in 1865 received minor orders. As "abbe" he devoted himself

Litany, originally a supplicatory prayer, especially when liturgical or eucharistic; later, a liturgical prayer in which the clergy lead and the laity respond, the same form of response being repeated in a number of succeeding clauses, and usually being of a penitential character. A litany is a separate service in itself and as such is often said in processions. It is also used as a portion of the services on certain days. Litanyes are to be used for public devotions and at public services only when approved by the pontiff for this purpose. Those not so approved may be used for private devotions only. Only five litanies are approved for public devotions: of Loreto; the Holy Name; the Saints; the Sacred Heart of Jesus; and St. Joseph.—C.E. (P. W. N.)

—Litany of Loreto, perhaps the most popular prayer in honor of the Virgin Mary known to Catholic piety. It is most frequently used in shorter forms of public devotion, such as Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, a visit to the church during the day, or on occasion of special devotions to the Mother of God. It was first recited by the clergy and people of Loreto, a small place in Italy to which, according to tradition, the angels transported the humble cottage of the Virgin Mary. Its first form was probably put into print by St. Peter Canisius, about 1557. Later this form was abrogated by decree of St. Pius V. Another litany, composed for the most part of scriptural names as applied to the Blessed Virgin, supplanted it. But the appeal of the latter was not great and soon the old form was again in vogue. Its form has been little altered since. Additions have been made to it from time to time. The most notable being of the most recent in point of time; viz.: “Queen of Peace, pray for us!” added by Pope Benedict XV.—C.E. (P. W. N.)

—Litany of St. Joseph, the latest litany to be added to the approved list for public devotion. It is a prayer-hymn of prayer in honor of the holy foster father of Jesus Christ and was sanctioned in March, 1909, by Pius X, who was tenderly devoted to St. Joseph whose name he bore from Baptism. It follows closely the form of the Litany of Loreto, and is one of the most charming and devotional of the litanies.—P. W. N.)

—Litany of the Holy Name of Jesus, also known as the Litany of the Holy Name. This litany is quite old and quite common. It came into being at the time of the great preachers of the glory and inspiration and had learned by Apostolic experience to believe and understand more thoroughly. Their successors, the Fathers and Doctors of the Church, expounded what they found in the Scriptures, and added arguments to show its reasonableness. They have left us, in noble examples of oratory and poetry, sublime passages on the doctrinal and moral teaching of Our Lord. In every nation where the Church was free at the time the language was assuming its perfection, the literature on Catholic subjects and the general literature by Catholics are part of the classics. When the classics of the English language were produced, the Church was in subjection in that country. Catholics were deprived of the means of cultivating learning, driven out of the universities and ostracized from the social circles in which literature was a vocation and a refinement. They could not therefore contribute their share to English classical literature. There is, it is true, a Catholic spirit in much of our literature, as Shuster has pointed out. Still, as Card. Newman emphasizes in his essay on this subject, though the classical period of the language has passed, this is a time when many "write so well that there is little to choose between them. What they lack is that individuality, that earnestness, most personal yet most unconscious of self, which is the greatest charm of an author." Thanks chiefly to his example and influence, we have today an abundant Catholic literature which lacks neither individuality nor earnestness. Proof of this is found in the books recommended for further information on the subjects treated in this Dictionary and in the valuable lists of books in its closing pages.—Newman, Idea of a University, N. Y., 1927; Shuster, The Catholic Spirit in English Literature, N. Y., 1922; Leo, Religion and the Study of Literature, N. Y., 1923.

(End.)

Literature, Catholic Latin, term applied to those writings of the Christian era which are composed in Latin, are peculiar to the Church in the West, and whose contents are Christian, as opposed to pagan, in spirit. This literature falls into two periods. (1) From the 1st-5th century, when it appears intensely practical in nature, oratorical and moral in tone, and consists mainly of apologies, chronicles, translations, and catalogues of cemeteries, bishops, and martyrs. Writers of this period are: Novatian, Tertullian, Minucius Felix, Anthonius, Laetantius, Victorinus of Pettau, Cyprian, Hilary of Poitiers, Lucifer of Cagliari, Phebadius of Agen, Ambrose, Augustine, Jerome, Juvenecus, Firmicus Maternus, Prudentius, Zeno of Verona, Optatus of Mileve, Eusebius of Vercelli, St. Pelagius Severus, Rufinus, Cassian, Vincent of Lérins, Hilary of Arles, Gennadius, Peter Chrysologus, Pope Leo I, and St. Patrick. (2) From the 6th-17th century, when the literature manifests itself in drama and poetry. The drama, an outgrowth of Church liturgy, included such writers as Musato, De Loches, Dati, Poggio, Beccadelli, Bruni, Filelfo, Wimpeling, Holonius, Jacob Locher, Johann von Kitzcher, Levin Brecht, Rencingh, Cornelius Croesus, Andreas Faehrmans, Haffkineius, Laurenmannus, and Hannardus Gamerius. Among the poets of this period may be mentioned: Vida, Johannes Dantiscus, Nicolaus Copernicus, John Salom, Hoschius, Hieronymus Petrucci, Sarbiewski, Fanian Strada, Tarquinius Galuzzi, Robert Bellarmine, Jacob Masen, Adam Wicl, Nicola Avancini, John Bisel, and Simon Rotembucher. These writers may be classified as Jean Pierre, the poet of the neo-Latin epic included: Venantius Fortunatus, St. Aldehelm, Venerable Bede, St. Columbanus, St. Boniface, Alcuin, Theodulf the Goth, Walafrid Strabo, the five Notkers, the five Evrekaards, Hroswitha, Floboard, Marbod, Hildebert of Tours, John of Salisbury, Dante, Petrarch, Mafto Vegio, Thomas More, Sadolet, and Balbo.—C.E., IX, 23.

Lithuania, republic, on the southeastern shore of the Baltic Sea, north of Poland. The boundaries are not yet determined; estimated area, 22,500 sq. m. or more; estimated pop. (1927), 2,255,000. In the 13th century a Diocese of Lithuania, dependent directly on Rome, was created at the request of the ruler, Prince Mendog; he and his family had embraced Christianity, but reverted to paganism before missionary work had made much progress. Early in the 14th century Franciscan and Dominican monasteries were founded at Vilna but were soon suppressed. Later in the same century the Grand Duke Jagello of Lithuania was baptized and married the Catholic Queen Hedwig of Poland. This association of the two countries brought about the spread of Catholicism in Lithuania, mainly from Poland. Efforts were made also to unite the Orthodox Church of the region with Rome, retaining the Slavic liturgy; this was accomplished, by the Union of Brest in 1595-96, in the formal union of the Ruthenian Church with Rome. By that time Lithuania and Poland had become constitutionally one kingdom. In the partitions of Poland, 1772-95, Lithuania was divided between Russia and Prussia, and her churches came more and more under the authority of the governments of those countries. In the 19th century many priests and religious of the Latin Rite and of the Ruthenian Uniat Church were expelled from this region. Since the establishment of Lithuania as a separate republic (1922) the Church there has been reorganized (1926) and includes the Archdiocese of Kaunas (Catholics, 1,275,000), the Dioceses of Kaisodersy, Panevezys, Telsiai, and Vilaviskis, and the Prelature mutius of Klaipoda.—C.E.

Little Brothers of Mary (Maite School Brothers), a religious Catholic institution for the education of youth, founded, 1817, at Laval, France, by the Venerable Benedict Marcellin Champagnat, a seminarian associated with the Marist Fathers (Society of Mary). The constitution drawn up by the founder, was approved by the Holy See, 1863, and again in 1903 and 1922. In 24 provinces and 3 districts of world-wide distribution there are 8,662 members and novices, and 575 schools. The superior-general resides at St. Genis Laval, Rhône, France.—C.E., IX, 749.

Little Chapter (Lat., capitulum, dim. of caput, head), in the Divine Office a brief lesson from Scripture recited at the Canonical Hours (except Matins). The epistle of the Mass of the day frequently constitutes in ferial offices the Little Chapter. As a rule, at Prime the Little Chapter is Tim., 1, 17, or Zach., 8, 9; at Complin, Jer., 14, 9. (J. G. K.)

Little Company of Mary, a religious order of sisters founded by Mother Mary Potter in Nottingham, England, 1877, for the gratuitous nursing of the sick. In 1927, there are 8,562 members and novices, and 575 schools, including hospitals, convalescent homes, a sanitorium, a refuge for delinquent girls, and a poor house in Italy, in England, Ireland, Scotland, Malta, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, the United States and South America. The mother-house is in Rome; religious total about 800.—C.E.; XIV, 29.

Little Daughters of Saint Joseph, a religious institute founded in Montreal, 1857, by the Belgian, Fr. Antoine Mercier, to aid the clergy both by the ministry of prayer and certain temporal services, such as the manufacture of liturgical vestments, altar-linens, etc. Poor missionaries and semi­nnarians are especially aided by the community. They have two houses in Montreal, where the mother-house is located, and carry on their work in several seminaries. Religious total 150.—C.E., VIII, 517.
Little Ease, dungeon in the Tower of London, built in the thickness of the wall, in which the prisoner could neither sit, stand, nor lie, but was compelled to serve his sentence in a crouching position. Many English martyrs were confined here, including Bl. Edmund Campion.

Little Flower, See Teresa of Lisieux, Saint.

Little Flowers of St. Francis (Fioretti), the name given to a classic collection of popular legends about the life of St. Francis of Assisi and his early companions. Probably the translation of a Latin original, "Fioretti," it cannot be traced to one author, being rather an embodiment of traditions. The second half has been attributed to Fra UgoUino Brunforte, provincial of the Friars Minor (d. 1348). The four appendices were added by later compilers. The earliest known MS., preserved at Berlin, is dated 1390; first printed at Venice, 1476, it enjoyed a wide circulation in Italy, the vernacular version being reckoned among the masterpieces of Italian literature. There are several well-known English versions.—C.E., VI, 78.

Little Office of B. V. M., a form of prayer in honor of the Blessed Virgin, in structure resembling the Divine Office and consisting of the same elements, but in a shortened form. In origin it is a monastic practise, generally attributed to St. Peter Damian (11th century). In the 12th century it became a supplement of the Roman Breviary and was frequently recited. It was modified by Pius V in the 16th century and, instead of a supplementary office, became the office of the day for certain Saturdays, for those bound to the recitation of the Roman Breviary. The Little Office, as distinct from the Office of the Blessed Virgin for Saturdays, is recited in choir by many religious communities of women, and as a private devotional practise, its use is widespread.—C.E.; Taunton, The Little Office of Our Lady, Lond., 1903. (J. G. K.)

Little Rock, Diocese of, Arkansas, embraces the State of Arkansas; area, 53,945 sq. m., suffragan of New Orleans. Bishops: Andrew Byrne (1844-62); Edward Fitzgerald (preconized 1866, cons. 1867, d. 1907); John B. Morris (1906). Churches, 110; priests, secular, 60; priests, regular, 31; religious women, 605; colleges, 2; seminaries, 2; academies, 7; parochial schools, 47; pupils in parochial schools, 4574; institutions, 11; Catholics, 26,591.

Little Sisters of the Assumption, a congregation founded in Paris, 1865, by Rev. Etienne Pernet, A.A., with the cooperation of Antoinette Fage for the sanctification of the poorer classes. Their work consists of gratuitously nursing the sick poor in their homes. The Rule of St. Augustine is followed. The congregation has 68 houses in France, Italy, England, Ireland, Spain, Belgium, the United States, and South America. The mother-house is in Paris; the total number of religious is 1100.—C.E., II, 5.

Little Sisters of the Holy Family, religious congregation founded at Memramcook, N. B., 1874, for the temporal care of seminaries, colleges, and episcopal residences. The congregation has 50 missions in Canada, the United States, and Italy. The mother-house is at Sherbrooke, P. Q.; religious total 800.—C.E., VII, 408.

Little Sisters of the Poor, a congregation founded at St. Servan, France, 1840, by the Abbé Augustin Le Pailleur, and Jeanne Jugan, Marie Jamet, and Virginie Trédaniel. The purpose of the congregation is the spiritual and temporal care of the aged poor of both sexes. These people live in homes, entirely dependent on charity, the nuns providing for all their needs. The constitutions are based on the Rule of St. Augustine, and the sisters take a vow of hospitality. The congregation has 309 homes in France, Italy, Sicily, Spain, Belgium, Portugal, Turkey, Hungary, Switzerland, England, Scotland, Ireland, Jersey, Gibraltar, Malta, Canada, the United States, India, Ceylon, Burma, China, New Zealand, Australia, Argentina, Chile, and Colombia. The mother-house is at La Tour St.-Joseph in St.-Pern, Ille-et-Vilaine, France; the total number of religious is 5000.—C.E.

Littré, Paul Maximilien Emile (1801-81), lexicographer and philosopher; b. Paris; d. there. His medical studies having been interrupted by his father's death, he embraced a literary career. After 1840 he became a disciple of Comte and wrote several works on Positivist philosophy. He was elected to the Academy, 1871. Littré is best known for his immense French dictionary. Always opposed to the bitter attacks on the Church, towards the end of his life he was baptized a Catholic.—C.E.

Liturgical Apostolate. This term may designate the whole movement which, at the present time, brings the Christians back to the liturgy, viz., to the participation in the official common worship of the Church, or it may mean the Apostolate which the Church practises on souls through the means of her liturgy. It has also become a proper name, e.g., in Austria where one hears of the Volks-lituriges Apostolat conducted from Klosterneburg near Vienna by the Augustinian Fr. Pius Parsch. The word is, however, principally connected with the part taken in the liturgical movement by the Liturgical books, all those books that contain a scientific arrangement of the text, the formulas, and directions of the external divine worship or services of any church. These books contain all the prayers and rubrics that a priest must say and observe when administering any of the Sacraments. To this category belong also the liturgical regulations with regard to place (church, furnishings), time (ecclesiastical year, seasons), things (vestments, candles, etc.). The Liturgical Books are used as distinct texts in the theological curriculum. A Liturgy gives expression in an approved way to the worship, in nonessentials, to circumstances of time, to express the fundamental relations that exist elsewhere, and peoples. The Liturgy has not been the same at all of the essential elements, to accommodate her publicaments (and Sacramentals), the recitation of the Rosary.

The origin of Liturgy is to be found in the institution by Christ of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass, and the Sacraments, as well as in His example and precepts concerning the necessity and mode of prayer. While Christ laid down the essentials, He left the development of details to His Church, who carries out this task under the guidance of the Sacramentals, the recitation of the Divine Office, and all other functions such as processions and benedictions. It excludes devotions of a private nature such as the recitation of the Rosary.

The prayer of the Liturgy is admirably adapted to express the fundamental relations that exist between Creator and creature, considering the latter both as an individual and a member of society. Liturgy gives expression in an approved way to the adoration due to God as the Creator and Lord of all, to the thanksgiving due Him for the benefits received. In a more perfect way than is ordinarily possible in private prayers it sends up to God the cry of the human heart for grace and favor, and renders to Him propitiation for sin. In it the interior dispositions of the soul of the Church are beautifully and efficaciously manifested in forms at once approved for their purity of faith and dignified by antiquity. Every act of the Liturgy has its symbolical meaning; there is the spirit of adoration and humility, the spirit of supplication and exultation in the elevation of hands, the spirit of Christian unity in the salutations of the priest to the people, as in Orate Fratres. The vestments used mark out the wearer as the representative of the great High Priest, Christ; their fine texture indicates the solemnity of the occasion; the various colors, white, red, green, violet, and black, signify purity and joy, charity, hope, penance, and mourning respectively. Nothing is vain in the Liturgy, every prayer, action, ceremony, utensil, and vestment is expressive of some interior virtue possessed by the Mystical Body of Christ, to be striven for by the individual members. —C.E. Le Camus, translated by Fr. (now Bp.) Hickey.

Liverpool, Archdiocese of, Eng., comprises Lancashire south of the Ribble, the western part of the county, and the Isle of Man; suffragan sees: Hexham and Newcastle, Lancaster, Leeds, Middlesbrough, and Salford. Bishops: George Brown (1850-90); the late Mgr. Dupanloup, Henry J. Coleridge, S.J., wrote copiously on the life of Our Lord, among other works, "The Life of Christ," by J. N. Sepp of the University of Munich (Ratisbon, 1843). One of the most useful of a number of French Lives which appeared in the following generation was that of Louis Veuilhot, the famous publicist. Another was that written by Mgr. Dupanloup. Henry J. Coleridge, S.J., wrote copiously on the life of Our Lord, among other works, "The Life of Christ," by Mgr. Le Camus, translated by Fr. (now Bp.) Hickey (New York, 1907); "Jesus Christ," by Père Didon,

The tenth of “Life of Jesus Christ” by the late Fr. Maas, S.J. (St. Louis, 1891), is entirely framed out of the words of the Gospels, in such a manner that nothing is omitted and nothing added.”

The principal contribution of this learned scriptural scholar was his methodical explanatory notes, which make the Life a valuable commentary on the Gospels. The “Life of Christ” by the late Fr. Walter Elliott (New York, 1901), is “a contribution to the devotional study of our Redeemer’s teaching and example.” Professedly for devotional use, too, is the excellent work of Fr. Maurice Meschler, S.J., “The Life of Our Lord Jesus Christ in Meditation” (Herder, 1909). Giovanni Papini, a novelist who respects Catholic tradition, but whose training hardly fitted him for his task of writing a history of Our Lord, has succeeded, thanks to his literary skill, in producing on the subject a best-seller. His “Storia di Cristo” (Florence, 1921) has been translated ably, but not with sufficient fidelity, by Dorothy Canfield Fisher under the title “Life of Jesus Christ” (Living Waters, 1926). It is chiefly concerned with the defense of the Catholic position on the Gospels and their teaching.

It is a perpetual expression of the gratitude of the people for the official recognition of the office of the sons of Caath, one of the Levitical guilds (1 Par., 9). Every sabbath fresh loaves of unleavened bread, made each of two-tenths of an ephah (four-fifths of a peck) of the finest flour, set in two piles (Lev., 24) upon an altar-like table placed along the north wall of the holy place. In this institution, admirably suited to an agricultural community, was obviously intended as the defense of the Catholic position on the Gospels; in the course of the work St. John’s Gospel is neglected. While the interpretation of Our Lord’s words is orthodox, it is frequently too subjective. A careful study of Catholic commentators should precede such a composition. The books we have spoken of are for adults; the needs of younger people are provided for by Mother Imogen Ryan’s “Come and See.” (w.s.e.)

Living Stone, a title applied to Our Lord 1 Peter, 2, 4. The phrase means more than an animated stone: it is a stone with spiritual, supernatural life. It was suggested by Isaias, 8, (c. J. D.) and 28, 16. Jesus is the corner-stone of the new Zion; those who reject Him shall perish and those who believe in Him will be firmly established in the spiritual building, which is the Church. The Church is compared to a building, Eph., 2, where Christ is called the “chief corner stone.” (w.s.e.)

Living Waters (1) Spring water as contrasted with well-water, promised by Our Lord to the Samaritan woman at the well of Jacob (John, 4; Is., 12; Jer., 2; Ezeh., 47; Zach., 14). (2) The life of Grace on earth leading to eternal life in heaven, “... but he that shall drink of the water that I will give him, shall not thirst forever” (John, 4). (c. J. D.)

Llandaff, ancient diocese, originating in the monastic foundation of St. Dibildew, and founded, 6th century, with his disciple St. Teilo as first abbot and archbishop. Its beginnings are obscure, and the succession uncertain, for during the period 597-768 there was no communication between the churches of England and Wales. This caused irregularity and ignorance among the Welsh clergy, but a reform was attempted by the establishment of new monasteries. The cathedral of Llandaff, a fine specimen of Early English architecture, begun 1120, was enlarged at close of 12th century, and restored during the 19th century.

Llanthony Priory, a monastery of Augustinian Canons, in the Black Mts. of S. Wales. It originated 1100, with William lord of Belas Knap. It has about two hundred living in a chapel once occupied by St. David, for whom Hugh de Lacy founded a monastery, 1107.

The buildings passed into private hands at the confiscation, 1539, and became the property of Walter Savage Landor, 1807.—C.E.

Loaves, a title applied to Our Lord’s words is orthodox, it is frequently too subjective. A careful study of Catholic commentators should precede such a composition. The books we have spoken of are for adults; the needs of younger people are provided for by Mother Imogen Ryan’s “Come and See.” (w.s.e.)

Loaves and fishes, Gospel narrative of the miraculous multiplication of five loaves of bread and two fishes to feed the five thousand who had been attracted by the words and miracles of Christ to follow Him into the desert, or mountain as St. John styles it (Matt., 14, Mark, 6, John, 6). In John the miracle is followed by the discourse of Christ on the Sacrament of the Eucharist which He was to establish. (c. l. s.)

Loaves of Proposition (Lat., panes propositionis). The expression might perhaps be better rendered “hallowed bread,” or “bread of the presence” (1 Kings, 21), “continual bread” (Num., 4: Hebrew version). It refers to twelve loaves of unleavened bread, made each of two-tenths of an ephah (four-fifths of a peck) of the finest flour, set in two piles (Lev., 24) upon an altar-like table placed along the north wall of the holy place. (3 Kings, 7). Early in post-exilic times their preparation was the office of the sons of Caath, one of the Levitical guilds (1 Par., 9). Every Sabbath fresh loaves were brought in (Lev., 24), half of the stale loaves being given to the outgoing, and the other half to the incoming order of priests, who ate them within the sacred precincts (according to the Talmud). This institution, admirably suited to an agricultural community, was obviously intended as a perpetual expression of the gratitude of the people to God for the produce of the earth.—C.E.

Lochleven, a lake, Kinross-shire, Scotland. St. Serf’s island, situated here, was the seat of a religious community for 700 years. Given to the Cúhces, c. 840, it was granted by David I, 1140, to the Canons Regular of St. Andrews; the surviving Cúhces were subject to the Canons. At the Dissolution the confiscated property passed to the Earl of Morton.—C.E.

Lockhart, William (1820-92), the first convert in the Tractarian Movement, b. Warrington, England; d. London. He became a Rosminian in 1843, and engaged in missionary work. He founded the periodical "Catholic Opinion," and for many years contributed to "The Lamp"; in addition he completed MacWalter's biography of Rosmini.—C.E.

Locust, an insect resembling a large grasshopper, that infests grain and wheat in swarms, ravaging the crops. They are one of the worst scourges in the East; they were the eighth plagues God sent upon the Egyptians because Pharaoh would not let the Israelites go to sacrifice to the Lord (Ex., 10).

Locutorium (Lat., a place for conversation, from loqui, to speak), a parlor or reception room in a monastery or convent. (g. a. d.)

Logia Jesu, the sacred or Divine words or discourses of Christ in the Gospel. Papias speaks of the logia of the Lord which were presented in good order by St. Matthew, whereas St. Mark does not give them so completely. Some have read in the expression of Papias an original or a source anterior to our First Gospel and made up exclusively of logia or discourses, but it would be difficult to substantiate this claim, from which important conclusions are derived as to the composition of the Gospels. More likely Papias, by the word logia means the Gospel (discourses and facts of Christ's life).

In 1897 some logia or sayings of Our Lord were discovered at Beinna, the ancient Oxyrhynchos, near the Libyan desert, 130 m. S. of Cairo; there were eight in all, 42 lines of 15 to 20 letters each. Some authorities on the suggestion of Batiffol, that these might be an extract deliberately made from an apocryphal Gospel, such as the Gospel to the Hebrews.—C.E.; Harnack, tr. Wilkinson, The Sayings of Jesus, N. Y., 1908.

Logic (Gr., logos, speech, reason), in ordinary language, refers to sound reasoning. Logicians have never agreed as to how logic should be defined, and have doubted as to whether it is a mode of knowing or an instrument of knowledge: a science or an art. Modern works are in three groups; those which attempt to apply mathematical methods to the processes of thought (symbolic logic); those which follow Hegel in making logic a criticism of the understanding practically identical with metaphysics; and those which accept the traditional view of Aristotle and the Scholastics. In accordance with Aristotle, founder of logic, St. Thomas defines logic as the science or the art of exact reasoning: "Logic is the science and art which directs the acts of reason, by which man is able to proceed in the pursuit of truth without error, confusion, or difficulty." Reason includes all mental operations; hence the aim of logic is to direct the acts of the mind so as to secure clearness in definition and arrangement of our mental images, consistency in our judgments, and validity in our inferences. By reason of its directive role, logic differs from psychology, which deals with the mental processes in themselves, and is primarily speculative. In opposition to the Hegelian viewpoint logic cannot be identified with metaphysics, since the latter deals not with the processes of thought in particular, but with the whole universe of being. According to the traditional division formal logic studies mental processes simply to secure clearness and order among their contents; material logic concerns the truth of these contents. In the modern usage the field of material logic is reserved to epistemology, and the term logic is applied only to that portion formerly designated as formal logic.—C.E.; Joyce, Principles of Logic, N. Y., 1910; Turner, Lessons in Logic, 4th ed. (L. C.)

Logos (Gr., word), St. John's name for the Second Person of the Blessed Trinity, See Word.

Loisy, Alfred Fermin (1857-1919), modernist, b. Ambrières, France. He was educated at St. Dizier, the Grand Séminaire of Châlons-sur-Marne, and the Institut Catholique, Paris. After his ordination to the priesthood, 1879, he devoted himself to the study and teaching of apologetics. His numerous publications on the subject showed a tendency to modernism (q.v.), and in 1903 five of his books, which were intended to refute the anti-Catholic Adolf Harnack, were placed on the Index. He was forbidden to continue his instructions on Assyriology in the Sorbonne, 1904, and Pius X issued the decree "Lamentabili," followed by his Encyclical "Pascendi," 1907, condemning the errors to which Loisy subscribed. He was formally excommunicated, 1908. He continued as professor of the history of religions in the College of France, Paris, from 1909. His Autobiography or Confessions, first under the title of "Things Past" and later under "Logos," New York, 1924, contains strange admissions of formal heresy as far back as 1885, formal duplicity in dealing with Church authorities, and of intrigue to capture a bishopric.

Lollards (Middle Dutch, Lollaard, mumbler), the followers of John Wyclif, an heretical body flourishing in England in the 14th and 15th centuries, applied, however, in Flanders to certain heretics before it was used in England. The principal heresies of the Lollards were the denial of the authority of the Church, the repudiation of transubstantiation, and the theory of "Dominium," viz: that the validity of the Sacraments depends upon the worthiness of the minister. These were all enunciated by Wyclif and were spread abroad by his "poor priests," men, who though many of them were not in Orders, went throughout the country preaching and exhorting the people, and appealing for confirmation of their teaching to Wyclif's translation of the N.T. (a family one). Their sincerity and austerity, which cannot be questioned, contrasted in many cases with the growing laxity and secular and regular clergy, gave them a ready hearing and the heresy spread rapidly. Stern means were taken both in Church and State against them, and a number of Lollards were burnt for heresy, though many, having participated in rebellious outbreaks, were put to death for treason. In the 15th century Lollardism became less and less a learned body and soon degenerated into extreme fanaticism. Though the Lollards were the forerunners of the Reformation in England, their influence upon the acceptance of that movement was very slight.—C.E. (P. K.)

Lombard, Peter (c. 1555-1625), Abp. of Armagh, b. Waterford, Ireland; d. Rome. He studied at Louvain and was made archbishop, 1601; as he was unable to go to his see, the diocese was administered by David Rothe. Lombard wrote a treatise on Ireland and for a time presided over the “Consecratio de Auxilis” which contained his views on the Jesuit and Dominican controversy on grace.—C.E.

Lombardic Architecture, or Lombard Romanesque, the art belonging to the S. of North Italy developed in the 9th and 10th centuries. An association of trained builders, the Commacini, named from an island in Lake Como, flourished at this period. The best examples of this style are two churches: Sant’ Ambrogio in Milan, and S. Michele in Pavia. The eave gallery built above the vault of the apos is a distinguishing feature. A fine example is the gallery in the central tower of the Cistercian church at Chiaravalle near Milan. A less pleasing characteristic is the fake facade with its walls raised higher than the roof of the church, which became the prevailing form throughout Italy.

Lombard League, the anti-imperial alliance formed by the cities of Lombardy: Bergamo, Brescia, Mantua, Ferrara, and Verona; Vicenza, Padua, and Treviso belonging to an earlier league, with Pope Alexander III against the Emperor Frederick I. A fortress was built called Alessandria, and a great victory won by the League at Legnano, 1176. In the treaty of Venice, 1177, Frederick recognized Alexander as pope, which was the defeat of his pretensions to rule Italy and to interfere with papal elections. The League was renewed, 1226, against Frederick II; the struggle ended with the death of Frederick and the overthrow of the Hohenstaufens, 1230.

London, (Celt., Llyn-din, Lake-forest), the capital of England, on the Thames River. Little is certainly known of its early history except that it was inhabited by the Celts at the time of the Roman invasion, A.D. 43. It came under Saxon control, c. 579, was made a bishopric, 604, and received its first charter, 1079. (For the history of the ancient Catholic Diocese of London, see London, Ancient Diocese.) After the Reformation the history of the Catholics in London is one of continued oppression. Subsequent to the accession of Elizabeth the sacrifice of the Mass was prohibited, the penal laws against Catholics were enacted, more than 80 priests and laymen suffered martyrdom; the ancient hierarchy ceased with the death of Bp. Bonner, 1569. An archpriest, with jurisdiction over all Eng-Fallon (1910). Churches, 100; priests, secular, 122; priests, regular, 25; religious women, 703; college, 1; seminary, 1; academies, 5; high schools and continuation schools, 10; parochial schools, 65; institutions, 5; Catholics, 70,000.

Longanimity, long-suffering, a virtue referred to hope. It looks beyond the immediate future to the far-off good perceived by faith only, “Saluting the promises from afar.” Thus it disposes to constancy and in bearing the burden of hope deferred.

Longinus, Saint, martyr (1st century), d. Cappadocia. He was the soldier who pierced the side of Christ with his lance, and when the earthquake came he professed the Divinity of Christ. After his conversion, he returned to Cappadocia, where he was put to death by order of Pontius Pilate. The Italian legend, confusing him with Longinus the centurion, states that he brought a relic of the Precious Blood to Mantua, and preached the Gospel there. Represented in arms, standing at the foot of the cross. His relics were preserved in the church of St. Augustine, Rome. Feast, 16 March.

Longstreet, James (1821-1904), soldier and convert, b. Edgefield, S. C.; d. Gainesville, Ga. He was one of the greatest Confederate generals during the Civil War. His “From Manassas to Appomattox” is a valued military narrative. He became a Catholic, 1877, and was later U. S. Minister to Turkey.—C.E.

Look down, O Mother Mary, hymn written by St. Alphonsus (1696-1787), and translated by Rev. E. Vaughan.

Lope de Vega Carpio, Félix (1562-1635), priest, poet, and dramatist, b. Madrid; d. there. Educated at the Jesuit college, Madrid, and the University of Alcalá, he was in the service of the Bp. of Avila, and became secretary to the Duke of Alva. He served in the Spanish navy, taking part in the Armada expedition. After the death of his second wife, he became a priest, 1612, which action, however, did not correct the disorders of his life. His productivity as an author is astounding. He practised almost all forms of composition with success but is most famed as a dramatist, and as such dominated the Golden Age (16th and 17th centuries), writing at least 1500 comedias. Naturally these plays are deficient in style, but they display rich dramatic imagination. As typical of his work may be mentioned the pastoral “Pastores de Belén”; the epics “Corona trágica” (dealing with Mary Stuart) and “Aníñella”; the historical poem “Dragontea,” an attack on Drake; an autobiographical novel “Dorotea”; and the plays “El Castigo sin Venganza,” “La Estrella de Sevilla,” and “Amar sin Saber a Quien.”—C.E.; Rennert, The Life of Lope de Vega, Phila., 1904.

Lord, a title commonly used of God in the O.T., but commonly appropriated to Christ in the N.T. In the O.T. Greek version and those dependent on it, as the Vulgate in this matter, it is used in place of Jahweh (Jehovah), the proper name of God among the Israelites. The way St. Paul and other N.T. writers use the title is one of the proofs that they regarded Christ as God. In Acts, 10, 48, He is referred to as the Lord Jesus Christ.—Prat, tr. Stoddard, The Theology of Saint Paul, N. Y., 1928.

Lord of Glory, in the Epistle of Saint James, 2, 1, we read, “My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ of glory, with respect of persons.” In this passage, glory is regarded as an essential attribute of Christ (John, 17, 5); some commentators think that the genitive of quality “of glory” is connected only with “our Lord,” but more likely it goes with “our Lord Jesus Christ.”—Chaine, L’Epitre de St. Jacques, Paris, 1927.

Lord of Hosts, in Isaias, 9, 9, as in many other passages of the Bible, designates God as supreme over untold armies of spiritual and other agencies, which He can employ to give effect to His purposes. The angels, the stars, as well as armies of men are represented in the Bible as subject to Him. The Septuagint Version sometimes simply translates the expression Lord of Hosts by a word which means the Omnipo­tent. In the text referred to, Isaias says that God, Who is Almighty, will bring about the fulfillment of His prophecy concerning Emmanuel. (w. r. r.)

Lord of Lords, a title of Christ in St. Paul’s first letter to Timothy, 6, 15; also in the Apocalypse, 17, 14; the Lamb will overcome the coalitions of the future as He does those of the present bear the titles “Lord of Lords” and “King of Kings.” The two titles suitable only to God, are again given to Our Lord in Apocalypse, 19, 11.—Allo, L’Apocalypse, Paris, 1921.

(w. r. r.)

Lord of Misrule, one of the chief characters in the celebration of the Feast of Fools, a custom of the later medieval period, which came to be marked with much license and buffoonery, and was eventually suppressed. The Lord of Misrule was a mock precentor of the cathedral choir. Before the first Vespers he was allowed to intone the prose “Letemur gaudiis”; during the second Vespers he was deprived of his precentor’s staff. The Feast of Fools originated in the Feast of the Subdeacons, occurring 1 Jan.; later it developed into a feast of the lower clergy; and still later it was taken up by certain brotherhoods of “fools.” There is little doubt that the license and buffoonery which came to be associated with this, as with other medieval feasts, had their origin in pagan times. The ecclesiastical authorities repeatedly condemned it or endeavored to restrain it within bounds. Eventually it passed out of practise.

(M. P. B.)

Lord’s Day, special name for the first day of the week in the N.T. This day was chosen to honor the day on which Our Lord rose from the dead. On this day the faithful are obliged to hear Mass and rest from all servile works.

(C. J. D.)

Lord’s Prayer or Our Father (Lat., Pater Noster), a prayer taught by Christ (Matt., 6) and therefore the most revered and oft-used formula of the Christian religion, frequent in Liturgy. The strictly correct form is that in use among Catholics, the termination “For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory,” used by Protestants being an interpolation.—C.E.

Lord’s Supper, the Last Supper, in Latin Cena Domini, a name for Holy Thursday; also commonly used by Protestants for the rite they adopted when changing or abolishing the Mass, and now used for Communion Service or Sacrament. (Ed.)

Loretto, Holy House of, so called from the city of Loretto, Italy. The Holy House is now encased by a large imposing basilica. It has been one of the famous shrines of the Blessed Virgin from the 13th century to the present day. The Feast of the Translation of the Holy House of Loreto is celebrated 10 Dec.—C.E., XIII, 454 (N. G.)

Loretto Heights College, Loretto, Colo., founded 1918; conducted by the Sisters of Loretto; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; extension course; summer school; professors, 19; students, 304; degrees conferred, 1929, 21.

Loretto Nuns. See Institute of the Blessed Virgin Mary.

Lorica of St. Patrick. See St. Patrick’s Breastplate.

Lorrain, Claude de (Claude Gellée; 1600-81), painter and etcher, b. Châmega, Lorraine; d. Rome. He lived mainly in Italy and resided in Rome from 1625 till his death. He was a master of classic landscape and noted for his unusual treatment of sunlight and some degree of impressionism. Among his patrons were Urban VIII, Innocent X, Alexander VII, and Clement IX. He left a large number of canvases, among the best-known being “The Embarkation of the Queen of Sheba,” and the “Nuptials of Isaac and Rebecca,” both in the National Gallery in London, and “The Village Dance” in the Louvre. Of his etchings “The Herdsman” is the most admired.—C.E.

for the Gospel, the third Sunday after Pentecost. The coin lost was very small as coins go (15 to 22 cents), but it meant much to the poor woman; hence her care in searching for it and joy at finding it. So, too, sinners, despicable and of no value in the eyes of the Pharisees, mean much to God who out of His great love created and destined them for heaven. This explains the zeal of Jesus, and that of His true disciples, in searching out souls lost in the dark and hidden corners of sin, and His great joy, which the angels and saints share, when He has found and restored them to Him to whom as Creator and Redeemer they rightfully belong.—Fonck, tr. Leahy, The Parables of the Gospel, N. Y., 1915; Ollivier, The Parables of Our Lord, Dublin, 1927. (N. G.)

Lost Sheep, See Good Shepherd.

Lot, son of Aran and nephew of Abraham. He settled in Kikkar the fertile region about the Jordan, residing in Sodom. At the time of the pillage of the latter he was captured and carried away but was soon rescued by Abraham. He was saved by angels when Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed for their immorality; his wife, however, was turned into a pillar of salt for her disobedience. It has been suggested that she may have been overtaken by the salty waters of the Dead Sea or that she became coated with salt released from the soil by the heat of the flame. Later Lot had two sons, Moab and Ammon; the fruits of incest, whose descendants were Israel’s most bitter enemies.—C.E.

Loucheux Indians (Fr., loucheur, squinter), a group of closely related Dene tribes, called also Kutkuti and Tukkutkutchin, found in northwestern Canada and Alaska. East of the Rockies they have a patriarchal system, while in the west they have a matriarchy with clans and totems. The eastern Loucheux are now Catholics and a Jesuit mission has been established for the western branch.—C.E.
Louis IX, Saint, confessor (1215-70), King of France, b. Poissy, France; d. near Tunis, Africa. He was the son of Louis VIII and Blanche of Castile. Proclaimed king when only 11 years of age, he ruled under the guidance of his mother. He reigned for 44 years, a model Christian sovereign and a religious ascetic. He made numerous judicial and legislative reforms, and promoted Christianity in his kingdom by establishing religious foundations, aiding the Mendicant Orders, and propagating the monastic decrees of the Church. The relations of St. Louis with the Holy See and the French clergy have given rise to conflicting interpretations. He was always a devoted son of the Church, but he would not tolerate any encroachment on the part of members of the hierarchy, and repeatedly protested against the abusive exercise of the right of excommunication. Although he refused pecuniary help to the Church, despite the pope's protests, particularly that of Pope Gregory IX in his war against Frederick II of Germany, he promised his support to Innocent IV against the same emperor, and actually saved the Pope from capture. To assist in the Crusade he obtained from the Pope permission to levy heavy taxes on the clergy, and in turn granted to the Pope certain concessions concerning the collation of benefices. He never published the so-called "Pragmatic Sanction," often quoted as a royal decree, limiting the Pope's authority over the French Church. It is a forgery fabricated in the 16th century at the time of the famous "Pragmatic Sanction" of Bourges. St. Louis made two Crusades to the Holy Land: on the last he was taken ill and died. Patron of Versailles, La Rochelle, Blois, Oran, Carthage, New Orleans, La., St. Louis, Mo. Emblems: nails, crown of thorns. Canonized, 1297. Relics at St. Denis, Paris, destroyed by revolutionists, 1793. Feast, 24 Aug.—C.E.; Butler; Perry, St. Louis, the Most Christian King, N. Y., 1901. Louis XIV (1638-1715), King of France, b. St. Germain-en-Laye; d. Versailles. He was the son of Louis XIII and Anne of Austria. Although he succeeded at the age of five, his personal government did not begin until 1661, after his marriage with Maria Theresa of Austria. France was then arbiter of Europe and when Louis assumed power, he determined to be an absolute monarch, disregarding provincial rights and reducing the nobility to mere courtiers. After the Peace of Aix-la-Chapelle, 1685, he was influenced by Mme. Maintenon whom he married, and by Père Le Tellier. He was much occupied with religion, and was continually coming into conflict with the Papacy. Dominated by Gallican ideas and inspired by his view of his divine rights, expounded by him in the "Mémoires," he exercised a dictatorship over the Church, despite the Pope's protests, particularly regarding Church property and appointments to benefices. Feeling the Jansenists were a danger to the state, he aided the Holy See in suppressing them and the Quietists, though he did so in a Gallican spirit. At first he treated the Protestants with justice. Later (1679-83) they were excluded from office and the liberal professions, and at times very cruelly treated by Louvois, his minister. Persuaded that French Protestantism was practically dead, Louis revoked the Edict of Nantes, intending thus to register officially the end of the heresy. Innocent XI praised his zeal, but besought James II to influence Louis to obtain gentler treatment for the remaining Protestants, and most of the French bishops supported the pope's view. The ill-treatment of the Protestants is to be attributed to Louis personally, and arose from his resolution to be supreme arbiter of religious policy in his realm.—C.E.

Louisiana, the 30th state of the United States in size, the 22nd in population, and the 18th to be admitted to the Union (8 Apr., 1812); area, 48,506 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 1,798,509; Catholics (1928), 569,297. When La Salle sailed down the Mississippi to its mouth, 1682, and so completed the earlier discoveries of De Soto, 1541, and Fr. Franciscan, 1682, the 22nd in size, the 18th to be admitted to the Union (8 Apr., 1812); area, 48,506 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 1,798,509; Catholics (1928), 569,297. When La Salle sailed down the Mississippi to its mouth, 1682, and so completed the earlier discoveries of De Soto, 1541, and Fr. Franciscan, 1682, the 22nd in size, the 18th to be admitted to the Union (8 Apr., 1812); area, 48,506 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 1,798,509; Catholics (1928), 569,297. When La Salle sailed down the Mississippi to its mouth, 1682, and so completed the earlier discoveries of De Soto, 1541, and Fr. Franciscan, 1682, the 22nd in size, the 18th to be admitted to the Union (8 Apr., 1812); area, 48,506 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 1,798,509; Catholics (1928), 569,297. When La Salle sailed down the Mississippi to its mouth, 1682, and so completed the earlier discoveries of De Soto, 1541, and Fr. Franciscan, 1682, the 22nd in size, the 18th to be admitted to the Union (8 Apr., 1812); area, 48,506 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 1,798,509; Catholics (1928), 569,297. When La Salle sailed down the Mississippi to its mouth, 1682, and so completed the earlier discoveries of De Soto, 1541, and Fr. Franciscan, 1682, the 22nd in size, the 18th to be admitted to the Union (8 Apr., 1812); area, 48,506 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 1,798,509; Catholics (1928), 569,297.
LOUISIANA

Catholic Church ........................................... 509,910
National Baptist Convention ......................... 146,729
Southern Baptist Convention ......................... 66,289
Methodist Episcopal Church South ................. 38,940
Methodist Episcopal Church ......................... 48,511
Colored Methodist Episcopal Church ............... 13,762
Presbyterian Church (U.S.) ......................... 11,632
African Methodist Episcopal Church .......... 10,260
Presbyterian Church in the U.S. .................. 9,630
All Other Denominations .......................... 37,598
Total Church Membership ......................... 863,067

—C.E.; Shea.

Louis Marie Grignon de Montfort, Blessed, confessor (1673-1710), b. Montfort, France; d. St. Laurent-sur-Sieure. He studied at Rouen and Paris, and was ordained, 1700. He became a celebrated missionary in France, his labors being almost miraculously fruitful, despite intense Jansenist opposition. He founded the Sisters of Wisdom and the Company of Mary, and was an enthusiastic promoter of devotion to Our Lady. His "Treatise on the True Devotion to the Blessed Virgin Mary" was translated by Father Faber, N. Y., 1909. Beatified, 1888. Feast, 28 April.—C.E.

Louisville, Diocese of, Kentucky, comprises that part of Kentucky lying west of Carroll, Owen, Franklin, Garrard, Rock Castle, Laurel and Whitley counties; area, 22,714 sq. m.; established at Bardstown, 1808; transferred to Louisville, 1841; suffragan of Cincinnati. Bishops: Benedict J. Flaget (1810-32); John B. David (1832-33); Benedict J. Flaget (1833-50); Martin J. Spalding (1850-64); Peter J. Lavialle (1865-67); William G. McCloskey (1868-1903); Denis O’Donoghue (1910-24); John A. Floersch (1924), Churches, 162; priests, secular, 119; priests, regular, 112; religious women, 3,556; colleges, 5; academies and high schools, 26; parochial schools, 97; pupils in parochial schools, 18,880; institutions, 11; Catholics, 117,437.

Lourdes, Simeon (1834-90), apostle of Uganda, b. France; d. Uganda, Africa. In 1874 he was admitted to the novitiate of the White Fathers at Algiers. With a band of 10, he was sent in 1878 to found a mission at Uganda. Received by King Mutesa, in spite of the opposition of Arabs and Protestants, he opened the mission in 1879. During the ascendency of the Arab party at court, the missionaries were obliged to withdraw to Bokumbi, but were invited back to Uganda in 1885. Years of persecution, civil war, and foreign invasion followed, but the Catholic missions were finally restored. At his death, there were 12,000 Catholics and a large church at Ruhaga.—Forbes, Planting the Faith in Darkest Africa; the Life Story of Father Simeon Lourdel, Lond., 1927.

Lourdes, city, department of Hautes-Pyrénées, France. The greater part of the new town has grown up around the shrine which has become the most famous in France. In 1858 a young peasant girl saw many times an apparition of the Blessed Virgin in the grotto of Massabielle. "I am the Immaculate Conception" were the words of the vision. A miraculous spring suddenly came into existence. After examination on the part of the ecclesiastical authorities the devotion to Our Lady under the title of Notre Dame de Lourdes was authorized and a feast instituted on 11 Feb., the date of the first vision. The Church of Notre Dame was raised to the rank of minor basilica in 1876. The Church of the Rosary was built later to accommodate the crowds of pilgrims. Numerous and well-attested cures have been made by bathing in the water or by merely visiting the shrine and especially by the Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament. The water of the spring has been found by analysis to contain no curative properties. The chief pilgrimage, called the national, is in August. About 600,000 pilgrims annually visit the shrine from all parts of the world.—C.E.; Lasserre tr. Sisk, Our Lady of Lourdes, Lond.; Huysmans, tr. Mitchell, The Crowds of Lourdes, N. Y., 1925.

Louvain, Irish College of, founded, 1624, for the education of Irish priests, the charter being granted by the Holy See at the instance of the Most Rev. Eugene Macmahon; closed by the French, 1795.—C.E., VIII, 160.

Louvain, University of, founded as a studium generale by a Bull of Pope Martin V, 1425, at the request of John IV, Duke of Brabant; the faculty of theology was created by Pope Eugene IV, 1431. During the 17th and 18th centuries, it was one of the strong intellectual centers of the West, and numerous institutions and colleges grew up around it. Among its famous professors were the philologist Justus Lipsius, the Arabist Clépard, and the scientist and inventor Minor. The faculty of theology strongly resisted the invasion of Protestantism, although the teachings of its professors Bailus and Jansenius caused serious anxiety during the 17th century, and in the 18th the influence of Fenianism and Josephinism was strongly felt. The theological teaching from the end of the 17th century was based upon that of the Scholastics, and special Scholastic chairs were added through the initiative of the princes. Among its illustrious teachers was Adrian Floris, later (1528) Pope Adrian VI, to whom is due the foundation of the university college which still bears his name. In the 18th century there was conflict between the university and the government which sought to im-pregnate it with centralizing and royalist ideas. The crisis arrived under Emperor Joseph II when, in disregard of the rights of the Church, he attempted to impose a general seminary upon the university, which resulted in the suspension and exile of many of the professors. The national conservative government reopened the university in 1790, but it was again suppressed in 1797 by the French who had annexed the Netherlands. After an interval marked by the establishment of a state university under the Dutch government, 1815, the episcopate of Belgium decided to create a free Catholic institution for higher education. This was sanctioned by Gregory XVI and first opened at Mechlin, 1834, but soon removed to the old buildings at Louvain. Its administration, teaching, and budget are independent of the state, and the episcopate controls the institution and appoints its head, the rector magnificus, who governs with the assistance of a rectorate composed of five faculties, theology, law, medicine, philosophy, and letters. The professors are appointed by the bishop on the presentation of the rector. It has a large number of affiliated institutions, among them the higher philosophic institute established by Pope Leo XIII and organized by Card. Mercier. Since Belgium gained its independence, Louvain has always been represented in the Parliament and often in the cabinet councils. Among the illustrious professors since the restoration have been the theologians, Boelen, Jungmann, Bp. Jules Malou of Bruges, Lamy, and Reussens; in law, De Coux, Pépin, Thonissen, and Nysseus; in philosophy and letters, Arendt, David, Moelley, Pouthet, Nève, De Harlez, and Willems; in philosophic science and mathematics, Gilbert, De la Vallée-Poussin, Van Beneden, and Carnoy; and in medicine, Schwann, Cranincx, Michaux, Van Kempen, Hubert and Lefèvre. Students, 3291.—C.E.

Love, the inclination of an appetite toward a good agreeing with it and adapted to it. There is a natural love common to all creatures, whereby they naturally tend to their own proper good. Love is sensitive or rational in so far as it arises from the apprehension of the senses only, or of human reason. Rational love is the love of concupiscence, or of benevolence, according as its object is cherished for the good of the one loving, or of the one loved. The love of friendship is a love of benevolence between two persons, mutually loving one another, based on a certain communication of goods. Rational love is natural or supernatural according as it proceeds from purely natural or supernatural revealed motives. The supernatural virtue of love (theological virtue of charity), is not acquired but infused. It is a love of God for His own sake, and of fellow man and of self for God’s sake. True love of God and of man are inclusive of one another. The obligation of making acts of supernatural love of God is contained in Holy Writ (Deut., 6; Matt., 22; Luke, 10), and urges at the dawn of reason, at the time of death, and at various times during life. Supernatural love of God is also the principle and good of moral perfection. The obligation of loving our fellow man binds whenever our neighbor is in need, and we are in a position to help him. It is regulated by a certain order depending on his nearness to us by reason of relationship, friendship, country, etc., on the nature and extent of his need, and on the inconvenience, injury, or loss we undergo by helping him.

Love Feast, See Agape.

Low-church, the party in Anglicanism which emphasizes the personal rather than the sacramental or ceremonial side of religion. Low-churchmen generally prefer the term “Evangelical” to describe their position, which is that of the usual Protestant theology, as contrasted with the Catholic tendencies of High-churchmen.—C.E. (V. k.)

Lower Nigeria, Vicariate Apostolic of, Nigeria, Africa (British possession); entrusted to the Fathers of the Holy Ghost; mission, 1885; prefecture, 1889; vicariate, 1920. Vicar Apostolic: Joseph I. Shanahan, C. S. Sp. (1905); residence at Onitsha. Priests, 20; schools, 700; pupils, 42,000; catechumens, 7,000; Catholics, 25,000.

Low Mass, a shortened and simplified form of the High Mass, with priest and server only. If parts of the Mass be sung it is a sung Mass or Missa Cantata. (Ed.)

Loyola, name of several colleges and universities.

---Loyola College, Baltimore, Md., founded, 1852; conducted by the Society of Jesus; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; extension school; professors, 16; students, 175; degrees conferred in 1929, 29 (1 honorary).

---Loyola College, Montreal, Canada, founded, 1896; affiliated with the University of Montreal, conducted by the Jesuits; students, about 200.

---Loyola University, Chicago, Ill., founded, 1860; conducted by the Jesuits; preparatory school; schools of arts and sciences, commerce, law, medicine, dentistry; correspondence school; summer school; professors, 450; students, 6711; degrees conferred in 1929, 120.

---Loyola University, Los Angeles, Cal., founded, 1911; conducted by the Jesuits; preparatory school; schools of arts and sciences, and law; professors, 53; students, 840; degrees conferred in 1920, 120.

---Loyola University, New Orleans, La., founded, 1904; conducted by the Jesuits; colleges of arts and sciences, law, dentistry, pharmacy; graduate, special, and extension schools; summer school; professors, 132; students, 962; degrees conferred in 1929, 142.

Lucas, Frederick (1812-55), journalist, b. London; d. Staines, England. He advocated Catholic Emancipation while still a Quaker, and became a Catholic, 1839. The following year he founded “The Tablet,” inspiring English Catholic journalism with a new spirit of independence. He espoused the cause of Ireland, and in 1852 was returned to Parliament as a member for Co. Meath.—C.E.

Lucifer (Lat., light-bearer, the morning star, the sun). Although it sometimes refers to a King of Babylon (in Is., 14), the Fathers apply it in a spiritual sense to the leader of the fallen angels, or Satan. In Christian literature it is a synonym for the devil, the prince of darkness, and alludes to the high estate from which he fell. In the blessing of the Easter candle it signifies Christ, the "light of the world."—C.E.

Luciferians. (1) A class name for a number of early sects which revived Gnostic and Manichean principles and worshiped the devil, in some instances cursing God while they did so. They are also known as Luciferites, e.g., the Stedingers in northern Germany (13th century); also a similar group of sectarians in Austria (14th century). (2) The adherents of the schismatical bishop, Lucifer of Cagliari, in Sardinia (d. 370 or 371) who dealt very harshly with converts from Arianism. He apparently was not reconciled with the Church before his death.—C.E., IX, 410. (A. M.)

Lucina, crypt of, title traditionally given to the most ancient section of the catacomb of St. Callistus, Rome. According to a theory of De Rossi now generally accepted, based on "Annals" of Tacitus, XIII, 32, Lucina was the baptismal name of the wife of Aulus Plautius, Pomponia Gracina, who was accused of holding a foreign superstition but was pronounced innocent when tried by her husband. She was the donor of a crypt. A tomb of a member of her family with an inscription of the 3rd century confirms the theory of De Rossi.—C.E.

Lucis Creator optime, or O Blest Creator of the Light! hymn for Vespers on Monday. It was written probably by Pope St. Gregory the Great (540-604). Of the 21 translations, the English title given is by E. Caswall.—Britt.

Lucius, Saint (2nd century), according to tradition a British king or chieftain, who begged Pope Eleutherius to send the missionaries SS. Faustius and Duvin to England. He is identified in the Roman Martyrology with St. Lucius, the first bishop and martyr of Chur who evangelized the Grisons in Switzerland. The abbey of St. Luzi is built over his tomb. Relics, since 9th century, in cathedral of Chur, Patron of city and diocese of Chur. Feast, 3 Dec.—Butler.

Lucius I, Saint, Pope (253-254), b. Rome; d. there. Soon after his consecration he was exiled during the persecution of the Emperor Gallus. He returned shortly, probably upon the accession of Valerian. Feast, R. Cal., 4 March.—C.E.; Butler.

Lucius II (Guerrado Balusculnus), Pope (1181-85), b. Bologna, Italy; d. Verona. Before his election in 1181 he was a cardinal-priest, legate to France and to Sicily, and Bp. of Ostia and Velletri. He was elected and crowned at Velletri, then came to Rome where the revolutionaries forced him to flee. He resided at Velletri, Segni, and at Verona, where he held a synod, 1184, to take measures against the Cathari and Waldenses. He absolved King William of Scotland from the excommunication imposed on him by Alexander III and later sent him the Golden Rose.—C.E.; Mann.

Lucy, Saint, virgin, martyr (283-304), b. Syracuse, Sicily; d. there. According to the traditional story, she was of a noble Greek family, brought up as a Christian by her mother, Eutychia. After her mother's miraculous cure at the shrine of St. Agatha in Catania, Lucy was allowed to make a vow of virginity and to distribute a great part of her riches among the poor. This largess stirred the greed of the unworthy youth to whom Lucy had been unwillingly betrothed, and he denounced her to Paschasius, the Governor of Sicily. Condemned to suffer the shame of prostitution, she stood immovable and could not be dragged to the place of evil. Faggots were then heaped about her and set on fire, but again God saved her. Finally she met her death by the sword. Her name occurs in the prayer "Nobis quoque peccatori..." in the Canon of the Mass. She is invoked against sore eyes, sore throat, hemorrhages, and epidemic diseases. Patroness of Syracuse, Sicily. Emblems: cord, eyes. Relics at Venice and Bourges. Feast, R. Cal., 13 Dec.—C.E.; Butler.

Ludger, Saint (c. 744-809), Bp. of Münster, missionary among the Frisians and Saxons, b. Zuilen, near Utrecht; d. Billerbeck, Westphalia. After studying at York, he was ordained at Cologne, 777, and devoted himself to evangelizing the Frisians and Saxons. He was consecrated Bp. of Münster, 804, and from the monastery he erected there, the present city, Münster, derives its name. Patron of Werden, East Frisia, and Denderen. Represented holding a church and a book. Buried at Werden. Feast, 20 March.—C.E.; Butler.

Ludmilla, Saint, martyr (c. 860-921), first Christian Bp. of Malmö (Alundz, Uus), Pope (1181-85), b. Mielnik; d. Tetin. She and her husband, Borivoi, were baptized by St. Methodius, 871. Her daughter-in-law, Drahomira, jealous of the influence which Ludmilla wielded over her grandson, Wenceslaus, caused her to be strangled. Patroness of Bohemia. Feast, 16 Sept.—C.E.
Ludolph of Saxony (d. 1378), ecclesiastical writer. He first joined the Dominicans, and 30 years later entered the charterhouse of Strasbourg. He governed the charterhouse of Coblenz, 1343-48; resigning his office, he spent the last 30 years of his life in retreat and prayer. He is the author of an excellent “Commentary of the Psalms” and a “Life of Christ.” In this latter work are combined a history, a commentary based on the Fathers, a series of instructions, meditations, and prayers in relation to the life of Christ. Its excellence is attested by numerous editions and translations, and by frequent use by such masters of the spiritual life as St. Theresa and St. Francis de Sales. It was the Life studied by Ignatius Loyola after his conversion.—C.E. (R. F. S.)

Lugo, Juan de (1583-1660), cardinal, theologian, b. Madrid; d. Rome. After studying law at Salamanca, he entered the Society of Jesus and subsequently taught at Valladolid and Rome. His writings, of which “De justitia et jure” is most famous, display a penetrating critical mind and a remarkably sound judgment. His brother, Francisco (1580-1652), was also a noted Jesuit theologian.—C.E.; Sommervogel.

Luis Beltran, Saint, confessor (1526-81), Apostle of Guiana. He was ordained 1547, and for 30 years served as master of the novices. He exhibited heroic charity during the plague of 1557. An eloquent preacher, inspired with the hope of an eternal reward, he requested to be sent to Central America. His labors in Panama and Colombia were astonishingly successful, but after seven years he was recalled to Spain to assume a position of responsibility in his order. Represented extinguishing a fire; holding a cross, and a chalice surmounted by a serpent. Canonized, 1674. Feast, R. Cal., 9 Oct.—C.E.; Butler.

Luke, Gospel of Saint, the third book of the N.T., whose author is St. Luke, a disciple and companion of St. Paul. The Gospel was written before the year 63, at which time St. Luke wrote his second work, Acts of the Apostles. After making diligent inquiries of those who had seen and conversed with the Lord, he set down the life and teachings of Jesus as the sure foundation for the truth of Christianity (Luke, 1, 1-4). He narrates how Jesus, by His Life and teaching and by the ministry of the Apostles, brought salvation to the whole world. Among the characteristics of this Gospel are: the portrayal of Our Lord’s mercy towards sinners; the prominence given the Mother of Jesus and other pious women; the clear and vivid delineations of characters; the frequent and beautiful parables of Jesus. The Gospel contains 24 chapters and may be divided into: the hidden life (1-2); preaching of St. John, baptism, and temptation (3, 1 to 4, 13); teaching, miracles, and works of mercy in Galilee and the founding of the Church (4, 14 to 9, 50); the “Pearly Ministry,” work of Jesus outside of Galilee (9, 51 to 19, 28); ministry in Jerusalem (19, 29 to 21, 38); Passion, Death, Resurrection and Ascension (22-24). The Biblical Commission, 26 June, 1912, declared that the harmonious tradition from the earliest ages, the testimony of ancient writers, the use of the Gospel by the early Church, constitute certain proof that St. Luke wrote the entire Gospel as contained in our Bibles before the year 70, and that it is a true historical document. Chapters specially commendable for reading are: 1:2, the five joyful mysteries; 6, the sabbath day, choice of the Apostles; 10, Good Samaritan; 11:1-14, parables of mercy; 12, 13, 14, instructions on following Christ; 22-24, Passion and Glory of Jesus.—C.E.; Ward, Commentary on St. Luke, Lond., 1915; Darby-Smith, Gospel according to St. Luke, Lond., 1925; Callan, The Four Gospels, N. Y., 1917. (R. F. S.)

Luke, Saint, evangelist; b. Antioch; d. probably Beccus, A.D. 74, author of the third Gospel and the Acts of the Apostles. A native of Antioch, Luke received an excellent education in that city renowned for its learning; he studied medicine from his knowledge of the eastern Mediterranean it is supposed that he traveled as a ship doctor. He also excelled in painting and sculpture, the Annunciation, Visitation, Nativity, and Shepherds being his favorite themes; a painting of the Virgin in St. Mary Major at Rome is attributed to him. He was not a Jew, and from the perfection and fluency of his literary style, it is inferred that he was a Greek. He met St. Paul at Troas and journeyed with him to Neapolis and Philippi as evangelist. From his knowledge of the eastern Mediterranean it is supposed that he traveled as a ship doctor. He also excelled in painting and sculpture, the Annunciation, Visitation, Nativity, and Shepherds being his favorite themes; a painting of the Virgin in St. Mary Major at Rome is attributed to him. He was not a Jew, and from the perfection and fluency of his literary style, it is inferred that he was a Greek. He met St. Paul at Troas and journeyed with him to Neapolis and Philippae as evangelist (Acts, 16). He remained St. Paul's companion and helper on his missionary journeys and the Apostle speaks of Luke (Col., 4) as “the most dear physician”; he visited St. Paul frequently during his imprisonment at Cesarea, traveled to Rome and remained at his side during the two years' imprisonment there, and was alone with St. Paul at the time of his last imprisonment (2 Tim., 4). Little is known of him after the death of St. Paul. He was unmarried and traveled to Achaia where he wrote his Gospel; according to some records he was martyred, though these are not authenticated. His Gospel is the longest and the finest from a literary viewpoint. Patron of physicians, artists, brewers, glass-workers, butchers, and notaries. Many societies of physicians, with philanthropical purposes, are named after him. Emblems: a book, ox, brush and palette. Relics at Padua. Feast, R. Cal., 18 Oct.—C.E.; Butler.

Luke Kirby, Blessed, martyr (c. 1549-81), b. northern England; d. Tyburn. He was educated at Cambridge, entered Douai College, 1576, and was ordained at Cambrai, 1577. Arriving in England, he was arrested, imprisoned, tortured, and hanged.
Beatiﬁed, 1888.

Lulworth, castle in Dorsetshire, England, built in 1588 and in possession of the Weld family since then. When the Trappists were driven out of France during the Revolution they were received, 1794, in Lulworth Castle, which was built on the site of a former Cistercian monastery conﬁscated by Henry VIII, and remained there for some years until the foundation of Mount Mellary in Brittany. John Carroll, the ﬁrst bishop in the United States was consecrated in the chapel of the castle, 1790. The castle was destroyed by ﬁre, 1929.

Lumen Christi, 1602–73, bishop, apostle of the Romans, convened the Council he assisted at the election of Urban VI, but later under pressure from the Rome people. The anti-pope Gregory XII, but Pedro de Luna fled to Spain still claiming that Urban’s election had been secured by fraud. In 1407 he and Pope Gregory XII decrated bishop, and elected pope by the Avignon Conclave. The council met, received the submission of Constance. The council was not superior to a pope. The council made maters worse by electing another antipope, Pietro Philarghi (Alexander V), on whose death in the following year they elected Baldassare Cossa (John XXIII). The latter, forced by Sigismund, King of the Romans, convened the Council of Constance. The council met, received the submision of Cossa and the abdication by proxy of Gregory XII, but Pedro de Luna fled to Spain still asserting his claim to the see. His action proved him a schismatic and the council deposed him, 1417, but he died unsubmitted. At the time of the schism half of Europe believed Pedro de Luna to be the legitimate pontiff and his claims were vigorously supported by St. Vincent Ferrer.—C.E.; Pastor.

Lunette. See LUNA, or LUNULA.

Lust (A.-S., lust), the inordinate appetite for sexual gratiﬁcation, one of the seven deadly or capital vices. God has placed in the organs of generation a sensual pleasure in order to induce man to do what is necessary for the preservation of the race. To seek this pleasure, or consent to it, outside of matrimony, or contrary to the rules of married life, is sinful because it is contrary to the order established by God. Even to lust with the eyes, or heart, is already a sin, as Our Lord teaches in the sermon on the Mount.—C.E. (w. j. b.)

Lustra sex qui jam peregit. See PANIS LINGUA GLORIÆ [LARÆAM].

Lutgard, St., virgin (1182–1246), mystic, b.
Tongres, Belgium. She took the Benedictine habit,
1194, and was elected prioress of her community,
1205. In 1208 she was transferred to the Cistercian Order at Aywieres, near Brussels. Throughout her life, she was favored with apparitions of Christ, the Blessed Virgin, and the saints. Representated with Our Lord, who is showing her His bleeding heart. Feast, 16 June.

Luther, Martin (1483–1546), leader of the 16th-century religious revolt; b. Eisleben, Saxony; d. there. He graduated master of philosophy at Magdeburg in 1505, and a few months later joined the Augustinians at Erfurt. In 1507 he was ordained. The following year he taught philosophy at Wittenberg while studying theology. Shortly afterwards he went to Rome;
the exact object and outcome of this journey is uncertain, and the account of it written later in life is of admittedly doubtful accuracy. He returned to Wittenberg as lecturer on Scripture and subsequently was appointed district vicar. Marked changes were already noticed in his manner of life which later he attributed to the teaching of the Church regarding good works, which he entirely misrepresented. A violent reaction resulted; after having placed undue reliance on his efforts towards justiﬁcation and confused con-sciuosness with original sin, he declared that man was hopelessly corrupt and that all his works, even those done from charitable or pious motives, were great sins; that he could be saved by faith alone, in virtue of which God clad him as with the mantle of Christ’s merits and concealed but did not blot out sin. This new theory of justiﬁcation by faith alone was later developed by Luther into the fundamental doctrine of his religious system.

Luther seized on the publication of the papal Bull of Indulgences in Germany as the occasion of his break with the Holy See. The preaching of the indulgence was entrusted to Johann Tetzel, an LUTHER

eloquent Dominican. On 31 Oct., 1517, Luther proclaimed his “Ninety-five Theses,” some of which were adjudged heretical by the archbishop's counsellors. The matter was referred to Rome. Luther was summoned thither, 1518, but did not go. Later in the same year he met Card. Cajetan at Augsburg, but the meeting was fruitless. He appealed from the pope to a general council as the decisive authority in doctrinal disputes, though subsequently, having injected himself into the Leipsic disputation between Eck and Carlstadt, he was forced to reject the authority of the councils for that of the Bible. In his “Babylonian Captivity” he endeavored to stir up national feeling against the pope and make a bold appeal to the sensual appetites of the populace. At this time the main points of his creed seem to have been: the Bible is the sole rule of faith; man is totally corrupt; he lacks moral free will and all his acts, even sin, are the work of God; he is justified by believing God will save him; this faith includes a pardon of sin and all its penalties; Baptism, the Eucharist, and Penance are the only sacraments; the hierarchy and external worship are unnecessary; the priesthood is universal; there is no visible Church.

In 1520 Luther was excommunicated by Rome and shortly afterwards the Diet of Worms gave civil corroboration to this act. He withdrew to Wartburg Castle for a year. During his retirement (1522) he translated the New Testament into German, the Old Testament being finished in 1534. Although Luther's work had indisputably high literary merits and has exerted a potent influence on German literature, it was an unfaithful version, containing suppressions, mistranslations, and deliberate garblings to support his own doctrines. Another treatise, “On Monastic Orders,” boldly set forth a new ethical code, asserting the irresistibility of concupiscence and the impossibility of observing continence. Luther at this time was a victim of melancholia, sensual attacks, and, according to himself, diabolical obsession. He attacked Erasmus for upholding free will, and in his “Servitude of the Will” advocated determinism. Luther's teachings and unbridled writings had been fanning the fire of the peasants' growing discontent, resulting in the Peasants' War, 1525. He sounded a warning, but too late, and, throwing in his lot with the princes he eloquently exhorted them “to slaughter the peasants like dogs.” At this time he married an ex-Bernardine nun, Catherine von Bora.

Luther soon proclaimed the supremacy of the princes in matters of religion, a doctrine acceptable to those longing to obtain possession of the Church revenues and property. In 1531 the Smalllandic League, an offensive and defensive alliance of all Lutherans, was formed, and Luther, attacking George of Saxony, prepared the people for a possible revolt against the emperor. Luther's many maladies were now bringing his life to a premature close. He vigorously denounced his closest friends, and excommunicated those who dared deviate from his views. In his “Table Talk,” his pictures of his youth grow darker, dates and facts are changed, incredibilities, exaggerations, and contradictions abound, and have given rise to many legends still found in popular biographies, but now rejected by critical historians. Much of the book is unprintable. The moral corruption and intellectual decay among his followers resulting from his teachings on concupiscence and man's lack of free will has alarmed him; he imagined himself the special object of the devil's hostility. Under these influences his coarseness reached its climax in his treatises against the Jews and the papacy. Luther was interred in the Wittenberg castle church.—C.E.; Maritain, Three Reformers, N. Y., 1929; Grisar, Luther, St. L., 1917; Denifle, Luther and Lutherdom, N. Y., 1917; O'Hare, Facts about Luther, N. Y., 1910.

Lutheranism, the religious belief of the oldest of the Protestant sects, founded by Martin Luther (q.v.). The name was at first used derisively by his opponents and Luther himself preferred the designation “Evangelical,” which is quite generally used with the word “Lutheran” in Church titles. Lutherans keep the date of their founding as 31 Oct., 1517, when Luther posted his 95 theses for discussion on the church door in Wittenberg. The chief doctrines of Lutheranism, which are summarised in six “Confessions” are: (1) acceptance of the Apostles', Nicene, and Athanasian Creeds; (2) the authority of the Scriptures as the rule of faith; (3) justification by faith alone; (4) “consubstantiation” or the real, corporeal presence of Christ in and with the substance of the bread and wine at the time of the celebration of the Lord's Supper. Following Luther's teaching on private judgment, their formularies are variously interpreted, and wide divergence is found, ranging from strict orthodoxy to the extremes of rationalism. Lutheranism is the prevailing religion of Germany and Scandinavian countries. Its Church government varies from the episcopal to congregational forms. A form of worship is used, based on the Mass but eliminating all idea of sacrifice. Though it has shown great tendencies towards subdivision on minor points of doctrine, of late many prominent Lutheran bodies have become united. There are Lutheran congregations in many parts of the world, the first independent Lutheran colony in the United States having been established by Swedes, 1638, on the Delaware. In 1926 in the United States there were: 10,554 ministers, 15,102 churches, and 3,906,000 members. The Evangelical Lutheran Church in North America, organized, 1918, as an agency whose regular work consisted of: external representation of the Lutheran Church, especially in relation to the national government; statistics; reference library; and publicity. It also does emergency relief work. Affiliated with the council are: United Lutheran Church, Joint Ohio Synod, Buffalo Synod, Augsburg Synod, Norwegian Lutheran Church, Lutheran Free Church, Eliesen Synod, Church of the Lutheran Brethren, United Danish Church, Icelandic Synod, Suomi Synod, Finnish National Church, and Finnish Apostolic Church. Among the larger Lutheran bodies in the United States are the following:

- United Lutheran Church in America, three general bodies of Lutherans, the General Synod, the General Council, and the United Synod South, which grew out of the colonial churches and merged, 1918, in New York City. Missions are conducted in India, Africa, Japan, South America, and the West Indies. They publish 2 weeklies, 10 monthlies, 6 quarterlies, and 2 annuals. In 1926 in the United States there were 2891 ministers, 3596 churches, and 1,214,340 members.

Evangelical Lutheran Synodical Conference of North America includes the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Missouri, Ohio, and other states; the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Wisconsin and other states; the Slovak Evangelical Lutheran Synod of the Unaltered Augsburg Confession; the Norwegian Synod of the American Evangelical Lutheran Church, and the Negro Mission. They are congregational in government, and the German language prevails in the Synodical Conference. They publish 7 bi-weeklies, 8 monthlies, and a quarterly. In 1926 in the United States there were 3759 ministers, 4003 churches, and 1,292,020 members.

Norwegian Lutheran Church, an organization resulting from a movement toward union which began among the Norwegian Lutheran Synods, 1887. Three synods were united, 1890, forming the United Norwegian Lutheran Church; and, 1917, the Hague's Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church of America, organized, 1854, and the United Norwegian Lutheran Church in America merged together as one body. They publish 5 weekly, a monthly, a quarterly, and 3 annual periodicals. In 1926 there were in the United States: 1277 ministers, 2312 churches, and 496,707 members.

Joint Synod of Ohio, composed of 12 districts, 10 in the United States, 1 in Canada, and 1 in Australia, organized at Somerset, Ohio, in September, 1818. They are both congregational and presbyterian in government. They publish 3 weeklies, a monthly, a quarterly, and 2 annuals. Foreign missionary work is carried on in Africa and India. In 1926 in the United States there were: 709 ministers, 902 churches, and 247,783 members.

Iowa Synod, composed of Lutherans in Iowa and surrounding states organized, 1854, by Rev. G. Grossmann and Rev. J. Deindorfer. Their doctrine is based upon the Old and New Testaments, but they allow certain beliefs to remain "open questions" i.e., not articles of faith, as the first resurrection, the conversion of Israel, and the antichrist. They publish 8 periodicals. There were in the United States in 1926: 533 ministers, 576 churches, and 217,873 members.—C.E.

Luther's Bible. Luther translated the Bible into German (1522-34) from the classical Hebrew and Greek, also making use of the Latin version of Lyra, a Hebrew-Latin text, and an older German translation. His translation has literary merit but contains numerous errors, especially dogmatic, e.g., in Romans, 3, it inserts "alone" after "faith." Revised editions of Luther's Bible appeared at Halle, 1883 and 1892, but they retain many of Luther's errors.—Grisar, tr. Lauwoud, Luther, St. L., 1913-17.

Lux alma, Jesu, mentium, or LIGHT OF THE ANXIOUS HEART, hymn for Lauds on the feast of the Transfiguration of Our Lord, 6 Aug. St. Bernard (1091-1153) was the author. It has eight translations. The English title given is by Card. Newman.—Britt.

Lux ecce surgit aurea, or SEE THE GOLDEN SUN ARISE! hymn for Lauds on Thursday. It was written by Prudentius (348-413). Of the 17 translations, the English title given is by W. Courthope.—Britt.

Luxemburg, constitutional grand duchy of Europe, located between France, Belgium, and Germany; area, 999 sq. m.; pop. (1922), 260,787. Christianity was established here very early; in 316, Trier was the seat of a diocese, extending far into Lorraine, and an important center from which the faith was preached through this part of Europe. With the many political changes, during which the region came under control successively of various neighboring powers, the Church was organized under various sees, especially Liège, Metz, Reims, Verdun, Cologne, and Namur. In 1833 a separate Vicariate Apostolic of Luxemburg was founded. The grand duchy was proclaimed a neutral state, politically independent, in 1867, and in 1870 the vicariate was made into a diocese, which was officially recognized, 1873, dependent directly on the Holy See, with the same boundaries as the state. Of the 47 members elected to the Chamber of Deputies in 1925, the Catholic party is represented by 22. The Diocese of Luxemburg was founded, 1870. Churches, 314; priests, 450; Catholics, 212,290.—C.E.

Lux o decora patris, or O LOVELY LIGHT of PATRIARCHS! hymn for Lauds on the feast of Sts. Cyril and Methodius. It was written by the Frs. Leanetti and Salvati, probably c. 1880, and has three translations. The English title given is by the Benedictines of Stanbrook.—Britt.

Lych Gate, roofed gateway of a cemetery to afford shelter to the coffin while waiting to proceed to the graveside.—C.E.

Lydenburg, Prefecture Apostolic of, Transvaal, Union of South Africa (British possession), comprises the eastern Transvaal, viz., the magisterial districts: Lydenburg, Barberton, Carolina, Middelburg, Bethal, Ermelo, Piet Retief, Wakkerstroom, and Standerton; established, 1923, by division from the Vicariate of Transvaal; entrusted to the German Sons of the Sacred Heart. Prefect Apostolic: Daniel Kauczor (1923), Louis Mohn (1926). Churches, 4; priests, 8; religious women, 22.

Lying, a lack of conformity between speech and mind; discord between what one says and what one thinks to be true, but not necessarily between what one says and what is true. God's words cannot be at variance with his thought, for God is essential holiness. Nor can man speak otherwise than as he thinks without marring the attribute of holiness in himself, that is, without doing wrong.—C.E.

Lyndwood, William (c. 1375-1448), Bp. of St. David's, and the greatest English canonist. He was associated with Chichele in his proceedings against the Lollards, and was sent abroad on several diplomatic missions. His "Provinciale" forms a complete gloss on local church legislation in England and refutes the pet historical figment of the Anglicans that the Roman canon law was not binding on English ecclesiastical courts.—C.E.
Maas, Anthony J. (1858-1927), exegete, b. Banzhausen, Westphalia, Germany; d. St. Andrew's-on-the-Hudson, Poughkeepsie, N. Y. He was educated at public and private schools and the gymnasium at Arnsberg, Westphalia; the Jesuit scholastica at Manresa, N. Y., Woodstock, Md., and Manresa, Spain. He came to the United States, entered the Society of Jesus, 1877, and was ordained, 1887. He was professor of Scripture (1891-1905) and prefect of studies (1897-1905) at Woodstock, assistant editor of "The Messenger," N. Y. (1905-07), rector of Woodstock College (1907-12), and provincial of the New York-Maryland Province, resident in New York (1912-27). His works include the "Life of Christ," "Christ in Type and Prophecy," and "Commentary on the Gospel of St. Matthew."—The Catholic Encyclopedia and its Makers, N. Y., 1917.

Mabillon, Jean (1632-1707), Benedictine scholar, b. Saint-Pierremont; d. Paris, France. Entering the Maurist Congregation, 1627, he was sent to Saint-Germain-des-Prés, 1664, remaining there until death. He assisted d'Achery in preparing material for the "Acta Sanctorum, O.S.B." (Lives of the Benedictine Saints) and published the first three volumes, 1668-72. "De re diplomatica," confuting the attack of Papebroch upon certain charters in the Abbey of St. Denis, was the foundation of the science of diplomacy and established him as an authority. His controversy with De Rancé regarding the lawful occupation of monks, 1691-92, is famous. He was a member of the Academy Royale des Inscriptions.—C.E.

Macao, Diocese of, China, at the mouth of the Canton River; established 1575; suffragan of Goa. Bishops of the diocese have included Melchior M. Carneiro (1575-83), João do Casal (1600-1735), Francisco Chacim (1845-58), Manuel Ennes (1874-83), José M. de Carvalho (1897-1902), and João d'Azêvedo a Castro (1902-18). Jose da Costa Nunes has occupied the see since 1920. Churches and chapels, 74; priests, secular, 50; priests, regular, 22; religious women, 66; seminary, 1; colleges and schools, 41; institutions, 3; Catholics, 37,990.—C.E.

Macarius, Saint, martyr (c. 314-335), thirtyninth Bp. of Jerusalem. He opposed Arius and his new heresy, and at the Council of Nicaea assisted in formulating the Nicene Creed. The Emperor Constantine placed him in charge of the excavations for discovering the sites of the Passion and Resurrection and the finding of the True Cross. Under his supervision the church of the Holy Sepulcher was built. Feast, 10 March.—C.E.

MacCarthy, Denis Florence (1817-82), poet, b. Dublin; d. there. He was educated for the bar, and was one of the coterie of brilliant writers whose articles published in the "Nation" powerfully influenced the Irish people in the middle of the 19th century. A graceful lyricist, he won a permanent place in literature by his version of the Spanish dramatic poet, Calderón. He was awarded a medal from the Spanish Royal Academy. His original writings include: "Ballads, Poems, and Lyrics"; "The Bell Founder"; "Under Glimpses"; "Shelley's Early Life."—C.E.

McCarthy, Justin (1830-1912), politician and writer, b. Cork, Ireland; d. Folkestone, England. At eighteen he joined the literary staff of the Cork Examiner and continued his career as journalist in Liverpool, London, where he was editor of the "Morning Star" (1864-68), and in New York where he became assistant editor of the New York "Independent." He was a regular contributor to a number of the foremost periodicals, a member of the British Parliament (1879-96), a member of the Irish Land League, and chairman of the National Land and Labor League of Great Britain. Though an ardent supporter of Catholic rights, when he succeeded Parnell as chairman of the Irish Parliamentary Party (1890-96) he earned the respect of all parties by his courtesy and moderation. Despite his active political career his greatest interest was in writing; his works include a number of novels, a collection of essays, biographies of Peel, Leo XIII, and Gladstone, "History of Our Own Times," "Reminiscences of an Irishman," "History of the Four Georges," and numerous others.—C.E., XVI, 67.

McCloskey, John (1810-85), fourth Bp. and second Abp. of New York, and first American cardinal, b. Brooklyn, N. Y.; d. New York. After attending school in Brooklyn and New York he entered Mt. St. Mary's College at Emmitsburg in 1822, finishing his studies in the Seminary twelve years later. He was ordained in old St. Patrick's, N. Y., in 1834, and taught philosophy in the new seminary at Nyack until its destruction by fire the same year. He was in Rome from 1825 to 1837 as a student at the Gregorian University. On his return he became pastor of St. Joseph's in New York, leaving it temporarily in 1841 to organize St. John's College, Fordham. He was named coadjutor to Bp. Hughes and consecrated in 1844, becoming first Bp. of Albany in 1847. He cooperated in the founding of St. Joseph's Seminary at Troy in 1862. Named second Abp. of New York in 1864, he was installed in St. Patrick's Cathedral on Mott St.
He was named first American cardinal by Pius IX, the investiture taking place in old St. Patrick's, 27 April, 1875. In August he took possession of his titular church, Santa Maria sopra Minerva, in Rome, and when he went to Rome again for the coronation of Leo XIII he received the cardinal's hat from that pontiff, 29 March, 1878. He dedicated the present St. Patrick's Cathedral, 25 May, 1879.

Through an appeal to President Arthur in 1885 he was instrumental in saving the American College at Rome from spoliation by the Italian government. The New York Catholic Protectory is one of his many monuments.—C.E.; Farley, The Life of John Cardinal McCloskey, N. Y., 1918.

MacDonald, John (c. 1742-1811), Laird of Glenaladale and Glenfinnan, philanthropist, b. Glenaladale, Scotland; d. Traeaddle, P.E.T., Canada.

He was educated at Ratisbon, and on returning to Scotland mortgaged his estate and purchased a tract on Prince Edward Island, where he spent his life laboring for the temporal and spiritual welfare of his impoverished countrymen, driven into exile for remaining Catholics.—C.E.

Macdonell, Alexander (1760-1840), first Bp. of Kingston, Ontario, b. Glengarry, Scotland; d. Dumfries. After ordination at Valladolid, his life was devoted to his Gaelic kinsmen in Lochaber and Canada. When they were evicted in 1792 he led them to Glasgow and later formed them into a British regiment, the Glengarry (q.v.) Fencibles, being himself appointed their chaplain, the first Catholic British Army chaplain in centuries. When they were disbanded he brought them to Canada and formed a Highland colony called Glengarry. In 1819 he was made vicar Apostolic of Upper Canada, which in 1826 was erected into a bishopric. Five years later he was appointed to the legislative Council. He founded a seminary at St. Raphael's and a college at Kingston, and by his zealous labours merited the title of apostle of Ontario.—C.E.

Mace, a short, ornamental staff whose headpiece is decorated with a coat of arms, borne before eminent ecclesiastics, magisterial and academic bodies as a symbol of jurisdiction. Properly, mæza is a club-shaped beaten silver stick carried by mazzeri (mace-bearers), and Swiss Guards, in papal chapels at bishops' consecrations, and by papal messengers. Mazzi date from at least the 12th century.—C.E.

Macedonianism, so named from Macedonius, an Arian Bp. of Constantinople (A.n. 342), whose followers denied the Divinity of the Holy Ghost. The Macedonians are usually identified with the Pneumatarchi, or Combators of the Holy Spirit. Unlike their founder the majority of the Macedonians admitted the consubstantiality of the Son. The heresy was combated by Athanasius, Basil, Gregory of Nyssa, Gregory of Nazianzus, and condemned by the first Council of Constantinople (381). Due to internal discord and the severity of the Theodosian Code the sect soon disappeared from history. It was owing to some of the Latin Fathers, in particular Jerome and Augustine, that the term "Macedonianism" became the preferred designation for this heresy in the West.

Machabees, Saints, martyrs (Antioch, 168 B.C.). The most notable martyrs of the persecution propagated by Antiochus in his effort to hellenize Jerusalem, were Eleazar, an old man, chief of the scribes, seven brothers, and their mother Samona. They are known as the Machabees because they suffered death during the era of the Machabee heroes. Their story is recounted in 1 and 2 Machabees. Their relics are now preserved partly in San Pietro in Vincoli, Rome, and at Cologne. Feast, B. Cal., 1 Aug.—C.E.; Butler.

Machabees, The, Jewish dynasty which began with the rebellion of Mathathias and his five sons against the Syrian king, Antiochus IV (168 B.C.) and ruled the fortunes of Israel until the advent of Herod the Great. Syrian attempts to force Greek paganism on the Jews, the profanation of the Temple at Jerusalem, and the massacre which followed, brought the nation to arms under Mathathias, as a priest of the sons of Jorib. At the death of Mathathias, Judas Machabeus, his third son, drove the Syrians and Hellenists out of Jerusalem, re-dedicated the Temple, and began an offensive and defensive struggle with the Romans. Before the treaty was concluded, however, Judas, with 800 men, risked battle at Laisa with an overwhelming army of Syrians under Bacchides, and was slain. He was succeeded in command by his youngest brother, Jonathan (161 B.C.). Jonathan defeated Bacchides, revenged the death of his brother, and made peace with Alexander who had usurped the throne of Demetrius, the successor to Antiochus. A period of peace followed in which Jonathan ruled as high priest in Jerusalem, but Tryphon, who was plotting for the throne of Asia, treacherously captured him at Ptolemais and later put him to death. The captaincy of the armies of Israel then fell to Simon, the second son of Mathathias. Under him the land of Juda flourished exceedingly. He obtained the complete independence of the country and a grateful people bestowed upon him the hereditary kingship of the nation. His rule marked five years of uninterrupted peace. He was treacherously slain by his son-in-law, Ptolemy, about the year 125 B.C. After Simon the race of the Machabees quickly degenerated. In 63 B.C. the Romans thought it necessary to interfere in the fratricidal war between Hyrcanus II and Aristobulus II. With this interference and the advent of Herod the Great the scepter passed forever from the land of Juda. The story of the Machabees is written in the two books of the O.T. which bear that title, C.E.; Gigot.

MacHale, John (1791-1881), Abp. of Tuam, b. Tubbernavine, Ireland; d. Tuam. He studied at Maynooth where he later taught theology, was named coadjutor Bp. of Kilala, 1825, and was transferred to Tuam, 1834. His life is the history of the struggles of the Irish Catholics in the 19th century. He labored and wrote incessantly to secure Catholic Emancipation, legislative independence, justice for tenants and the poor, and vigorously assailed the proselytizers and the anti-Catholic anti-national system of public education. He preached regularly to his flock in Irish. At the Vatican Council he held the definition of papal infallibility to be inopportune. Among his writings are a treatise on the evidences of Catholicity and translations in Irish of Moore’s “Melodies,” and part of the Bible and the Iliad.—C.E.; O’Reilly, Life of John MacHale, N. Y.
MacHale 582 Madeleine Sophie Barat

Macchar (Mochumna), Saint (c. 540), Bp. of Aberdeen, Scotland. He accompanied St. Columba to Iona, and after being consecrated bishop went as a missionary among the Picts. Patron of Aberdeen Cathedral. Feast, 12 Nov.

Macchiavelli, Niccolò (1469-1527), writer, statesman, b. Florence, Italy; d. there. For many years he was secretary of the Lower Chancery of the Signory and was frequently employed on diplomatic missions; later he served under Leo X and Clement VII. As an historian he is an excellent source for contemporary affairs, though partial; his comedies are clever but bear traces of his moral laxity. Though he died a Christian, his life and writings are pagan, exhibiting a dislike for Christian virtue and the authority of the papacy. Macchiavellism is best known for the theory synonymous with treachery, intrigue, subterfuge, and tyranny, bearing his name, and expounded in “Il Principe” and “Discorsi sopra Livio.” He believed a united Italy possible and hoped that the Florentine Medici would realize it. In these works he points out the way to accomplish it. To gain the end in view results are to be the only criteria of the methods employed; the moral law and individual virtue must give way when the interest of the state demands it. The prince must be beforehand in misleading and even doing away with his opponent, to prevail against his treachery and cruelty. As a theory Machiavellism may be a novelty but in practice it is as old as political society. "Il Principe" is immoral and was placed on the Index in 1559.—C.E.; Dyer, Machiavelli and the Modern State, Bost., 1905.

MacKenzie, Vicariate Apostolic of, Northwest Territory; comprises that part of Northwest Territory lying north of 50th degree of N. latitude and between the 102nd and 140th meridian of W. longitude, reaching to the North Pole; to which was added in 1927 that portion of the former Vicariate of Athabaska north of the 55th degree of S. lat. between 102° w. and 113° W. longitude; area, 600,000 sq. m. (not including the Arctic Islands, yet unsurveyed); suffragan of Edmonton; established 1901. Bishop, Gabriel J. E. Preynat, O.M.I. (1902); residence at Fort Smith, N.W.T. Churches, 19; priests (Oblates), 27; brothers (Oblates), 38; religious women, 46; schools, 6; institutions, 6; Catholics, about 7000.—C.E.

McLoughlin, John (1784-1857), physician and pioneer, known as the “Father of Oregon”; b. La Rivière du Loup, Canada; d. Oregon City. He gave up the practice of medicine to become a partner of the Hudson Bay Company. For 22 years he was its able executive in the Oregon Country, and there were no Indian wars until after he had resigned. He founded Oregon City, protected missionaries of all denominations, and aided citizens of the United States who wished to settle in Oregon. For this last reason his Canadian firm forced him out of office. He became a Catholic, and when action was started against his land claims by some Methodist missionaries, it resulted in his losing his fortune. Later the Oregon legislature restored the territory to his heirs, but McLoughlin had died in poverty, the victim of ingratitude.—C.E.

MacMahon, Marie Édém Patrice Maurice de (1808-93), Duke of Magenta, Marshal of France, President of the French Senate, 25 May, France; d. Montcresson. He had a military career of 20 years in Algeria, participated in the Crimean War, in the Italian War brought about the victory of Magenta (1859), and was created Marshal and Duke of Magenta on the field of battle, and Governor General of Algeria; participated in Franco-Prussian War; led the army to Sedan where Napoleon III capitulated. In 1872 the National Assembly elected him president of the new Republic. His sane policy promoted the establishment of the Republic; he retarded when possible, political parties hostile to the Church. Resigned 1879, esteemed by all parties.—C.E.

McSherry, Richard (1817-85), physician, b. West Virginia; d. Baltimore. He was army surgeon under General Taylor in the Seminole War, and founder and first president of the Baltimore Academy of Medicine.—C.E.

Madeleine Sophie Barat, Bîe-tha, Saint (1779-1866), foundress of the Society of the Sacred Heart, b. Joigny, Burgundy; d. Paris. Educated by her brother Louis, she became associated with his friend Fr. Varin, and at his suggestion she made her first consecration to the religious life, 1800, thus founding the Society of the Sacred Heart. In Sept., 1801, the first convent was opened at Amiens, and the society was known as the “Dames de la Foi,” Madeleine made her final vows, 1802. St. Madeleine Sophie Barat was chosen superior of the community, and was elected superior-general of the society, 1866. With the aid of Fr. Varin she formulated the constitution and rules, and in 1820 convened a council of superiors at Paris to draw up a uniform curriculum for their schools. The society received papal approbation, 1827. During her life Mother Barat established over 80 foundations in France, North America, Italy, Switzerland, Belgium, Algiers, England, Ireland, Spain, Holland, Germany, South America, Austria, and Poland. Despite these labors, her life was one of increasing holiness and continued prayer. Canonized, 1925. Relics at Jette-St-Pierre, near Brussels, Feat., 25 May.—C.E., II, 253; U.K., II; Monahan, Saint Madeleine Sophie, N. Y., 1925.
Madonna (Lat., mea domina, my mistress), a name given to representations of the Blessed Virgin in art and occasionally used as an invocation in devotions to her. In painting and sculpture she is invariably represented with the Christ Child in her arms, alone or surrounded by an adoring group. In early Christian times, there were crude representations of her in the catacombs. In the 15th and 16th centuries she was a favorite subject of painters and sculptors. Noted masters who have represented her are: Albertinelli, Barocci, Bartolommeo, Giovanni Bellini, Jacopo Bellini, Boltraffio, Borgognone, Botticelli, Caracci, Carpaccio, Cignani, Cinque, Da Vinci, Della Robbia, Domenichino, Doloii, El Greco, Jan van Eyck, Fra Angelico, Fra Bartolomeo, Francis, Ferrari, Feuerbach, Giotto, Holbein the Elder, Lippi, Locher, Lofen, Lotto, Luini, Mantegna, Master of the Moulins, Memling, Mengs, Moro, Morone, Murillo, Pacchiariotto, Perugino, Pinturicchio, Raphael, Reni, Rubens, Santi, San Severino, Sarto, Sassoferato, Sesto, Signorelli, Andrea da Solario, Antonio da Solario, Squarcione, Trevisani, Titian, Van Dyck, Veronese, Verrocchio, Antonio Vivarini, and Alvise Vivarini. Among famous paintings of the Madonna are the Sistine Madonna, the Madonna della Sedia, di Foligno, of the Madonna and Child with Saints (Crivelli).}

Madrass, Archidioecese of, India, comprises the city of Madras, the districts of Guntur, Kurnool, Bellary, Anantapur, Chittoor, Cuddapah, Nellore, and Chir- toor, and portions of Chingleput and North Arcot Districts; area, about 40,359 sq. m.; suffragan sees, Hyderabad, Nager, Nellore, and Vizagapatam; established 1886; entrusted to St. Joseph’s Society, Mill Hill, and secular clergy. Archbishops: Joseph Colgan (vicar Apostolic from 1882; archbishop, 1886-1911), succeeded by John Allen (1911-28), and Eugene Mederlet (1928).Churches, 42; missions, 5; stations, 260; priests, secular, 23; priests, regular, 62; religious women, 348; schools, 106; institutions, 8; Catholics, 58,166.—C.E.

Madrid, city, capital of Spain. Its early history is largely conjectural, although tradition relates that there were Christian settlements there during the Moorish occupation. There are many interesting monuments, among them the Royal Palace, the palace of La Granja, and the famous Escorial. The first public library was the San Isidro, founded by the Jesuits; the National Museum (Museo del Prado) contains masterpieces of nearly all the European schools of painting and sculpture. Of its churches, San Pedro is the oldest, and San Francisco el Grande the finest. Cervantes, Lope de Vega, and Velazquez are buried here.—C.E.

Maestro di Camera del Papa, title of one of the four palace prelates, actual chief chamberlain of the Vatican. His jurisdiction is limited exclusively to the reception rooms of the pope and he supervises all matters concerning the daily, personal service of the pontiff, e.g., household affairs, Vatican guards, petitions for audiences, etc.—C.E.

Magadalen, penitent women in the care of certain religious communities, who seek to reform and remain in community life; also those of blameless reputation who are admitted under the same name. Among prominent communities of Magdalens were: Marseilles, 1527; Naples, 1524; Rue St-Denis (Paris), 1492; Rome, 1520; Seville, 1550; Paris, 1592; Rouen; and Bordeaux. Institutions still exist, e.g., at Lauban (1320) and Studenz for the care of the aged and infirm.—C.E.

Magellan, Ferdinand (c.1490-1521), navigator, b. Saborosa, Portugal; d. Island of Macaen in the Philippines. He took part in Almeida’s expedition to India, 1505, and assisted in the conquest of Malaca, 1511. Later he offered his services to Spain, and at the instance of Card. Rodriguez de Fonseca, Charles I of Spain enabled him to attempt the circumnavigation of the globe. He sailed from Cadiz, 20 Sept., 1519, discovered the strait in South America now bearing his name, the Ladrones, and the Philippines, 16 March, 1521, where he was slain in a battle with natives; two of his ships continued the journey to the Moluccas, and finally Sebastian del Cano, commanding the Victoria, reached Spain, 8 Sept., 1522, giving the first positive proof of the earth’s roundness.—C.E.; Pigafetta, tr. Robertson, Magellan’s Voyage around the World, 1905.

Magi, Magi (Gr., magoi), proper name applied to members of the priestly caste of the Medes, used with specific reference to the wise men from the East who brought gifts to Jesus in Bethlehem. The appearance of a miraculous star caused them to leave the East in search of the king of whose birth the star was a sign. At the court of Herod the Great in Jerusalem they learned that Bethlehem was to be the place of birth of the expected Messias. The star guided them to the house of the Holy Family in Bethlehem where they offered to the Child Jesus the choicest of Arabian gifts; gold, frankincense, and myrrh. An angel warned them in sleep of Herod's designs upon the Child, so they returned by another route to their country. The Gospel omits to mention the country, the number, and the names of the Magi. The Western Church rephrases them to have been three Persians, and a 7th-century tradition names them Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthasar.—C.E.

Magic, pretended art of producing marvelous physical phenomena through the intervention of spiritual beings and of influencing the course of nature by bringing into operation some occult controlling principle. Magic which made use of the invocation of evil spirits was always regarded as sinful, but natural magic, i.e., that which did not involve the aid of personal spirits, was regarded in the Middle Ages as a legitimate department of study. Books dealing with magic were forbidden by Bull of Leo XIII, 1897.

Magisterium (Sylvester IV), antipope (1105–11).

He was elected in opposition to Pope Paschal II by the imperialistic party who supported Henry IV's claim to the right of investiture. The election took place during the Truce of God when the pope's followers were unarmed, but on the following day when Paschal advanced on the city Maginulf fled from Rome to the protection of the German nobles. He wandered through Italy and Germany with the emperor's friends but finally submitted to the pope and was allowed to end his days under the protection of Werner, Duke of Spoleto.—C.E.

Magisterium (Lat., magister), the office of teacher. In theology, it refers to the teaching office of the Church. This office was communicated to the Church formally by Christ, when He said: "Going, therefore teach ye all nations" (Matt., 28). The Church exercises this teaching power infallibly in matters of faith and morals, in virtue of the promise of Divine assistance given her by Christ, "And be­hold I am with you all days even to the consummation of the world" (Matt., 28). This command to teach and this promise of special assistance were given to the Apostles only. Therefore the actual holders of the teaching office in the Church are the pope and the bishops as the successors of St. Peter and the other Apostles. The pope and the bishops constitute the magisterium of the Church, or the Ecclesia Docens (the Church Teaching). The prerogative of teaching is exercised ordinarily, i.e., in the ordinary daily teaching of the Church, by the individual bishops. This goes on uninterruptedly throughout the years. The individual bishop as such (the Bp. of Rome, successor of St. Peter, excepted) is not infallible. When all the bishops in the world agree in their teaching on a particular doctrine of faith or morals, which is not solemnly defined, this constitutes an infallible teaching of the Ecclesia Docens, because the Church as a whole cannot fall into error in these matters. The pope enjoys the prerogative of infallibility in his official capacity as successor of St. Peter, and hence Supreme Pastor of the Church. When the pope solemnly defines a truth to be de fide for the whole Church (see Infallibility) this is called a solemn exercise of the magisterium. The pope may exercise this solemn prerogative either in conjunction with an ecumenical council, or on his own authority. This magisterial power of the Church Teaching involves a corresponding obligation on the part of the Church Hearing (Ecclesia Docens): "He that heareth you, heareth Me" (Luke, 10). The faithful are obliged in virtue of the infallible teaching power (magisterium) of the Church Teaching, whether this power is exercised ordinarily or solemnly, to submit their understanding to the teaching of the Church. This is called the assent of faith.

(M. D. MCL)

Magna Carta (Lat., Great Charter), the chart-ter of liberties wrested from King John of England at Runnymede by the revolting barons, June, 1215. It was revised and reissued, 1216, 1217, and 1225. Its chief purpose was to protect the feudal rights of the baronage, especially in the matter of dues, servvice, and the administration of justice, though clauses in favor of the Church, merchants, and villeins were included. The supposed guarantees of habeas corpus, universal trial by jury, and no taxation without representation have been read into the Charter by later generations. The value of Magna Carta to political progress lay not so much in the individual clauses as in the general check it represented to absolutism. The Abp. of Canterbury, Stephen Langton, played a prominent part in the negotiations leading up to the drafting and acceptance of Magna Carta and it contained five guarantees of value to the Church. Article I promised respect for all the Church's rights and liberties, and in particular freedom of elections. Article XIV assured bishops and abbots of a place in the Common Council. Article XXII provided that fines imposed on the clergy should not fall upon their revenue from ecclesiastical benefits. Article XXVII confirmed the Church in the function of supervising the distribution of the chantry profits, while the feudal right of intestate. Article XLI gave clerics, as well as most others, freedom to leave England and return at will. The last two clauses were omitted from the revised Charter. Pope Innocent III annulled the Charter, suspended Langton, and excommunicated the barons. The Pontiff objected to the means used to force the Charter from the king who was a Crusader and a vassal of the Holy See. But the policy of Rome was not permanent. The suspension of Langton was lifted, a papal legate sanctioned the reissue of the Charter, 1216 and 1217, and violations of the Charter were punished by ecclesiastical censures.—C.E.; McKechnie, Magna Carta, Glasgow, 1914; Gasquet, Henry the Third and the Church, Lond., 1910; Davis, England under the Normans and Angevins, 1066–1272, N. Y., 1928. (J. M. E.)

Magna Dei Potentiae, or O Sovericin Lord of Nature's Might, hymn for Thursday at Vespers.
It was probably written by Pope St. Gregory the Great (540-604). Fourteen translations are in existence; the English title given above is by W. Court­hope.—Britt.

Magnificat, The, or Canticle of the Blessed Virgin Mary, canticle beginning Magnificat animus mea Dominum (My soul doth magnify the Lord). One of the three "evangelical canticles," it is included in the Roman Breviary for Vespers daily throughout the year and is often sung on solemn occasions. It was recited by the Blessed Virgin on her visit to Elizabeth after the Angel Gabriel had announced that Mary was to become the mother of Christ (Luke, 1). In style it resembles the Canticle of Anna (1 Kings, 1-10).—C.E.; Coloridge, The Nine Months, Lond., 1885.

Magog, mā'gog, name of an ancient kingdom, concerning the identity of which there is difference of opinion: according to some it was Lydia. It is repeatedly mentioned in Ezekiel (38-39). In the Apocalypse King Magog and his people, from the land of Magog are on the side of Antichrist (see Goz). Magog is also the name of a son of Japhet (Gen., 10).

Maguire, John Aloysisus (1851-1920), Abp. of Glasgow, b. Glasgow; d. there. Ordained priest 1873, he was consecrated auxiliary bishop, 1894, and became archbishop, 1902. His power of swaying a large multitude by oratory was demonstrated at the Eucharistic Congress, London, 1908, when he quieted the thousands of assembled Catholics infuriated at the government's interference with the proposed procession of the Blessed Sacrament in the streets of Westminster.

Magyarok Vasarnapja, the official weekly organ of the various Magyar (Hungarian) Catholic parishes in the United States, published in Cleveland, Ohio, in the Magyar language; founded, 1900; circulation, 14,022.

Mai, Angelo (1782-1854), cardinal and philologist, b. Schilpario, Italy; d. Albano. He entered the Society of Jesus, in 1811 was appointed to the Ambrosian Library, Milan, and after leaving the Jesuits, 1819, was appointed to the Vatican library and in 1838 created cardinal. He is noted for his discoveries of new classical texts, which he published in a large series of "Anecdotae"; they include Cicero's "De republica," an important Greek manuscript of the Bible, and unpublished pages of more than 350 authors.—C.E.

Maid of Kent. See Barton, Elizabeth.

Maillard, Antoine Simon, French missionary among the Acadians and Miemacs, d. Halifax, Nova Scotia, 1762. His influence over the Indians was so great that the English allowed him to remain with them and gave him a pension and church in Halifax with religious liberty for his flock. He was the first white man to master the Micmac tongue, and composed an alphabet, grammar, and dictionary of the language in addition to writing several devotional works in it.—C.E.

Maine, the 38th state of the United States in size, 35th in population, and the 23rd state to be admitted to the Union (15 March, 1820); area, 35,340 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 768,014; Catholic population (1928), 172,863. The first Mass offered within the limits of Maine, and of New England, was said on Ste. Croix Island (now De Monts), 1604, by Rev. Nicholas Aubry, a priest who had accompanied the Sieur de Monts in an expedition to claim land for France. The settlement was soon abandoned and nothing remains but a map of Samuel de Champlain to indicate the site of the first chapel. In 1611 Mass was offered on a small island in the mouth of the Kennebec by Fr. Pierre Biard, S.J. A permanent settlement was attempted, 1613, by the Sieur de La Sausseaye, accompanied by Fr. Ennemond Massé, S.J., Fr. Biard, Fr. Quentin, and Brother Gilbert du Thet, at Saint Sauveur near the present Bar Harbor; but the colony was attacked after a few months by Samuel Argall of Virginia on a claim that the territory was English, and the missionaries were cruelly dispersed. More lasting missions were established by the Capuchins, 1633, at Pentagoet on the Penobscot (the present Castine), and by the Jesuits, 1646, under Fr. Gabriel Druillettes at Norridgewock (the present Skowhegan). In 1668 a mission was found at Castine with an inscription showing it to be from the corner-stone of a chapel built, 1648. In 1684 Fr. Louis Thury of the Quebec Seminary built the church of St. Ann on the site of Oldtown, a parish which still exists, the oldest in New England. The mission stations on the Penobscot and the Kennebec were destroyed by expeditions of English soldiers sent for that purpose from Massachusetts colony through political enmity in 1704, 1722, and 1724. During the last Fr. Sébastien Râle, S.J., was brutally killed when he insisted on remaining with his charges at Norridgewock. The first churches for white settlers were built at Damariscotta (St. Patrick's), 1808, by the future Bp. Cheverus, and at Whitefield, 1822, by Rev. Denis Ryan. The Diocese of Portland (q.v.) embraces the State. Catholic influence on the place-names of the state is shown in the following: Carmel, St. Agatha, St. Albans, St. David, St. Francis, St. George, St. John. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Church Type</th>
<th>Number</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Catholics</td>
<td>148,530</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baptists</td>
<td>32,637</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>22,571</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congregational Churches</td>
<td>21,641</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Protestant Episcopal Church</td>
<td>5,628</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Universalists</td>
<td>5,034</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Free Baptists</td>
<td>2,955</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advent Christian Church</td>
<td>2,575</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Unitarians</td>
<td>2,448</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All Other Denominations</td>
<td>11,354</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Church Membership</td>
<td>255,293</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

—C.E.; Shea.

Maintenon, Françoise, Marquise de (1635-1719), b. Noint, France; d. St. Cyr. She was the granddaughter of Agrippa d'Aubigné, and was born in prison, where her father Constant d'Aubigné was incarcerated for conspiracy. She married Charles de Sallé, Count of Scarron (1562), and later found an entrance to Court circles as tutor of Mme. de Montespan's illegitimate royal children. She was ennobled by Louis XIV, who married her secretly (1684) after the death of Queen Marie-Thérèse. For the next thirty-one years she played an important part in French politics, her influence being felt particularly in religious matters, which earned her the hatred of the Protestants and Jansenists; she has been erroneously blamed for the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. It was largely due to her efforts that Louis XIV amended his conduct and that the licentiousness of his court was curbed. Her love of the poor was unbounded, but her greatest glory was her interest in the education of young girls, for whom she founded a celebrated school at St. Cyr. Her writings give her a unique position among French literary women. Her tomb was desecrated by the French revolutionaries (1794), who mutilated her corpse and cast it into a hole in the cemetery. —C.E.

Mainz (Lat., MOGUNTACUM; Fr., Mayence), city in Rhine-Hesse and former principality of the Holy Roman Empire. Originally a Celtic settlement, Mainz became a Roman camp, 38 B.C. Christianized about the second century, it was made an archiepiscopal see in 780. The principality grew in size until it extended (on both sides of the Rhine) over an area of 3200 sq. m., representing a large ecclesiastical administration. In 863 the office of Archelancellof Germany was conferred on the prince-bishop, and in 1263 he was appointed one of the seven electors of the emperor and convener of the electoral college. Mainz became a free imperial city, 1244, and the leader of the formation of the League of Rhenish Towns, 1254. During the Thirty Years' War the Swedes conquered the city in 1631, and the French in 1644 and 1688. The electorate was secularized in 1803, the territory being divided among France, Prussia, Hesse, and other provinces. The city possesses a Romanesque cathedral begun in 978, destroyed by fire, and restored in the 12th, 13th, and 14th centuries. It contains the tombs of three electoral princes, St. Boniface, and Frauenlob the Minnesinger. The university (founded, 1477), and the Gothic church of St. Stephen (1257-1328) are other noteworthy buildings.

Maisonneuve, Paul de Chomedey de (d. 1676), founder of Montreal, b. Champagne, France; d. Paris. He was sent in command of a company to found Ville-Marie on the Island of Montreal (1642). The settlement was constantly menaced by the Indians, yet for twenty-five years he remained at his post. He attended to the spiritual and temporal wants of his colony, and left it well fortified and civilly organized. Giving it his own rents and dues he returned to France empty-handed. —C.E., XVI, 59.

Maistre, Joseph Marie de, Count (1753-1821), political philosopher, b. Chambéry, France; d. Turin. He passed fourteen years at St. Petersburg as Sardinian plenipotentiary. He was a profound thinker and ranks very high in French letters. He had an intense love of religion, a firm belief in authority, and a detestation of the 18th-century rationalism, as is evidenced in his "Considerations sur la France," "Du pape," and "Les soirées de St. Petersburg."

—Xavier de (1763-1852), romance writer, brother of the preceding, b. Chambéry, France; d. St. Petersburg. He was the author of a few charming booklets, written with artless grace and spontaneous wit: "Voyage autour de ma Chambre," "Le lépreux de la Cité d'Aoste," and "La Jeune Siberienne." —C.E.

Malacca, Diocese of, Straits Settlements, comprises the southern portion of the Malay Peninsula; established 1888; suffragan of Pondicherry; entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, and diocesan clergy. The Dominican Fr. Bermudez and St. Francis Xavier were missionaries of the region. A diocese from 1557-1838, George of St. Lucia, O.P., was first bishop. Reestablished 1888, its bishops since then have been: Edward Gusnier (1888-96), René Fée (1896-1904), and Emile Barillon (1904); residence at Singapore. Churches and chapels, 110; priests, 38; religious women, 223; schools, 49; institutions, 27; Catholics, 52,161.—C.E.

Malachi, Malakhi, My angel), last of the Minor Prophets. The four (in the Hebrew, three) chapters have no title, for Malakhi is probably not a proper name. Septuagint reads: "My angel" and Targum Jonathan paraphrases: "My angel (messenger) whose name is Esdras." This is probably correct. The book certainly dates from that time (after 450 B.C.). The style differs from other prophecies by use of the dialogue. The first part reprimands the priests for neglect of Divine worship and foretells a new "clean oblation which shall be offered from the rising of the sun even unto the going down” (1). According to the Council of Trent this means the Mass (sess. 23, cap. 1). Next it inveighs the people for mixed marriages, divorce and other evils (2). The question of the people: “Where is the God of judgment?” (2) is answered in the second part by the promise of the Messias the “Son of justice” (4). He will be preceded by the forerunner (3; cf. Mark, 1). The prophecy aptly concludes with the promise of an Elias, who “shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children and the heart of the children to their fathers.” Thus O.T. prophecy ends as N.T. prophecy begins; compare the message of Gabriel to Zacharias (Luke, 1).—C.E.

Malachy (MAELMAHDEOCH O'MORGAIR), SAINT, confessor (1094-1148), Abp. of Armagh, b. Armagh, Ireland; d. Clairvaux, France. After ordination he studied liturgy and theology at Lismore, and was Abbot of Bangor, Bp. of Connor (1124), and Abp. of Armagh (1122), where he restored church discipline, which had become relaxed through the system of lay abbots, and, on resigning the See of Armagh, he introduced the Austin canons; returning from a visit to Rome he introduced the monks of Clairvaux to Melflfont, 1142. He died in the arms of St. Bernard while on a second journey to the Eternal City. Represented in his cell, instructing a king who has laid his crown upon the ground. Canonized, 1199. His relics were preserved in the cathedral at Troyes. Feast, 3 Nov. In 1590 there was discovered in Rome a collection of 112 mystical mottoes which were said to have been written down by St. Malachy during his visit to Rome in 1139, after he had received them in a vision. They purport to be brief descriptions of all the future popes from the time of the vision to the end of the world. The authenticity and the applicability of these mottoes have been questioned, and many consider them a forgery of 1590; but from the end of the 18th century to the present day there has been a number of remarkably apposite mottoes. The remaining prophecies are seven in number. This does not mean to indicate that the end of the world will occur in the reign of the seventh pope from today; the last prophecy is couched in special terms, viz., “In the final persecution of the Holy Roman Church, there will reign Peter the Roman, who will feed his flock amid many tribulations, after which the seven-hilled city will be destroyed, and the dreadful Judge will judge the people. The End.” This means that Peter the Roman is to be the last pope; but there may be an indefinite number of popes between him and his predecessor De Gloria Olivae (from the glory of the olive-tree).—C.E.; Butler, Book of the Popes, N. Y., 1905.

Malagrida, GABRIEL (1689-1761), Jesuit theologian and exegete, b. Casas de Reina, Spain; d. Rome. He taught with great distinction at Paris and Bourges. His commentaries on the Gospels are classics.—C.E.

Malebranche, NICOLAS (1638-1715), philosopher, b. Paris; d. there. After joining the Oratory he engaged in church history and scriptural studies till his activities were turned to philosophy by the “Traité de l’homme,” of Descartes. In his “Recherche de la vérité” he set forth the fundamentals of his own system, advocating occasionalism, maintaining that sensation and imagination are not produced in us by things but by God. His system, which would seem to lead towards pantheism and make God the author of sin, was attacked by Antoine Arnauld and Bossuet and was held in disfavor at Rome.—C.E.

Malediction, the announcement of a temporal loss or of eternal loss as a punishment for sin made by God Himself or by one speaking in the name of God; as in Genesis, 3, and Deuteronomy, 11. It may mean also the wishing of evil to a person from a sentiment of hatred or the like, against that person, or from a natural resentment on account of some offense deserving punishment. It was a widespread belief in antiquity that malediction no less than benediction was efficacious of itself, when uttered by one in authority (Num., 22; Gen., 9; 27). For a son to utter a malediction against his parents was a crime punishable with death (Ex., 21; Lev., 20; Prov., 20; 30).—C.E.

Malice (Lat., maleficia, malitium, evil, injury, resentment), the evil of a conscious and deliberate transgression of the law of God; contempt of the Divine Author of the law; a denying God the reverence and service due Him; the real essence of sin. (ED.)

Mallinckrodt, HERMANN VON (1821-74), statesman, b. Minden, Westphalia; d. Berlin. Entering the Prussian Parliament, 1852, he assisted in founding the Catholic Fraction, later called the Center Party, to defend Catholic rights. He opposed the war with Austria and the annexation of Hanover and Hesse. After 1870 he shared the Center leadership with Reichensperger and Windthorst. He was an energetic and successful reformer, issuing Windthorst's wit. His sister, Pauline (1817-81), founded at Paderborn the Sisters of Christian Charity which she introduced into the United States and Chile.—C.E.

Mallory, STEPHEN RUSSELL (1813-73), lawyer and statesman, b. Trinidad, West Indies; d. Pensacola, Fla. He took part in the Seminole War and later represented Florida in the U. S. Senate. In the Civil War he joined the Confederates, distinguishing himself as Secretary of the Navy by building the entire Confederate navy.—C.E.

Malmesbury, town, Wiltshire, England, site of a Benedictine abbey founded about the middle of the 7th century by an Irish monk, Maldulf (or Maldulf). The monastery was surrendered, 1589, and only a small part of the ruins are standing.—C.E.

Malory, Sir Thomas, compiler of the “Morte d’Arthur,” the earliest piece of literary English prose. Nothing is known of him except his name, his knighthood, and that his work was finished in 1469.—C.E.

Malpighi, Marcello (1628-94), founder of comparative physiology, b. Crevalcore, Italy; d. Rome. He taught at Pisa, Messina, Bologna, and in the papal medical school, Rome. He is chiefly noted for his discourses regarding the skin, spleen, and liver, and wrote also on the anatomy of plants.—C.E.

Malta, self-governing colony of the British Empire, comprising the islands of Malta, Gozo, Comino, and the islets of Cominotto and Filfla, in the Mediterranean Sea, south of Sicily; area, 122 sq. m.; pop., 224,680. The foundation of the Church in Malta (Mellita) is accredited to St. Paul, in Acts, 28, which also mentions St. Publius, martyred, 125, traditionally the first bishop. The islands came under Spanish rule in the 13th century and for over two centuries progressed rapidly, owing chiefly to the labors of Franciscan, Dominican, and Augustinian Fathers. In 1298 the Knights of St. John settled in Malta, which seven years later was bestowed upon them by the Emperor Charles V. There followed a glorious period in the history of the island, for it became one of the principal strongholds of Christianity against the Turks. With the decline of the Ottoman power, the Order of St. John began to diminish and by the close of the 18th century had lost its influence. Ecclesiastical leadership has always been strong in Malta, and the place occupied by religion in the lives of the people is demonstrated not only by the number of clergy and religious men and women, but also by the frequency of religious feasts and processions. The colony includes the dioceses of Malta and Gozo (qq.v.).

Malta, Diocese of, comprises the island of Malta, directly dependent on the Holy See. Christianity was established there at an early date; St. Paul preached in the island and the first bishop, St. Publius, lived in the 1st century. Maurus Caruana was appointed bishop, 1915, to succeed Pietro Pace (d. 1914). He is also titular Abp. of Rhodes. Statistics (1921): parishes, 46; priests, secular, 510; priests, regular, 248; religious women, 111; seminaries, 1; high schools, 4; elementary schools, 102; institutions, 12; Catholics, 200,000.—C.E.

Malta, Knights of. See Hospitalers of St. John of Jerusalem.

Maltese Cross, a cross with four spreading or triangular arms of equal length, which was the badge of the military and religious order of the Knights of Malta. (J. F. S.)

Mambre, Vale of, a plateau in Hebron, in Chanaan. When Abraham was dismissed from Egypt by the Pharao, he went with his nephew Lot towards Bethel, where they separated, and Abraham “came and dwelt by the vale of Mambre, which is in Hebron, and he built there an altar to the Lord” (Gen., 12). There dwelt his posterity, and there he was buried, in the cave of Machpelah, with Sara, Jacob, Zebeece, and Lia.

Mame, Alfred Henri Amand (1811-03), printer and publisher, b. Tours, France; d. there. Entering his uncle Amand Mame’s publishing firm at Tours, he conceived and carried out for the first time the idea of grouping together all the industries connected with the making and distribution of books. His success was complete. In addition to numberless liturgical and devotional works, the firm excelled in illustrated books, and published a celebrated library for Christian youth. Mame organized a profit-sharing scheme for his workers in 1874 and established a pension scheme for his employees, supported from his private purse.—C.E.

Mamertine Prison, generally accepted as the one mentioned by Livy (I, 33), lies beneath the church of S. Giuseppe dei Falegnami, Via di Marforio, Rome. According to tradition in the Acts of St. Processus and St. Martinianus (6th century), St. Peter was imprisoned in the lower chamber of Mamertine where he baptized these saints, his jailers.—C.E.

Mamertus, Saint, confessor (d. c. 475), Abp. of Vienne, b. near Lyons, France; d. Vienne. He was distinguished both for secular and theological learning and was involved, 403, in a dispute with Pope Hilarius regarding the privileges of the See of Arles. He is best known as the founder of the Rogation Processions. During his episcopate the relics of St. Forreolus were discovered and interred in the church which Mamertus built in honor of the saint. His remains were burned at Orleans by the Huguenots. Feast, 11 May.—C.E.; Butler.

Mammon, a word of Semitic origin, probably derived from the word meaning “what is trusted in.” On St. Augustine’s authority the same name for riches is found in Aramaic, Syriac, Samaritan, and Punic languages. In Matthew, 6, and Luke, 16, it is personified and opposed to God. The term “mammon of iniquity” (Luke, 16) is applied to riches because of their tendency to lead men into sin.—C.E.; Thayer, Greek-English Lexicon, N. Y., 1889; Callan, The Four Gospels, N. Y., 1917; Fonck, tr. Leahy, The Parables of the Gospel, N. Y., 1914; Gesenius, Hebrew and English Lexicon, Bost., 1860. (r. k.)

Man (A.-S., mon, a person). Common sense philosophy defines man as a rational animal, or as a being composed of a body and a rational soul. The fact that man’s soul is rational leads us to the conclusion that it is also spiritual and by its very nature immortal. Also from the rationality of man’s soul flows his freedom of will. Nothing that science has discovered in its search during the last decades contradicts these conclusions. Philosophy adds that the soul of each individual man is produced by a creative act of God’s omnipotence, and that man’s ultimate end is the glory of God. What philosophy proves to the trained mind by reasoning, the child learns easily through faith in Divine Revelation. But Revelation also adds the fact of man’s fall, which reason only dimly suspects. Of man’s redemption through the Incarnation and Death of the Second Person of the Trinity, of the institution of the Church, which is commanded to carry on the work of redemption till the end of time. Revelation also allows us a glimpse into the future. At the end of time, all the dead will rise again to receive at the universal judgment the reward or punishment for their deeds.—C.E.; Maher, Psychology, N. Y., 1909; Bradley, Appearance and Reality, Lond., 1899.

Manahen, Saint, confessor (1st century). He belonged to the household of Herod Antipas, and is thought to have given St. Luke information regarding Antipas and other members of that family. He may have been a disciple of Christ, and was probably one of the founders of the Antiochene church. He sent Sts. Paul and Barnabas on their first missionary journey (Acts, 15). Feast, 24 May.—C.E.

Manasses (Heb., he that causes to forget), one of the twelve tribes of Israel. At the time of the census taken in the Desert of Sinai, the tribe numbered 32,200 men "that were able to go forth to war" (Num., 1), the smallest number among all the tribes; but at the second census, taken in the Plains of Moab, 52,700 men "twelve years old and upward" are recorded (Num., 26). Moses assigned a part of territory east of the Jordan to one half of the tribe (Num., 32), and Josue gave a section in Palestine proper to the remaining half, the boundaries of which are given in Josue, 17.—C.E.

Mance, Jeanne (1606-73), b. Nogent-le-Roi, France; d. Montreal. She founded the famous Hôtel-Dieu (1644) at Montreal, to care for the sick of that newly-established colony.—C.E.

Manchester, Diocese of, embraces the State of New Hampshire; area, 9365 sq. m.; suffragan of Boston. Bishops: Denis M. Bradley (1884-1903); John B. Delany (1904-06); George A. Guertin (1907). Churches, 120; priests, secular, 188; priests, regular, 38; religious women, 693; college, 1; academies, 3; high schools, 13; parochial schools, 60; pupils in parochial schools, 21,613; institutions, 15; Catholics, 149,200.

Mancheville, Jean de, alleged author of a celebrated medieval book of travels. The real writer, Jean de Bourgogne (d. c. 1372), whose journeys were limited to Egypt, adopted the name Mandeville in describing his supposed wanderings through Africa and Asia, as he was plagiarizing most of his work from the writings of the early Dominican and Franciscan missionaries and older authors.—C.E.

Mangalore, Diocese of, India, comprises the civil district of South Kanara; erected into diocese, 1887; suffragan of Bombay. The Franciscans who arrived in the 16th century were the pioneer missionaries of the region. The Oratorians, Joseph Vas labored there (1685-1712). Bishops: Nicholas Pagani (1887-95), Abundius Cavadini (1895-1910), Paul Perini (1910-23), Valerian de Souza (1928); residence at Codialboil. Churches, 61; chapels, 8; priests, secular, 82; priests, regular, 43; religious women, 163; seminary, 1; educational institutions (other than elementary), 10; elementary schools, 90; institutions, 14; Catholics, 112,000.

Mangan, James Clarence (1803-49), poet, b. Dublin; d. there. After working for several years as a clerk in a scrivener's office, and for an attorney, he began in 1831 to write verses for the Journal of the Comet Club. He later contributed to the "Nation" inaugurated in 1842, to the "United Irishman," the "Irish Tribute," "The Irishman," and the "Dublin Irish Catholic Magazine" under fantastic signatures. The chief editions of his poems (O'Donoghue ascribes between 800 and 900 to him) are Louise Guiney's (1897) and the Centenary edition (Dublin and London, 1903).—C.E.; O'Donoghue, Life and Writings of James Clarence Mangan, Dub., 1897.

Manhattan College, New York City, N. Y., founded 1853; conducted by the Christian Brothers; preparatory school; schools of arts and sciences, engineering, commerce; professors, 52; students, 915; degrees conferred in 1929, 148.

Manicheism, a heresy instituted in the 3rd century by a Persian dreamer variously named Mani, Manes, Manichaeus, who visioned himself a legate from God to introduce a religious and moral reformation. In the 4th and 5th centuries this heresy took a westward course and became dangerous to Christianity, finding a home especially in Prosconsular Africa, where many of the educated classes embraced its teachings. Briefly these teachings are: a dual principle of creation, the one good and from God, the other evil and from an antagonistic power, namely Satan and the bad angels who seek to destroy the work of God. Man's spirit is from God and therefore good, his body from Satan and therefore evil. There is a constant struggle between these two opposite forces. The spirit triumphs over the powers of darkness only in so far as it rises superior to the body. Furthermore, this heresy boasted to have an answer to every question and to explain the deepest mysteries of the Christian religion. It was this boast that blinded St. Augustine for nine years, setting him thinking that Manichaeism "would free us from all error, and bring us to God by pure reason alone." Association with the leaders of this heresy opened his eyes and he saw that, despite the boast of their lips, "their hearts were void of truth." Pen in hand, at intervals between 394-420 A.D., he wrote forty books of refutation, among which the thirty-three against Faustus are worthy of special note.—C.E. (A. L. L.)

Manifestation of Conscience, a practise in many religious orders and congregations by which subjects reveal the state of their conscience to the superior, to the spiritual director, or to the confessor, in order that he may know them more intimately, and thus be able to further their spiritual progress. It consists in revealing the affections and inclinations of the soul towards the various virtues and vices; in exposing temptations, trials, and difficulties experienced in the spiritual life in order that the individual may receive help and guidance in the way of perfection. Canon 530 of the Code of Canon Law forbids all religious superiors to induce their subjects in any way to make such a manifestation of conscience. At the same time it allows subjects freely to open the state of their souls to their superiors, and encourages them to comply with their superiors with filial confidence, and also, provided the superiors be priests, to expose to them their
MANNING

Manila, Archdiocese of, Philippine Islands, embraces the city of Manila, the province of Bataan, Bulacan, Cavite, Nueva Ecija, Pampanga, Bataan, Zambales, and part of Tarlac and Pangasinan, area, 9276 sq. m.; established, 1581, as diocese, and 1585, as archdiocese. Supplanted sees: Calbayog, Jaro, Nome de Jesus, Lipa, Nueva Caceres, Nueva Segovia, Tuguegarao, and Zamboanga. The following religious orders were represented in the diocese at an early date: Augustinians (1565), Franciscains (1577), Jesuits (1581), Dominicans (1587), and Recollect Fathers (1600). Domingo de Salazar (d. 1594) was the first bishop, his successors including Miguel de Benavides (1603-05), founder of the University of Santo Tomas at Manila, Pedro Payo (1576-89), who built the cathedral, Jeremiah Hart, first American archbishop there (1903-16), and Michael O'Doherty (1916). Priests, regular, 129; parishes with resident priests, 145; other parishes, 43; educational institutions, 62; Catholics, 1,450,000.—C.E.

Manila Observatory, the official "Philippine Weather Bureau" with a main station at Manila and numerous climatological sub-stations throughout the Philippines, and including one at Mt. Mirage about 5000 ft. above sea-level, It was founded, 1865, by Fr. Frederic Faura, S.J., meteorologist, who made the first prediction of the existence, duration, and course of a typhoon in the Far East, and whose subsequent contributions to the knowledge of them were invaluable in averting typhoon disasters. The meteorological service of the Philippines was reorganized by Fr. José Algue, S.J., inventor of the barocyclonometer (q.v.) in 1901. Observations are made every hour at Manila and Baguio; telegraphic weather reports are received at stated intervals from the various sub-stations, and twice a day from stations in Japan, China, Formosa, and Indo-China; and warnings of typhoons are issued to and from it. The work is carried on under the Jesuits, assisted by natives.—C.E.

Maniple (Lat., little bundle, because originally a folded handkerchief), ornamental vestment, a silk embroidered band about a yard long and three inches wide, placed on the left arm of bishops, deacons, priests, and bishops during Mass, so that it falls in equal lengths on both sides. The prayer said when putting it on styles it the maniple of tears and labor.—C.E.; MacMahon, Liturgical Catechism, Dub., 1926.

Mann, Horace K. (1859-1928), educator, b. London, d. Rome. He was educated at Ushaw, was ordained in 1886, taught for many years at Oxford and was elected a Fellow of Merton. He received Anglican orders and in 1833 was chosen rector of Lavington, Sussex, where he married Caroline Sargent (d. 1837), and in 1841 was appointed Archdeacon of Chichester. For many years he labored, reforming abuses and succoring the poor. He became a leader of the High Church Party, but the discussions of the Tractarian movement were bringing forth doctrinal and historical difficulties that were already shaking his faith in Anglicanism. The Gorham Judgment (1850) of the Privy Council associating the Established Church with downright heresy brought about a crisis and he became a Catholic, 6 April, 1851, and was ordained a few months later. In 1857 he established the Oblates of St. Charles and was named provost of the Westminster Metropolitan chapter with the majority of which, supported by Abp. Errington, he was soon unwillingly involved in controversy. On 8 June, 1865, he was consecrated as successor to Cardinal Wiseman. He labored some years as editor of The Catholic World, and then, after his replies to the opponents of the Vatican Council. To his zeal in the cause of elementary religious education he added in his later days his efforts on behalf of the laboring classes, the poor, and the outcast. His League of the Cross advanced the cause of temperance, and in 1889 he successfully mediated between the employers and workers in the great London Dock strike. In addition to his published sermons, "Eternal Priesthood" and "Temporal Mission of the Holy Ghost" are notable contributions from his pen.—C.E.; Purcell, Life of Cardinal Manning, N. Y., 1896.

Manning, Robert (fl. 1288-1338), Gilbertine canon, b. Bourne, Lincolnshire. His "Handlyng Synne" and "Lytte Boke of Englyshe" are mediæval translations from the French, did much to make the East-Midland speech the literary dialect of English.—C.E.
Man of Sin, antichrist, as described by Paul in 2 Thessalonians; interpreted by founders of Protestantism as descriptive of the pope, and so explained by Protestant writers of the time on the Continent and in England.—Newman, The Protestant Idea of Antichrist, in Essays Critical and Historical, II, N. Y., 1885. (ED.)

Man of Sorrows, Christ, according to Isaiah, 53, 3.

Manresa, town in Spain near which is the cave to which Ignatius Loyola retired after his conversion and where he began the composition of the “Spiritual Exercises”; now a place of pilgrimage. The name is frequently used for novitiates and houses of retreat. (Ed.)

Mansard (Mansart), Nicolas François (1598-1666), architect, b. Paris; d. there. An exponent of the French Renaissance at its best, he erected several châteaux and hotels distinguished for simplicity and essential beauty of construction. His best works are Maison Lafayette and the plan for the abbey church of Val-de-Grâce which he executed, on a smaller scale, in the chapel of the Château de Fresnes. The curbed roof with large dormer windows was named mansard from his extensive use of it. —Jules Hardouin (1646-1708), architect, grandnephew of preceding, b. Paris; d. Marly. Combining the style of his uncle with extreme classical adaptations, he achieved Baroque effects and stressed elegance rather than grandeur. He completed the Château de Versailles with Leveau and designed the Grand Trianon and Colonnades. His best work is the church of the Invalides, Paris, modeled upon St. Peter's in Rome.—C.E.

Mantellate (Lat., dimin. of mantellum, cloak), outer vestment reaching to knees, open in front, with slits instead of sleeves, in color according to season, worn by cardinals, bishops and certain other prelates.—C.E.

Mantum (Lat., Spanish cloak), the papal mantle. It differs little from an ordinary cope, except that it is red in color, and longer.

Manu, Laws of, English term generally applied to the “Manava Dharmasastra,” a metrical Sanskrit compendium of ancient sacred laws and customs of Brahminism. It consists of 2684 verses, divided into 12 chapters, and in its present metrical form, dates from about the 1st or 2nd century of the Christian era. The content, which is supposed to have come from Brahma, may be of greater antiquity.—C.E.

Manuel Chrysoloras (c. 1350-1415), first teacher of Greek in Italy, b. Constantinople; d. Constance, Germany. He was Byzantine ambassador to Venice, taught Greek at Florence, Milan, and Pavia, and assisted Pope John XXIII in his efforts to end the Eastern Schism. He translated Plato and compiled the first modern Greek grammar.—C.E.

Manuscripts, Illuminated. A large number of MSS. are covered with painted ornaments in the form of initial letters or of borders, of marginal and full page paintings; and some rolls of parchment consist entirely of paintings. They are called illuminations or miniatures. The best examples of this art are on Egyptian papyri. It was practised by the Greek artists of Alexandria. The Syro-Mesopotamian School arose in the 8th century in the Christian convents of the East and its influence spread to Armenia. The Mussulman schools of the 13th century excelled in geometric designs and the Persian painters attempted landscape and even the human face. The 9th century is the golden age of Byzantine illumination which combines Hellenic and Oriental influences. All the MSS. of the Slavic countries belong to the Byzantine school and also show direct influence of the Orient. In the West the earliest school was the Irish which excelled in decorative work. The “Book of Kells” (7th century) is a famous example. Irish monks brought the art to England and the Continent. Under Charlemagne the art flourished in the monasteries and a style of vigorous coloring and luxurious ornamentation was introduced. In the 11th century there is the beginning of naturalism and anachronism. More grace is shown in the treatment of figures. In the 13th century studios of illuminators arose to supply the demand for profane literature which were illuminated. A new school in the 14th century introduced garlands copied from nature and scenes from life. A transformation took place in 15th century through the influence of Flemish painters; real landscapes are used as backgrounds, figures are treated with fidelity to nature, and all details of furniture, clothing, etc., are portrayed. The invention of printing and wood-engraving was fatal to the art of illumination.—C.E.; Middleton, Illuminated Manuscripts in Classical and Medieval Times, Camb., 1892.

Manuscripts of the Bible. See Versions of the Bible.

Manuterge (Lat., manu, hand; tergo, to wipe), towel used liturgically by priest in sacristy or at Lavabo of Mass.—C.E.
Manutius, Aldus (1450-1515), scholar and printer, b. Bassiano, near Velletri, Italy; d. Venice. He established the celebrated Aldine printing press at Venice, which issued during his lifetime thirty-three first editions of the Greek classics, most of them printed in the Aldine italics adapted from Petrarch's handwriting. He also established the New Aldine Academy of Hellenists, 1500, which compiled the first Latin and Greek lexicon.—C.E.

Manzoni, Alessandro (1785-1873), poet and novelist, b. Milan; d. Brusoglio, near Milan. Most of his creative work was done before the age of forty-two. His early poems belong to the classical school of Vincenzo Monti, but from 1810, when he returned to the Church on the conversion of his wife, he consecrated himself to religion and patriotism, and became the leader of the Romanticists. His ode on the death of Napoleon is one of the most popular Italian lyrics. Manzoni's fame was established abroad by "I Promessi Sposi," considered by Scott as the greatest romance of modern times.—C.E.

Map, Walter (c. 1140-c. 1208), ecclesiastic and author, b. Hereford, England. He was educated at the University of Paris, was at the English court, 1162, represented the king at the Third Lateran Council, 1179, and in 1187 became Archbishop of Oxford. He wrote "De Nigus Curialium" (Courtier's Triflings) and probably the French poem on which is based the earliest prose "Lancelot."—C.E.

Mappa Mundi, a topographical work of the 12th century containing lists of bishoprics and ecclesiastical counties of England, Wales, part of Scotland, executed by Gervase, a monk at Canterbury, and returned to the Church on the conversion of his wife, he consecrated himself to religion and piety, his exorcist, Peter, were seized and put to death claimed to be interpreting true Christianity as in the Silva Nigra, not far from Rome. Lucilla and Marcellian, Saint, Pope (308-309), b. Rome; d. in exile. After an interregnum of two years Marcellus became pope and undertook the ecclesiastical reorganization of Rome. He incurred the enmity of the Lapsi who wished to be permitted without doing the penance prescribed for their apostasy. Serious conflicts ensued, and the tyrant Maxentius seized the pope and sent him into exile, where he died. Feast, R. Cal., 16 Jan.—C.E.; Butler.

Marcellus I, Saint, Pope (296-304), b. Rome; with the cooperation of Leo I to deal with Monotheletism. He is venerated as a saint by the Orthodox Church on 17 Feb.—C.E.; Butler.

Marcellus II (Marcello Cervini degli Spannocchi), Pope (355), b. Montepulciano, Italy; d. Rome. Before his election he was prothonotary apostolic, papal secretary, adviser to Cardinal Farnese, who was charged with the temporal power of the Church, Bp. of Nicastro, cardinal, Bp. of Reggio, Bp. of Gubbio, legate to Emperor Charles V and to the Council of Trent, and Vatican Librarian. He was famous as a diplomat, administrator, dis-arms of mar­cilianism, and patron of schools, C. E. 309), b. Rome; d. in exile. After an interregnum of two years Mar­cellus became pope and undertook the ecclesiastical reorganization of Rome. He incurred the enmity of the Lapsi who wished to be permitted without doing the penance prescribed for their apostasy. Serious conflicts ensued, and the tyrant Maxentius seized the pope and sent him into exile, where he died. Feast, R. Cal., 16 Jan.—C.E.; Butler.

March (Roman god, Mars), month of special devotion to St. Joseph.

Marchi, Giuseppe (1795-1860), Jesuit archeologist, b. Tolmezzo, Italy; d. Rome. He proved the Christian origin of the catacombs, and was the master and guide of de Rossi. His chief works are: "Musei Kirchherniani inscriptiones" and "Monumenti delle arti cristiane primitive."—C.E.

Marcian (c. 390-457), Roman Emperor in the East, b. Thrace. Under Ardashir and Aspar he distinguished himself in the Persian and Hun campaigns. In 450 he married Empress Pulchera and was crowned by the Patriarch of Constantinople, the first instance of the Christian ceremony of coronation. His policy of moderation especially in taxation rendered his reign prosperous and happy. The chief religious event following his coronation was the Council of Chalcedon, which he assembled with the cooperation of Leo I to deal with Monophysitism. He is venerated as a saint by the Orthodox Church on 17 Feb.—C.E.

Marcian (b. c. A.D. 110), founder, in Rome A.D. 144, of a sect called the Marcionites. Amazed at what he considered the opposition between the Old and New Dispensations, Marcian rejected the former and declared the Apostle's had been in error in linking the New Covenant with the Old. He claimed to be interpreting true Christianity as taught by St. Paul. He prepared a mutilated edition of the N.T. (consisting of a large part of the Gospel of St. Luke and ten Epistles of St. Paul) and organized his church along hierarchical lines. It is difficult to distinguish some of the doctrines he held from those of the Gnostics, with which his followers were almost immediately identified, but he certainly taught that the God of the Jews was a Demiurge and that Christ had come among men to tell them about the true God, His Father. Married persons could never rise above the catechumenate in his sect, in which the baptized were virgins, widows, celibates, and eunuchs. The Marcionites ceased to flourish in the 7th century.—C.E., IX, 646.

Marcoux, Joseph (1791-1855), missionary and linguist, b. Canada; d. there. Ordained 1812, he evangelized the Iroquois, first at St. Regis, later at Caughnawaga. He acquired such proficiency in the Iroquois tongue as to attain a high rank among philologists through his Iroquois grammar and French-Iroquois dictionary. Fr. Marcoux translated into Iroquois, Fr. De Liguoy's "Life of Christ," and published in that language a collection of prayers, hymns, and canticles, a catechism, calendar of Catholic ritual, and a number of sermons.—C.E.

Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, Roman Emperor (161-180). During his reign the incursions of the Picts in Britain and the onslaughts of the Germans were followed by the Parthian war of 161-166. It was during this war that he composed his well-known "Meditations," a collection of moral reflections. The only blot on his fame is the persecution of the Christians.—C.E., II, 109.

Mardin, Archdiocese, and Diocese of, Iraq (Mesopotamia). (1) An archdiocese of the Armenian Rite, erected 1850. James Nisimian was appointed bishop, 1928. Churches and chapels, 14; priests, regular, 2; missionary priests, 14. (2) Diocese of the Chaldean Rite, united with Rome, 1552. Israel Audo was elected bishop, 1909. Churches or chapels, 3; priests, regular, 6; schools, 3; Catholics, 1670.

Mardin and Amida, Archdiocese of, Iraq (Mesopotamia), patriarchal diocese of the Syrian Rite, established as a patriarchate, 1852; united with Amida, 1888. Ignatius Rahmani occupies the see. Churches and chapels, 8; priests, secular, 14; priests, regular, 13; Catholics, 3000.

Margaret, Saint, virgin, martyr (c. 275), one of the Fourteen Holy Helpers (q.v.); d. Pisidia, Asia Minor. She was the daughter of a pagan priest, but was brought up by a Christian by her nurse, was disowned by her father, refused to marry a Roman prefect, Olybrius, was subjected to tortures which left her unharned, and was decapitated. She is often represented in art as a shepherdess, or portrayed crushing a serpent. She is called Marina in the Greek Church. Patroness of pregnant women, servant maids, and against diabolical infestations. Relics at San Pietro della Valle, on the Lake of Bolsena. Feast, R. Cal., 20 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Margaret Mary Alacoque, Saint, virgin (1647-90), apostle of the devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, b. Llautecour, France; d. Paray-le-Monial. From early childhood she was intensely devoted to the Blessed Sacrament. After four years' suffering from paralysis she was miraculously cured by Our Lady. Having vowed to consecrate herself to the religious life, she entered the Visitation Convent at Paray, where she was distinguished for obedience, humility, and love of suffering. The visions of Christ, with which she had been favored in her youth, continued, and He made known to her that she was to be the apostle of the devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, charging her to reveal to mankind the favors in store for those practising it, and inspiring her to establish the Holy Hour and the custom of receiving Holy Communion on the first Friday of each month. Buried in the chapel of Paray. Canonized, 1929. Feast, 17 Oct.—C.E.; Sister Mary Philip, Life of Blessed Margaret Mary Alacoque, St. L., 1919.

Margaret of Cortona, Saint, virgin, martyr (c. 1045-93), Queen of Scotland. She was the daughter of King Edward the Exile of England. After her father's death, she and her mother fled from England; they were received by Malcolm III, of Scotland, who later, c. 1070, married Margaret. As queen, Margaret used her influence in the interests of the faith; she convoked a synod which made regulations concerning the Lenten fast, Easter Communion, and marriage laws. She founded several churches, and was constantly engaged in prayer and pious practices. Canonized, 1259. Feast, R. Cal., 10 June.—C.E.; Butler.

Margaret Pole, Blessed, martyr (1473-1541), Countess of Salisbury, b. Castle Farley, near Bath, England; d. East Smithfield Green. She was the daughter of George Plantagenet, Duke of Clarence, niece of King Edward VI, and wife of Sir Richard Pole (1491), to whom she bore five children, one, Reginald, becoming Cardinal and Abp. of Canterbury. She was sponsor for Henry VIII's daughter, Mary, and afterwards her governess. At a later period the Poles incurred the enmity of Henry because of their fidelity to Catholicity. Margaret was arrested in 1538, and after a long period of ill-treatment in the Tower, was beheaded. Beatiified, 1888. Feast, 28 May.—C.E.

Margil, Antonio, Venerable (1637-1726), apostle of Guatemala, and Texas, b. Valencia, Spain; d. Mexico. He entered the Franciscan Order in 1673, and after his ordination set out for the Indian missions in America, 1638. Arriving at Santa Cruz, he was stationed at Queretaro college. He preached missions in Yucatan, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Guatemala, and Texas. Despite the rigorous life, he practised severe personal mortification. Declared Venerable, 1836.—C.E.

Maria (Lat., Mary), name of Our Lady. See Mary, Name of.

Maria castis osculis, or his sacred feet with tears of agony, hymn for Matins on feast of St. Mary Magdalen, 22 July. It has been attributed to Pope St. Gregory the Great (540-604). Four translations exist; the English title given above is by E. Caswall.—Britt.

Maria-Laach, near Andernach, Germany, founded 1693 by the Palagrain Henry II of Lorraine and placed under the Cluniac Benedectines from Affligem in Belgium. It remained a center of religious and literary activity until the secularizing movement of 1802. The buildings went first to the French, then to the Prussian Government, 1815, but in 1820 they became private property and were acquired by the Jesuits, 1863, who made them a house of learning, till their banishment, 1873. Since 1871 the "Stimmen aus Maria-Laach" started by P. Schneemann, has been a regular periodical. The Benedictines of the Beuron congregation moved into the monastery, 1892, and in 1893 it became an abbey.—C.E.

Mariana, Juan (1536-1624), Jesuit, b. Talavera, Toledo, Spain; d. Toledo. He taught theology at Rome and Paris, but from 1574 was engaged in literary work in Spain. His voluminous "History of Spain" is his masterpiece, but his "De rege et regis institutione," dedicated to Philip III of Spain, and "worthy of all respect from kings themselves as from their educators," writes the Protestant Dr. Leutbecher, has caused him to be one of the most maligned Jesuits, owing to a misconstrued observation in favor of the assassination of Henry III of France and the justification under very exceptional circumstances of the deposition and killing of tyrants. The book was at once officially condemned by the Jesuits and its correction ordered, and the members of the Society were forbidden to preach such a doctrine. No objection was raised in Spain but in France ten years later the work was ordered to be burnt by the Parliament. Mariana was again in difficulties owing to his desire to make changes in the Jesuit constitutions. He wrote several valuable commentaries and spent almost his last fifteen years a prisoner for courageously opposing the depreciation of Spanish currency in his "De monetae mutatione."—C.E.

Marianhill, Vicariate Apostolic of, Natal Province, Union of South Africa; bounded on the southeast by the Indian Ocean; on the southwest by the Great Kei and Indus Rivers; on the northwest by the boundaries of the Wodehouse and the Barkly East Districts and of Basutoland; and on the northeast the southern boundary of Pinetown and the northern boundaries of the Richmond and Impendha Districts; entrusted to the Missionaries of Mariannhill (formerly Reformed Cistercians). Vicar Apostolic: Adalbert Fleischer, R.M.M. (1922). Churches, 35; stations, 303; priests, 65; seminary, 1; schools, 133; Catholics, 32,500.

Marian Priests, term applied to English priests ordained in or before the reign of Queen Mary (1553-58) and surviving to the reign of Elizabeth, used in contradistinction to Seminary priests, ordained abroad at Douai, etc. According to Dom Norbert Birt, nearly 2000 of the former refused to conform to Elizabeth's decrees and thus lost their livings.—C.E.

Maria Theresa (1717-80), German Empress, Archduchess of Austria, and Queen of Hungary and Bohemia, daughter of Emperor Charles VI and wife of Francis Stephen of Lorraine. In 1713 Charles promulgated a pragmatic sanction by which in case of failure of male heirs the Habsburg possessions should go to his daughter. Maria Theresa thus succeeded in 1740, but her rights were disputed by Prussia, Bavaria, and France in the War of the Austrian Succession, which ended with the Treaty of Aachen, 1748, with the pragmatic sanction practically confirmed, and Francis Stephen crowned emperor. Ten years' peace followed, during which the army, the courts, and civil administration were reformed, trade, commerce, and education aided and developed, and the Masonic lodges broken up. A desire to recover Silesia from Prussia led to the Seven Years' War (1756-63), which ended by leaving each of the belligerents with the territory held before the war and by confirming Prussia in her role as a great power. The remaining years saw the increasing influence of her son Joseph II, who became Roman king in 1763 and emperor in 1765, and developed the anti-Catholic policy known as Josephinism, which Maria Theresa had begun. She consented reluctantly to the partition of Poland and opposed the War of the Bavarian Succession. With years her interest in primary education increased and she attempted to abolish serfdom in Bohemia but was frustrated by Joseph II. She was the foundress of the Austrian monarchy, the last and greatest of the Hapsburgs, deeply moral and religious and thoroughly German in character as in nationality.—C.E.

Marie Antoinette (1755-93), wife of Louis XVI of France, 1770, daughter of Empress Maria Theresa, b. Vienna; d. Paris. She was unpopular in France for her extravagance, for her disdain of the immoral Mme. du Barry, and particularly for favoring Catholic Austria against her growing rival, Prussia, which being a Protestant power was preferred by the French philosophers. During the Revolution she was arrested, Aug., 1792, and guillotined 16 Oct., 1793.—C.E.; Bicknell, The Story of Marie Antoinette, Lond., 1897.
Marie de l'Incarnation (Marie Martin, née Ghyard; 1599-1672), VENERABLE, b. Tours, France; d. Quebec. Married at seventeen, she was left a widow two years later, with a son Claude, afterwards a Benedictine. She entered the Ursuline Order, c. 1629, and introduced that institute into Canada, 1639, where she spent 33 years instructing Indian children. Feast, 27 Feb.—C.E.

Marinus I (Martin II), Pope (882-884), b. Galilee, Italy; d. Rome. While a deacon he was sent by Adrian II as legate to the Council of Constantinople (869). Later he was made Bp. of Care (Cervetri), treasurer of the Holy See, and arch-deacon. He condemned Photius, bestowed the pallium on Abp. Fulko of Rheims, and out of regard for King Alfred freed the Anglo-Saxon head-quarters at Rome from all tax and tribute. Owing to the similarity between the names Marinus and Martinus some historians call the two popes Marinus respectively Martin II and III, and the successor of Nicholas III called himself Martin IV.—C.E.; Mann.

Marinus II (Martin III), Pope (942-946), b. Rome; d. there. A cardinal, he was one of the popes elected by the influence of Alberic, Prince of the Romans. He was zealous for ecclesiastical reform, and devoted to the poor; he promoted monasticism by his privileges but made little impression on the world as a temporal ruler.—C.E.; Mann.

Mariolatry (Gr., Maria; latria, worship), an opprobrious term, indicating that the veneration given to Mary by Catholics (hyperdulia) is equivalent to, or encroaches upon, the honor due to God alone (latria). (N. m. w.)

Mariology (Gr., Maria; logos, word), that branch of theology which treats of the life and prerogatives of the Blessed Virgin, and of her eminent place in the economy of man's redemption and sanctification.—Pohle-Preuss, Mariology, St. L., 1922; Chandlery, Mary's Praise on Every Tongue, Lond., 1919. (N. m. w.)

Mariotte, Edme (c. 1620-84), physicist and prior of St. Martin-sous-Beaune; b. Dijon; d. Paris; his name rests chiefly on his work in hydrodynamics and the establishment of the law of gases which bears his name.—C.E.

Marist Fathers. See Society of Mary.

Marist School Brothers. See Little Brothers of Mary.

Marinus, Martha, Audifax, and Abachum, Saints, martyrs (c. 270); d. Rome. Marins and Martha were noble Persians, who, with their sons, Audifax and Abachum, came to Rome to visit the tombs of the Apostles and give aid to the persecuted Christians. After suffering horrible torture, Marins and his sons were beheaded, and Martha was cast into a well. Relics in church of St. Prasde, Rome. Feast, R. Cal., 10 Jan.—C.R.; Butler.

Mark, Gospel of Saint, the second book of the N.T., and the second Gospel to be written. Its author is St. Mark, a disciple and companion of St. Peter. He wrote an account of the life and teachings of Jesus as he heard these truths from the Prince of the Apostles. The Gospel was written in Greek between the years A.D. 50 and 60, and was addressed to Roman converts to Christianity. Writing for the Gentiles, St. Mark's purpose was to show that Jesus was indeed the Son of God. To this end he demonstrates the power of Jesus which extended over all nature and which was manifested in His many miracles. The Gospel is characterized by its vivid descriptions of Our Lord's miracles, which occupy so prominent a place in the narrative that it is often called the "Gospel of Miracles." The sixteen chapters are written in the chronological order, with some exceptions, and follow these general divisions: preparation through the preaching of St. John, the baptism, and temptation (1, 2-13); the preaching and miracles of Jesus in Galilee (1, 14, to 9, 50); the journey to Jerusalem for the feast of the Pasch, and the last days of Our Lord's teaching (10-13); the Passion, Death, Resurrection, and Ascension (14-16). The Biblical Commission, 20 June, 1912, declared that all reasonable doubt that St. Mark is the author of the second Gospel as now contained in our Bibles, and that the Gospel was written before the year 70 and according to the preaching of St. Peter, has been removed by the clear evidence of tradition from the earliest ages, as found in the testimony of the Fathers, in the use of the Gospel by early Christians, and its place in ancient codices and versions. Chapters specially commendable for reading: 2, the paralytic, the call of St. Matthew; 3, call of the Apostles, refutation of the Pharisees; 14-16, Passion and Glory of Jesus.—C.E.; Smith, Gospel According to St. Mark, Lond., 1915.

Mark, Liturgy of Saint, a development of the Alexandrine Rite (q.v.), in Greek; no longer used.

Mark, Saint, evangelist, assumed to be the one referred to in Acts as John Mark (12, 15), identical with St. Mark mentioned by St. Paul (Col., 4; 2 Tim., 4; Phil., 24) and by St. Peter (1 Peter, 5). Mark, whom St. Peter calls his son, is the son of Mary, whose house was a meeting-place for the Apostles, to which St. Peter turned on his release from prison. He accompanied St. Paul on his first Apostolic journey but returned to Jerusalem alone, and for this St. Paul refused to take Mark on his second trip. After this he sailed to Cyprus with Barnabas; ten years later Mark was a fellow-worker of St. Paul and in the company of St. Peter at Rome. He went into Asia Minor after the Epistle to the Colossians, remained there some time, and returned to Rome. Tradition represents St. Mark as the founder of the Church of Alexandria and bishop of that city for about twenty years. Another theory holds that he founded the Church of Aquileia. In the preface to his Gospel in manuscripts of the Vulgate, Mark is represented as having been a Jewish priest, but this may be only an inference from his relation to Barnabas the Levite. Later tradition calls Mark one of the seventy-two disciples, but it is uncertain whether or not he ever saw Christ. Many are of the opinion that the young man who fled naked from Gethsemane (Mark 14, 51) was the evangelist himself. The date of St. Mark's death is uncertain; the "Acts" of Mark give the saint the glory of martyrdom and say that he died while being dragged through the streets of Alexandria. Roman tradition relates that St. Mark wrote his Gospel at the request of the Roman Christians and under the direction of St. Peter. There is another tradition, however, that his Gospel was originally written in Latin rather than in Greek. Patron of notaries, against lightning, and hail. Emblems: lion, book, Relics at Venice. Feast, R. Cal., 25 April.—C.E.; Butler.

Mark, Saint, Pope (336), b. Rome; d. there. Because of discordant traditions nothing certain is known of the acts of his pontificate. He is said to have built two basilicas. Feast, R. Cal., 7 Oct.—C.E.

Mark and Marcellian, Saints, martyrs, d. 286. They were twin sons of pagan parents, and were cast into prison for professing Christianity. St. Sebastian visited them and encouraged them to persevere; they were nailed to posts and pierced with lances. Their bodies were buried near the Catacomb of St. Domitilla. Feast, R. Cal., 18 June.—C.E.; Butler.

Marks of the Church. The Church is a means necessary for all men unto salvation. Now there are many societies which claim to be the Church of God. Hence, since there is an obligation imposed on men to enter the Church of Christ, this obligation presupposes the possibility of distinguishing the true Church of Christ from all other societies falsely claiming this prerogative. The Church is materially and formally visible. Hence there must of necessity be something in the Church which visibly manifests this society to be the true Church of Christ. This visible sign is what we call a mark of the Church. We may define a mark to be an essential characteristic which is proper to the true Church alone, and visibly manifests it to be the Church of Christ. The Church itself points to four such marks in the Creed promulgated at the Council of Constantinople (381). These marks are: One, Holy, Catholic, Apostolic. Although theologians have at times multiplied the number of marks which distinguish the Church, they are reducible to these four. The Catechism of the Council of Trent, published in 1566, with the highest official sanction, adopted this more simple arrangement of the four marks. Today this arrangement has won universal acceptance.—C.E.; III, 758; Gibbons, Faith of Our Fathers, Balt., 1917. (c. d. mer.)

Maronite Liturgy, a Romanized form of the Liturgy of St. James, used by the Maronite Church. The liturgical language is Syriac, or Aramaic, although Arabic written in Syriac characters (Karakshuni), is used almost always for the Epistle, Gospel, Creed, and Pater Noster. Frequent use of incense is a characteristic of the Maronite Mass. They use a round Host of unleavened bread, as in the Roman Rite. The Canon of the Mass varies according to the feast celebrated. The words of consecration are intoned aloud; vestments differ little from the Roman.—C.E., IX, 684. (m. e. b.)

Maronites, name of one of the Uniuit Churches (q.v.), numbering about 300,000, scattered in Syria, Palestine, Cyprus, Egypt, and the United States (37 churches). Their name is said to have originated from St. Maron (350-333), a Syrian hermit who, with a few disciples on the banks of the Orontes, remained faithful during the Monophysite heresy. Authorities disagree as to their history before the 16th century, some claiming that they succumbed to the Monothelite heresy (6th cent.) and were converted from it in the 12th century, others stating that they were governed by an unbroken line of patriarchs commencing with St. John Maro (whose existence seems doubtful) and were never schismatical or heretical. From the time of the Fifth Lateran Council (1517-17) the Maronites have been in permanent and uninterrupted communion with Rome. They use the rite of St. James in the ancient Aramaic language, which was the language of Our Lord.—C.E.

Marquette, Diocese of (Diocese of Sault Sainte Marie and Marquette), comprises the northern peninsula of the State of Michigan; area, 16,281 sq. m.; vicariate Apostolic, 1853; diocese, 1857; suffragan of Milwaukee. Bishops: Frederic Baraga (1833-68); Ignatius Mkr (1860-78); John Vortin (1879-99); Frederick Eis (1899-1922); Paul Joseph Nussbaan (1922). Statistics: churches, 132; priests, secular, 82; priests, regular, 15; religious women, 332; academies, 2; parochial schools, 25; pupils in parochial schools, 685; institutions, 6; Catholic population, 83,469.

Marquette, Jacques (1636-75), Jesuit, discoverer of the Mississippi, b. Laon, France; d. near Ludington, Michigan. He was sent to the Canadian mission (1660) and labored successfully at Trois Rivières, Sault St. Marie, and La Pointe on the southwest shore of Lake Superior. Learning from some Illinois of the existence of a great river to the south, he set out with Joliet in 1673 and proceeding by Green Bay, Fox River, and the Wisconsin, reached the Mississippi, which he descended to the mouth of the Arkansas; there fear of the Spaniards induced him to return by way of Lake Michigan, where Chicago now stands. He has left a valuable diary of his voyage, with maps. Two years later he returned to preach to the Illinois, where he died exhausted by his labors. His statue has been placed by the State of Wisconsin in the Hall of Fame, Washington.—C.E.; Thwaites, Father Marquette, N. Y., 1904.

Marquette League, a lay society organized in New York in 1904 by Rev. H. G. Ganes to cooperate with the mission work of priests and religious among the Indians of the United States and Alaska. It serves as a collecting agency, the funds secured through its annual membership dues being used for the construction and repair of churches, building of mission schools, providing teachers' salaries, and creating scholarships for Indians in certain Catholic schools. Gifts of clothing, vestments, and altar-vestments are forwarded to the missions by the League. It has given over $750,000 to the Missions, establishing over 100 mission chapels in the Northwest and Southwest, and erecting the first Indian day-schools in Arizona. It publishes "The Calumet" quarterly. Headquarters are in New York.

Marquette University, Milwaukee, Wis., founded 1881; conducted by the Jesuits; preparatory school; colleges of arts and sciences, dentistry, business administration, applied science and engineering, journalism, hospital administration; schools of law, medicine, speech, music, nursing; graduate, extension, special, and summer schools; athletic department; evening courses; professors, 330; students, 4965; degrees conferred in 1929, 440.

Marriage, Mystical, is a permanent perception or consciousness of the presence of God in the soul, and His union with it. Taken in a wide sense it consists in a vision in which Christ tells the soul that He takes it for His bride; in a restricted sense, according to Sts. Teresa and John of the Cross, it designates that mystical union with God which is the most exalted condition attainable by the soul in this life.—C.E.; Pourrat, tr. Jacques, Christian Spirituality, Lond., 1924; Peers, Spanish Mysticism, Lond., 1924.

Marriage without a Priest. Under the existing matrimonial laws the blessing of the union by a priest is not, in certain circumstances, essential to the contract and the sacrament. If a Catholic couple wish to marry in a place where for a month there will be no priest qualified to join them in matrimony, they may simply express their mutual consent before two witnesses, and thereby they are validly and lawfully married. In danger of death, this may also be done even when there is no such expected delay in the coming of the priest. (J. F. S.)

Marshall, Thomas William (1818-77), controversialist, b. Surbiton, England. He was Anglican vicar of Swallowditch, Wiltshire, but in 1845 became a Catholic. Among his writings were the satirical "Christianity in China," and "Christian Missions," exposing the weaknesses of the Anglican missions. Arthur Featherstone, brother of priest, liturgist, b. Saint-Jean-de-Losne, France; d. Saint-Germain-des-Prés. After entering, in 1672, the Benedictine Abbey of St. Rémy at Reims, he studied at Saint-Germain under d'Achéry and Mabillon and thenceforth devoted his whole life to history and liturgy, especially at Rouen. Among his works are a commentary on the Rule of St. Benedict, the fruit of indefatigable research, published in 1690, liturgical writings such as "De Antiquis ecclesiis ritibus libri 4" (Rouen, 1700-02), "The Life of the Venerable Claude Martin" (1697), and the "Annals of the Order of St. Benedict" (Paris, 1739). With the Benedictine Ursul Durald, Martene ransacked the archives of France and Belgium in 1708 and published the "Thesaurus novus aedecotorum" (Paris, 1717). Later their journey through Germany and the Netherlands produced another scholarly work, "Veterum scriptorum et monumentorum ecclesiasticorum et dogmaticorum amplissima collectio" (Paris, 1724-33).—C.E.

Martin I (Lat., little Mars), Saint, Pope (649-655), b. Todi, Italy; d. Cherson, in the Crimea. He opened his pontificate by summoning a council at the Lateran to condemn Monothelitism, at which the "Ecthesis" of Heraclius and the "Typus" of Emperor Constans II the precious "Rule of Constantino, Cyrus, and Sergius were excommunicated. For this Constans II caused Martin to be taken to Constantinople (653). After being insulted, ill-treated, and cast into jail, he was exiled to Cherson where he died. Feast, R. Cal., 29 July; C.E.; Mann; Butler.

Martin II, III, Popes. See Marinus.

Martin IV (Simon de Brie), Pope (1281-85), b. Montpensier, France; d. Perugia, Italy. He was a cardinal-priest, chancellor of France, and later papal legate to that country where he carried out needed disciplinary reforms. After his election at Viterbo he was unable to go to Rome for his coronation, and was himself elected by the Council of Constance, which he dissolved, 1418. He concluded concordats with Germany, France, England, and Spain, and was able to reach Rome with the aid of Queen Joanna of Naples. Peace was secured with the Hussites, limited the Gallican liberties, and did much to overthrow the theory of conciliar supremacy.—C.E.; Pastor.
Martin, Felix (1894-86), historian, antiquary, b. Auray, Brittany; d. Paris. As a young Jesuit he was forced into exile by the French government and was ordained in Switzerland. In 1942 he was one of those chosen to reestablish his order in Canada, where he remained till failing eyesight forced his return to France in 1862. He designed St. Patrick’s Church, Montreal, and was the founder and architect of St. Mary’s College. He is widely known for his services to Canadian historical literature; he edited the Jesuit Relations (1672-79) and wrote lives of Champlain, Brébeuf, Chaumonot, Jougé, and Montcalm.—C.E.

Martina, Saint, virgin, martyr (c. 228). She openly professed her faith, refusing to return to idolatry; and was martyred in the persecution under Alexander Severus. Rallia, the basilica named for her near the Roman Forum, Feast, R. Cal., 30 Jan.—C.E.; Butler; Ponceaux, tr. Watt, Martyrologies.

Martinae celebri plaudite nomini, Of WITH JOYOUS SONGS, GREAT ROME, MARTINA’S FAME extol, hymn for Vespers on feast of St. Martin, 30 Jan. It was written by Pope Urban VIII (1668-1644). There are four translations. The English title given is by T. Potter.—Britt.

Martinmas, feast of St. Martin of Tours, 11 Nov. In Scotland it is still one of the legal terms on which houses are rented and contracts made. Until recently in many parts of England it was the usual time for hiring servants and fairs were often held on this date.—Walsh, Curious of Popular Customs, Phila., 1897.

Martin of Tours, Saint, confessor (c. 316-397), Bp. of Tours, b. Sarthia, Hungary; d. Candes, Touraine. The son of a pagan military tribune, he was educated at Pavia, and at an early age enrolled in the Roman army. Anicetus in Gaul was the scene of the famous incident of Martin sharing his military cloak with a beggar, followed by the heavenly vision which led to his baptism. After a few years of army service, he was released and journeyed to Poitiers to labor under St. Hilary, Bp. of Poitiers. There he organized a community of monks, erected the monastery of Ligugé, and in 371 became Bp. of Tours. Later he founded the monastery of Marmoutier and resided there. He was an opponent of Arianism. After a last visit to Rome, Martin went to Candes, one of the religious centers of Poitiers. There he organized a community of confessors, bishops, virgins, etc.; usually the saint visited. He was the first to realize the significance of the Gulf Stream. His work as chronicler to the State Council of India is notable. His writings include the first account of Spanish discoveries in the New World; Columbus, Balboa, etc., and an account of Egypt. He collected letters of contemporary Spanish history.—C.E.

Martyr Dei Venantius, or VENANTius, Hail! God’s MARTYR bright, hymn for Vespers on the feast of St. Venantius, 18 May. It was written in the 17th century by an unknown author. There are four translations; the English title given is by T. Potter.—Britt.

Martyrologies, catalogues of martyrs and saints arranged according to the occurrence of their feast days in the calendar. Originally the martyrologies were local lists of martyrs of some section or city. Later the names of other than local martyrs were added, then the names of other than local martyrs and bishops, and finally the names of saintly confessors. Martyrologies originated in the early ages of the Church, hence they are an important source for history. The most celebrated of the ancient martyrologies is the Hieronymian. It was probably written sometime in the 5th century from various local and sectional martyrologies. In some ancient martyrologies a short history of the saint follows his name. The present Roman Martyrology, the catalogue of the saints honored by the Church, first appeared in 1584, and has been revised and edited several times since. In religious communities and seminaries it is read out each day at the principal meal; where the Office is chanted in choir, it is sung during Prime. Each daily list consists of about 15 names of saints of all types, martyrs, confessors, bishops, virgins, etc; usually the saint whose Mass is said on the particular day heads the list.—C.E.; The Roman Martyrology, Balt., 1907.

(M. P. H.)

Martyrology, American, a list of martyrs and confessors who died for Christ or for some Christian virtue, within the present limits of the United States of America, compiled by F. Holweck. This term “martyrology” is to be taken in its wider sense, as meaning a list of servants of God, and does not signify that everyone in this list died for the faith.

Colorado. Leo Heinrichs, O.F.M., shot by an Indian in St. Elizabeth’s church, Denver, 23 Feb., 1908.

Georgia. Pedro Martinez, first Jesuit martyr in the U. S., killed by natives on the island of Taca-tacum (Cumberland), 28 Sept., 1566. Francisco de Velasco, O.F.M., killed by Yamassee Indians at St. Simon’s Island, 15 Sept., 1597.

Virginia. Luis de Quiros and the lay brothers Gabriel de Solís and Juan Meudes, Jesuits, killed by Indians at Axaean, 14 Feb., 1571. Juan Bautista de Seguyn, the novices Gabriel de Granada and Sancho de Zavala, and the lay-brothers Cristián Rodondo and Pedro Unaers, Jesuits, killed by an Indian guide at Occoquan, 18 Feb., 1571.

Martyrs, Acts of the, a name given to the narratives of the martyrs' trials and deaths. They may be classed as: (1) catalogs of the martyrs; of the interrogatories, few in number, among the most famous being the "Passio Cypriani" and the "Acta Martyrum Scyllitanorum"; (2) non-official records, made either by eye-witnesses or by contemporaries recording the testimony of eye-witnesses, including "Martyrium S. Polycarpi," "Acta SS. Perpetua et Felicis," and "Epistolae Ecclesiasticae in Vindemias et Lugdonensis"; (3) documents of a later date than the martyrdom, based on Acts of the first and second class. Besides these divisions there are documents, whose historicity has little or no value, romances, with a possible foundation of truth, and real forgeries. There has been considerable critical studies of these Acts. The result of these investigations has been to substantiate such main facts as the causes of the persecutions, the number and heroism of the martyrs, the popularity of their cultus, and the historicity of the popular heroes.—C.E. (M. P. H.)

Martyrs, English, those who suffered death in England for the Catholic Faith and for the primacy of the Roman Pontiff, from 1533 to 1681. The total number of them is over 600; of these, fifty-four were beatified in 1888 and nine more in 1895; 247 others had their cause of beatification introduced in 1886, and were declared Venerable; the remainder (about 286), though they all died heroically, led such retired and obscure lives that there is very little known about them, who have been hindered even the introduction of their cause. The following is a complete alphabetical list of all the English Martyrs, under their last names. The 63 who have been beatified have separate articles which will be found in their proper alphabetical places, under their first names. Of the remainder, space permits of only a mention of whether they were priests, religious, or laymen, and the year of their martyrdom. Those that have been declared Venerable are marked Ven. In a few cases nothing is known of the martyr except his name.

Bailey, Lawrence, Ven., layman, 1604.
Baldwin (Bawden), William, priest, 1588.
Bales (Bayles, alias Evers), Christopher, Ven., priest, 1590.
Bales, Alexander, layman.
Bamber, Edward, Ven., priest, 1646.
Bawlor (alias Brederdown), Thomas, Edward, Ven., O.S.B., 1584.
Bawne, Ralph, monk, 1537.
Bawse, John, Bl. (q.v.)
Bede, Thomas, priest, 1568-90.
Bedingfeld, Thomas, Ven., S.J., 1578.
Beeley, George, Ven., layman, 1591.
Bel, Arthur, Ven., O.S.F., 1643.
Belle, James, Ven., priest, 1584.
Bennett (alias Bennet), William, S.J., 1602.
Bere, Richard, Bl. (q.v.)
Berisford, Humphrey, layman, 1588.
Bickerdyke, Robert, Ven., layman, 1585.
Bigod, Sir Francis, 1537.
Bird, John, Ven., layman, 1593.
Bird, Robert, priest, 1540.
Bird, William, priest, 1540.
Birckett, Richard, priest, 1680.
Bishop, Sir Francis, 1537.
Bird, John, layman, 1580.
Bird, Robert, priest, 1540.
Birnham, Laurence, monk, 1537.
Blount, Thomas, priest, 1547.
Bocking, Edward, O.S.B., 1537.
Boley, John, layman, 1538.
Bolton, Richard, layman, 1589.
Bonner, Edmund, Bp., 1569.
Bougrave, Thomas, layman, 1594.
Boyle, John, Ven., priest, 1594.
Bourne, Gilbert, Bp., 1569.
Bower, Marmaduke, Ven., layman, 1585.
Bowers, Richard, priest, 1590.
Borrell, John, priest, 1571.
Bracton, Stephen, layman, 1591.
Brazier (Grimes), Matthew, S.J., 1650.
Buckley, George, Ven., layman, 1593.
Briant, Alexander, Bl. (q.v.)
Bridgcliffe, Edmund, Ven., priest, 1540-44.
Britton, John, Ven., layman, 1598.
Brown, James, O.S.B., 1640-51.
Brown, William, Ven., layman, 1604.
Brown, Humphrey, S.J.
Brownell, Thomas, Brightline laybrother.
Browne, James, priest, 1593.
Buckley (Jones, John), John, Ven., O.F.S., 1598.
Budge, Lucy, lay person, 1587-88.
Bullaker, Thomas, Ven., O.F.S., 1642.
Burden, Edward, Ven., priest, 1538.
Burnaby, William, priest, 1537.
Busston, Christopher, Ven., priest, 1537.
Butler, John, Ven., layman, 1594.
Cadwallder, Roger, Ven., priest.
Campion, Edmund, Bl. (q.v.)
Carew, John, Ven., layman, 1590.
Carew, Sir Thomas, Ven., Knight of St. John, 1539.
Cawse, John, Ven., layman, 1601.
Cayston, Christopher, Ven., priest, 1537.
Cawston, Matthew, Ven., layman, 1561.
Cawston, John, Ven., layman.
Cawston, William, Ven., layman.
Chaffey, William, priest, 1591.
Chalmer, James, Ven., priest, 1588.
Chaten, James, priest, 1588.
Chatterow, Margaret, Ven., lay person, 1586.
Cockrell, James, prior of Guisborough, 1537.
Coe, William, monk, 1537.
Coleman, Edward, Ven., layman, 1578.
Collin, Edward, Ven., layman, 1578.
Collier, Laurence, O.S.F., 1590.
Comberford, Henry, priest, 1584.
Constable, Benedict, O.S.B., 1683.
Cook, Henry, S.J., 1606.
Cook, Lawrence, O.Carm., prior of Doncaster, 1540.
Cooper, John, layman, 1550.
Coppingher, Richard, O.S.B., 1558.
Cort, Thomas, Ven., O.S.F., 1537-38.
Cox, Ralph, Ven., S.J., 1544.
Coxe, John, Ven., S.J., 1594.
Coxen, Thomas, layman, 1589.
Coxen, — , lay person, 1588.
Cottermore, Thomas, priest, 1584.
Cottam, Thomas, Ven., O.S.B., 1580.
Courtney, Henry, Marquess of Exeter, 1538.
Cowling (Collins), Ralph, layman, 1587.
Coope, William, monk, 1557.
Coor, Robert, O.S.B., 1650.
Crang, Richard, Abp. of Armagh, 1585.
Crockett, Ralph, Ven., priest, 1588.
Croft, George, priest, 1538.
Crowe, Alexander, Ven., priest, 1587.
Crowther, Thomas, priest, 1585.
Cubley, Sandra, lay person.
Daly, Robert, Ven., priest, 1589.
Dare, Thomas, Lord, 1537.
Davies, William, Ven., priest, 1594.
Davy, John, Bl. (q.v.)
Dean, William, Ven., priest, 1588.
Decy, William, layman, 1588.
Dering, John, O.S.B., 1537.
Dickson, Richard (Robert), priest, 1686.
Diconsin, Roger, Ven., priest, 1561.
Digby, Simon, layman, 1569-70.
Dimock, Robert, layman, 1580.
Dinley, Sir Thomas, Ven., Knight of St. John, 1539.
Dixon, Christopher, O.S.A., 1616.
Douglas, George, Ven., priest, 1587.
Dowdall, James, Ven., layman, 1599.
Draycott, Anthony, priest, 1570.
Drury, Robert, Ven., priest, 1607.
Duckett, James, Ven., layman, 1601.
Dufton, Hugh, layman, 1585-90.
Dyer, Thomas, O.S.B., c. 1618-30.
Dymoke, Robert, layman, 1580.
Eastgate, John, monk, 1537.
Eastgate, Richard, monk, 1537.
Edmonds, Robert, O.S.B., 1615.
Edwards (alias Campion), Edward, priest.
Elderesh, John, layman, 1585-95.
Eliza, Edward, layman, 1589.
Empeingham, Gabriel, layman, 1586.
Empson, Thomas, O.S.B., 1540.
Errington, George, Ven., layman, 1595.
Evans, Philip, Ven., S.J., 1679.
Exmee, William, Bl. (q.v.)
Evyn (Onyon), John, priest, 1539.
Evrington, Hugh, Bl. (q.v.)
Fackenham, John, O.S.B., abbot of Westminster, 1585.
Fenton, John, Bl. (q.v.)
Fenton, Thomas, Ven., O.F.S., 1588.
Fenn, James, Ven., priest, 1584.
Fenwick, John, Ven., S.J., 1679.
Fetherstone, Richard, Bl. (q.v.)
Filby, William, Bl. (q.v.)
Fileock, Roger, Ven., S.J., 1601.
Fiuch, John, Ven., layman, 1584.
Finglow, John, Ven., priest, 1598.
Fisher, John, Bl. (q.v.)
Fitzherbert, John, layman, 1539.
flaths, Matthew, Ven., priest, 1607.
Fletcher, Bernard, layman, 1537.
Ford, Thomas, Bl. (q.v.)
Forest, John, Bl. (q.v.)
Fortescue, Adrian, Bl. (q.v.)
Foster, Isabel, lay person, 1587.
Foster (Forster), Thomas, S.J., 1648.
Fowler, Ursula, lay person, 1590.
Francis, John, monk, 1537.
Freamon, William, Ven., priest, 1595.
Prier, John, layman, 1563.
Fryer, Andrew (alias Herne or Rich mond), priest, 1640-51.
Fugatio, Anthony, layman.
Fuister, Agnes, lay person. Fultheing, John, Ven., layman, 1604.
Fulthorpe, John, layman, 1590.
Fulthorp, Edward, layman, 1597.
Gaby, Thomas, O.Cist., 1575.
Gardiner, German, Bl. (q.v.)
Garrick, Nicholas, Ven., priest, 1588.
Garnet, Henry, S.J., 1606.
Garter, Thomas, S.J., 1608.
Gasen (Green), John, Ven., S.J., 1679.

MARTYRS 604 MARTYRS

Burke, John Kearney, and Bernard Conneus.
Order of St. Augustine: Thaddeus O'Connel,
Austin Higgins, Peter Taaffe, William Tirrey,
Donatus O'Kennedy, Donatus Serenan, Fulgentius
Jordan, Raymond O'Malley, Thomas Tullis, and Thomas Deir.
Carmelite Order:
Thomas Aquinas of Jesus, Anselmus of St. Joseph, and Peter of the Mother of God.
Order of the Blessed Trinity:
Cornelius O'Connor and Eugene O'Daly.
Society of Jesus:
Edmund MacDannell, Dominic O'Collins,
William Boyton, Robertネットバーバー, and John Bath.
Laymen:
William Walsh, Daniel Sutton, John Sutton,
Robert Sherlock, Matthew Lampert, Robert Myler, Christopher Roche, Edward Cheevers, John O'Lahey,
Patrick Canavan, Patrick Hayes, Daniel O'Hannan, Maurice Eustace, Robert Fitzgerald, Walter Eustace, Thomas Eustace, Christopher Eustace, William Wogan, Walter Aymler, Thaddeus Clancy,
Peter Meyler, Michael Fitzsimon, Patrick Browne,
Thomas MacReith, John de Burgo, Brian O'Neill,
Arthur O'Neill, Roderick O'Kane, Alexander Mac­
Sorley, Francis Tailer, Hugh MacMahon, Cornelius
Maguire, Donatus O'Brien, James O'Brien, Bernard
O'Brien, Daniel O'Brien, Dominick Fanning,
Daniel O'Higgins, Thomas Stritch, Louis O'Ferral,
Galfridius Galway, Patrick Purell, Theobald de Burgo, Galfridius Baroniuss, Thaddeus O'Connor Sligo, John O'Connor, Bernard MacBrady, Felix O'Neill, and Edward Butler.
Women:
Eleonora Birmingham,
Elizabeth Kearney, Marguerite de Caciel, Brigida
Darrey, Honoria de Burgo, Honoria Magan. —C.E.
NAME OF MARY:
Mary, the mother of Jesus. See VIRGIN MARY.
BLESSED.
Mary, mother of John Mark, mentioned in the N.T. only once (Acts, 12), where we read that many were gathered together and praying in her house when Peter knocked at the door, after his escape from prison.
(J. M. N.)
Mary, NAME OF, first mentioned in the O.T. as the name of the sister of Moses. The name Mary has been given many meanings, for example:
“the well-beloved,” “the magnificient,” “bitter,” “star of the sea,” “lady,” “beautiful,” “the perfect one.” It was a favorite name among Jewish women in the time of Our Blessed Lady. It has always been honored among Catholics, and is one of the names in most general use. The Irish language has a special word, “Muire,” which is never given to any Mary but the Mother of God—C.E.
(N. M. W.)
Mary Anne de Paredes,
BLESSED, virgin (1618-45), surmied the “Lily of Quito,” b. Quito, Ecuador
d. there. From early childhood she exhibited great love of prayer and mortification; at the age of ten she made vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience. She passed her life in retirement at home.
She possessed the gift of ecstatic prayer, was endowed with supernatural powers, frequently working miracles and foretelling the future, and was divinely sustained by the daily reception of the Holy Eucharist, as she took no other food save an ounce of bread weekly. Beatified, 1853. Feast, in Bolivia, Paraguay, and Ecuador, 16 May. —C.E.
Marygrove College, Detroit, Mich., founded 1910; conducted by the Sisters, Servants of the Immaculate Heart of Mary; preparatory school; colleges of arts and sciences, music; normal school; summer school; professors, 57; students, 868; degrees conferred in 1927, 9.
Maryhelp Abbey. See BELMONT, ABBEY NUL­ LIUS OF.
Maryknoll (CATHOLIC FOREIGN MISSION SOCIETY OF AMERICA), Maryknoll, N. Y., seminary for foreign missions under Maryknoll Fathers, founded, 1911; faculty, 16; students, 88.
Maryknoll House of Studies, Brookland,
D. C., post-graduate seminary for missionary work, founded, 1922 and affiliated with the Catholic University.
Maryland, the 41st state of the United States in size, the 28th in population, and the 7th state to be admitted to the Union (28 April, 1788); area 13,327 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 1,449,661; Catholics (1928), 231,963. In the Catholic colony of Maryland, established 1634 by Leonard Calvert, second son of George Calvert, the first Lord Bal ­ timore, at whose request the charter had been granted, “religious liberty,” as Banccroft says, “obtained a home, its only home in the wide world.” Through the wisdom of its founder freedom of worship was granted to all Christians. Mass was celebrated in the wig­ vam of one of the Indian chiefs was given over to them to be transformed into the first chapel.
By 1637 a special building had been erected. Within the few years Fr. John Brock was stationed at St.
Ingoes, southeast of St. Mary's, where tradition says the colonists had made a preliminary stop, Fr.
Altham on Kent Island, Fr. Philip Fisher (Thomas Copley) at St. Mary's, and Fr. White at Kittama­ quindi, capital of Piscataway, an Indian village about 15 m. south of Washington. At the last place a bark chapel was erected for the baptism of the chief, Chittomachen or Chilomacon, and his wife. In 1651 Cecilius Calvert, second Lord Baltimore, gave the Jesuits a grant of 10,000 acres near Calverton Manor for their Indian missions. In 1649 the Toleration Act, formally establishing religious freedom and based on laws framed for the colony by Cecilius Calvert, passed by the Assembly. The next year the Puritans, who had been freely permitted to establish a settlement at Providence (now Annapolis) when the colony was founded, were expelled from the intolerant laws of Virginia, seized the government of Maryland and repealed the Act, with subsequent appalling persecution of Catholics. The Act was restored to the statute-books, 1658, when Lord Baltimore's authority was again acknowledged, and was in force until the Protestant revolution of 1689. In 1673 Franciscians first came to Maryland, from England, their <table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Denomination</th>
<th>Membership</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Jewish Congregations</td>
<td>12,056</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All Other Denominations</td>
<td>38,878</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>C.E.; Shea.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Petrino, Guercino, Leyden, 11 Mussys Meno's Peru</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Titian, Van Dyck, and Veronese</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disciples of Christ</td>
<td>5,719</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Brethren in Christ</td>
<td>8,237</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Southern Baptist Convention</td>
<td>14,650</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>National Baptist Convention</td>
<td>29,405</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church South</td>
<td>22,174</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church</td>
<td>15,751</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran General Synod</td>
<td>15,801</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reformed Church in the U.S.</td>
<td>13,401</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church South</td>
<td>15,751</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Southern Baptist Convention</td>
<td>14,650</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jewish Congregations</td>
<td>12,056</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>African Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>10,509</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Brethren in Christ</td>
<td>8,237</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disciples of Christ</td>
<td>5,719</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Conservative Church of the Brethren</td>
<td>3,597</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All Other Denominations</td>
<td>26,578</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Total Membership: 602,587

---

Mary Magdalen (IN ART): Among the many masters who have represented this subject are: Albertinelli, Batoni, Canova, Caracci, A., Cignani, Credi, Crivelli, Doli, Domenichino, Edelfelt, Giampietrino, Guercino, Leyden, Massys, Mengs, Perugino,再生能源, Reni, Ribera, Sorel, Solario, Titian, Van Dyck, and Veronese.

Mary Magdalen, SAINT, penitent: called Magdalen probably from her native town, Magdala, in Galilee, or from the Talmudic expression meaning adulteress. She is mentioned as the sinner (Luke, 7), who bathed the feet of Christ; as Mary, the sister of Martha and Lazarus (Luke, 10 and John, 11); and later as Mary Magdalen (Luke, 8), who ministered to Christ, by whom she was freed from seven devils. It is generally agreed today that the three persons mentioned are identical, although the Greek Fathers considered them distinct. After her conversion, she remained faithful to Christ; stood at the foot of the cross (Mark, 15; Matt., 27; John, 19; Luke, 22); and was the first witness of the Resurrection. The Greek tradition holds that Mary Magdalen retired to Ephesus with the Blessed Virgin, and died there, her relics being transferred to Constantinople. The French tradition holds that she migrated to Marias with Lazarus and Martha, and retired to a hill, La Sainte-Baume, near the city, where she lived in seclusion for 30 years. Represented in art, kneeling before a Crucifix at the foot of which death's head is lying. Her head now rests in the grotto of Sainte-Baume. Feast, R. Cal., 22 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Mary Magdalen de' Pazzi, SAINT, virgin (1566-1607), b. Florence; d. there. She joined the Discalced Carmelites, 1582, was professed in 1584, and elected superior, 1604. Her life is a constant series of raptures and ecstasies, during which she gave utterance to wonderful maxims of Divine Love and counsels of spiritual perfection. Canonized, 1699. Relics in Carmelite convent, Florence. Feast, R. Cal., 29 May.—C.E.; Butler.

Mary Magdalen Postel, SAINT, virgin (1750-1846), b. Barleux Manche, France; d. Le-Vicomte. Educated by Benedictines at Vалежен, she founded the Sisters of Christian Schools and of Mercy, at Cherbourg, 1807, established her mother-house at St.-Sauveur-le-Vicomte, 1832, and adopted the rule of the School Brothers of St. John Baptist de La Salle. Canonized, 1925. Feast, 16 July; at Cow- tances, 17 May.

Marymas, a name formerly given to special feasts in honor of the Blessed Virgin Mary, particularly to the feast of the Annunciation; also, in medieval England, the Mass said in the Lady chapel or in honor of Mary, Mother of God. To this day, in the ultra-Protestant county of Ayrshire, Scotland, a fair held on or about 15 Aug. is still called Marymas.

Mary mediatrix of all graces, a title of our blessed Lady, expressive of the doctrine that all graces come to us from Christ through the hands of Mary. A feast of this title was granted to the dioceses of Belgium, at the request of Cardinal Mercier, by Benedict XV, 12 Jan., 1921. The feast is also celebrated on 13 Aug. in France. Mary Mediatrix, now the common teaching of theologians, is being favorably considered for definition as a dogma of faith.—O'Connell, Our Lady, Mediatrix of all Graces, Balt., 1926. (N. M. W.)

Marymount College, Tarrytown, N. Y., conducted by the Religious of the Sacred Heart of Mary; preparatory school; colleges of arts and sciences, home economics, fine arts; graduate course; professors, 23; students, 150; degrees conferred in 1929, 20.

Mary of Cleophas, mentioned in John, 19, is probably the mother of St. James the Less.

Mary of Egypt, SAINT, penitent (c. 344-421), b. northern Egypt; d. Edres. After living an evil life for seventeen years at Alexandria, she was miraculously converted at Jerusalem. into the Arabian desert, she passed her remaining 47 years in penance and solitude. St. Zosimus discovered her there and administered Holy Communion to her. Relics venerated at Rome, Naples, Cremona, and Antwerp. Feast, 2 April.—C.E.; Butler.

Mary's Lent, a period of fasting, 1 to 14 August, observed among the Greeks, the Copts, and the Russians, during which they abstain from meat, eggs, and sometimes fish and milk, etc., according to custom and locality.

Mary's Realm. See Our Lady's Dowry.

Mary Stuart (1542-87), Queen of Scots, b. Linlithgow, Scotland; d. Fotheringay, England. She succeeded her father James V when only six days old. She was educated in France and married the Dauphin Francis, becoming queen consort in 1559. Within a year Francis died and Mary returned to Scotland, August, 1561. During her residence abroad Protestantism had made rapid progress in Scotland; Church property had been confiscated and Knox’s followers were filled with frenzied hatred of Catholicism. She consequently issued an edict of toleration, the first in Great Britain. A little later, despite a Protestant revolt abetted by Queen Elizabeth she married her cousin Henry, Lord Darnley, nearest heir after her, proved quarrelsome, immoral, and intensely jealous of her secretary Rizzio, whose assassination he procured. Shortly after the birth of his son James VI, he himself was murdered at the instigation of Mary’s adviser Bothwell, whom she soon married. A new rebellion broke out thereupon; Mary was imprisoned in Lochleven Castle, but escaped, and after her followers had been defeated at Langside, 1568, fled to England, where she was imprisoned for life by Elizabeth. More than once her sympathizers planned to release her, although Elizabeth’s life was never in peril despite the legends accepted by many Protestant writers. In 1586 Mary was accused of complicity in Babington’s conspiracy and executed, the main motive for such punishment being hatred of her religion.—C.E.; Fleming, Mary, Queen of Scots, Lond., 1897; Lang, Mystery of Mary Stuart, Lond., 1901.

Mary Tudor (1516-58), Queen of England, 1553-58, daughter of Henry VIII and Catherine of Aragon. After Henry’s repudiation of Catherine, Mary was harshly treated and during the reign of Edward VI remained in comparative obscurity. On his death she easily crushed the attempt to place Jane Grey on the throne. She was popular at first, but her projected marriage with Philip II of Spain excited discontent culminating in Wyatt’s rebellion. The old religion regained its liberty but the fanaticism of many of the Reformers rendered stern measures necessary for the safety of the State. Mary displayed excessive severity in applying for heresy penalties which Henry VIII and Edward VI had applied with the approval of Protestant bishops; within four years 277 persons were put to death and this record stands as a blot on her memory, though it is now generally admitted that she was prompted by misguided zeal, rather than vindictiveness. This severity was in marked contrast to her former generosity and leniency, and was perhaps partly due to the bitterness of her later years. She was long an invalid; her passionate love for Philip II was unrequited and when there was no further hope of having an heir, he abandoned her and England; in the last year of her life Calais was lost to France, and this was followed by difficulties with the Holy See.—C.E.

Marywood College, Scranton, Pa., conducted by the Sisters, Servants of the Immaculate Heart of Mary; colleges of arts and sciences, commerce, education, social service, homemaking, fine arts, music; graduate and extension courses; summer school; professors, 48; students, 375; degrees conferred in 1929, 110.

Masons, Masonry. See Secret Societies.

Mass, The. The Eucharist as a sacrifice is called the Mass, most probably from the dismissal (missa) of the catechumens before the celebration. The Mass is a true proper sacrifice, namely, "the external offering up of a sensible gift, which is destroyed or transformed by an authorized minister in recognition of God’s supreme dominion." This Catholic doctrine proved from prophecies, from the sacrificial character of the Last Supper, and from the unvarying belief of the faithful. The Mass is identical with the Sacrifice of the Cross in the Viert and the Priest, which is Christ. On the Cross He offered Himself in person and in a bloody manner; in the Mass, through His ministers, in an unbloody manner. As He offered up His death while consecrating the bread and wine, the priest also, acting in remembrance of Him, offers up His death at the consecration of the Mass. He is mystically slain in the separate consecration of bread and wine; the offering is perfected in the Communion of the priest. The value of this offering is infinite from the application of the merits of Christ’s Passion and Death, giving adequate praise and thanksgiving to God. Inexhaustible also are its fruits as satisfaction for sins and punishment due them, and for obtaining all benefits. These fruits are applied partly by the will of the Church, partly by the intention of the priest offering, and partly by those devoutly assisting, for both the living and the dead. Whether the satisfactory fruits of each Mass are infinite in application or limited by the will of Christ is not certainly known.

The Mass is the center of Catholic Liturgy or worship; as Cabrol says, the mustard seed whence all Liturgy has sprung. To appreciate the ritual of the Mass, one must keep in mind that it is a sacrifice by which a sacrament, the Holy Eucharist, is provided for priest and faithful. The nature of the sacrifice is explained under that title. The ritual is a fixed order or framework of prayers and ceremonies into which certain variable prayers and ceremonies are fitted. The fixed order or Ordinary of the Mass, as it is called, precisely because it is part of every Mass, is known as the Common; the variable parts, or special for certain days, as the Proper. The fixed or Ordinary part of the Mass consists of: (1) Confession at the foot of the altar which is formed the same, except at Passiontime and at Requiems, when Ps. 42 is omitted; (2) the Introit, entrance or opening prayer, at the priest’s right hand corner of the altar, to the Offertory, all of which part is variable except the Gloria and Credo, which are not always said; (3) the Offertory, which is fixed or Common, except for the Secret prayer and the Preface which is adapted for certain feasts; (4) the Canon, which varies slightly on Easter and Pentecost Sundays; (5) the Communion, always Proper, and the rest to the end Common as a rule, except the Postcommunion, the Hie Missa Est when the vestments are purple or black, and the Last Gospel in Lent, on vigils, and Sundays when a special Feast is celebrated. As High Mass is the norm for all Masses, incense ceremony is part of the Common before the Introit, before and after the Gospel, at the Offertory and Consecration. The only part of the Mass therefore which is invariably strictly speaking is the Kyrie Eleison. All the others are variable to some extent, and though the Gloria or Credo never change, they are frequently omitted. The parts of the Mass are listed as follows, the Proper being indented. These are treated in their alphabetical places.

Confession Credo
Introit Offertory
Kyrie Eleison Secret
Gloria in Excelsis Preface
Collect Canon (variations)
Epistle (Lesson) Communion
Gradual Postcommunion Tract Dismissal
Alleluia Last Gospel
Sequence Benedicamus
Gospel Blessing

(Incensing before Introit, at and before Gospel, at the Offertory, and Consecration.)

Massa Candida (the White Company). The Roman Martyrology records 300 Christians at Carthage (c. 253) who hurled themselves into a vat of burning lime rather than burn incense to Jupiter. Their fame was perpetuated by St. Augustine and the poet Prudentius. Commemorated, 24 Aug.—C.E.

Massachusetts (the White Company). The Roman Martyrology records 300 Christians at Carthage (c. 253) who hurled themselves into a vat of burning lime rather than burn incense to Jupiter. Their fame was perpetuated by St. Augustine and the poet Prudentius. Commemorated, 24 Aug.—C.E.

—C.E.; Shea.

Mass-dials, scratched or incised dials found on the walls of many old churches in England and Normandy, having only a few lines and no figures. They are said to have been used mainly to tell the time of Mass because of the clearly marked line indicating Terce, or 9 a.m., the hour of the principal Mass.—Horne, Scratch Dials: Their Description and History, Lond., 1929.

Massé, ÉMONT (1574-1646), Jesuit missionary, b. Lyons, France; d. Sillery, Canada. He was one of the first Jesuits sent to New France, established a mission at Bar Harbor, Me., made three journeys to America, and labored among the Indians at Sillery from 1622 until his death.—C.E.

Massillon, JEAN BAPTISTE (1663-1742), celebrated preacher and Bishop. He entered the Oratory at the age of 18, and after his ordination began his career as a preacher which was to give him rank with Bossuet and Bourdaloue. In 1717 he was appointed to the see of Clermont, one of the largest in France. As bishop he maintained ecclesiastical discipline, was a tender father to his clergy and devoted to his flock. His works have been frequently reprinted.—C.E.

Mass of the Pre-sanctified, the concluding service of Good Friday. It is not really a Mass, but the Sacred Host consecrated on the preceding day, as the name indicates, is brought back from the repository; and after the recitation of the Pater Noster, and another prayer, the priest receives Holy Communion, and the service comes abruptly to an end.—Guéranger, tr. Shepherd, The Liturgical Year; Paschontide and Holy Week, Lond., 1888. (J. F. o. o.)

Mass-sorah (Heb., māsōrāth, bond of the covenant), the body of traditional information relating to the text of the Hebrew bible; the collection of critical notes in which this information is preserved. It was compiled by Jewish scholars in the 10th and preceding centuries.—C.E.

Mass-penny, an Anglo-Saxon term signifying a money offering of uncertain value commonly made at the Offertory of the Mass all over the Western Church from the 12th to the 15th century.

Mass-priest, Anglo-Saxon term used prior to the 11th century, to distinguish a duly ordained priest from a simple cleric in minor orders; applied in medieval times to a secular priest as opposed to a monk. From the 10th century, a contemptuous designation for priests among Reformers in England, when the Mass was the chief object of their hatred.

Massys (Matsys or Metys), Quentin (c. 1460-1530), painter, b. Louvain, Belgium; d. Antwerp. He is known to have been the son of a smith, but the familiar stories concerning him are legends. He was the founder of the school of Antwerp, his work marking a great advance over the Flemish primitives. He introduced large figures and added breadth, and is noted for rich color and poetic feeling. His two finest paintings are the triptych in the Antwerp Museum, "The Deposition of Christ," and that in the Brussels Museum, "The Life of St. Ann." His skill in portraiture is evident in "The Banker and His Wife," in the Louvre.—C.E.

Master of Ceremonies, a male person who supervises and directs the formal proceedings of any rite or observance, whether religious or profane; especially one who guides the actions of the celebrant and the assistants in the exact performance of the ritual according to the directive and proceptive rubrics of the Sacred Liturgy. (C. J. D.)

Master of Novices, the religious to whom is committed the training of the novices and the government of the novitiate of a religious order or congregation. His duty is to see that the time devoted to the period of the novice-ship be passed in prayer, meditation and the development of character through a study of the Life of Christ and of the saints, church history, and the vows and the constitution of his order or congregation, and within the time of this probation, he must make a report about each novice to the proper authorities regarding these matters. For this purpose, he is to be free from all other duties and office. Strictly speaking, he is not a religious superior according to the definition of canon law although he has the same rights and duties over the novices as a true religious superior has over his subjects. Canon law has prescribed that he must be at least 35 years of age, have been ten years a religious from his first profession and be eminent in prudence, charity, piety, and in the observance of the rules and regulations of his religious society. If this society be one in which a great many of its members be raised to the priesthood (a clerical institute), the master of novices must be priest.—Woywod; Papi, Religious in Church Law, N. Y., 1924. (J. J. MCG.)

Master of the Sacred Palace, the pope's theologian. This office began with Saint Dominic's appointment, 1218. The functions tended to develop the Palace school, which became the Roman University in 1513. The right to condemn, and give permission to print books were once exclusive prerogatives of this office. The post is now mostly one of honor.—C.E. (A. n.)

Master of the Sentences. See Lombard, Peter.

Mater Admirabilis, title under which Our Lady is especially venerated in the convents of the Religious of the Sacred Heart, who began as a religious institute on the feast of the Presentation of Our Lady in the Temple. A fresco in the Trinità dei Monti, the Sacred Heart convent in Rome, painted by a novice in 1844 and entitled "Mater Admirabilis," is beautifully enshrined in a chapel, and numbers come to pray there, receiving remarkable heavenly favors. Our Lady is represented as a young girl at school in the Temple and as such has become the model of perfection to pupils in Sacred Heart convents.
Maternity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Feast of (2nd Sunday of Oct.), commemorates Mary's divine motherhood, her dignity as Mother of God, and refers also to her spiritual motherhood of men. It was first granted to Portugal, Brazil, and Algeria, 1751; it is now of almost universal observance. It is the patronal feast of the Trinitarians. Under this title Poland celebrates the feast of the Blessed Virgin Mary "Queen of Poland."—C.E.

Mathematics (Gr., mathematikos, disposed to learn), a science consisting of two main divisions: pure mathematics, restricted to the abstract science which by the deductive system examines the conclusions necessarily involved in the idea of numerical and spatial relations, and which includes arithmetic, algebra, geometry, trigonometry, and calculus; and applied mathematics, which treats of the application of the abstract principles of pure mathematics to the concrete, and which comprehends branches of astronomy, physics, etc. The following have distinguished themselves in the fields of pure and applied mathematics. Catholics,—Jacques Philippe Marie Binet (1786-1856), did important research on determinants and was the author of Binet's theorem. Bernhard Bolzano (1781-1848), a priest, proved the binomial theorem and made valuable contributions to the theory of functions and the theory of differentiations. Augustin Louis Cauchy (1789-1857), generally credited with founding the theory of finite order groups known as Cauchy's theorem, introduced alternants in connection with determinants, inaugurated the study of existence theorems, made important contributions to the theories of the convergence and divergence of infinite series, originated the theory of stress in elasticity, gave equations of isotropic elasticity, and developed the wave theory in optics. Christopher Clavis, S.J. (1538-1612), wrote several mathematical treatises and assisted in arranging the Gregorian calendar. René Descartes (1596-1650), invented analytic geometry. Charles Dupin (1784-1873), a professor of mechanics who accomplished major work in descriptive and differential geometry, was the originator of the conception of the conjugate tangents of a surface point and of the indicatrix. Charles Hermite (1822-1901), contributed important additions to the theory of functions and the theory of numbers, and proved the quantity e (the base of Napierian logarithms) to be transcendental. Pierre Simon Laplace (1749-1829), "the Newton of France," and the great master in celestial mechanics, made valuable contributions to the theory of ellipsoidal attraction and the theory of probability; in his honor spherical harmonics are called "Laplace's coefficients." Nicole Oresme (c. 1320-1382), bishop of Lisieux, initiated the foundations of analytical geometry, and wrote a valuable treatise exposing the falsity of the conception of astrology as a science. Blaise Pascal (1623-62), invented a machine for the mechanical performance of arithmetical problems, contributed to advancement of the knowledge of cycloids, and in conjunction with Fermat laid the foundations for the theory of probability. François Viète, Sénéeur de la Rigottière (1540-1603) made the initial application of algebraic transformation to trigonometry, popularized reduction as a method of solving equations and the use of letters of the alphabet in algebra to denote quantity.

—OTHER CHRISTIAN MATHEMATICIANS. Isaac Barrow (1630-77), called the "first inventor of the infinitesimal calculus," celebrated for his method of tangents. Michel Chasles (1793-1880), author of a method of characteristics which is the foundation of enumerative geometry, made several contributions to projective geometry, and was the author of a standard work on geometry. Leonhard Euler (1707-83), revolutionized analytical mathematics, made analytical calculus a science independent of geometry, founded analytical mechanics, advanced the theory of definite integrals by developing "Eulerian" integrals, established the theory on homogeneous functions designated by his name, first proved Fermat's theorem, demonstrated new theorems on the circle, made important research on logarithms as exponents, initiated the work on the distribution of primes, and founded the general equation of hydrodynamics. Karl Friedrich Gauss (1777-1855), regarded as the wonder of German mathematics, revolutionized the theory of numbers by his researches, discovered and proved the law of quadratic reciprocity, originated a new logarithm by the theory of congruence, did a valuable exposition on the theory of dividing the circle into seventeen equal arcs, and made mathematical calculations which led to the rediscovery of the asteroid Ceres, in 1809. Herman Günther Grassmann (1809-77), introduced a new geometric analysis. Gottfried Wilhelm Leibniz (1646-1716), credited with inventing differential and integral calculus, inaugurated the notation of the new calculus, drew up correct rules for differentiation of sums, first made use of variable parameters, constructed a triangular characteristic, and wrote several valuable treatises on higher mathematics. Johann Friedrich Pfaff (1765-1825), was renowned in the subject of differential equations, in which connection he discovered the general integration of partial differential equations. Georg Friedrich Bernhard Riemann (1826-66), the recognized master in the study of surfaces, founded the surfaces designated by his name, and a method of non-Euclidean geometry, put the definite integral on a plane independent of differential calculus, and established the basis of a theory of the functions of complex variables. Booth Taylor (1885-1731) invented that branch of mathematics known as "finite differences," was the author of the theorems known by his name, and first correctly explained refraction in astronomy.—Kneller, Christianity and the Leaders of Modern Science, St. L., 1911; Murray, Science and Scientists in the Nineteenth Century, N. Y., 1925; Cajori, History of Mathematics, N. Y., 1919.

Mathew, Theobald (1790-1856), apostle of Temperance, b. near Cashel, Co. Tipperary, Ireland; d. Queenstown, Cork. In 1808 he joined the Capuchin Order and was ordained in 1814. He did parochial work in Kilkenny for one year and in Cork for 24 years. In 1828 he was appointed provincial of his order for Ireland. In 1838, in order to combat the widespread drunkenness in Ireland he inaugurated the temperance movement which has become historic. It is estimated that in the various countries in which he preached he gave the total abstinence pledge to 7,000,000 and the influence is still felt of the great moral revolution which he accomplished.—C.E., IX, 701.

Matrimonial Unworthiness is considered a hindering impediment by some canonists. If one party has publicly rejected the Catholic faith without joining a heretical sect, or has become a member of a society condemned by the Church, or has been guilty of public crime, or has incurred censure and shows no repentance, the approval of the bishop must be obtained in order to assist at the marriage.—Ayrinhac, Marriage Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law, N. Y., 1919. (J. P. S.)

Matrimonium non consummatum, a marriage properly performed but not consummated by marital intercourse. See DISSOLUTION OF A MARRIAGE.

(Matrimonial Court.) Disputed cases concerning marriage are usually brought before the matrimonial court of a diocese. This tribunal consists of a judge, a secretary or notary, and the Defender of the Tie. The cases which occur most frequently are those in which a "decrees of nullity" is sought, a judgment that a certain marriage was and is invalid. All decisions of the court, to be effective, must have the approval of the bishop. An appeal from the diocesan court may be made to Rome; or, under certain restrictions, a case may be sent there directly. In the Roman "Curia" or Court, the Congregation of the Holy Office has exclusive jurisdiction concerning the Pauline Privilege, the impediment of disparity of worship and that of mixed religion; but it may refer cases to another Congregation, such as that of the Sacraments, or to the Tribunal of the Rota. Any Catholic has the right to bring a case before the proper Roman Congregation or Tribunal, usually through a procurator or advocate.—C.E., IX, 701.

Matilda, Saint (c. 895-908), Queen of Germany, wife of Henry I, b. Engern, Westphalia, Germany; d. Quedlinburg. After her husband's death she made an unsuccessful attempt to secure the throne for her favorite son Henry, but his elder brother was elected and crowned in 936. Later both brothers joined against her and she withdrew from the palace, but was afterwards recalled. She built many churches and founded or supported numerous monasteries. Emblems: a purse, and alms. Buried in the monastery at Quedlinburg, Feast, 14 March.—C.E.

Matins (Lat., matutinum, of the morning), in the Divine Office the first of the Canonical Hours. It probably derives its origin from the primitive Vigils which preceeded the Eucharistic Assembly. The term was originally restricted to the conclusion of the Vigil (present Lauds), but gradually supplanted the term Vigil for that part of the service held between midnight and dawn. From the 4th century Matins was divided into three nocturns for Sundays and feasts, but on ferial days it consisted of one nocturn. The nocturns comprised psalms, prayers, lengthy Scriptural lessons, and other readings. The psalms and books of Scripture were revised according to a fixed order. In the normal festive Office of the present Roman Breviary, Matins has three nocturns, each consisting of three psalms, three lessons, and three responses. The first three lessons are from Scripture, the second group historical, the third group a pastoral homily upon the Gospel of the Mass of the day. The first nocturn is introduced by Ps. 94 and a hymn; the third nocturn concludes with the Te Deum instead of the ninth response.—C.E. (J. G. K.)
"form" consists in the words or outward signs by which the man and the woman express their agreement and intention to be husband and wife. This sacrament may be received by any baptized person, provided that there is no natural impediment and none that arises from the law of God or of the Church. From some impediments the Church can dispense; from others she cannot. God's law prohibits marriage between persons who are within very close degrees of blood-relationship, and other impediments have been established by the law of the Church. Unbaptized persons, though they may enter into the lifelong contract of matrimony, are incapable of receiving the sacrament.

The ceremonies of a Catholic marriage are simple. They consist essentially in the expression of mutual consent, the blessing of the union by the priest, and the giving of the wedding-ring, a symbol of faithfulness. The words expressing consent, and those used at the giving of the ring, vary in different languages and in different countries. The Church urges strongly that marriages of Catholics should take place in church and with a Nuptial Mass, but will dispense with these conditions for sufficient reasons.—C.E.; Woywod; Ayrynhac, Marriage Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law, N. Y., 1929; Sullivan, Externals of the Catholic Church, N. Y., 1918.

Matris sub alma numine, or By Mary's inspiration led, hymn for Vespers on the feast of the Seven Holy Founders, 12 Feb. Vincent Tarozzi (1849-1918) is the author; the English title given above is by W. Wallace.—Britt.

Matteo of Bascio (c. 1495-1552), founder and first superior-general of the Order of Friars Minor Capuchins, b. Bascio, Italy; d. Venice. He entered the Order of Observants at Montefiorentino, and in 1525 was a missionary priest at the friary of Montefalcone. His simplicity and fervor rebelling against the relaxation of the Rule, he tried to lead a life of greater austerity, following more closely the saint's. Meeting with many difficulties and feeling bound to observe a stricter rule, he fled to Rome and submitted himself to Pope Clement VII, 1525. From the latter he obtained permission to wear the altered habit, to observe the relaxation of the Rule, he tried to lead a life of greater austerity, following more closely the Rule of St. Francis, and changing his habit to conform with the saint's. Meeting with many difficulties and feeling bound to observe a stricter rule, he fled to Rome and submitted himself to Pope Clement VII, 1525. From the latter he obtained permission to wear the altered habit, to observe the Rule of St. Francis to the letter, and to go about preaching, provided he would annually present himself to the minister-provincial at the time of the Chapter. As he was unable to prove this by document he was taken prisoner the first time he presented himself. After three years, during which Matteo underwent many hardships, Clement canonically approved the new Reform and placed Matteo and his followers under the nominal jurisdiction of the Conventuals. The name Capuchin was later officially adopted. At the first Chapter of the new order, 1529, Matteo was elected superior-general, but he soon resigned his office to resume Apostolic work.—C.E., II, 314; Cuthbert, The Capuchins, N. Y., 1929.

Matter, Sacramental, a theological term designating the material element of a sacrament; e.g., water in Baptism. From the institution by Christ, the matter is an essential part of a sacrament, so that the use of valid matter by the minister is necessary for a valid sacrament.—C.E., XIII, 298.

_Matter and Form_, the Aristotelian theory of the composition of corporeal beings, adopted and perfected by the schoolmen. All bodies contain two constituent principles, the one passive and indeterminate, the other active and determining. The first is primal matter, the second that which gives it a particular character, a specific nature, that is, what constitutes it a substance with its own peculiar qualities which distinguish it from every other substance. The theory is known by the technical term hylomorphism (Gr., hyla, matter; morphe, form).—McWilliams, Cosmology, N. Y., 1928. (ed.)

_Matter and Materialism_, Matter is a quantitative substance, or that substance which is a constituent of all bodies and in which the physical accident of quantity inheres whereby the body naturally has extended location in space. By reason of this accident of quantity a body is naturally impenetrable, i.e., occupies space in such a way as to exclude all other bodies from occupying the same space at the same time. Materialism is, then, that philosophic system of Monism which denies the existence of any other constituent substance of spirit, and claims that all phenomena of the universe can and must be explained by matter and the forces or energies inherent in and intrinsically dependent upon brute matter.—C.E.; Windelband, tr. Tufts, A History of Philosophy, N. Y., 1893.

_Matteucci_, Carlo (1811-68), physicist, b. Romagna, Italy; d. Leghorn. He did excellent and important work at the Ravenna Hospital and the University of Pisa, developing knowledge of electrostatics and electrodynamics, his greatest achievements being in the field of electrophysiology. He was also successful as a politician. He published a great deal in the English, French and Italian journals of science, besides a number of books.—C.E.

(Matthew Heb., Mattija, "gift of Jahveh"), SAINT, Apostle and Evangelist. The Matthew mentioned in the N.T. (Matt., 9), as called by Christ, is identical with Levi (Mark, 2; Luke, 5); hence it is concluded that he was known originally as Levi and that the name Matthew was given to him by Christ when he began his apostolate. A Galilean Jew by birth, the son of Alpheus, he was a publican by trade, and therefore despised by the Pharisees; he possessed some education and a knowledge of Greek. His name occurs several times in the N.T. (Luke, 6; Mark, 3; Acts, 1); he witnessed the Resurrection; was present at the Ascension, and in the upper chamber in Jerusalem with Mary, the Mother of Jesus, and his brethren (Acts, 1). The accounts of the career of Matthew subsequent to the Ascension are legendary; he is said to have evangelized Asiatic Ethiopia, Persia, Macedonia, Syria, and the kingdom of the Parthians. There has been some disagreement over the place and manner of his death, but it is generally conceded that he was martyred. His relics were translated to the west and, according to a letter of Gregory VII addressed to the Bp. of Salerno, 1080, they were placed in the church of his name in that city, where they still remain. Matthew is usually symbolized as a winged man, probably because he begins his Gospel with the human genealogy of Christ. Patron of tax-gatherers and bankers. Emblems: purse and lance. Feast, 21 Sept.—C.E.; Butler.

Matthew, Gospel of Saint, the first book of the New Testament. Its author is the Apostle St. Matthew, who wrote an account of Our Lord's life in the Hebrew dialect then in use by the Palestinian Jews (Aramaic'), about a.d. 40 or 50. He wrote the Gospel in Palestine for converts from Judaism, to confirm them in their faith in Jesus as the promised Messiah, and to convince the unbelievers that they had rejected the Redeemer. The characteristic which especially distinguishes this Gospel from the others is the frequent citations of and allusions to the Old Testament prophecies. The fulfilment of these prophecies in Jesus proves Him to be the Messiah. The 28 chapters of the Gospel may be divided according to the following topics: Jesus is proven the Messiah in His ancestry, birth, and infancy (1-2); He is shown to be the Messiah in the preparation for the public ministry (3-4); He manifests Himself as the Messiah in public life, being teacher and legislator (5-7), wonder-worker (8-9), founder of the Kingdom of God (10-25); He is shown to be the Messiah in the humility of His sufferings and the glory of His Resurrection (26-28). The Biblical Commission, 19 June, 1911, declared that the universal and constant tradition dating from the first centuries and expressed in early writings, ancient codices, versions and catalogues of the Bible, proves beyond doubt that St. Matthew wrote the first Gospel, as we now have it in our Bibles, before the year 70, and that the Gospel is in conformity with historical truth. Chapters specially commendable for reading: 1-2, the hidden life; 5, 6, 7, Sermon on the Mount; 13, 16, 18, 19, parables, and instructions on the Kingdom of God; 15, last judgment; 26-28, Passion, Death and Resurrection.—C.E.; Mass, Gospel according to St. Matthew, St. L., 1916; Cladder, In the Fullness of Time, St. L., 1925. (R. F. s.)

Matthew of Westminster, supposed author of the English chronicle "Flores Historiarum." The misunderstanding regarding this imaginary personage originated with a copyist who, perceiving that part of the chronicle was written at Westminster, supposed the author himself to be a monk of Westminster.—C.E., XV, 397. Matthew (Heb., Mattithiah, gift of Jahveh), Saint, disciple selected with Barsabas, after the Ascension, from those followers of Christ who were deemed qualified for appointment to the Apostleship vacant through the betrayal and death of Judas. After prayer and a solemn appeal to lots, Matthias was chosen (Acts, 1). As a disciple he had attended Christ from His Baptism until His Ascension. Details of his life and death vary; according to one legend he was crucified in Ethiopia; another maintains that he was stoned and beheaded by the Jews, in Jerusalem. Relics at Trier. Feast, R. Cal., 25 Feb.—C.E.; Butler.

Matthias Corvinus (1440-90), King of Hungary, son of János Hunyady, b. Kolozsvár; d. at Vienna. After an eventful youth he was proclaimed King of Hungary in 1469 and at once had to contend with Frederick III, who had assumed the title. Matthias was crowned in 1463. He was soon called upon by the pope to take up arms against his father-in-law, George Podiebrad, the deposed king of Bohemia, but was defeated at the battle of Varna in 1444. He again broke out with Frederick III and Matthias, who had besieged Vienna in 1411, captured it in 1485. His crusade against the Turks was fruitless. His relations with the Church were good until 1471, but the threatened rupture with the Holy See was happily averted. He introduced the humanities into Hungary, established the Corvinian Library at Buda, reformed taxation, and earned the title of "The Just" for his enactments in judicial affairs.—C.E.

Maundy Thursday or Holy Thursday (rarely called Sister Thursday), from the former custom of sharing the bread on that day. Thursday before Easter, commemorating the institution of the Holy Eucharist. On this day only one Mass may be celebrated in each church, at which an additional Host is consecrated and borne in procession to the Altar of Repose to be used at the Mass of the Pre-sanctified on the following day. The ringing of bells ceases after the Gloria in the Mass until Holy Saturday, and after vespers the altars are stripped, and were formerly washed with wine and water. This was followed by the washing of the feet, called the Mandatum from the words of the first antiphon sung during the ceremony, which is not now universally performed, when the principal priest of the church assisted by the deacon and subdeacon washed the feet of 12 poor men in imitation of Christ, who washed the feet of the 12 Apostles. The holy oils are consecrated on this day by the bishop and it was formerly the day on which penitents were reconciled to the Church. The night office celebrated is called Tenebrae.—C.E.; Guéranger, tr. Shepherd, The Liturgical Year: Passiontide and Holy Week, Lond., 1886.

Mauretania, ancient name of the northwestern angle of the African continent, was a great corn-producing region. In the first century B.C. it was an organized state and was divided later into two kingdoms which received additional territory in return for aid given to Julius Caesar. In 25 B.C. they were given to Juba II of Numidia; in A.D. 42 annexed to the Roman empire by Claudius and divided into two provinces. In the Notitia nearly 170 episcopal sees were mentioned there. Parts of Mauretania never became Roman. It regained its political autonomy during the Vandal period; a native dynasty was set up and escaped conquest by the Byzantine Army. The ecclesiastical province lasted from the 4th century to the Arab invasion of the 7th. When it became Islamized, it became the center of their propaganda among the Berbers of the Sudan, Sahara, and Atlas. The name is now given to a colony of French West Africa (344,907 sq. m.).

Maurice and Companions, Saints, martyrs (c. 286), d. Agaunum (now Saint Maurice), Switzerland. According to the legend, the Theban legion of which Maurice was the leader, composed entirely of Christians, had been sent by Emperor Maximian Herculeus into Gaul to suppress the Baganda revolt. When ordered to sacrifice to the gods in thanksgiving for a victory, they refused. The troops were decimated several times, and the remainder finally massacred together. Maurice is the patron of many places in Switzerland, Piedmont, France, and Germany; of soldiers, the Swiss Guard of the Pope, swordsmen, and dyers; he is invoked against gout and cramps. Represented as a knight in full armor, bearing a standard and a palm; in Italian art he is portrayed with a red cross on his breast, and this has become the badge of the Sardinian Order of St. Maurice. Relics at Magdeburg, Feast, R. Cal., 22 Sept.—C. E.; Butler.

Maurists, The, a Benedictine Congregation in France, an offshoot of the reformed Congregation of St-Vannes, became independent, 1618, as the Congregation of St. Maur, with the approval of Louis XIII and Cardinals de Retz and Richelieu; and sanctioned by Popes Gregory XV, 1621, and Urban VIII, 1627. Before 1600 there were over 180 monasteries, the congregation being divided into six provinces: France, Normandy, Brittany, Burgundy, Cheval-Beauit, and Gascony. They conducted schools, and learned scholars, such as Léon d’Achery, Jean Mathion, Thierry, Ruinart, Pierre Constant, Antoine Rivet de la Grange, etc., were attracted to its ranks and produced great works. The Maurists were suppressed by the Revolution; an attempt to restore them, 1817, being disapproved by the Holy See, the congregation ceased to exist. The Congregation of France, founded 1837, by Gregory XVI, was declared the successor of all the former congregations of French Benedictines, including that of St. Maur.—C. E.

Maurus, Saint, abbot (d. 584). He was a disciple of St. Benedict, assisting him in the government of Subiaco, and in 528 joined him at Monte Cassino. In 543 Maurus founded the abbey at Glanfeuil, France, which he governed for several years and which was later named for him. Patron of the Azores, coppersmiths, and charcoal-burners; invoked against gout and hoarseness. Emblems: scales, spade, crutch. Relics in S. Germain, Paris, destroyed 1793, Feast, R. Cal., 15 Jan.—C. E.; Butler.

Maury, Jean Siffrein (1746-1817), cardinal and statesman, b. Valreas near Avignon, France; d. Rome. His eloquence secured his appointment as royal preacher. In 1780 he was deputy to the States-General for the clergy of Périgord, and he became the acknowledged leader of the Court and Church party. When he was obliged to leave France, Pius VI invited him to reside in Rome and made him cardinal and Abp. of Montefiascone. He withdrew his adherence from Louis XVIII to support Napoleon, with whom he sided in the question of the divorce, and it was he who suggested a means of dispensing with the papal institution of bishops. He was suspended by the pope and during the Hundred Days was confined in the Castle of Sant’ Angelo, but Consalvi secured his release and brought about a reconciliation with the pope, which he did not long survive.—C. E.

Mausoleum, a monument erected to receive the remains of a deceased person. The term originated in the magnificent monument erected by Queen Artemisia in 353 B.C., in memory of her husband King Mausolus. The largest of them are the tombs of Augustus and Hadrian in Rome.

Maximianus, Marcus Aurelius Valerius, surnamed Herculeus, Roman emperor (306-312), son of the Emperor Maximianus Herculeus and son-in-law of the chief emperor Galerius. He was elected by the senators and pretorians as the rival of Galerius, who endeavored in vain to crush him. He retained the imperial dignity after the conference of the Caesars in 307. He joined with Maximin, Emperor of the East, against Constantine, but was defeated by him in the battle of Milvian Bridge, during which he was drowned. His reign was stained with acts of cruelty and debauchery, although he put an end to the persecutions of Christians in Italy and Africa.—C. E.

Maximianus, Marcus Aurelius Valerius, surnamed Herculeus, Roman Emperor, was adopted by Diocletian and named his co-regent in 286, receiving the title of regent in 286. He resigned the purple at Milan after the election of his son Maxentius, but the new emperor proved incapable of governing and Maximianus was recalled to restore order, in which he failed. He conducted a vigorous persecution of the Christians in the western provinces of which he was governor. He again renounced the purple after the meeting of the Caesars in 307. He gave his youngest daughter Fausta in marriage to Constantine and having again assumed the imperial dignity was surrendered to Constantine by his own soldiers. He was pardoned, but in 310 committed suicide.—C. E.

Maximilian I, Duke of Bavaria, Elector of Bavaria, and Steward of the Holy Roman Empire, b. Munich; d. Ingolstadt; son of William V, the Pious, of Bavaria, and Renate of Lorraine. Maximilian gave much attention to the advancement of religion among the people. He reestablished the Catholic Church and made Catholicity the only religion in Bavaria; he organized the Catholic League, 1609, founded five Jesuit colleges, a monastery for the Minims, one for the Carmelites, nine for the Franciscans, and fourteen for the Capuchins. Besides this Maximilian was especially attentive to military matters; he was sincerely religious and rigidly moral in conduct, and not only put down every movement in opposition to the Church in his own country but also exterminated Calvinism and Lutheranism in the territories he had acquired.—C.E.

Maximilian of Antioch, Saint, martyr (c. 358), d. Antioch. He was a soldier of the Heraclean cohort, and was martyred for refusing to remove the monogram of Christ from the standard, as had been ordered by Julian the Apostate. Feast, 21 Aug.—C.E.

Maximinus, CAIUS VALERIUS DADA (d. 313), Caesar of Syria and Egypt from the year 305 under his uncle Augustus Galerius. He persecuted the Christians in his part of the empire with great severity. In 312 he took advantage of the absence of Constantine and Licinius and captured Byzantium, but was subsequently defeated by Licinius and died by taking poison.—C.E.

Maximus of Constantinople, Saint, confessor (c. 580-602), Abbot of Chrysopolis (Scutari), b. Constantinople; d. Shemarum, on the Black Sea. He was one of the chief doctors of the theology of the Incarnation, and was called Homoeotes (Confessor), from his orthodox zeal in the Monothelite controversy. Of noble parentage, he became secretary to Emperor Heraclius, but left the world, 630, to enter the monastery at Chrysopolis, where he was later elected abbot. He went to Africa where he held a dispute with Pyrrhus, the banished patriarch of Constantinople. He attended the Lateran Council, 649, convened by Martin I. It condemned the Monothelite doctrines and the “Typus” of Constans II. Maximus was arrested by Constans for his zeal against the latter document. Later he was tried and condemned to have a hand and ear cut off. He died in exile for his orthodoxy and obedience to Rome. An able theologian, he left many works. Feast, 13 Aug.—C.E.; Butler.

May, month of special devotion to the Blessed Virgin. May devotion, in its present form, does not antedate the 18th century. It is said to have been originated by Father Latomia of the Roman College of the Society of Jesus. To counteract infidelity and immorality among the students, he made a vow to devote the month of May to Mary. The Jesuit Fathers have been particularly zealous in spreading this devotion. Pius VII granted an indulgence of 300 days each day, for observance of the devotion either in public or in private, and a plenary indulgence on any day of the month, including the first eight days of June, the usual conditions to be observed.

Maya Indians, the most important of the cultured aborigines of North America, belonging to Mexico, Yucatan, and Guatemala. They number about 2,000,000 and have preserved the Maya language. According to their legends they came from the West. They were not conquered by Spain until 1542. The first missionaries were Franciscans, among them the provincial, de Landa, who attempted with great cruelty to suppress the ancient rites. The Maya have had many revolts against the Mexican Government, the most serious of which was in 1860. They are short, dark, muscular, reliable and industrious. They wear the ordinary dress of Mexican peasants. Namely Catholics, they retain many ancient rites. In 1894 the population of the independent tribes was about 10,000. The ancient Maya government was an hereditary monarchy with a council of lords and priests. They had a clan system with descent in the male line. Marriage was strictly regulated and polygamy unknown. Their code of laws was not severe. Corn, cocoa, cotton, and other crops were cultivated. There was an elaborate ritual but human sacrifices were rare. They were skilled in many arts especially architecture and sculpture although their only tools were of stone. They wrote in hieroglyphs on parchment. Much attention has been given to the Maya language. There are ruins of splendid temples at Palenque, Uxmal, and Mayapan.—C.E.

Mayer, Christian (1719-83), Jesuit astronomer, b. Moravia; d. Heidelberg, Germany. He taught mathematics at the University of Heidelberg, conducted and took charge of astronomical observatories at Mannheim and Schwetzingen, and conducted scientific research in Paris and St. Petersburg. He was a member of numerous learned societies. His claims of having discovered stars, evidently due to an optical illusion, caused much controversy. He wrote several astronomical treatises. —C.E.

May Laws, the name applied to a series of laws enacted by the Prussian Diet May, 1873-75, marking the beginning of the conflict between Church and State in Germany, generally known as the Kulturkampf. The May Laws had the fullest support of Bismarck, though their actual author was Falk, the Prussian minister of public worship. Preliminary to the May Laws was the abolition of the Catholic department in the ministry of public worship (1871), the placing of the State in exclusive control of education, and the expulsion of the Jesuits from the empire (1873). A year later a like expulsion was decreed against the Re- demptionists, Lazarists, Priests of the Holy Ghost, and Nuns of the Sacred Heart as being religious associations allied to the Jesuits. The May Laws proper of 1873 were chiefly as follows: (1) The law of 11 May respected the education and nomination of the clergy. According to this, ecclesiastical positions were open only to native Germans who had been educated at the German gymnasium, who had spent three years pursuing theology at a German university, who had passed the state examination, and who upon presentation by the bishop were accepted by the president of the province. (2) The law of 12 May respected the disciplinary powers of ecclesiastical superiors and established a secular court for deciding ecclesiastical questions, bestowing on it the right, under certain circumstances, of dismissing the clergy from their posts. (3) The law of 13 May restricted the Church's power of punishing. (4) The law of 14 May laid down rules for those who desired to leave the Church, declaring it sufficient for them to manifest their intention before a secular judge. So much at variance with the Constitutions were these laws that the two paragraphs (15, 18) guaranteeing the independence and self-government of the Church, had first to be amended (1873) and finally together with another (16) entirely abrogated. Although serious punishments were threatened violators of these laws, the Prussian Episcopate rejected them as a whole. First and foremost, they refused to present to the government the candidates for nomination which led to a conflict between Church and State. The bishops and many of the clergy were fined or imprisoned, some were removed from posts, notably, two archbishops, Ledochowski of Gnesen-Posen and Melchers of Cologne; four bishops, Brinkman of Münster, Blum of Limburg, Fürster of Breslau, Martin of Paderborn; one auxiliary bishop, Janiszewski of Posen. Moreover, the May Laws were made more severe. By the military law, the divinity students lost their privilege respecting military service. Salaries due from the state were withheld from episcopal administrators and bishops, until they would write their submission to the laws of the state; religious orders were dissolved save those which devoted themselves to the care of the sick (1875). A law was passed enacting that clergy who refused to submit when ejected from office by the secular court might be expelled either from a certain locality or from the empire (1874). The government made great efforts to execute its laws against the Church but it was in vain. Most of the clergy and laity remained loyal to the bishops, and the Center Party under the leadership of Ludwig Windthorst, each year increased its membership in the Imperial Parliament. The May Laws were finally modified by two comprehensive laws (21 May, 1886, and 29 April, 1887), which in substance yielded to the Church the control of ecclesiastical education; permitted the reassertion of the papal disciplinary authority over the clergy; allowed the restoration of public worship and the administration of the sacraments; the application of ecclesiastical disciplinary measures; and held out to the religious orders the hope of returning. In 1905 the last remnant of the May Laws disappeared, when the anti-Jesuit Law was modified.—C.E., VIII, 707; Weber, A General History of the Christian Era, Wash., 1928.

(c. v.)

Maynooth College, the National College of St. Patrick, founded 1795, through Dr. Troy, Abp. of Dublin, to satisfy the necessity of a Catholic College. The “Dunboyne Establishment,” a fund for the maintenance of a higher course of ecclesiastical studies, was bequeathed by John Butler, twelfth Baron Dunboyne. The Aula Maxima, opened 1803, was presented by the Right Rev. Mgr. MacMahon of Washington. Maynooth has sent out more than 7000 priests; it is a recognized college of the National University.-C.E.

Mayo, School of, founded by St. Colman, c. 608, became famous for sanctity and learning. It suffered from raids of natives and foreigners, especially during the 14th century.—C.E.

Mazzarino, máz-ár-rinó, Jules (1602-61), cardinal, and prime minister of France after Richelieu’s death; b. Piseina, Italy; d. Vincennes, France. After being in turn a captain in the pontifical troops, and a diplomat, he was recommended to Louis XIII by Richelieu for having ably seconded the cardinal’s policy against Spain. He was then naturalized, and although he was only in minor orders Louis obtained for him the cardinal’s hat. His real power began after the death of Louis XIII, and during the minority of his son, Anne of Austria, who favored him greatly, appointed him prime minister, and in spite of fierce opposition he remained in power until death. He continued Richelieu’s policy toward the House of Austria, and brought the Thirty Years’ War to a conclusion by the famous treaty of Westphalia, which was far from favorable to the Church. He continued to curb the princes, and they organized against him the civil war known as the “Fronde.” Although he was obliged to go into temporary exile, he came back stronger than ever and it was he who laid the foundation of the power of Louis XIV. He was a decided enemy of Jansenism. He amassed an enormous fortune by questionable means, but he bequeathed considerable sums to the “Bibliothèque Mazarine” in París.—C.E. (F. P. B.)

Mazzella, Camillo (1833-1900), Jesuit theologian and cardinal; b. Vitulano, near Benevento, Italy; d. Rome. Expelled with his order from Italy, he taught theology at Fourvieres, and at Georgetown University, Washington. He was professor at Woodstock College, Maryland, called to Rome to teach at the Gregorian University, president of the Academy of St. Thomas, prefect of the Congregations of the Index, of Studies, and of Rites, and Card.-Bp. of Palestina.—C.E.

Means, the agents or things used to obtain an end. They are the bridge over which the agent reaches the desired end. Usually, they are associated with the question: “Does the end justify the means?” See End.

(c. A. F.)

Meat, as related to the law of the Church, is the flesh of animals and birds, inasmuch as flesh is eaten by man. The prohibition of meat on days of fast and abstinence is because of the spiritual value of such deprivation. In the law of the Church, as it stands now, the restriction regarding meat is much lessened as to the number of days on which it is not allowed. When meat is forbidden, the use of soup, or broth, made from meat is also forbidden. See White Meats.

Meath, Diocese of, Ireland, comprises the greater part of Meath, Westmeath, and Offaly counties, and a small portion of Longford, Louth, Dublin, and Cavan; founded, 529; suffragan of Armagh; episcopal residence at Mullingar. Anciently it comprised eight sees. The list of its bishops includes William Walsh, Blessed Oliver Plunket, Dr. Cantwell, and Thomas Nulty. Pagan and Christian historic relics abound, including Brugh-na-Bóinne, cemetery of the pagan kings, Tara and several royal palaces, and the sculptured crosses and round tower of Kells. Churches, 144; priests, secular, 157; priests, regular, 21; religious women, 281; seminaries, 2; high schools, 5; numerous primary and parochial schools; institutions, 9; Catholics, 127,729; others, 9866.

Mechanism, or Mechanicism, in general, a philosophical trend which denies or minimizes purpose in the universe, and seeks to explain all phenomena solely by efficient causality. It is based on the extreme simplification of all reality into matter and motion, as is the apparent aim of physical science, following Descartes and Kant, a denial of quality in favor of quantity, in a restricted sense, mechanism is interpretation of the highly complex activities of life as merely the product of the organization and interplay of physico-chemical forces, either known or unknown. The term is used by Herbert as a synonym for materialism.—C.E.; Eldridge, The Organization of Life, N. Y., 1925; Driesch, Body and Mind, N. Y., 1928.

Mechtilde (Matilda von Hacket-Neppa), Saint, virgin (c. 1240-98), b. near Eisleben, Saxony; d. in the monastery of Helfta. She was of a noble, influential Thuringian family, sister of St. Gertrude, Abbess of Helfta. She entered the convent of Rodersdorf, later transferred to Helfta, and progressed rapidly in the religious life. She cared for the novitiate of St. Gertrude the Great. The "Book of Special Grace," composed by St. Gertrude and another sister, has had many editions. Feast, 26 Feb.—C.E.

Medal of St. Benedict, devotional medal made at the great monastery of the Benedictine Order at Monte Cassino, Italy. It is stamped with a likeness of St. Benedict, "Father of the Monastic Life," bearing the book of the Benedictine rule and a crown beneath which are the words Cruix Patris Benedicti (Cross of Father Benedict). A chalice and a crown are shown, symbolic of the priesthood and of hermit life. Around the edge are the words Ejus in Obitu Nostru Preseditia Muinumae (At our death may we be strengthened by his presence). On the reverse side are various initials of Latin mottoes and the word Pax (peace) or the monogram H.I.S. It was first approved by Benedict XIV in 1741, and further indulgences were granted by Pius IX and Pius X.—C.E., XIII, 338. (J. F. S.)

Medal of St. Christopher, medal intended to honor the Saint as "Patron of Travelers." It bears a picture of him fording a stream and carrying the Infant Christ on his shoulder. At the present day it is used largely by automobilists. (J. F. S.)

Medals, Religious, pieces of metal resembling coins, blessed by the Church and used to increase devotion, to commemorate some religious event, to protect the wearer, or to serve as badges of pious societies. Some bring indulgences to the user. Their use among Christians is very ancient; many have been found in the catacombs, often marked with the Chi-Rho, the Greek monogram which is an abbreviation of the name of Christ. In the Middle Ages, when pilgrimages were made to famous shrines, medals or "tokens" were often given to the pilgrims; and c. 1475 medals were made commemorating papal jubilees. Many kinds are now in use: (1) those in honor of Our Blessed Lord such as the Medal of the Sacred Heart, of the Holy Childhood, and of the Infant of Prague; (2) those in honor of the Blessed Virgin, the Mater Dolorosa, Our Lady of Victory, of Mount Carmel, of Good Counsel, of Perpetual Help, of Lourdes, and the "Miraculous Medal"; (3) those in honor of saints, e.g., Sts. Joseph, Dominic, Aloysius, Francis de Asissi, Agnes, Anne, Rita, the popular Medal of St. Christopher, and also the highly indulgenced Medal of St. Benedict (q.v.); (4) those in honor of religious events and of devotions, e.g., First Communions, jubilees, etc., including the Scapular Medal.—C.E. (J. F. S.)

Medardus, Saint (c. 456-545), confessed Bp. of Noyon, h. Salency, France; d. Noyon. He was Bp. of Vermand, which see he transferred to Noyon on account of the barbarian invasions, and he also administered the Diocese of Tournai. Represented with an eagle's wings spread over his head to protect him from rain and also with a horse at his side. Relics at Noyon and Soissons. Feast, 8 June.—C.E.; Butler.

Mediator, title of Our Lord, referring to his reconciliation of God and man. The Council of Trent defines that "we were saved through the merits of one mediator Our Lord Jesus Christ" (Sess. 5, canon 31). The object of the mediatorship is here pointed out as the salvation of mankind, as St. Paul wrote (1 Tim. 2; cf. Col., 1). Christ is well qualified to be a mediator, i.e., one who brings estranged parties to amicable agreement. Being God and man, He can best restore friendship between God and the human family, and bring peace to men, His brethren, who through Him have become the objects of God's complacency, as the angels sang in midnight heavens: "Peace to men of good will." Even if man had not sinned and the Incarnation had not taken place, Christ would be our mediator, to offer to God mankind's homage thus defiled, "Glory to God in the highest," and bring God's blessings down upon men. He is the head of the body, the Church, the firstborn of every creature, our human family thus acquiring a claim to participate in the supernatural privileges of our head, Christ Jesus the Son of God. As Wilhelm well says (C.E., X, 119), "His mediation partly replaces, partly completes, partly renders possible and efficacious the saving work of man himself," for personal salvation and sanctification are effected by our own free acts as members of Christ, enabled by the communication of life Divine to do godly acts and really merit our eternal reward when Christ our Mediator will achieve His triumph.—C.E. (J. M. B.)

Medical Science, the science comprising: anatomy, which treats of organic structure; bacteriology, the science of bacteria; cytology, the science of cell organisms; embryology, which treats of the early development of organisms; physiology, which deals with the functions and processes of living organisms; and surgery. The following names are distinguished in the various branches of the science:—

Catholic, Gunning S. Bedford (1806-70), obstetrician, established the first gratuitous clinic for obstetrics in the United States, founded the University Medical College of New York, and wrote standard works on obstetrics. Claude Bernard (1813-78), first professor of physiology at the Sorbonne, discovered the liver's glyogenic func-Theophrastus Paracelsus (1493-1541) made great improvements in therapeutics, founded modern materia medica, and inaugurated the use of mercury in the treatment of syphilis. Theophraste Renaudot (1586-1653) initiated a system of free medical consultation for the poor, and wrote the first treatise on diagnosis in France. Theodor Schwann (1810-82) discovered the cell, thus founding modern cellular physiology; among his discoveries are: the envelope of the nerve fibers, known by his name, the organic character of yeast, and the fibers known as Tames fibers in the teeth.

Andreas Vesalius (1514-64) reorganized the study of anatomy and overthrew Galenism; the statement that he was hampered by ecclesiastical authority and the Inquisition is erroneous, as is the charge that the Church was opposed to anatomy. The latter charge is founded on a misinterpretation of a Bull of Boniface VIII, "De Sepulchris."

OtHeR CHristIans, Giorgio Baglli (1609-1707), professor of anatomy at Sapienza College, Rome, is renowned for his anatomical researches and as author of the theory of "solidism" in medicine, which ascribes the seat of diseases to the solid part of an organ rather than the liquid. Sir Charles Bell (1774-1842) made invaluable discoveries in the physiology of the nervous system; e.g., he discovered the differences, and their causes, between sensory, motor, and sensory-motor nerves, pointed out the division of parts that might be made of the brain and spinal cord, and showed that the specialized function of each part is transmitted to the nerves springing from it. Hermann Boerhaave (1668-1738), world-famed physician, occupied the chair of medicine at Leyden, did noted investigations on the chemical and mechanical aspects of body diseases, and contributed to the physiology of the nervous system.

Sir Astley Paston Cooper (1768-1841), president of the Royal College of Surgeons, one of the founders of the Medico-Chirurgical Society, is celebrated for his work on hernia. Marie Jean Pierre Florens (1794-1867) made notable contributions to the physiological theory of sensations, and did research on the peculiar functions of specific parts of the brain. Samuel Christian Friedrich Hahnemann (1755-1843) founded homeopathy and was the author of several scientific works.

Marshall Hall (1790-1857) discovered reflex action, inaugurated the use of strychnine in diseases of the spine, was a vigorous opponent of excessive blood-letting, and made noteworthy researches on circulation and on the nervous system and nervous... diseases. Albrecht Von Haller (1708-77), famed for his anatomical and physiological researches, particularly on the irritability of the muscles, directed the organization of the theater of anatomy and school of obstetrics of the University of Göttingen, and wrote numerous anatomical and botanical works. William Harvey (1578-1657) is famed as the discoverer of the circulation of the blood. Christoff Wilhelm Hufeland (1762-1836), the most renowned German physician of his day, was professor of therapeutics and pathology at Berlin and author of works on medicine and physiology, particularly a famous work on macrobiotics. Joseph Hyrtl (1810-94), Rector of the University of Vienna, author of innumerable treatises on anatomy, was famed for his antimaterialistic scientific views. Robert Koch (1843-1910) did distinguished research work and writing on bacteriology and traumatic diseases of infection, particularly anthrax, cholera, and tuberculosis; he discovered the tuberculosis germ, proved its infectious nature, and discovered a cure for the disease; he was an exponent of inoculation against anthrax. Joseph, Baron Lister (1827-1912), surgeon, is renowned for his work in antiseptics, particularly his system of antiseptic bandaging. Sir James Paget (1814-99), discovered the Trichina spiralis, a parasite found in human muscles, and the heart and bone diseases designated by his name, and did important microscopic pathological research, particularly on tumors. James Young Simpson (1811-70) was renowned for his contributions to gynecology and obstetrics, and was the first to employ chloroform as an anesthetic in surgical operations and obstetrics. Karl Von Vierordt (1818-84) founded phylomography and made many contributions increasing the knowledge of the circulatory system. Alfred Wilhelm Volkmann (1801-77) is distinguished for his additions to the physiology of the nervous system and physiological optics. Rudolf Wagner (1805-64), the co-discoverer of the germinal vesicle, made important investigations on ganglia, nerve-endings, and the sympathetic nerves. Robert Koch (1843-1910) did distinguished research work and writing on bacteriology and traumatic diseases of infection, particularly anthrax, cholera, and tuberculosis; he discovered the tuberculosis germ, proved its infectious nature, and discovered a cure for the disease; he was an exponent of inoculation against anthrax. Joseph, Baron Lister (1827-1912), surgeon, is renowned for his work in antiseptics, particularly his system of antiseptic bandaging. Sir James Paget (1814-99), discovered the Trichina spiralis, a parasite found in human muscles, and the heart and bone diseases designated by his name, and did important microscopic pathological research, particularly on tumors. James Young Simpson (1811-70) was renowned for his contributions to gynecology and obstetrics, and was the first to employ chloroform as an anesthetic in surgical operations and obstetrics. Karl Von Vierordt (1818-84) founded phylomography and made many contributions increasing the knowledge of the circulatory system. Alfred Wilhelm Volkmann (1801-77) is distinguished for his additions to the physiology of the nervous system and physiological optics. Rudolf Wagner (1805-64), the co-discoverer of the germinal vesicle, made important investigations on ganglia, nerve-endings, and the sympathetic nerves. —C.E.; C.F. Augustine.

Medium (Lat., medius, middle), a person who conducts séances, or spirit-gatherings, and claims ability to summon the spirits of the dead and interpret their messages, affecting to be controlled or possessed by the personality of a departed person. —Abbott, Behind the Scenes with the Mediums, Chicago, 1897. (C. J. H.)

Meekness, the virtue which moderates anger, checking its disorderly effects. It is reducible to temperance. In a wider sense it controls every disorderly affection leading one to resent another's action. St. James sees in it the general purification of soul required for the practise of the Gospel precepts already accepted by faith, nor would he be considered to be practising if he were to suggest some simple remedies. Even though one receives an indulg to practise medicine, a special permission is needed to practise surgery. Religious charged with the care of hospitals have permission to practise medicine through the approval of their rule. —C.E.; C.F. Augustine.

Meditation (Lat., meditari, to ponder), or Methodical Mental Prayer, the application of the mind and will to some spiritual principle, mystery, or event, for the purpose of sanctifying one's soul by exciting proper spiritual emotions and resolving on a course of action. It has always been practised by devout persons and encouraged among priests and in religious orders, but definite methods were not devised until the 16th century. The "Spiritual Exercises" of St. Ignatius set forth such a method. This calls for remote preparation of the subject matter, and for preludes which help to fix the mind and imagination and petition for an appropriate grace. In the meditation proper the memory, understanding, and will are applied to each of the points into which the subject matter has been divided. Colloquies, i.e., exchanges of thought and sentiment, with God or the saints, are made especially at the end of the meditation, which closes with a formal prayer such as the Our Father. The Sulpician method is somewhat similar.

One begins with acts of self-humiliation and of adoration of God and petitions to the Holy Spirit for aid. The prayer proper consists of considerations and emotions or affections that result from them. The subject matter is always considered in its exemplification in Our Lord and in its practical importance to oneself. Simplicity is much encouraged. At the end, one is advised to call a "spiritual nosegay" appropriate to the subject of the meditation, with which to refresh the memory of it from time to time. —C.E., XII, 348; Clarke, Meditations on the Life... of Christ, N. Y., 1901; Médaille, tr. Eyre, Meditations on the Gospels, N. Y., 1907; Wiseman, Daily Meditations, Dublin, 1868.

Medicine and Canon Law. The practise of medicine and surgery is forbidden to the clergy, except by Apostolic indulg. This prohibition embraces all grades of the clergy, as well as all religious and their novices. A cleric would not infringe on the law, however, were he, in case of necessity, to use knowledge or skill, except by Apostolic indulg. This prohibition is needed to practise surgery. Religious charged with the care of hospitals have permission to practise medicine through the approval of their rule. —C.E.; C.F. Augustine.

Meditation (Lat., meditari, to ponder), or Methodical Mental Prayer, the application of the mind and will to some spiritual principle, mystery, or event, for the purpose of sanctifying one's soul by exciting proper spiritual emotions and resolving on a course of action. It has always been practised by devout persons and encouraged among priests and in religious orders, but definite methods were not devised until the 16th century. The "Spiritual Exercises" of St. Ignatius set forth such a method. This calls for remote preparation of the subject matter, and for preludes which help to fix the mind and imagination and petition for an appropriate grace. In the meditation proper the memory, understanding, and will are applied to each of the points into which the subject matter has been divided. Colloquies, i.e., exchanges of thought and sentiment, with God or the saints, are made especially at the end of the meditation, which closes with a formal prayer such as the Our Father. The Sulpician method is somewhat similar.

One begins with acts of self-humiliation and of adoration of God and petitions to the Holy Spirit for aid. The prayer proper consists of considerations and emotions or affections that result from them. The subject matter is always considered in its exemplification in Our Lord and in its practical importance to oneself. Simplicity is much encouraged. At the end, one is advised to call a "spiritual nosegay" appropriate to the subject of the meditation, with which to refresh the memory of it from time to time. —C.E., XII, 348; Clarke, Meditations on the Life... of Christ, N. Y., 1901; Médaille, tr. Eyre, Meditations on the Gospels, N. Y., 1907; Wiseman, Daily Meditations, Dublin, 1868.

Medicine and Canon Law. The practise of medicine and surgery is forbidden to the clergy, except by Apostolic indulg. This prohibition embraces all grades of the clergy, as well as all religious and their novices. A cleric would not infringe on the law, however, were he, in case of necessity, to use knowledge or skill, except by Apostolic indulg. This prohibition is needed to practise surgery. Religious charged with the care of hospitals have permission to practise medicine through the approval of their rule. —C.E.; C.F. Augustine.

Meditation (Lat., meditari, to ponder), or Methodical Mental Prayer, the application of the mind and will to some spiritual principle, mystery, or event, for the purpose of sanctifying one's soul by exciting proper spiritual emotions and resolving on a course of action. It has always been practised by devout persons and encouraged among priests and in religious orders, but definite methods were not devised until the 16th century. The "Spiritual Exercises" of St. Ignatius set forth such a method. This calls for remote preparation of the subject matter, and for preludes which help to fix the mind and imagination and petition for an appropriate grace. In the meditation proper the memory, understanding, and will are applied to each of the points into which the subject matter has been divided. Colloquies, i.e., exchanges of thought and sentiment, with God or the saints, are made especially at the end of the meditation, which closes with a formal prayer such as the Our Father. The Sulpician method is somewhat similar. One begins with acts of self-humiliation and of adoration of God and petitions to the Holy Spirit for aid. The prayer proper consists of considerations and emotions or affections that result from them. The subject matter is always considered in its exemplification in Our Lord and in its practical importance to oneself. Simplicity is much encouraged. At the end, one is advised to call a "spiritual nosegay" appropriate to the subject of the meditation, with which to refresh the memory of it from time to time. —C.E., XII, 348; Clarke, Meditations on the Life... of Christ, N. Y., 1901; Médaille, tr. Eyre, Meditations on the Gospels, N. Y., 1907; Wiseman, Daily Meditations, Dublin, 1868.
was consecrated bishop and erected a monastery at Ardagh. Patron of Ardagh. Feast, 6 Feb.

Melanchthon, collaborator and friend of Luther, b. Bretten, Baden; d. Wittenberg, Germany. Educated at Heidelberg, he went to Tübingen, where he became a pupil and later received a lectureship. Appointed professor of Greek at Wittenberg, 1518, he soon became acquainted with Luther, who persuaded him to take up theological lectures. Melanchthon composed the first treatise on "evangelical" doctrine. In 1530 he defended the cause of Protestantism in the Augsburg Confession, which won the unanimous approval of the Evangelical party. He rejected the Augsburg Interim, 1548, and participated in the religious discussion at Worms, 1552, between Catholic and Protestant theologians. The embodiment of intellectual culture, Melanchthon helped to found higher education in Protestant Germany.—C.E.

Melania (the Younger), Saint, matron (c. 383-439), b. Rome; d. Jerusalem. A member of the noble Valerii family, she married Pinianus, a patrician. After the early death of their two children, they freed their numerous slaves, and both embraced the monastic life. They lived in Africa, with St. Augustine, and in Palestine (417), where St. Jerome guided them. Melania founded a cloister and a convent on the Mount of Olives. She aided the conflict with Nestorianism at Constantinople (436). Cardinal Rampolla published her life (Rome, 1905). Represented holding a miniature church, Feast, 31 Dec.—C.E.; Butler.

Melbourne, Archdiocese of, Australia, comprises part of the State of Victoria; erected as a diocese, 1848, and as an archdiocese, 1874; suffragans, Ballarat, Sale, and Sandhurst. Archbishops: 254; priests, secular, 158; priests, regular, 90; religious women, 1252; seminaries, 2; high schools, 41; primary schools, 144; institutions, 18; Catholics, 207,171. 58 m. s. of Sirily, where St. Paul was shipwrecked and a priest of the Most High God. He came to France, founded a diocese, 1848, and as an archdiocese, 1874; suffragans, Ballarat, Sale, and Sandhurst. Archbishops: 254; priests, secular, 158; priests, regular, 90; religious women, 1252; seminaries, 2; high schools, 41; primary schools, 144; institutions, 18; Catholics, 207,171.

Melchites, or Melchites, a group of about 110,000 Byzantine Rite Christians distributed in Syria, Palestine, and Egypt, and America (10,000 in the United States). Originally the name signified all those who remained faithful to the Council of Chalcedon (451), when the greater part accepted the Monophysite heresy. These people and their patriarchs, having gradually become dependent on the Patriarch of Constantinople, joined him in the Greek Schism (9th to 11th century). After several attempts at reconciliation they were united to Rome in the 18th century under the Patriarch Cyril VI who, with his successors, represents the original line of Antioch. Since the 12th century they have used the Byzantine Rite, mostly in the Arabic language.—C.E.

Meliorism (Lat., melior, better), a philosophic theory which holds that though things in the world are bad they can be improved, and that man can find some satisfaction in laboring to increase the happiness of his fellow men. This theory occupies an intermediate position between the extreme Optimism of Leibnitz and the extreme Pessimism of Schopenhauer. It was first propounded by Sully and George Eliot and naturally finds support among the adherents of the pragmatic movement in philosophy. (E. A. G.)

Melita, the modern Malta, an island 58 m. s. of Sicily, where St. Paul was shipwrecked (Acts, 28), on his journey to Rome, and there spent three months. Melleray, Cistercian monastery in Brittany, France, founded c. 1134 by Foulques, Abbot of Pontron in Anjou. The original monastery was erected in 1145 by Guimer, its first abbott. It was confiscated in 1791. The dispersed monks finally settled at Lulworth, Dorsetshire, England, and their monastery was created an abbey, but in 1171 they returned to Melleray. They have founded several other monasteries, including Mount Melleray, Ireland; Mount Saint Bernard, England; Gethsemani, Kentucky; and New Melleray, Iowa.—C.E.

Mellifont, Abbey of, near Drogheda, the first Cistercian monastery in Ireland. It was founded in 1142 by Christian O'Conarchy, the first abbot, and St. Malachy, and was modelled after Clairvaux. It prospered and founded other monasteries, and at the English invasion there were 25 great Cistercian abbeys in Ireland. During the 13th and 14th centuries it declined but recovered in the 15th, to be confiscated by Henry VIII in 1539. Today only ruins remain.—C.E.

Melrose, Abbey of, the earliest Cistercian monastery of Scotland, at Melrose, Roxburghshire. It was founded in 1136 by King David I, dedicated to St. Mary, and given to monks from Rievaulx, Yorkshire. In the 14th and 15th centuries the church of the abbey, burned by English troops, was replaced by a noble Perpendicular and Decorated building celebrated for its carvings and windows. Its beauty is still visible in the ruins surviving from the destruction of the abbey by troops of Henry VIII in 1545. Soon afterward the victory of the Protestant Party put an end to the Franciscan life there, and the property was confiscated and passed into lay hands.—C.E.; Walsh, Catholic Churchmen in Science, Phila., 1906.

Melrose, Chronicle of (Chronica de Mai­rosa), medieval Latin manuscript by various monks, unknown by name, of Melrose Abbey. It is the chronicle of the years 731-1270, and has also several short notices, probably entered as memoranda to be extended later, of which the last is of 1275. Down to c. 1140 the work is compiled from earlier histories; from then on it is the testimony of writers who lived for the most part within 50 years of the events recorded. The information regarding Scotland and northern England, especially in the reign of Henry III, is particularly useful. An ancient copy of the manuscript is in the British Museum and has been edited for the Bannatyne Club by Joseph Stevenson, S.J., who also prepared the English edition in “Church Historians of England,” Lond., 1856, IV, part I.—C.E.

Membré, Zenobius, martyr (1645-87), Franciscan missionary, b. Bapaume, France; d. Fort St. Louis, Texas. In 1675 he arrived in Canada, and in 1679 accompanied La Salle to the country of the Illinois. However, his missionary labors in that field met with little success, and he returned to Bapaume, 1681, where he was made superior of the Franciscan monastery. He returned to America again, and in 1684 followed La Salle into Texas, accompanied by two Franciscans and three Sulpicians. La Salle left them in the small garrison, Fort St. Louis, which he erected on Esquina Santo Bay. The Indians, however, received them with hostility, and after two years Membré was killed by the Karankawas, with Frs. Le Clerq and Chefdieville.—C.E.

Memento rerum Conditor, or Remember, O Creator Lord, hymn from the Little Office of the Blessed Virgin. Its first verse is taken from the hymn “Iesus Redemptor omnium”; its second verse is a continuation of the hymns “Quem terra, pontus, sidera,” and “O gloriosa virgini,” which have been attributed to Fortunatus (530-609). The English title given is by E. Caswall.—Britt.

Memling (Memling), Hans (c. 1430-94), painter, b. probably Mainz, Germany; d. Bruges, Belgium. He is thought to have studied in Cologne, and later to have been a pupil of Roger van der Weyen. His work unites Flemish skill and German piety. Tenderness, delicacy, lovely landscapes, and charming detail are his characteristics. The Hospital of St. John in Bruges has his “Adoration of the Magi,” “The Marriage of St. Catherine,” and the 14 scenes of the “Shrine of St. Ursula.” “Christ the Light of the World,” with its naïve pageantry, is in the Munich Gallery. His Madonnas are in the Louvre, the Uffizi, and the National Gallery. His excellent “Portrait of William Moreel” is in the Brussels Museum.—C.E.

Memoria, shrine or reliquary containing relics of some martyr or martyrs; also a church or chapel built in memory of a martyr or confessor, often over his tomb, and usually containing his relics.

Menadion (Gr., men, month), a book, any one of the twelve, one for each month, containing offices for immovable feasts in the Byzantine Rite.—C.E.

Ménard, René, martyr (1604-61), Jesuit missionary, b. Paris; d. Wisconsin. After completing his studies at Dieppe, he was assigned to the Huron missions in America. When the missions were destroyed, 1649, he was sent to the Cayugas in the Iroquois country (New York), where he received brutal treatment. In 1659 he set out with 300 Cayugas for the far west. He arrived at Lake Superior, 1660, and labored to establish a mission at Keweenaw, Mich. While traveling to the Hurons on Noquet Island, at the mouth of the Menominee River, he was separated from his companion, a French blacksmith, and was murdered by a band of Sioux.—C.E.

Menas, or Menas, Saint, martyr under Diocletian (c. 295). A Christian, and an Egyptian by birth, Menas served in the Roman army under the tribune Firmilian. When the army was stationed at Cotelius in Phrygia, he retired to the mountains and served God by fasting, vigils, and prayer. After a public profession of his faith, Menas was brought before the prefect Pyrrhus, scourged, tortured, and beheaded. His body was taken to Egypt. Fame of his miracles spread rapidly, and his tomb became the object of frequent pilgrimages. An expedition in 1905 revealed ruins of the grave, well, basilica, and calendar, the name of which was changed to that of St. John in Bruges. His tomb is in the Munich Gallery. His Madonnas are in the Brussels Museum.—C.E.

Menard, René, martyr (1604-61), Jesuit missionary, b. Paris; d. Wisconsin. After completing his studies at Dieppe, he was assigned to the Huron missions in America. When the missions were destroyed, 1649, he was sent to the Cayugas in the Iroquois country (New York), where he received brutal treatment. In 1659 he set out with 300 Cayugas for the far west. He arrived at Lake Superior, 1660, and labored to establish a mission at Keweenaw, Mich. While traveling to the Hurons on Noquet Island, at the mouth of the Menominee River, he was separated from his companion, a French blacksmith, and was murdered by a band of Sioux.—C.E.

Menas, or Menes, Saint, martyr under Diocletian (c. 295). A Christian, and an Egyptian by birth, Menas served in the Roman army under the tribune Firmilian. When the army was stationed at Cotelius in Phrygia, he retired to the mountains and served God by fasting, vigils, and prayer. After a public profession of his faith, Menas was brought before the prefect Pyrrhus, scourged, tortured, and beheaded. His body was taken to Egypt. Fame of his miracles spread rapidly, and his tomb became the object of frequent pilgrimages. An expedition in 1905 revealed ruins of the grave, well, basilica, and calendar, the name of which was changed to that of St. John in Bruges. His tomb is in the Munich Gallery. His Madonnas are in the Brussels Museum.—C.E.; Walsh, Catholic Churchmen in Science, Phila., 1906.

Mendel Medal, an award, given annually by the Augustinian College of Saint Thomas of Villanova, Villanova, Pa., to honor the memory of Gregor Mendel, the Augustinian friar and Abbot of the Monastery of Saint Thomas the Apostle, in Brünn, Moravia, the discoverer and first exponent of the Laws of Heredity. of the principles of heredity known now as the Mendelian Law. The presentation of the medal is made by the college each year, 4 May. The recipient of the medal is to be a Catholic scientist or one who has earned recognition in advancing the knowledge and the work of science. This medal was first given, 4 May, 1929, to D. John Kolmer, specialist in blood and bacteriology and director of laboratories in the School of Medicine in the University of Pennsylvania.

Mendel's Law, a law of heredity which is the basic law of genetics. It was advanced by Gregor Johann Mendel (1822-84), a Catholic priest, Abbot of Brünn, Moravia, as a result of his experiments with the behavior of plants under hybridization. He experimented particularly with garden peas. By tracing two opposed characters through a series of progeny, he concluded that the offspring of the peas behave, in regard to the peculiarities of the parent peas, in a well-defined manner which may be reduced to the terms of a "natural law." For example, the offspring of tall and dwarf varieties of crossed sweet peas were of the tall type to the exclusion of the dwarf, the tall trait being known as dominant; while the self-fertilized seeds of the tall generation produced specimens of each in a definite ratio of 3:1, the temporarily obscured trait, dwarfishness, known as recessive. The self-fertilized seed of those exhibiting dominant characters produced both tall and dwarf, some of which bred pure, others of which produced mixed types. The generation which exhibited recessive traits, however, bred pure. Mendel's Law gave a final blow to the theory of natural selection, and has exercised an enormous influence on biology and scientific breeding.—C.E.; Bateson, Mendel's Principles of Heredity, Camb., 1909; Walsh, Catholic Churchmen in Science, Phila., 1906.

Mendicant Friars (Lat., mendicare, to beg, ask alms), members of those religious orders which originally, by vow of poverty renounced all proprietorship individually and in common, relying for support on their own work and on charity. They did wonderful work, particularly among the very poor in the most wretched localities of the cities. The principal mendicant orders are: Order of Preachers, Carmelites, Friars Minor, and Hermits of St. Augustine.—C.E.; Bateson, Mendel's Principles of Heredity, Camb., 1909; Walsh, Catholic Churchmen in Science, Phila., 1906.

Menendez y Pelayo, MARCELINO (1856-1912), poet, b. Santander, Spain; d. there. Educated at the University of Barcelona, he taught literature at the University of Madrid, 1879, and was admitted to the Spanish Academy, 1881. Author of "Estudios críticos sobre poetas Montañeses," and "Heterodoxos Españoles," a political and literary history of Spain in relation to the Catholic Church, from the time of Priscillian to the end of the 19th century. He collected and criticized the Spanish translations and imitations of Horace and wrote "Historia de las ideas estéticas en España," "Las origines de la novela en España," and "Ciencia española."—C.E.; XVI, 63; Ryan, Don Marcelino Menendez y Pelayo, in Studies, March, 1925.

Menevia, Diocese of, Wales, comprises Wales, except Glamorganshire; erected, 1898; formerly the Vicariate of Wales, established, 1895, when Menevia was separated from Newport and Menevia and Shrewsbury; suffragan of Cardiff. It restores the ancient Diocese of St. David's dating from the 6th century. Bishops: Francis Mostyn (1858-1926); Francis Vaughan (1926); residence at Wrexham. Churches and chapels, 70; priests, secular, 43; priests, regular, 89; elementary schools, 17; other schools, 12; institutions, 2; Catholics, 11,929.

Menlo Park. See St. Patrick's Seminary.

Mennonite Bodies, a religious group which began in Holland about the time of the Reformation. The members held the doctrine of believers’ baptism and opposed infant baptism. A leader in the organization of the church was Menno Simons, a former Catholic priest. Although the name “Mennonite” dates from 1550, the usual name in Holland is “Doopsgezinde,” or “Dopper,” the Dutch equivalent for English “Baptist.” On account of universal religious intolerance in Europe, early in the 17th century a band of Mennonites came over to America. The first Mennonite colony was formed in 1683 at Germantown, Pa. They soon spread northward and westward. A number of minor divisions have taken place since settlement in this country. A Declaration of the Chief Articles of our Common Christian Faith, was made in Dort, Holland, in 1632. These 18 articles are accepted by the great majority of Mennonite churches today. Nearly all congregations observe the Lord’s Supper twice a year, and the majority of them “observe the ordinance of washing the saints’ feet in connection with and immediately after the Lord’s Supper.” Baptism is by pouring, in nearly all Mennonite bodies. With two exceptions the church government in different Mennonite bodies is the same, i.e., the local church is autonomous, decide all matters affecting itself. The Mennonite churches include: Amish Mennonite Church; Central Conference of Mennonites; Church of God In Christ (Mennonite); Conservative Amish Mennonite Church; Defenseless Mennonites; General Conference of the Mennonite Church of North America; Kleine Gemeinde; Krimmer Mennonite Brethren Church; Mennonite Brethren Church of North America; Mennonite Brethren in Christ; Mennonite Church; Old Order Amish Mennonite Church; Old Order Mennonites (Wisher); Reformed Mennonite Church; and Staufner Mennonites. In 1926 there were in the United States 1584 ministers, 826 churches, and 87,104 communicants.—C.E.

Menochio, Giovanni Stefano (1575-1655), exegete, b. Padua, Italy; d. Rome. Having entered the Society of Jesus in 1594, he became professor of Sacred Scripture and moral theology at Milan; superior at Cremona, Milan, and Genoa; rector of the Roman College; and provincial at Milan and Rome. His exegetical work is deservedly famous; he studied the text in the original and sought to find the literal meaning in the Bible and the Fathers; in this he was aided by his vast knowledge of Jewish antiquities.—C.E.

Menology, Menologion, or Menologe (Gr., month: logos, discourse), a collection, arranged according to the months and days of the month, of long lives of the saints of the Greek Church. The principal compiler of these lives was Syncellus Metaphrastes, who lived in the latter half of the 10th century. The name Menology is also given to a kind of calendar containing tables of scriptural lessons arranged according to the months and the feasts of the saints. The term, too, is at times used instead of Menaion (q.v.), or again, for the historical accounts contained therein. Besides such usage of the word in the East, it has been applied in the west to a book, intended not for liturgical but for private use, generally arranged according to the months and days, which contains the eulogistic biographies of persons renowned for holiness although not in any sense canonized saints. Thus in some of the religious orders menologies were compiled in memory of their departed brethren who were especially noted for their holiness or learning.—C.E.; Kellner, Hortology, St. L., 1908.

Menominee Indians, a tribe of Algonquian linguistic stock, of Wisconsin, still living on a reservation within the same territory. They are a fine race, formerly hunters, now lumbermen. The tribe had the clan system, with descent in the female line. They were enemies of the Sioux and friends of the French and English. Formerly they numbered about 3000 but in 1909 not more than 1487. The first mission was founded by the Jesuit explorer, Fr. Claude Allouez, in 1670. Two-thirds of the tribe are Catholics, the rest heathen.—C.E.; Taunton, Law of the Church, Lond., 1906.

Mensa (Lat., table), a table for meals, which meaning has been extended to signify the resources necessary for personal support. In ecclesiastical language, it is that portion of the property of a church which is set aside to defray the expenses of the prelate or the community which serves that church. In a cathedral, the episcopal mensa is distinct from that of the chapter. A mensa, in the canonical sense, requires that the property of a particular church be divided, setting aside the revenue of one part for the prelate or clergy, the other part being administered as ordinary church property.—C.E.; Taunton, Law of the Church, Lond., 1906.

Mensal Revenue. See Mensa.

Mental Reservation, an act of the mind limiting the spoken phrase that it may not bear the full sense which, at first hearing, it seems to bear. A pure mental reservation is not indicated externally and is a lie, whereas mental reservation is indicated externally; it is permissible only as a last resource and when no other means are available for the preservation of some secret, which one should keep as a duty to others or a right to oneself. See Secret.—C.E. (A. L. L.)

Mephistopheles (Gr., me, not; phos, light; phous, loving), name of the demon who bargained to serve Faust in his sorcery, in return for his soul; theme of a legend written to warn people against dealing in the black art. (Ed.)

Mercedarians. See ORDER OF OUR LADY OF MERCY.

Mercier, Désiré Joseph (1851-1928), cardinal, Abp. of Malines, b. Braine l'Alleud, Belgium; d. Brussels. In the neighborhood of his birthplace, his family had for two centuries been prosperous farmers and, latterly, tradesmen. Though his father died before the seven children were reared, Désiré had connections which could have opened to him an administrative career; he chose to follow his two uncles who were priests. Educated successively at the Episcopal College of St. Rombaut and the Small and Great Seminaries, at Malines, he was ordained in 1874. He was immediately sent to the University of Louvain as Vice-regent of lay students and for four years of study, afterward becoming Director of Philosophical Studies in the Small Seminary. Thus he unconsciously prepared for the great work of filling, in 1882, the chair of Thomist philosophy at Louvain, founded by invitation of Pope Leo XIII in 1880. His enthusiasm, labor, and supreme fitness for the task of reconstructing the presentation of scholastic philosophy to meet modern requirements, were watched by Leo from afar, and in 1886 he gave the “great Abbé” a Roman prelacy. Under Mgr. Mercier, the means of unification of all knowledge were created at Louvain, and the definite philosophy of Thomas Aquinas was revived for the uncertain modern mind. In 1906 Pius X made him Abp. of Malines and cardinal, and until the World War, of which he is one of the greatest heroes, he was the outstanding figure in Belgian public and intellectual life, as his “Œuvres Pastorales” (Pastoral Works), public lectures and conferences, and addresses as President of the Belgian Academy of Science testify. From the invasion of Belgium in 1914 he took an intrepid stand against all unjust demands, particularly censorship of his correspondence, during the German occupation. After the fall of Antwerp he published his “Patriotism and Endurance,” a challenge in the name of right, as, to him, suffering implied neither silence nor yielding. He defied the Germans by keeping Rome and the outside world constantly informed of the devastation wrought in Belgium. While at the conclave to elect Pius X’s successor in 1914, he had merely said, on hearing of the burning of Louvain, “They have destroyed; well, we will build again,” a promise which he fulfilled after the War. In 1924 began the “Malines Conversations,” his renowned attempt to unify the Anglican and Roman Churches. The fifth and last of the Conversations occurred Jan., 1926, at St. Elizabeth’s Hospital, Brussels, where he died a few days later. After his death, his body was brought back to Malines, but the great public funeral was held at Ghent, and a great crowd went to Brussels. He is interred at St. Rombaut’s, Malines. Besides the works mentioned, he wrote: “General Criteriology,” “Report on the Higher Studies of Philosophy,” “Logic,” “Psychology,” “Origins of Contemporary Psychology,” “Pastoral Retreat,” “The Voice of Belgium,” and “The Voice of God.”—Dubly, tr. Wilson, The Life of Cardinal Mercier, Lond., 1928; Goyau, Cardinal Mercier, N. Y., 1929.

Mercier, Louis Honoré (1840-94), statesman, b. Iberville, Quebec, Canada; d. Quebec. Of farmer parentage, he was educated at the Jesuit college in Montreal, and prepared for the Bar in the office of a St-Hyacinthe legal firm, simultaneously editing a journal. He served in Federal Parliament (1873) and in the Quebec Assembly (1881). During his premiership (1887-92) the Jesuit Estate Bill, by which the Church in Canada and the Society of Jesus received partial indemnity for prop... ties confiscated by the Crown, was passed largely through his instrumentality; in recognition of this service he was knighted by Pope Leo XIII.—C.E.

Mercy, an attribute of God. God loves everything that He has made; there is no creature which the Creator does not love with a real love. This love urges Him to shower benefits upon them. When any of His creatures is in need, and more so when His rational creature, man, is in need, and most of all when he is in dire need and misery of having offended His love, then this love of God is not withdrawn; even then is He willing to shower His benefits upon him, He is willing to forgive him, and this love and goodness of God we call His mercy.—Pohle-Preuss, God: His Knowledge, Essence, and Attributes, St. L., 1921.

(A. C. A.)

Mercy, Corporal and Spiritual Works of, things done for the body or soul of persons in need. The Corporal are: to feed the hungry; give drink to the thirsty; clothe the naked; harbor the homeless; visit the sick; visit prisoners, and ransom captives; bury the dead. The Spiritual: to instruct the ignorant; counsel the doubtful; admonish sinners; be patient with wrong-doers; forgive offenses; comfort the afflicted; pray for the living and dead. —C.E.; Spirago, The Catechism Explicated, N. Y., 1899. (Ed.)

Mercyhurst College, Erie, Pa., founded, 1920; conducted by the Sisters of Mercy; college of arts and sciences; professors, 20; students, 78; degrees conferred in 1929, 22.

Mercy-seat, Propitiatory, or Oracle, an oblong piece of solid gold, 212 by 112 cubits (about 30 by 18 in.), which was placed over the Ark of the Covenant (Ex., 25: 37). At both ends were two cherubim of beaten gold facing each other, and their faces bent downward towards the propitiatory; their wings overshadowed the oracle. The propitiatory was the most sacred object of the Hebrew worship; it was looked upon as the throne of Jehovah who, from above the propitiatory, from between the cherubim, spoke to Moses and issued His commands to the children of Israel. Before the exile, when the high priest entered the holy of holies on the Day of Atonement, he sprinkled with the blood of the bullock and of the he-goat offered in sacrifice on that day (Lev., 16). (C. L. S.)

Merit, that property of a human act in virtue of which it is deserving of reward. In general, a man is said to merit when he does something for another and is thereby entitled to some return from the one so served. In the concrete, merit may be defined as a good work freely performed in favor of another, and of its nature deserving of reward. In all merit there is established a relation between the service rendered and the return due, whence is derived a twofold notion of merit: merit strictly so called (de condigno); and merit less strictly so called (de congruo). Strict merit (de condigno) is had when the relation between service and return is one of equality inasmuch as the service freely rendered to another is, according to the common estimate, equal to the return which is then due in justice. Lesser merit (de congruo) is had when the relation of equality is lacking and a return is due not in justice but because of a certain becomingness appealing to the liberality of the one served. This twofold notion is found exemplified in the soldier who has distinguished himself in battle. He strictly merits (de condigno) his wages as a soldier, but he also merits, though less strictly (de congruo), decorations and advancement in the service.

Merit in Catholic theology includes the above notions along with the doctrine of supernatural grace, which is the principle of supernatural life and of all supernatural merit. Christ strictly merited eternal life for all men in the sense that He merited all the supernatural helps (graces) which man needs to work out for himself his supernatural destiny. Because of the infinite satisfaction and merits of Christ's works we are now enabled to perform acts wholly pleasing to God; acts to which God has attached supernatural life in the possession of God in heaven as a reward. Hence, man can now, in virtue of the merits of Christ and with the help of His graces, strictly merit before God a supernatural reward in the form of the beatific vision. Supernatural merit before God may be defined as a free act elevated by grace, performed in the service of God and deserving of a supernatural reward. Two principles cooperate in every meritorious act; the free will of man, and supernatural grace.

To merit strictly (de condigno) a man must be in the state of pilgrimage, here on earth. He must also be in a state of friendship with God (sanctifying grace). Besides, his act must be a positive act elicited by the free will and supernatural grace and wholly pleasing to God and based on a motive founded on faith. In other words, the whole act must be a morally good supernatural act as it is posited as a service to God in view of a supernatural reward. To merit less strictly (de congruo), the same conditions are required except that a man need not necessarily be in the state of friendship with God (sanctifying grace). The just man can then merit strictly eternal life, an increase of sanctifying grace and of glory in heaven. The man in sin can less strictly merit, through works of penance assisted by grace, actual graces and justification through sanctifying grace.—C.E.; Pohle-Preuss, Grace, St. L., 1921; Hill, Ethics, General and Special, N. Y., 1920.

Mercu, Prefecture Apostolic of, Province of East Africa; comprises the civil Districts of Embu and Meru; established, 1926, by division from the Vicariate of Kenya (now Nyeri); entrusted to the Foreign Missionaries of Turin. Vicar Apostolic: Joseph Balbo, M.E.T. (1926).

Mesmerism (so called from the first proponent of the theory, Franz Mesmer), or Hypnotism, the theory that one person can, by magnetic means, produce in another a state of passivity resembling sleep, during which the victim is completely subject to the will of the operator. (C. A. S.)

Mesopotamia (Gr., mesos, middle; potamos, river; country between rivers), a great plain between the Euphrates and the Tigris; the upper part covered ancient Assyria; the lower comprised ancient Chaldea and Babylonia. Rebecca's father was born in Mesopotamia (Gen., 25), also Jacob's sons;
METAL-WORK
BRONZE DOORS, RAVELLO (1179) inhabitants of this country were present at Pentecost (Acts 2).

Messalians, an heretical sect originating in Mesopotamia, A.D. 360. They denied that the Sacraments give grace and declared that the only spiritual power is prayer. Prayer, they said, drives out the evil spirit and brings into the soul the Holy Spirit, and thus unites the soul to God and gives perfect control over the passions. The fervor of their prayers was supposed to bring them into immediate contact with God; so they neglected everything but prayer and conformed to the religious and civil customs of a place only in order to escape persecution. They said that after a period of constant prayer they saw the Trinity; that the Three Divine Persons became one and dwelt within them; and that they were then able to stamp upon the evil spirits that they saw prowling about the world. On account of their belief in their possession by the Holy Spirit, they were called Enthusiasts (Gr., enthous, full of the god). They were also called "Praying Folk" or Euchites from the Greek translation (euchomai, pray), of their Oriental name. In some places in later centuries they were identified with the Marcianists because they held some of the same doctrines. Their first leader, Adelphius, also gave his name to the sect, sometimes called Adelphians. They were condemned in 378 by Flavian, Bp. of Antioch; in 388 by the Synod of Side; in 426 by a Council of Constantinople; and in 431 by the Third General Council of Ephesus. In Armenia and Syria they were accused of immorality, were called "The Filthy," and were banished. They revived under the name of Bogomili but perished in the 9th century.—C.E.

Messingham, Thomas (d. 1638), hagiologist, b. Ireland. He was educated at the Irish College, Paris, of which he became a staff member. In 1620 he published offices of Sts. Patrick, Brigid, Columba, and other Irish saints. The following year he was made rector of the Irish College. Appointed prothonotary Apostolic, he represented many Irish bishops. Messingham secured the affiliation of the college to the University of Paris, and in 1626 his rules for the Irish seminary were approved by the Abp. of Paris. In 1624 he published at Paris his work on Irish saints, "Florilegium Insulae Sanctorum," containing a treatise on St. Patrick's Purgatory. Between 1632 and 1638 he labored for the Irish Church in various capacities.—C.E.

Metal-Work in the Service of the Church. From the earliest times utensils and vessels of metal have been used in the liturgical rites of the Church. In the 3rd century there were donations to the Roman basilicas of golden chalices. To this period also belong bowls of silver for chasms and statuettes of precious metals. The altar and ciboria were adorned with gold and silver. Silver was used for the iconostasis, and lamps of gold, silver, and bronze illuminated the churches. The statues were either carved in marble or overlaid with gold. The Byzantine work showed Oriental influence in the use of cloisonné enamel. In the 6th century gold work adorned verrrorio cloisonnée (glass mosaic) was made in the West. Later the art of metal hammering was introduced. Workers of great skill were found among the monks. The Romanesque period was either carved in marble or overlaid with gold. Copper took the place of gold and champlévé replaced cloisonné. The popular tendency was shown in the introduction of secular types of decoration. Metal was cast for making doors and fonts. The Gothic period revived the use of silver and introduced a translucent enamel. The tendency was for lightness and mobility of form. The arts had gradually passed into the hands of the laity. Cast bronze was used for candelabra and lecterns. Splendid doors were produced in France. During the Renaissance the most distinguished sculptors in Italy worked in bronze. For a long time the Gothic forms persisted, but the ornament was copied from antique models. The metal-work of the baroque period is clumsy in design; in the 19th century the style is over rigid. The revival of the styles of medieval art in the 19th century has been beneficial to ecclesiastical metal work.—C.E.

Metaphysics (Gr., meta, after or beyond; physika, physics). Historically this word probably originated with Andronicus of Rhodes who arranged the works of Aristotle in two series; the books on physics and those "after the physics." This caption eventually was accepted as the title of the treatise immediately following it, because its subject matter is beyond the sense perceptible world. In its traditional sense the term means the philosophical science which treats of the most fundamental principles underlying all reality such as being, its essential attributes, substance, cause. Other sciences deal with special classes of beings: physics with physically mobile being; mathematics with quantified being; metaphysics abstracts from such determination of being, retaining only being itself. It embraces therefore all beings whatsoever and considers them under the aspect of their beingness or essence. Hence Aristotle defined it as the science of being as being. In the Aristotelian and Scholastic conception it included ontology and natural theology. Many modern philosophers extend its meaning, following Christian Wolff's division of general metaphysics, or ontology, and special metaphysics, comprising cosmology, rational psychology, and natural theology. Bacon, on the contrary, limited its meaning to the study of final and formal causes, to distinguish it from physics, the science of material and efficient causes. Descartes, basing metaphysics exclusively on mental phenomena, made it the science of the conditions of knowledge. Many English philosophers practically identify it with metaphysics or with epistemology. Positivistic philosophy, which limits knowledge to the facts of sense experience, considers it an impossible science. Kant maintained the inability of the pure or speculative reason to attain ultimate physical reality in itself, restricting metaphysics to the role of defining the limits of human knowledge.—C.R.; Turner, History of Philosophy, Bost., 1903; Mercier, Ontologie, Louvain, 1905; Rickaby, General Metaphysics, N.Y., 1909; Dubray, Introductory Philosophy, N. Y., 1923. (P. O'B.)

Metastasio, assumed name of Pietro Antonio Domenico Bonaventura Trepassi (1698-1782), court poet of Vienna, 1730-82, b. Rome; d. Vienna. He wrote numerous lyrical dramas, among them “Orì di Espèrì,” and his masterpiece “Attilio Regio.” He also wrote the poems for many cantatas and oratorios.—C.E.

Metempsychosis, mé-tëm-sëf-sø'sis (Gr., meta, over; en, in; psyche, soul), the doctrine of the transmigration or transition of souls, i.e., that the same soul inhabits in succession the bodies of different beings, both men and brute animals. Taught by Pythagoreans, Plato, and many Oriental religions. (J. B.)

Methodist Bodies, originating from a Protestant sect organized under John Wesley, 1744, including all religious bodies which came into existence through the efforts of John and Charles Wesley. They formulated the Thirty-nine articles of the Church of England. The Apostles’ Creed is the only accepted formal creed. The Methodists rejected the “stricter doctrines of Calvinism, predestination, and reprobation,” and accepted “the milder emphasis of Arminianism on repentance, faith, and holiness.” In America the church government emphasized the superintendency, which was a form of episcopacy. The different Methodist bodies are as follows: African Methodist Episcopal Church (q.v.); African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church (q.v.); Congregational Methodist Church; Free Methodist Church of North America; Methodist Episcopal Church (q.v.); Methodist Episcopal Church, South (q.v.); Methodist Protestant Church (q.v.); Primitive Methodist Church; Reformed Methodist Union Episcopal Church (Colored); Reformed Zion Union Apostolic Church (Colored); Union American Methodist Episcopal Church; and Wesleyan Methodist. In 1827 in the United States there were 44,514 ministers, 63,302 churches, and 8,920,190 communicants.

Methodist Episcopal Church, organized in the United States, c. 1785. It is Arminian in theology, and its doctrines are set forth in the “Articles of Religion,” Wesley’s published sermons, and his “Notes on the New Testament.” The latter emphasized the fall of man and his need of repentance, freedom of the will, sanctification, future rewards and punishments, and the sufficiency of the Scriptures for salvation.” The doctrine of sanctification implies “freedom from sin, from evil desires and evil tempers, and from pride.” Baptism and the Lord’s Supper are the two sacraments recognized. Baptism by sprinkling is preferred, although pouring, immersion, or immersion may be used. The ecclesiastical organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church includes the local church, the ministry, and the system of conferences. They have two official periodicals, twelve English weeklies, and a German weekly. Foreign missionary work is carried on by a Board of Foreign Missions, and by the Woman’s Foreign Missionary Society, in southern and eastern Asia (India, Malaysia, Philippine Islands, China, Japan, and Korea); Africa (northern, western, southern, and Liberia); South America; Mexico; and 11 European countries. In 1916 in southern and eastern Asia there were 109 stations; 1,145 missionaries, with 11,487 native helpers; 64,651 churches, with 4,516,806 communicants; and 2,534,112 communicants. In the United States in 1925 there were 18,398 ministers, 24,455 churches, and 4,516,806 communicants.

Methodist Episcopal Church, South, separatist slaveholders from the Methodist Episcopal Church under the leadership of James O. Andrew who organized at Louisville, Kentucky, in May, 1845. It is in agreement with other Methodist bodies in its doctrine, emphasizing especially “the universality of the atonement, the witness of the Spirit, and the possibility of holiness in heart and life.” In government it is in harmony with the Methodist Episcopal Church and particularly stresses the episcopate. They publish twenty periodicals. Foreign missionary work is carried on by the General Board of Missions in China, Japan, Korea, Brazil, Mexico, Cuba, and India. In 1916 there were 40 stations, 328 missionaries, with 444 native helpers; 589 churches, with 34,040 members; and 222 schools, with 15,021 pupils. In the United States in 1925 there were 7,904 ministers, 16,957 churches, and 2,534,112 communicants.

Methodist Protestant Church, a Protestant sect organized in 1831 in Michigan, with a result of a desire to develop sentiment in favor of “the right of the laity to an equal representation with the ministers in the lawmaking bodies of the church”; in accord with the Methodist Episcopal Church in matters of doctrine: in government, however, the Methodist Protestant Church has no bishops or presiding elders and no life officers of any kind. They publish four periodicals. Foreign missionary work is carried on in Japan, China, and India, where in 1916 there were 80 stations, 16 missionaries, with 128 native helpers; 19 churches, with 2000 members; and 12 schools, with 1514 pupils. In the United States in 1925 there were 1082 ministers, 2275 churches, and 189,583 communicants.

Methodius, Saint. See Cyril and Methodius.

Metropolitan (Gr., metropolis, city), an archbishop who is placed over a certain section of a country, comprising a certain number of suffragan dioceses. Every metropolitan is an archbishop, but not every archbishop is a metropolitan; because there are titular bishops beside resident archbishops. The metropolitan has all the rights of a bishop in his diocese. He may call a provincial council, and preside over it; pontificate in all the churches in his district and grant an indulgence of 100 days; exercise the right of devotion; and he enjoys the following honorary rights: precedence over bishops, to have carried before him the archepiscopal cross through his province, and also of using the pallium in his province.—C.E.; P.C. Augustine.

Metropolitan and City Police Catholic Guild, Tur, was inaugurated on the feast of Corpus Christi, 1914, the founder being Mgr. Canon Martin Howlett, D.D. The purpose of the guild is the promotion of the spiritual and social welfare of its members, all of whom must have direct connection with the police force; the means adopted include monthly social gatherings, lectures, etc. an annual general Communion takes place in Westminster Cathedral on the anniversary of the founding. There is also an annual banquet. In October, 1837, the guild arranged a police pilgrimage to Rome; the Holy Father paid a singular tribute to the characteristic courtesy of London policemen, recalling his personal experience when, as a simple priest, he had visited the British capital. In 1899 the guild had 860 members.

Mexico, republic of North America, south of the United States; area, 767,198 sq. m.; pop. (1921), 14,334,780. Early explorers found among the natives many priests and friars, and a Bull issued by Pope Paul III in 1537 declared, against the common opinion, that the Indians were rational beings, recognizing them as capable of receiving the Christian Faith and its sacraments, and as having equal rights over bishops, to have carried before him the archepiscopal cross through his province, and also of using the pallium in his province.—C.E.; P.C. Augustine.

Methodius, St. See Cyril and Methodius.

Metropolitan (Gr., metropolis, city), an archbishop who is placed over a certain section of a country, comprising a certain number of suffragan dioceses. Every metropolitan is an archbishop, but not every archbishop is a metropolitan; because there are titular bishops beside resident archbishops. The metropolitan has all the rights of a bishop in his diocese. He may call a provincial council, and preside over it; pontificate in all the churches in his district and grant an indulgence of 100 days; exercise the right of devotion; and he enjoys the following honorary rights: precedence over bishops, to have carried before him the archepiscopal cross through his province, and also of using the pallium in his province.—C.E.; P.C. Augustinian.

Metropolitan and City Police Catholic Guild, Tur, was inaugurated on the feast of Corpus Christi, 1914, the founder being Mgr. Canon Martin Howlett, D.D. The purpose of the guild is the promotion of the spiritual and social welfare of its members, all of whom must have direct connection with the police force; the means adopted include monthly social gatherings, lectures, etc. An annual general Communion takes place in Westminster Cathedral on the anniversary of the founding. There is also an annual banquet. In October, 1927, the guild arranged a police pilgrimage to Rome; the Holy Father paid a singular tribute to the characteristic courtesy of London policemen, recalling his personal experience when, as a simple priest, he had visited the British capital. In 1929 the guild had 860 members.

Mexico, republic of North America, south of the United States; area, 767,198 sq. m.; pop. (1921), 14,334,780. Early explorers found among the natives many priests and friars, and a Bull issued by Pope Paul III in 1537 declared, against the common opinion, that the Indians were rational beings, recognizing them as capable of receiving the Christian Faith and its sacraments, and as having equal rights over bishops, to have carried before him the archepiscopal cross through his province, and also of using the pallium in his province.—C.E.; P.C. Augustine.

Metropolitan and City Police Catholic Guild, Tur, was inaugurated on the feast of Corpus Christi, 1914, the founder being Mgr. Canon Martin Howlett, D.D. The purpose of the guild is the promotion of the spiritual and social welfare of its members, all of whom must have direct connection with the police force; the means adopted include monthly social gatherings, lectures, etc. An annual general Communion takes place in Westminster Cathedral on the anniversary of the founding. There is also an annual banquet. In October, 1927, the guild arranged a police pilgrimage to Rome; the Holy Father paid a singular tribute to the characteristic courtesy of London policemen, recalling his personal experience when, as a simple priest, he had visited the British capital. In 1929 the guild had 860 members.

Mexico, republic of North America, south of the United States; area, 767,198 sq. m.; pop. (1921), 14,334,780. Early explorers found among the natives many priests and friars, and a Bull issued by Pope Paul III in 1537 declared, against the common opinion, that the Indians were rational beings, recognizing them as capable of receiving the Christian Faith and its sacraments, and as having equal rights over bishops, to have carried before him the archepiscopal cross through his province, and also of using the pallium in his province.—C.E.; P.C. Augustine.

Metropolitan and City Police Catholic Guild, Tur, was inaugurated on the feast of Corpus Christi, 1914, the founder being Mgr. Canon Martin Howlett, D.D. The purpose of the guild is the promotion of the spiritual and social welfare of its members, all of whom must have direct connection with the police force; the means adopted include monthly social gatherings, lectures, etc. An annual general Communion takes place in Westminster Cathedral on the anniversary of the founding. There is also an annual banquet. In October, 1927, the guild arranged a police pilgrimage to Rome; the Holy Father paid a singular tribute to the characteristic courtesy of London policemen, recalling his personal experience when, as a simple priest, he had visited the British capital. In 1929 the guild had 860 members.

Mexico, republic of North America, south of the United States; area, 767,198 sq. m.; pop. (1921), 14,334,780. Early explorers found among the natives many priests and friars, and a Bull issued by Pope Paul III in 1537 declared, against the common opinion, that the Indians were rational beings, recognizing them as capable of receiving the Christian Faith and its sacraments, and as having equal rights over bishops, to have carried before him the archepiscopal cross through his province, and also of using the pallium in his province.—C.E.; P.C. Augustine.
Michaelmas Day, feast of St. Michael, 29 Sept. It is one of the quarterly rent days of the English business year. Michaelmas term is one of the four terms of the courts in England, from 12 Oct. to 21 Dec.

Michaelmas, mil-kē'as, or Mic'ah, mil'kā (Heb., Mīkāhāyāhā, Who is like Jehovah?), sixth of the twelve minor prophets of the O.T. b. Morasthi, near Eleutheropolis, c. 35 m. sw. of Jerusalem. He was therefore a subject of the southern kingdom. He calls Juda “my people” and here championed God's cause against religious and social evils “in the days of Joaathan, Achaz and Ezechias, kings of Juda” (Mich., 1), hence he was a contemporary of Isaia and Amos. His prophecy consists of seven chapters, which may be divided into three discourses; each beginning with a summons to “hear”; each running through a triple cycle of themes, sin, punishment, and the promise of Messianic Redemption. In the first discourse (1-2) God rises in majesty to punish idolatry and send distress over Juda, to punish injustice, and none can thwart Him, and the Redemption is introduced, “I will assemble and gather together all of thee, O Jacob: I will bring together the remnant of Israel. I will put them together as a flock in the fold.” In the second discourse (3-5), the birthplace of the coming Saviour is named; God abominates the crimes of princes and judges and false prophets, “Therefore, because of you, Sion shall be ploughed as a field and Jerusalem shall be as a heap of stones and the mountain of the temple as the high places of the forests.” After all this the mountain of the Lord shall be exalted; God's People will be renewed; suffering is the road to glory; the Lord of this glory will be born in Bethlehem and His kingdom will be blessed, triumphant, and peaceful. In the third discourse (6-7) God challenges His people to come into judgment against Him, and plead their case against His own; God's blessings are contrasted with their base ingratitude and sins, and the penalty is awarded; however, just as the field, and the dawn of Messianic glory is once more foretold. Michaes is the prophet of the common folk and the villages, as Isaia was the oracle of the court and the capital. His ministry evoked the Reform of Ezechias and is publicly recalled in the times of Jeremias (Jer., 28). The canonicity of his prophecy was never seriously questioned. It is used in the Breviary on the fifth Sunday of November, and in the Missal for the third lesson on Ember Saturday in September (7, 14-16 and 18-20).—C.E. (A. J. S.)

Michelangelo Buonarroti (1475-1564), sculptor, painter, and architect, b. Caprese, near Florence; d. Rome. While he was apprenticed to Ghirlandajo his drawings attracted the attention of Lorenzo the Magnificent and he lived four years (1489-92) in the Medici palace, studying sculpture under Bertoldo, a former pupil of Donatello. He afterwards studied anatomy at first hand by dissecting bodies, in a cell allotted for his use, in the monastery of S. Spirito. He went to Rome in 1496, and three years later executed the beautiful marble “Pieta” in St. Peter's. In 1501 the city of Florence gave him the commission for the statue of “David” (Academy of Florence) which combines the excellences of Donatello and the Greeks. From 1506-12 he was occupied, at the command of Julius II, with painting on the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel the history of the Creation and Flood, with numberless additional figures, including the heroic prophets and sibyls. From 1534-41 he was engaged on the painting of “The Last Judgment,” on the altar wall of the Sistine. Meanwhile from 1524-34 he had worked on the tombs of the Medici, in the sacristy of S. Lorenzo, Florence, designed by him at the request of Clement VII. Although the tombs are unfinished, they exhibit masterpieces of sculpture in the statues of Giuliano and Lorenzo, with the accompanying figures of Day and Night, Dawn and Twilight. In 1545 he completed the tomb of Julius II in the church of S. Pietro in Vincoli, Rome, distinguished by the colossal figure of Moses. Having been made chief architect, painter, and sculptor of the Vatican by Paul III, in 1534, he was appointed in 1547 to take charge of the recon¬ struction of St. Peter's, carrying out the plans of Bramante, and designing the great dome, of which the drum was completed before his death.—C. E.; Jognes, and Fr. Charles Raymbaut, 1642, the rapids
then receiving their name.
A short-lived mission was established, 1660, on Kewee cow Bay, near the present village of the Anse, by Fr.
René Ménard, S.J., who was murdered soon after by a band of Sioux in the wilderness. In 1668 Fr. Jacques Marquette and Fr.
Claude Allouez renewed the mission at the Sault, and three years later Fr. Marquette set up a rude bark chapel at Michilimackinac and founded the Mission of St. Ignatius (St. Ignace) which also was later dedicated to the French of which the post was soon established. Vestments sent from France to this city were long treasured there. A third mission was established, 1679, at the mouth of the St. Joseph River by Recollects accompanying La Salle, Fr. Louis Hennepin, Fr. Gabriel de la Ribourde, and Fr. Zenobius 11embre. In 1701 Fort Ponchartrain on the site of Detroit was built of wood, but immediately rebuilt and the registry, still preserved, records the baptism of a daughter of Cadillac, 2
Feb., 1704, by the Recollect pastor, Fr. Constantine Delhalle. The latter was accidentally shot in 1706 while acting as peacemaker between the Miami and the Ottawas. Included in the State are the Dioceses of Detroit, Grand Rapids, and Marquette (q.v.)
Catholic influence on the place-names of the state is shown in the following: Loretto, Marquette, Nazareth, Olivet, St. Charles, St. Clair, St. Helen,
St. Ignace, St. Jacobs, St. James, St. John, St.
Joseph, St. Louis, Sault Sainte Marie. The Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in Michigan:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Denomination</th>
<th>Members</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Catholic Church</td>
<td>572,117</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>144,944</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran Synodical Conference</td>
<td>67,001</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northern Baptist Convention</td>
<td>49,795</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.</td>
<td>48,798</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congregational Churches</td>
<td>35,997</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Protestant Episcopal Church</td>
<td>33,409</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>German Evangelical Synod</td>
<td>22,482</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Christian Reformed Church</td>
<td>20,645</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reformed Church in America</td>
<td>14,203</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran Joint Synod of Ohio</td>
<td>13,031</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disciples of Christ</td>
<td>12,740</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran General Council</td>
<td>11,225</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran Suomi Synod</td>
<td>9,753</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evangelical Association</td>
<td>3,609</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All Other Denominations</td>
<td>116,441</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Church Membership</td>
<td>1,341,431</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Michigan, University of, founded at Detroit, 1817, by an act of legislature establishing the "Catholepistemiad, or University of Michigan."

Rev. John Monteith and Rev. Gabriel Richard were the entire faculty and the latter was one of its founders, vice-president, and professor of 6 of its 19 departments. It is remarkable as an important university of today founded by a Catholic but now non-sectarian. Its present location at Ann Arbor dates from 1837.

Middle Ages, centuries between ancient and modern times, according to some from the downfall of the Roman Empire to the Renaissance, from the 5th to the 15th century, others preferring to call the first six centuries of this period Dark Ages, and limiting the Middle Ages proper to four. The Dark Ages then would be the time of the barbarian, Islam, and northern invasions, causing eventually the downfall of the Roman Empire and the destruction of the ancient civilizations, the time of the growing ascendency of Christianity occasionally favored by those in power, though more often hindered and even persecuted because of the ambition of worldly rulers to subordinate religion to the state and of their alliance with heretical Christians, such as the Arians in the West, the Iconoclasts in the East; the time also of the conversion, by Apostolic men like Patrick, Martin, Augustine, Boniface, of the barbarous invaders and other more peaceful nations, bringing them gradually under the influence of Christian civilization. If we con-cider the centuries it took to do this as closing just prior to the year one thousand, and then study the achievement of the four following centuries, we find that it consisted in establishing law, developing cities, promoting culture, as W. E. Brown proves in "The Achievement of the Middle Ages"; or, as shown in "The Legacy of the Middle Ages," in preparing for the modern age a legacy of Christian life, art in all its forms, particularly architecture, literature, philosophy, education, law growing out of sacred customs, civil and Roman law also, the dignification of womanhood, economic activity and political thought, organization of government, peace, union of Christendom. To these precious heirlooms Godefroid Kurth would add the independence of the papacy, the celibacy of the clergy, the gradual extirpation of slavery, liberty generally and the rights of the individual citizen, the foundation of charitable institutions, of monasticism; in a word, all the most saving elements of civilization. Indeed, he styles his work on the Middle Ages: "The Origin of Modern Civilization."

Among the founders of these Ages, as Rand ranks them in his work on this subject, are men like Gregory I, Lactantius, Prudentius, Ambrose, Jerome, Augustine, Boethius, and Cassiodorus.
There were great popes, Symmachus, Honorius,
Agapetus, Gregory I and II and later Gregory V, Adrian I, Leo III and IV, John VIII, X, and XIII, and Sylvester II; among the kings were Justinian, Heraclius, Charlemagne, Martel, Alfred the Great, Edmund, Edward the Martyr, the Otta, Edward the Confessor, William the Conqueror; among the churchmen, Gregory of Tours, Columbus, Isidore, Aldhelm, Bede, Alcuin, Anschar, John Scotus, Hugh of Cluny, Peter Damian, Becket, Roger Bacon. Institutions owing to this period are feudalism in transition, guilds, markets, military orders, chivalry, Crusades, pilgrimages, bridge-and road-building brotherhoods, troubadours, wandering scholars, universities, inquisition, and the perfection of the liturgy. Fortunately the study of these ages is more and more occupying scholars. Historians in England and this country, and they are discovering that just because they were the ages of faith, their history had been perverted to throw discredit on the Catholic Church. Men like Charles Homer Haskins in his "Renaissance of the Twelfth Century" and "Studies in the History of Medieval Science" are doing eminent service in this respect and the medieval society has organized a body of scholars who are bent on uncovering the truth about ages from which moderns have so much to learn.—C.E.; Brown, The Achievement of the Middle Ages, Lond., 1928; The Legacy of the Middle Ages, ed. Crump and Jacob, Oxford, 1926; Rand, Founders of the Middle Ages, Cambridge, Mass., 1928; Gougaud, Devotional and Asceletic Practices in the Middle Ages, Lond., 1927.

Middlesbrough, Diocese of, England, comprises the North and East Ridings of Yorkshire, and York north of the Ouse; suffragan of Liverpool; formed in 1878 by division of the Diocese of Beverley; bishops: Richard Lacy (1879-1929); Thomas Shyne (1829). Churches, 116; priests, secular, 84; priests, regular, 55; elementary schools, 48; other schools, 12; institutions, 7; Catholics (est.), 55,885.

Midnight Mass, usually celebrated the first hour on Christmas morning with due permission of the bishop, and restriction as to place and admission; occasionally also on other feasts, as on the Circumcision, New Year's Day.

Midrashim (Heb., midrash from darash, to search out), ancient rabbinical commentaries on the Hebrew scriptures. There are two kinds: the Halachic, which dealt with ritual and legal matters; and the Hagadic, which covered historical traditions and folk-lore. They are an invaluable source of information to the Christian apologist, the biblical student, as well as the general scholar.—C.E.

Migne, mē'nẙ,' Jacques Paul (1800-75), priest and publisher of theological works, b. Saint-Fleur, France; d. Paris. Educated in Orleans, he was ordained priest, 1824, and appointed pastor of Puisieux. He published a pamphlet "De la Liberte" which brought him into conflict with his bishop, in consequence of which he resigned, went to Paris, and founded "L'Univers Religieux," later "L'Univers," a journal treating Catholic interests alone. Later he erected a printing-house in the suburb Petit-Montrouge where he published reference works on Scripture, theology, history, apologetics, sacred oratory, philosophy, romance, monasticism, canon law, liturgy, and most important of all, collections of the Greek and Latin Fathers. Up to 1865 Migne was proprietor of the journal "La Vérité." His printing-house was destroyed by fire 1870; the Franco-German War inflicted great losses. Unfortunately he fell under censure for the misuse of Mass stipends as a means of purchasing his books and without regaining his original prosperity.—C.E.

Milan (Celtic, met lan), city in northern Italy. Founded in 396 B.C. by the Insubes, it became a Roman possession in 221 B.C. and after A.D. 296 was the capital of several emperors. The diocese established c. 200 was governed by several saints among whom are Sts. Dionysius, Ambrose, and Peter, the first archbishop. In 997 the title of count was given by Otto II to the archbishop whose power was diminished by the rise of the burgbers who gained absolute authority in 1116. From this period, the history of the city is a succession of wars against the empire and internal disturbances which terminated when the archbishop Otto Visconti proclaimed the king of perpetual lord, thus putting an end to the Republic of Milan. From 1500 the city was successively under the dominion of France, Spain, and Austria and finally in 1859 was annexed to the kingdom of Italy. The city is rich in works of art which include the magnificent cathedral begun in 1386 by Giovanni Galeazzo, the famous Last Supper of Leonardo da Vinci in the monastery of Santa Maria delle Grazie, and numerous treasures by Bramante and Amadeo. The martyrdom of Sts. Gervasius and Protasius, Victor, Felix, etc., took place at Milan and several general councils were held there. The city is now the seat of an archdiocese having a Catholic population of about 3,000,000, 795 parishes, 2162 secular priests, 92 regulars, 1865 churches, 432 religious houses, 34 Catholic publications.—C.E.

Miles, George Henry (1824-71), dramatist and writer, b. Baltimore; d. near Emmitsburg. He was graduated from St. Mary's College, Emmitsburg, 1842, where he became professor of English literature, 1859. His most notable works are: "Mohamed," "De Soto," and "Señor Valiente," dramas; and "Hamlet," a critical sketch.—C.E.

Milk and Honey, a metonymy used in the Holy Scripture to denote excellent articles of food. The phrase, a land flowing with milk and honey, occurs about 20 times, and honey is mentioned about 58 times. Whether the Hebrews bestowed care upon agriculture, is uncertain, but the abundance of wild honey is proven by many texts. Yahveh is said to feed his elect with honey out of the rock (Ps. 80); Samson found a honey-comb in the mouth of a dead lion (Judges, 14); the people of Israel found the wild honey in a stream upon the earth (1 Kings, 14). Milk, especially the milk of goats, formed a large part of the food of Israel; wherefore, although the phrase "flowing with milk and honey" is a hyperbole and metonymy to denote the richness of food products, the metonymy has a basis in the actual presence of these two articles of food in ancient Palestine.

Mill Hill. See ST. JOSEPH'S SOCIETY FOR FOREIGN MISSIONS (Mill Hill).

Millet, mē-ẙ, Jean Francois (1814-75), painter, b. Gruchy, near Cherbourg, France; d. Barbizon. He was the son of peasants, but was well educated at home. He studied art in Cherbourg and then entered the studio of Delaroche in Paris. After 1845 he devoted himself to the representation of peasant life in a field in which he is the acknowledged master. "The Sower" was one of his earliest important works. In 1849 he became one of the group of painters who made Barbizon famous. Unpopular at first, he went on in the midst of distressing want producing paintings great in themselves and preaching a new gospel of the dignity of labor. At fifty he was made a chevalier of the Legion of Honor. The "Angelus," now in the Louvre, was painted in 1859. By many "The Gleaners" (1857) is considered a greater painting. Among other well-known works are "The Haymakers," "The Man with the Hoe," and "The Vinedressers Resting."—C.E.

Milner, John (1752-1826), Vicar Apostolic, b. London; d. Wolverhampton, England. He attended the Amersham School and then entered Douai, France, was ordained 1777, and sent to Winchester where he remained for 23 years. The times were difficult for the Catholic Church in England. The penal laws were still in force and the agitation for Catholic emancipation had just begun. Milner opposed Pitt's bill for Catholic relief because it contained an oath contrary to Catholic doctrine, and was able to secure the introduction of a new oath in the bill which was passed, 1792. He was made Vicar Apostolic of the Midland District, 1803-26, joined the Irish bishops in their agitation for Catholic Emancipation, and condemned the right of veto, by which the Crown sought the power to veto the appointment to a Catholic bishop of any candidate whose loyalty was in question. He was censured for his opposition to the proposed Emancipation Bill, 1813, on the grounds that it was schismatic, but was vindicated by Pius VII when the latter was released from his imprisonment by Bonaparte. He is called the English Athanasius and was a prolific and fearless writer. Among his works are: "The Rights of Episcopal Controversy" (1791); "History of Winchester" (1798); "Ends of Religious Controversy" (1818).—C.E.

Miltiades (Melchiades), Saint, Pope (310 or 311-314), b. Africa; d. Rome. During his reign, an edict ended the persecution of the Christians; he witnessed the final triumph of the Cross, 312, when the Emperor Constantine defeated Maxentius. The former presented the Roman Church with the Lateran Palace which became the pope's residence and the seat of the central administration of the Church. Miltiades settled the controversy with the Donatists over the Bishopric of Carthage in favor of Cecilian. Feast, R. Cal., 10 Dec.—C.E.

Milan, city, Lombardy, Italy. A bridge over the Ticino on the Flaminian way, 2 m. from Rome, famous for the victory of Constantine over Maxentius, who lost his life when the bridge gave way, October 312. Here before the battle Constantine saw a cross in the sky with the inscription "By this sign you shall conquer."—C.E.

Milwaukee, city, Wisconsin. Jesuit missionaries were early visitors to the region, but the first record of a white man's arrival on the site of the present city is in the journal of the Recollect missionary, Rev. Zenobe Membré, who accompanied Robert Chevalier de la Salle to the Illinois country in 1679. In 1699 Jean François Buisson de Saint Cosme "arrived at Melwarik," then an Indian village, from which in 1818 Solomon Juneau founded the city of Milwaukee. The first Mass was celebrated in 1837 in the home of Juneau by Rev. J. Bonduel, a missionary from Green Bay. In the same year the Rev. Patrick Kelly came to Milwaukee, and held services in the court-house until the erection of the first Catholic church (St. Peter's) in 1839, which served as the cathedral for many years. In 1844 Milwaukee was made a diocesan see, and in 1875 an archdiocese. In 1847 the foundation was laid for the new cathedral of St. John, built by contributions from Cuba and Mexico and consecrated in 1853. St. Mary's Church for German Catholics and the first Catholic hospital, in charge of the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, were opened in 1846. In 1858 the seminary of St. Francis of Sales was founded by Dr. Joseph Salzmann, who was also founder of the first Catholic normal school in the United States, and Pio Nono College in the suburb of St. Francis (1871). The Jesuits, established in Milwaukee in 1856, opened Marquette College, now Marquette University, in 1880, and have charge of the Jesuits' province of the Northwest. The Sisters of Notre Dame, of St. Francis, and of Mercy have mother-houses in Milwaukee, and there are 57 Catholic churches and 52 parochial schools in the city.

Milwaukee, Archdiocese of, Wisconsin; embraces Columbia, Dane, Dodge, Fond du Lac, Green, Green Lake, Jefferson, Kenosha, Marquette, Milwaukee, Ozaukee, Racine, Rock, Sheboygan, Washington, and Waukesha counties; diocese, 1834; archdiocese, 1875; area, 9321 sq. m.; suffragans, Green Bay, La Crosse, Marquette, and Superior. Bishops: John Martin Henni (1844-81), Michael Heiss (1881-90), Frederick Xavier Katzer (1891-1903), Sebastian Gebhard Messmer (1903). Churches, 397; priests secular, 395; priests regular, 138; religious women, 5927; university, 1; colleges, 2; seminaries, 4; academies, 2; high schools, 8; parochial schools, 185; pupils in parochial schools, 50,521; institutions, 42; Catholic, 310,000.

Mincius, John (Benedict X), antipope (1058-59). Bp. of Velletri, b. Rome. He was elected in opposition to Nicholas II by a faction of the Roman nobility after the death of Stephen (IX) X, who had commanded before he died that no election should take place until Hildebrand returned from Germany. John was enthroned by an illiterate priest but was deposed by Hildebrand and condemned by the Council of Sutri, 1059. He fled to Passarano, submitted to Nicholas II, 1060, and was publicly degraded in his presence by Hildebrand.—Mann.

Mind of the Church, the Church's attitude and teaching with regard to matters not solemnly defined as dogmas of Faith, but declared by her serious pronouncements and by the teaching of her approved theologians. To think and to act with the Church in matters not solemnly defined, is characteristic of a loyal member of the Church. Lack of respect for the mind of the Church incurs danger of complete loss of Faith. (M. J. S.)
Mineralogy (L., mino, a mine; Gr., logos, science), the science which treats of minerals. It includes crystallography, the science of crystals, and two chemical mineralogy, which is concerned with the chemical properties of minerals; descriptive mineralogy which treats of the classification, description, and distribution of minerals; determinative mineralogy which deals with the various methods, e.g., chemical or crystallographic, of distinguishing species; and economic mineralogy, the subject matter of which is the use of minerals as in jewelry. Among the notable contributors to the science are the following: Catholics. Georg Bauer Agricola (1494-1555), “Father of Mineralogy” and pioneer in metallurgy, discovered a method of separating silver from gold by the use of sulphuric and nitric acid, and devised a widely used apparatus for testing and smelting ores. Johann Nepomuk Von Fuchs (1774-1856), renowned for his analyses of minerals, discovered a process of producing soluable glass which is employed in stereochromy, a type of fresco painting. A certain kind of muscovite is known as “fuchsite” in his honor. René Juste Haüy (1743-1822) founded the science of crystallography, formulated the geometrical law of crystalization known by his name, and drew up a system of classification of minerals. Ernest François Mallard (1833-94), one of the pioneers in crystallography, particularly famed for his investigations on the physical properties of crystals, did valuable work on isomorphism and crystallographical instruments. Karl Frederich Von Schaffhausen (1803-80) was the pioneer in geological knowledge of the Bavarian Alps, first found nitrogen in iron, and made the initial production of artificial quartz crystals. Other Christian Mineralogists. Sir David Brewster (1781-1868) made renowned investigations and examination of crystals and discovered crystals which had two axes of double refraction. Ernst Heinrich Karl Von Dechon (1800-89) made distinguished research on Westphalian and northern European coal deposits and gave a great impetus to Prussian metallurgical and mining processes. Johann Friedrich Ludwig Haussmann (1782-1859) made important researches on the development of crystals due to the processes of metallurgy, and on the presence of corderite, feldspar, pyrites, and bactylite. Gerhard Von Roth (1830-88) directed the Bonn Mineralogical Museum, discovered several new minerals, did crystallographical research, and was the author of a standard treatise on tridymite.—Keller, Christianity and the Leaders of Modern Science, St. L., 1911; Graham, A Comprehensive Geology, N. Y., 1920; Murray, Science and Scientists in the Nineteenth Century, N. Y., 1925.

Minister, a title given to the superiors of some religious orders or of a district of the same, such as the minister general and minister provincial of the Franciscans, of the Trinitarians; the second in authority in Jesuit communities; one authorized to administer the sacraments, e.g., the minister of baptism.—C.E. (s. B.)

Minnesota, the 11th state of the United States in size, the 17th in population, and the 32nd state to be admitted to the Union (11 May, 1858); area, 84,062 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 2,387,125; Catholics (1928), 505,373. The Falls of St. Anthony were named in 1680 by the Recollect, Fr. Louis Hennepin, who had previously carried the banner of the Church to the Indians. The name was released by the explorer, Sieur Daniel Greysolon du Lhut. The first missionary work was done by Fr. Joseph Jacques Marest, S.J., who labored among the Sioux for about 10 years after accompanying Nicholas Perrot to their country in 1659. The latter had established himself in the region, and sometimes called Fort Bon Secours, on Lake Pepin near the present town of Wahasha in 1655. In 1727 Fort Beauharnois was built near the town of Frontenac by René Boucher who had in his train two Jesuits, Fr. Michel (Louis-Ignace) Guignas and Fr. Nicolas Le Gouinor. Here the first little chapel of Minnesota was built and named in honor of St. Michael the Archangel. The name is preserved in the chapel of the Ursuline Convent built on the new site in 1730. In 1729 Fort Charles was built near the southern shores of the Lake of the Woods, and two Jesuit missionaries were sent there, Fr. Charles Mesager and Fr. Pierre Aulneau, the latter suffering death at the hands of the Indians in 1736. The permanent foundation of the Church was made only after the Americans had built Fort Snelling, first called Fort St. Anthony, just above the confluence of the St. Peter, or Minnesota, and the Flueme of the St. Paul, the dioceses of Crookston, Duluth, St. Cloud, and Winona (qq.v.). Catholic influence on the place-names of the state is shown in the following: Loretto, Sacred Heart, St. Anthony Falls, St. Bonifacius, St. Charles, St. Clair, St. Cloud, St. Francis, St. Hilaire, St. James, St. Joseph, St. Leo, St. Louis Park, St. Martin, St. Michael, St. Paul, St. Peter, St. Vincent. The U.S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in Minnesota:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Church</th>
<th>Members</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Catholic Church</td>
<td>415,064</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran Synodical Conference</td>
<td>75,726</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>59,576</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran General Council</td>
<td>54,933</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran United Norwegian Church</td>
<td>52,855</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran Norwegian Synod</td>
<td>39,513</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.</td>
<td>33,494</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northern Baptist Convention</td>
<td>28,145</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congregational Churches</td>
<td>22,097</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Protestant Episcopal Church</td>
<td>22,025</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran Joint Synod of Ohio</td>
<td>14,723</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran Norwegian Free Church</td>
<td>13,503</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>German Evangelical Synod</td>
<td>11,333</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Miracle Plays and Mysteries, terms designating the religious drama which developed among Christian nations at the end of the Middle Ages. The origin of the medieval drama was in religion. On solemn feasts such as Easter and Christmas, the office was interrupted and the priests represented the religious event being celebrated. At first the text was in prose and in Latin; by degrees versification crept in and soon pervaded the entire drama; prose became the exception and the vernacular was employed as well as Latin. When the vernacular had completely supplanted the Latin, and individual inventiveness had asserted itself, the drama left the precincts of the Church and ceased to be liturgical, without however losing its religious character. The mysteries may be grouped under three cycles: that of the O.T., that of the N.T., and that of the saints. Sometimes they represented matters which were not religious.

C.E.

Miracles of Christ. They may be divided into five classes: nature miracles; miracles of healing; deliverance of demons; victories over hostile wills; cases of resurrection.

Nature Miracles. Under this head nine miracles may be enumerated. Changing of the water into wine at Cana (John, 2). First miraculous draught of fishes (Luke, 5). Calming of the tempest (Matt., 8; Mark, 4; Luke, 8). First multiplication of loaves (Matt., 14; Mark, 6; Luke, 9; John, 6). Jesus walking on the water (Matt., 14; Mark, 6; John, 6). Second multiplication of loaves (Matt., 15; Mark, 8). Stacher in the fish's mouth (Matt., 17). Cursing the fig-tree (Matt., 21; Mark, 11). Second miraculous draught of fishes (John, 21).

Miracles of Healing. These were numerous during the public life of Our Lord. There are references to a great many cures which are not related in detail (Matt., 4; Luke, 4, 6; Mark, 6), and 20 special cases are recorded.

Deliverance of Demons. General formulas regarding the driving out of devils (Mark, 1) indicate that such acts of deliverance were very numerous during Our Lord's public life. Special cases related are as follows:
MIRACLES OF CHRIST

Demoniac of Capernaum (Mark, 1; Luke, 4).
Deaf and dumb demoniac (Matt., 12; Luke, 11).
Gerasene demoniac (Matt., 8; Mark, 5; Luke, 8).
Dumb demoniac (Matt., 9).
Daughter of the Syro-Phenician woman (Matt., 15; Mark, 7).
Lame child (Matt., 17; Mark, 9; Luke, 9).
Woman with the spirit of infirmity (Luke, 13).

Victories over Hostile Wills. Under this heading Catholic scholars admit a great or smaller number of miracles; it is not clear in certain cases whether the incidents in which Our Lord wielded extraordinary power over His enemies were cases of supernatural intervention of Divine power, or the natural effects of the ascendency of His human will over that of other men. Such are the cases mentioned in John (7, 30 and 44; 8, 20 and 59), where the Jews failed to arrest Him, "because His hour was not yet come," or, in the fourth case, because He hid Himself from them. There are two cases which appear to most Catholic commentators to involve a supernatural display of power over wills: (1) the casting out of the vendors (John, 2; Matt., 21; Mark, 11; Luke, 19); (2) the episode of the escape from the hostile crowd at Nazareth (Luke, 4).

Cases of Resurrection. Among the signs of His Messiahship which Our Lord gave to the disciples of John the Baptist, we read: "The dead rise again" (Matt., 11; Luke, 7). This general statement has made some commentators think that there were cases of resurrection not described in the Gospels. This is possible, because the Gospels do not aim at completeness, but the expression quoted would be justified by the three following cases of resurrection which are related.

Raising of the daughter of Jairus (Matt., 9; Mark, 5; Luke, 8).
Raising of the son of the widow of Naim (Luke, 7).
Raising of Lazarus (John, 11).

The subject of the miracles of Christ has been well dealt with, both from an apologetic and an exegetical point of view, by L. C. Fillon in "Les Miracles de Notre Seigneur Jésus Christ" (Paris, 1909), and more recently, from an apologetic point of view, by Léonce de Grandmaison in "Jésus Christ, Sa Personne, Son Message, Ses Preuves."—C.E.; Marsh, Miracles, Lond., 1906; Newman, Essays on Miracles, N. Y., 1890; Joyce, Question of Miracles, St. L., 1914.

Miraculous Medal. The medal of the Blessed Virgin, used as a badge by sodalities of the Children of Mary and of the Immaculate Conception. It bears on one side an image of our Blessed Mother, with the words "O Mary, conceived without Sin, Pray for Us Who Have Recourse to Thee." On the reverse side is the letter M with a cross and twelve stars, and beneath are the Hearts of Jesus and Mary. It owes its origin to a French nun, Sister Catherine Labouré, of the Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, who is said to have been favored with a vision. It is highly indulged.

Mission (in Canon Law), all territories in the world which are subject to the Congregation of Propaganda, which has jurisdiction over: missions in non-Catholic Christian countries, e.g., Sweden; and missions in Catholic countries of which some parts are still in the missionary state and have no hierarchic constitution, e.g., Brazil. In the popular and narrowest sense, the word "missions" denotes Catholic missions in countries predominantly pagan, e.g., China, and missions among the black and yellow races dwelling in Christian countries, e.g., Indians, Negroes, and Eskimos in America. The statistical table given below includes all missions so considered in the popular sense of the term.

MISSIONS

The Missions of La Salette, founded, 1852, at the shrine of Our Lady of La Salette by Mgr. de Bruillard, to care for the pilgrims frequenting the mountain. In 1876 they became a religious congregation proper and in 1890 were approved by Rome. Five missionaries with fifteen students arrived in America, 1880, and the first archbishop of Algeria (later Card. Lavigerie) founded it in 1868 for the immediate care and instruction of Arab children orphaned by the famine of 1867 and the general purpose of converting all Africa; constitutions approved, 1908, and again, 1921. Not, strictly speaking, a religious order, its members lead the community life and are governed by a superior-general residing at Maison-Carne, near Algiers. The society maintains missions in the Sahara (prefecture Apostolic), the French Sudan, Vicariates Apostolic of Northern and Southern Nyanza, Uganda, Tanganyika, Nyassa, and Upper Congo, a Greek Melchite seminary at Jerusalem, and a scholasticate at Carthage. Statistics: 10 vicariates, 1 prefecture, 160 stations, 1100 members (of whom 750 are priests). In 1928 the White Fathers celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their

LIST OF MISSIONS, 1929. (See art. MISSION (TERRITORIAL), p. 634.)

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Country</th>
<th>Founded</th>
<th>Order</th>
<th>Catholics</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Baghdad</td>
<td>Iraq</td>
<td>1721</td>
<td>Carmelites</td>
<td>4,000</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BelHar</td>
<td>India</td>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Franciscans</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bornholm</td>
<td>Denmark</td>
<td>1913</td>
<td>Franciscans</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Constantinople</td>
<td>Turkey</td>
<td>1908</td>
<td>Holy Ghost Fathers</td>
<td>12,969</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Cuttaf</td>
<td>British India</td>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Vincentians</td>
<td>2,200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dindal River</td>
<td>Australia</td>
<td>1910</td>
<td>Benedictines</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Upper Egypt</td>
<td>Egypt</td>
<td>1947</td>
<td>Franciscans</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Paryen</td>
<td>Indo-China</td>
<td>1924</td>
<td>Native Clergy</td>
<td>3,450</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Georgia</td>
<td>United States</td>
<td>1907</td>
<td>Afric. Miss. of Lyons</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Greece</td>
<td>Greece</td>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Capuchins</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Il (suppressed)</td>
<td>Manchuria</td>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Benedictines</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kadi-Keut</td>
<td>Turkey</td>
<td>1965</td>
<td>Holy Ghost Fathers</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lunda</td>
<td>Central Africa</td>
<td>1990</td>
<td>Holy Ghost Fathers</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northern Lazon</td>
<td>Philippines</td>
<td>1907</td>
<td>Cong. of Scheut</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Berina</td>
<td>Turkey</td>
<td>1927</td>
<td>Capuchins</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Myazak</td>
<td>Japan</td>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Capuchins</td>
<td>1,445</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mosul</td>
<td>Iraq</td>
<td>1920</td>
<td>Capuchins</td>
<td>490</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Padong</td>
<td>Bhutan</td>
<td>1882</td>
<td>Capuchins</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Peru</td>
<td>Peru</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>Capuchins</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Putumayo</td>
<td>Colombia</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>Capuchins</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>San Andrea y Providencia</td>
<td>Colombia</td>
<td>1912</td>
<td>Capuchins</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sibbercoor</td>
<td>Russia</td>
<td>1885</td>
<td>Capuchins</td>
<td>2,475</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Syria and Cilicia</td>
<td>Syria</td>
<td>1827</td>
<td>Capuchins</td>
<td>4,670</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tshandom</td>
<td>Turkey</td>
<td>1935</td>
<td>Capuchins</td>
<td>5,600</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Talsikar</td>
<td>Manchuria</td>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Capuchins</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Urga</td>
<td>China</td>
<td>1922</td>
<td>Cong. of Scheut</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Yuichowfu</td>
<td>China</td>
<td>1928</td>
<td>Vincentians</td>
<td>...</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

GENERAL STATISTICS OF MISSIONS

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Missions (1923)</th>
<th>Total Native-born</th>
<th>Total Catechumens</th>
<th>Total Native-born</th>
<th>Total Native-born</th>
<th>Total Native-born</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Asia</td>
<td>6,287,812</td>
<td>6,324,775</td>
<td>777,480</td>
<td>3,874</td>
<td>3,873</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Africa</td>
<td>2,666,212</td>
<td>2,697,723</td>
<td>817,741</td>
<td>2,399</td>
<td>388</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>America</td>
<td>10,269</td>
<td>10,269</td>
<td>10,269</td>
<td>10,269</td>
<td>10,269</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Indian Missions</td>
<td>55,939</td>
<td>55,939</td>
<td>4,538</td>
<td>55,939</td>
<td>55,939</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
| </code>

the United States, 1892, and established themselves in the Diocese of Hartford, Conn. They received a parish in the Springfield Diocese, 1894, and another in Danielson, Conn., 1895. Settling in the Diocese of Sherbrooke, Canada, 1902, they were placed in charge of a parish at Stanstead, P.Q.; and in the Archdiocese of New York, a parish at Phoenix, Ulster Co., was entrusted to them. There is a separate province with headquarters at Forget, Saskatchewan. Additional foundations were made in Belgium, Madagascar, Poland, and Brazil, and their constitutions were approved, 1908. The spirit of the community is one of prayer and sacrifice and the students of the Apostle schools are trained chiefly to combat the great crimes of the day, especially those denounced by the Blessed Virgin at La Salette. Statistics: 42 houses, 330 religious.—C.E., IX, 9.
pioneer departure for the interior of Africa, 1878.—

Missionaries of St. Charles. See Pious Society of Missionaries of St. Charles Borromeo.

Missionaries of St. Francis de Sales of Annecy, order founded at Annecy in 1838 by Mgr. Riley to do foreign missionary work. In 1845 the first members of this society set out for India, and the Propaganda allotted to them a large tract of land which later formed the dioceses of Nagpur and Vizagapatam. Gregory XVI in 1843 issued a Brief of commendation, in 1860 the Institute was approved as a society with simple vows, and its constitutions were definitely sanctioned in 1889. It has houses in France, Switzerland, England, Luxembourg, and Brazil, 2 dioceses in India, and 160 religious.—C.E.

Missionaries of the Company of Mary, order founded by Blessed Louis Marie Grignon de Montfort, in 1715. It is composed of priests and lay-brothers, who strive to draw the faithful to Jesus Christ through devotion to the Blessed Virgin. From 1718 to 1781 the Montfortists, although few in number, gave over 430 missions. Debilitated by the Revolution, the community was reorganized by Fr. Deshayes, elected general in 1821. He received from Leo XII a brief commending the company, and Fr. Dulin (1837-55) obtained canonical approbation. Several establishments were made in France. Under Fr. Denis (1855-77) the community acquired a seminary in the Diocese of Nantes, to prepare priests for Haiti. In 1880 a novitiate and a scholasticate were established in the Netherlands, and in 1883 a school was begun at Schimmert. The order arrived in Canada in 1885; two of its constitutions were founded in the Diocese of Brooklyn, one in 1903 and one in 1904; the Vicariate Apostolic of San Martino, Colombia, erected in 1903, was entrusted to the Montfortists; the Constitutions were approved in 1904; the congregation was divided into provinces; the Diocese of Port de Paix (Haiti) was taken over, and the French mission school was transferred to Romsey, England. Statistics: 50 houses in Europe and Canada, 4 missions, 675 professed religious, 35 novices, and 550 aspirants.—C.E., IX, 749.

Missionaries of the Consolata of Turin, institute founded at Turin in 1901 by Canon Giuseppe Allamano, to train foreign missionaries for the evangelization of Africa. Within three years after the foundation of the order, 12 stations were established among the uncivilized natives of the Kenya district, which in 1905 was erected into an independent mission, and in 1908 into a vicariate Apostolic. So successful was this first mission, that the Prefecture of Kaffa in southern Abyssinia was erected in 1913 and entrusted to the mission works of the Consolata. Later these missionaries were invited to the Prefecture Apostolic of Irinja and the Vicariate Apostolic of Dar-es-Salaam. The mother-house is at Turin. Statistics: 138 missionaries, 90 coadjutor-brothers, 96 students, and 230 aspirants.

Missionaries of the Sacred Heart of Jesus of Issoudun, religious congregation founded at Issoudun, Archdiocese of Bourges, France, in 1854, by Jules Chevalier. It is composed of priests and lay brothers, with the object of promoting the knowledge and practise of devotion to the Sacred Heart of Jesus, as embodied in the revelations of Our Lord to St. Margaret Mary Alacoque, and of offering personal reparation to the Divine Heart. The efforts of these missionaries are expended chiefly in foreign mission fields especially in the South Sea Islands, New Pomerania, South Australia, Philippine Islands, and other islands of the South Pacific. They have also founded houses in England, Canada, and the United States. After the separation of Church and State in France, the mother-house was transferred from Issoudun to Rome. Statistics: 7 provinces, 3 vice-provinces, 1270 religious of whom 400 are at missions, 226 priests, 635 scholastics, 403 lay brothers, 74 choir novices, and 40 lay brother novices.—C.E., XIII, 306.

Missionary Poor Clares of the Immaculate Conception, a branch of the Conceptionist Order, formed, 1910, by Bp. Anandus Bahuanm, O.F.M., at Santarem, Brazil, to engage in charitable work among the poor in the Amazon district. The society spread and has 18 houses in Brazil, Germany, and the United States, including hospitals, orphanages, and schools. Religious total 270.

Missionary Servants of the Most Holy Trinity, religious community of priests and brothers in the United States, founded by the Rev. Thomas Augustine Judge, C.M., M.S.S.S.T., to form a lay apostolate and to direct work among home missions, especially in the South. The formal decree of erection was read in Washington, D. C., 29 April, 1929. To provide for the support of missionaries in training, the community conducts work among boys in crowded Catholic centers and publishes the monthly "S.O.S. for the Preservation of the Faith." Father Judge also founded the Missionary Servants of the Most Blessed Trinity now numbering about 300 sisters in 30 mission cenades.

Missionary Sisters, Servants of the Holy Ghost, religious congregation founded at Steyl, the Netherlands, 1889, by Rev. Arnold Janssen, founder of the Society of the Divine Word (q.v.). Its purpose is work in home and foreign missions especially in those directed by the Society of the Divine Word. The congregation has houses in the Netherlands, Austria, Germany, Argentina, Brazil, Japan, Ceylon, Dutch East Indies, the Philippines, New Guinea, and the United States. The mother-house is at Steyl; religious total over 2000.—C.E., Suppl., 379.

Missionary Sisters of Our Lady of Africa (White Sisters), a congregation founded by Card. Lavigerie in Algiers, 1869, to help the White Fathers in their work in Africa. Their purpose is the regathering of pagan womanhood and the relief of spiritual and corporal misery. The congregation has postulates and procures in France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Canada, and a procure in the United States at Metuchen, N. J. Of their 108 houses, 88 are mission houses in Africa. These missions include orphanages, schools, native workshops, hospitals, leper asylums, and dispensaries. The mother-house and novitiate are at St-Charles, Birman, Algiers; the total number of professed sisters is 855.—C.E., Suppl., 773.

Missionary Sisters of the Immaculate Conception, religious institute founded by Abbé Boussu in 1902 at Notre Dame des Neiges, near Montreal, for the conversion of pagan nations and the propagation of the faith. The institute has 19 houses, including schools, orphanages, workshops, nurseries, hospitals, and a leper home, in Canada, China, Japan, Italy, and the Philippines. The mother-house is at Outremont, Montreal; religious total 382. C.E., Suppl., 391.

Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart, order founded by Mother Frances Xavier Cabrini, in the province of Milan, Italy, 1880, for the spread of the devotion to the Heart of Jesus by the practise of corporal and spiritual works of mercy. The order has 80 houses, including colleges, schools, nurseries, orphanages, and hospitals, in Italy, France, Spain, England, United States, Argentina, Brazil, Nicaragua, and China. The mother-house is in Rome; the total number of religious is 4000.—C.E., XIII, 305.

Missionary Society of the St. Paul the Apostle (PAULISTS), founded in New York, 1868, by Fr. Isaac Thomas Hecker, formerly with the Redemptorists but dispensed from his vows owing to a misunderstanding. With four associates, under recommendation of Propaganda, the new society was formed for the conversion of America, to be effected by lecturing, preaching, the giving of missions, and through the press. The rule, resembling that of the Redemptorists, was drawn up in 1858, approved by Abp. Hughes, and enlarged in 1878. Professions, though not bound by vows, is permanent. The mother-house is in New York, a novitiate in Washington, and a procure at Rome. Additional foundations are in New York, Portland, Toronto, Minneapolis, Chicago, San Francisco, Berkeley (Cal.), Austin (Texas), and Winchester (Tenn.). A new residence and house of studies is in Rome, and diocesan apostolates have been extended into England and Australia. Statistics: 75 priests, 50 novices.—C.E.

Missionary Sons of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, founded at Vich, Spain, 1849, by Fr. Isaac Xavier Cabrini, the total number of religious is 4000.—C.E., XIII, 305.

Missionary Sisters of the Sacred Heart, order founded by Mother Frances Xavier Cabrini, in the province of Milan, Italy, 1880, for the spread of the devotion to the Heart of Jesus by the practise of corporal and spiritual works of mercy. The order has 80 houses, including colleges, schools, nurseries, orphanages, and hospitals, in Italy, France, Spain, England, United States, Argentina, Brazil, Nicaragua, and China. The mother-house is in Rome; the total number of religious is 4000.—C.E., XIII, 305.

Missionary Society of the St. Paul the Apostle (PAULISTS), founded in New York, 1868, by Fr. Isaac Thomas Hecker, formerly with the Redemptorists but dispensed from his vows owing to a misunderstanding. With four associates, under recommendation of Propaganda, the new society was formed for the conversion of America, to be effected by lecturing, preaching, the giving of missions, and through the press. The rule, resembling that of the Redemptorists, was drawn up in 1858, approved by Abp. Hughes, and enlarged in 1878. Professions, though not bound by vows, is permanent. The mother-house is in New York, a novitiate in Washington, and a procure at Rome. Additional foundations are in New York, Portland, Toronto, Minneapolis, Chicago, San Francisco, Berkeley (Cal.), Austin (Texas), and Winchester (Tenn.). A new residence and house of studies is in Rome, and diocesan apostolates have been extended into England and Australia. Statistics: 75 priests, 50 novices.—C.E.

Missionary Sons of the Immaculate Heart of Mary, founded at Vich, Spain, 1849, by Ven. Antonio Maria Claret; definitely approved, 1879, and again, 1924. The Congregation conducts missions in West Africa and South America (Colombia, Bolivia, and Brazil), and they are established in the dioceses of Westminster and Brentwood, England. Statistics: 10 provinces, 181 houses, 3151 religious.

Mission Indians (of California), a name, of no ethnic significance, used to designate the descendants of those Californian tribes, evangelized by the Franciscans in the 18th and early 19th centuries. The historic missions were 21 in number and at least 11 linguistic stocks were represented in the Indians. The Californian tribes were a low type of culture and their arts were of the crudest description. Polygamy and divorce were common. Among the principal ceremonies enacted were the boys' initiation and annual mourning rite.

The conspicuous was practised. Abortion and infanticide were of common occurrence. In spite of the efforts of the missionaries the race declined and with the suppression of the missions they were doomed to extinction. From a population of about 50,000 they have dwindled to little over 3000. The greater part of them are on the "Mission Indians" reservations in southern California, and Catholic missionaries are at work among them.—C.E.

Missions, Catholic Indian, of Canada. The first Catholic Indian Missions in Canada were established by the French priests attached to the parties of French explorers to whom the propagation of the Faith formed a necessary part of the work of colonization. As early as 1653 a missionary accompanied Cartier's second expedition. Missionary work among the Indians began with the advent of the Recollects, 1615, who labored among the Hurons. The Jesuits, who proved to be a more vital force, in this field, arrived in 1625, and were followed by the Sulpicians, 1657, who took up the work of the former after the suppression of the Society, 1773. Among the obstacles confronting these pioneers were: an unknown land; primitive living conditions; a people who were nomadic, superstitious and uncivilized; warlike and unsavory Indians; the white men who plied the savages with intoxicating liquor; and the unsettled state of the country, which alternated between French and English control. Missionary work began along the St. Lawrence and in the northeast country; spread to Lakes Erie and Ontario, 1648; then to the country north of the Great Lakes after the dispersion, and almost total extinction, of the Huron nation in 1648. In 1735, missionaries accompanied the French explorers to the middle west where, by 1818, missions were flourishing under the control of the Jesuits and Sulpicians who by 1838 had reached the far west, and established missions there, 1842. The Oblates of Mary Immaculate arrived in Canada 1841, began their labors along the St. Lawrence, and gradually extended their missionary work over the entire country. They were followed by the Capuchin Fathers, 1894. Conditions gradually adapted themselves to the civilizing influences of the missionaries, and by 1885 the roving life of the latter had ceased. Among the missions were those established in the west at: Edmonton; for the Montagnais; Gaspé, for the Montagnais and Mi'nomacs; Mission, for the Mi'nomacs; Three Rivers, for the Montagnais and Algonquins; St. Joseph and Christian Island (Lake Huron), for the Hurons; St. John and St. Mathias for the Petun; Quinté Bay, for the Cayugas; Sault St. Louis, for the Iroquois, among whom was Catherine Tekakwitha, the "Lily of the Mohawks." In the middle west and west were those at: St. Paul, for the Chippewas; Ile à La Crosse, for the Seneca Indians; and Garden River, Pigeon River, St. Boniface, Wabassimong, Fond du Lac, St. Joseph's on Great Slave Lake, Our Lady of Good Hope, within the Arctic Circle, Lake Caribou, and Divine Providence.

Among the missionaries who labored in Canada were: the Jesuits Bressani, Chaumonot, Massé, Brebeuf, Chabanel, Daniel, Garnier, Lallemant, Lacroix, Brosses, Nobili, and Du Rancquet; the Recollects the Jesuits in 1764 and the removal of the tribes and Illinois, and flourished until the expulsion of Jamay, Dolbeau, Le Caron, who prepared a dictionary of the Abenaki language; Sagard, the historian of the early Catholic missions in Canada, and Hennequin; the Sulpicians De Queyris, Souris, Picquet, Mathevet, who prepared a dictionary of the Arooak language; Thavenet, Guichart, and Cuoee; the Oblates of Mary Immaculate Durocher, Taché, Faraud, Grollier, called the Apostle of the Arctic Circle; Grandin, and D’Herbomez; and the secular priests Brabant, Nicoyse, and Demers.—C.E.; Wynne, Jesuit Martyrs of North America, N.Y., 1925. Missions, Catholic Indian, of the United States. From the discovery of the western continent, the conversion of the American tribes was a subject of deep concern to Catholic France and Spain. The first Mass celebrated in the United States was probably that offered by the priests of Ponce de Leon’s expedition in Florida (1521).

SOUTHEASTERN STATES (Virginia to Alabama inclusive). The first attempt to evangelize the Florida tribes was made in 1549 at Tampa Bay and resulted in the death of the first missionary martyrs, the Dominicans Luis Cancer and companions. By 1560 several missions were established in Florida by Jesuits in 1577 and 1593 by Franciscans, and by 1665 despite numerous attacks, there were 35 Franciscan missions in Florida and Georgia with 26,000 Christian Indians. These continued, although destroyed and restored several times until 1704 when Gov. Moore and the Lower Creeks utterly demolished all the southeastern missions.

MARYLAND. After the foundation of the English Catholic colony in 1634, missions were established especially among the Piscataway by the Jesuits but the work was prematurely ended in 1645 by the attacks of the Puritans and other malcontents. Father White wrote an account of this tribe, an Indian catechism, and a grammar of their language.

NEw ENGLAND. The earliest mission established in Maine (1613) was very soon destroyed. Later (1619) the Recollects, the Capuchins (1633), and the Jesuits labored among the Algonquins and the Penobscot. The principal post was Norridgewock (Indian Old Point), Me., and the most noted worker Fr. Sebastian Râle, the author of an Algonkian dictionary. Many of these Indians migrated to Canada but the work continued and the two tribes are now entirely Catholic.

NEW YORK AND PENNSYLVANIA. The hostility of the five Iroquois tribes to the French made permanent missions impossible in New York State and resulted in wholesale torture and martyrdom of the Jesuits (1642-53). The first Iroquois mission was finally established at Onondaga in 1654, and in 1668 work was begun in each of the tribes, but later missions in the 18th century were continually disturbed by war. The Catholic Iroquois now number about 4025. A mission begun in Pennsylvania in 1755 was soon discontinued.

OHIO RIVER AND Lake Region. In 1669, 1674, 1727, missions were established by Jesuits among the various tribes in Michigan, Wisconsin, Indiana, and Illinois, and flourished until the expulsion of the Jesuits in 1764 and the removal of the tribes in 1820-40. Frs. Marquette, Druillettes, and Gravier, the author of the Illinois dictionary, are connected with these missions.

LOWER MISSISSIPPI REGION: The Louisiana Mission. In 1699 the Paris Congregation of Foreign Missions made settlements in Mississippi and Arkansas, and in 1700 the Jesuits undertook missions in Alabama and Louisiana, and later took over the control of the Louisiana colony, the Ursuline convent established at New Orleans in 1727 being due to their efforts. These missions never attained much prosperity because of the intrigues of English traders, general neglect, and continual attacks from the Indians and were brought to a close by the expulsion of the Jesuits (1764).

NORTHERN AND CENTRAL PLAINS. The Indians of this district were visited by Fr. Juan de Padilla in 1540, by Jesuits in 1660, and by Fr. Hennepin, Franciscan Recollect, in 1680, but regular missions were not established until 1837 in Minnesota, in Montana (1840) the famous Flathead Mission inaugurated by Fr. de Smet, and later in Oklahoma, Nebraska, North Dakota, and other states.

TExAS. The Franciscans in 1544, the Recollect missionaries in 1585, the Spanish and Mexican Franciscans in 1690 and 1699 began laboring in Texas, and throughout the 18th century continued to found missions which were open to constant attacks and finally suppressed in 1812 by the revolutionary government.

NEw MEXICO AND ARIZONA. The earliest mission in this territory was undertaken by Franciscans in 1542 but there was little success of the Pueblo revolt (1680) in which 21 missionaries were massacred, and the expulsion of the Jesuits (1767). At present German Franciscans are laboring among the Navajo.

THE COLUMBIA REGION. The tribes of this district first received knowledge of Christianity in 1542. Missions were established in Idaho by Jesuits (1841), in Washington and Oregon by seculars (1839), and later among the Upper Columbia tribes by Oblates. Some of these are still in operation.

CALIFORNIA (q.v.). At present two societies, the Bureau of Catholic Indian Missions (1874) at Washington and the Marquette League for Catholic Indian Missions (1904) in New York, are engaged in collecting and distributing funds for 100,000 Catholic Indians among whom are 321 Catholic missions administered by 360 priests and 450 sisters.—C.E.

Missions, Catholic Negro, of the United States. Negroes first appeared on the American continent in Haiti (1505), in South America (1517) where Las Casas and St. Peter Claver were their apostles, and in Virginia (1620). Between 1680 and 1700, over two million negro slaves were brought into the British colonies of America, including the West Indies; probably 12,000,000 were landed in N. and S. America from the beginning to the end of the slave-trade. Importation of negroes was prohibited in the United States in 1808 and negro slavery was finally ended in 1863. Negroes were converted in the early Colonial days and Bp. Carroll of Baltimore in 1785 estimated their number in America as 3000. There are about 8 million Negroes in the southern states, where they attend their own educational institutions at Hampton, Tuskegee, the Catholic Board for Mission Work among the Colored People (N.Y.) established in 1907 is engaged in the support of Negro missions, and 170 white priests and 375 white sisters devote all their time to Negro work. At present (1929) there are 230,000 Catholic Negroes; 140 Negro Churches, 4 priests, 325 sisters; 169 schools and orphanages; 2 colored religious orders (the Oblate Sisters of Providence and the Holy Family Sisters).

Mississippi, the 31st state of the United States in size, the 23rd in population, and the 20th state to be admitted to the Union (10 Dec., 1817); area, 46,865 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 3,404,650; Catholics (1928), 179,493. The Catholic influence on place-names of the state is shown in the following: St. Louis by La Salle in 1682, though they preached to the Taensa and Natchez Indians of Mississippi. The first missions within the present limits of Mississippi were founded, 1698, by priests of the Quebec Seminary; Fr. François de Montigny devoting himself to the Taensa above Natchez and Fr. Antoine Davion to the Tonicas near the present Fort Adams. The next year their associate, Fr. Jean François de St. Cosme, settled at Natchez. The French settlers of Old Biloxi, near Ocean Springs, established by Iberville in 1699, and abandoned for Mobile in 1702, were served first by Fr. Bordenave and then by the Jesuits, Fr. Paul du Ru, and Fr. Pierre Dongé. After the death of Fr. Nicholas Foucault, 1702, and Fr. St. Cosme, 1706, at the hands of treacherous Indians in Mississippi, the missions were for a time almost abandoned. Fr. Julif, a chaplain of the French army, was laboring among the Yazoos in 1721, when Fr. Charlesvoix, S.J., reported the unhappy state of the missions on the Mississippi side of the Mississippi on account of Spanish opposition. In 1728 a Capuchin, Fr. Philibert, was stationed at Natchez. The establishment of Fort Rosalie on the site of Natchez by Bienville in 1716 had angered the Indians and led to strife that culminated in 1729 when the Jesuit, Fr. Paul du Poisson, was tomahawked and beheaded in a massacre near the fort, and another Jesuit, Fr. Jean Sonel, was shot by the Yazoos. In a later war with the Chickasaws, Fr. Antoine Senat, S.J., was taken prisoner and burned at the stake. The troubled history of the Church in Mississippi continued until the appointment of a bishop in 1837. The Diocese of Natchez (q.v.) comprises the state. Catholic influence on place-names of the state is shown in the following: Bay Saint Louis, Mt. Carmel, Piscataco. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in Mississippi:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Church</th>
<th>Membership</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Catholic Church</td>
<td>32,160</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>National Baptist Convention</td>
<td>287,796</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Southern Baptist Convention</td>
<td>1,497</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church South</td>
<td>114,469</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>45,482</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Colored Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>38,070</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>African Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>26,133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church in the U.S.</td>
<td>19,754</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church</td>
<td>7,202</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All Other Denominations</td>
<td>45,410</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Total Church Membership: 762,877

---

Missouri, the 18th state of the United States in size, the 9th in population, and the 24th state to be admitted to the Union (10 Aug., 1821); area, 60,420 sq. m.; pop. (1929), 3,604,650; Catholics (1928), 565,393. The settlement of Old Mines and Ste. Genevieve by French miners and traders c. 1735. By 1750 they were visited by Jesuit missionaries. The oldest documents of the State is the register of the first little wooden church of Ste. Genevieve which opens with the record of a baptism, 24 Feb. 1760, by Fr. Philibert Watrin, S.J. He was followed by Fr. Jean Baptiste Salleneuve, and Fr. Jean Baptiste de la Morinie, who were driven away when Louisiana expelled the Jesuits, 1765. The devoted Fr. Sébastien Louis Meurnin of the Kaskaskia mission in Illinois obtained permission to remain, and in 1765 he was stationed at Ste. Genevieve. Cahokia records show that he baptized a little child at St. Louis in 1766, in a tent, since there was as yet no church there. When Fr. Meurnin withdrew permanently to the east side of the Mississippi on account of Spanish opposition, c. 1767, Ste. Genevieve was attended by Fr. Pierre Gibaut, stationed at Kaskaskia in 1768. He blessed the first church of St. Louis, built in 1770 on a plot allotted by La Clôre, now the site of the cathedral. Meanwhile missions had been established at St. Charles, 1762, and at Carondelet, 1767. The Capuchins were sent from New Orleans to the Missouri missions in 1772, and Fr. Valentine, the first resident priest of St. Louis, started the building of the second church there in 1775. His successor, Fr. Bernard, erected a log church at St. Genevieve in 1776. There was a church soon after at Florissant. Included in the state are the Archdiocese of St. Louis, and the Dioceses of Kansas City and St. Joseph (q.v.). Catholic influence on the place-names of the state is shown in the following: Conception, Mount Carmel, St. Annie, St. Anthony, St. Aubert, St. Catherine, St. Charles, St. Clair, Ste. Genevieve, St. Elizabeth, St. Francisville, St. Francois, St. George, St. James, St. Johns, St. Joseph, St. Louis, St. Marys, St. Patrick, St. Paul, St. Peters, St. Thomas, Santa Fe, Santa Rosa, Vera Cruz. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in Missouri:
Christianity is sought to attract men, particularly those in military life, and was permissible. It allowed its members to profess other religions, while Christianity is enduring, unique and sufficient for its adherents.—C.E.

Mitre (Lat., mitra, hood), folding cap of linen, silk, or cloth of gold, often ornamented, consisting of two parts, stiffened and peaked, sewed together on the sides and united above by a strip of folding cloth, having two fringed lappets hanging down the back, worn by the pope, bishops, and cardinals at solemn liturgical functions. It was first worn in Rome about the middle of the tenth century and its use became a general custom among bishops, 1100-50. It is derived from a cone-shaped head-covering distinctive of the pope.—C.E.

Mixed Marriage, a marriage between persons one of whom is a member of the Catholic Church and the other a member of some Protestant denomination. The phrase is the equivalent of the kitchen Latin, mixtum religio (mixed, or mixture of, religion). It is sometimes used to mean the union in marriage of a Catholic with one who is not baptized but this is expressed better by the phrase disparitus cultus (difference, or inconsistency, of worship). Since differences of belief in religious matters very frequently occasion incompatibility in domestic relations, impediments to the proper religious observance of both parties, and differences over the religious training of the children, the Church, to safeguard the religion of the Catholic party, requires that the marriage take place before a priest only, that the one who is not Catholic will not interfere with the religious observances of the other nor with the training of the children as Catholics. See Disparity of Worship.—C.E., IX, 698; Ayrinhac, Marriage Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law, N. Y., 1919. (ed.)

Mixed Religion, a hindering impediment to marriage, consisting in the marriage of a Catholic to a baptized non-Catholic. Such a marriage is valid if performed by proper authority, but it requires a dispensation, which is given only after the signing of promises by the non-Catholic party, pledging non-interference with the religion of the Catholic party, and that the marriage take place before a priest only, that the one who is not Catholic will not interfere with the religious observances of the other nor with the training of the children as Catholics. See Disparity of Worship.—C.E., IX, 698; Ayrinhac, Marriage Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law, N. Y., 1919. (ed.)

Mixteca Indians (Misteca), an important civilized tribe of southern Mexico, of Zapotecan stock, numbering about 250,000. They are industrious farmers, weavers, and potters of reliable and independent character. They have taken an active part in Mexican politics. Evangelized by the Dominicans, they are Catholics with survivals of pagan customs. M.M. = martyrs.

Moab, Moabites. (1) Son of Lot (Gen., 19).
(2) An ancient people of Palestine, inhabiting a district n. of the Jordan and the Dead Sea, in constant conflict with the Israelites. Their origin and race is that of the Ammonites; their language pract.
According to the Christian faith, God's presence in the world is revealed through leaders who interpret and guide human experiences. These leaders arise to address the yearnings of people for something higher than what they can perceive in their natural world. The Church, as a institution, seeks to embody this presence of God in a human community. The soul, it is believed, is composed of both the intellect and the will, and it must be guided to act properly. The soul yearns for a spiritual beauty that makes evident the grace of God.

Modernism, a movement that spread through the Church, challenged traditional views about the Church and its teachings. It sought to modernize religious thought and practice, often by applying scientific principles to understand religious concepts. This movement was met with resistance, especially from the Church hierarchy, who viewed it as a threat to the unity and integrity of the Church. The movement became more influential in the 19th century, particularly under the guidance of individuals like Pius X, who was known for his conservative stance against Modernism.

Mohammed, the founder of Islam, is a figure of significant historical and religious importance. He is said to have been born in Mecca in the 6th century and to have migrated to Medina, where he established the Islamic community. His teachings were based on the belief in one God, Allah, and his role as the final prophet. Mohammed emphasized the importance of moral conduct and the unity of humanity through faith in Allah. His message was disseminated through a series of revelations known as the Qur'an.

The Moabite Stone is an ancient inscription that provides valuable insights into the history of the region. Found in 1868, it contains a record of Moabite history, including information about their wars and alliances. The stone is significant for its contribution to understanding the history of the region and the relationships between different peoples. Its contents offer a glimpse into the complex social and political landscape of the time.

Modernism, as a movement in the 19th and early 20th centuries, sought to bring the insights of modern science and philosophy into the Church's understanding of its teachings and practices. It was characterized by a desire to apply modern methods of thought to religious questions, often leading to reinterpretations of traditional teachings.

Mohammedanism, or Islam, is a global religion founded by Mohammed. It is characterized by its focus on monotheism, the belief in one Allah, and the practice of following the teachings of the Qur'an and the Hadith. The religion has spread widely, influencing both the culture and politics of many nations. Its followers, known as Muslims, are found in diverse regions across the world, each with its own cultural and historical context.
its warring tribes into one nation and one religion in 632 A.D. It is made up of beliefs and practices taken from Arabian heathenism, Judaism, Christianity, Sabian Gnostics and Zoroaster. It requires belief in one God, in its Angels, the Koran, in its Prophets, resurrection and judgment. God however predetermines everything absolutely and yet punishes evil and rewards good deeds by fantastic penalties and rewards. Paradise being a place of sensuous delights, so great in number and variety that to enjoy them one's powers of enjoyment must be multiplied one-hundredfold. The Angels of Mohammed are mainly a product of his imagination. Based on later Jewish and early Christian traditions. He required prayer five times daily, fasting at all times, but especially in the month of Ramadan, almsgiving, and a pilgrimage to Mecca. He forbade idolatry, apostasy, adultery, gambling, in-toxicants, and false witness against other Moslems. The Koran allows each man four wives, slave mistresses, and concubines. The first, seventh, eleventh, and twelfth months of the Mohammedan year are sacred, the seventh being devoted to fasts, and the other three to make possible the pilgrimages to Mecca which occur during the twelfth. Mohammed's successors aimed at universal empire. The number of Mohammedans is estimated at from 175,000,000 to 207,000,000. At one time they extended their conquests to Western Asia, Spain and North Africa. In 1453 they became the possessors of Constantinople and threatened Germany, but were defeated and driven back in 1683. At present there are over 8,000,000 in the Balkans, Greece, Russia and Turkey, principally in the latter two; about 155,000,000 in Asia (including 443,037 in the Philippines); 43,000,000 in Africa. There are over seventy Mohammedan sects, divided on political as well as religious grounds.—C.E.; Koelle, Mohammed and Mohammedanism Critically Considered, Lond., 1888. (E.B.)

Mohawks, a North American Indian tribe, the most easterly of the Iroquois confederation, represented in the federal council by nine chiefs, three from each clan. Their villages were in the Mohawk valley, their territory extending north towards the St. Lawrence River; east to the Schoharie creek; south to the eastern branch of the Susquehanna River. Champlain met them at Tadousac; the Dutch in 1626 were defeated by them; Fr. Jogues and his companion, John Lalande, suffered martyrdom at their hands, 1646, another companion, Rene Goupil, having already been put to death, 1642. Obtaining fire-arms from the Dutch, they spread terror far and wide and conquered the Mohicans, Delawares, and Munsee, and continued down the Mississippi and Hudson Rivers. They suffered much during the French and Indian Wars, and aided the British during the Revolution, after which they moved to Canada. The remaining few ceded their lands to the state of New York and are now at the Bay of Quinté, the settlement at Gibson, and the Grand Reservation.

Möllner, Johann Adam (1796-1838), theologian, b. Igersheim, Germany; d. Munich. Educated at Mengenthelm, Ellwangen and Tubingen, he was ordained, 1819, and joined the theological faculty of Tubingen. Author of numerous works on Catholic theology, his fame rests chiefly upon his “Symbolik” (Mainz, 1832), through which he introduced the science of symbolism among Catholics, symbol being equivalent to creed. In it he proved the compatibility between reason and Catholic dogma, showing how Catholic teaching takes the middle course between the extremes of Protestantism. Though not controversial, several Protestant theologians issued replies and the unpleasantness of the controversy with Baur which resulted induced Möller to leave Tubingen and join the Catholic theological faculty of Munich. In 1838 he was made dean of the cathedral of Würzburg; Döllinger edited most of his minor works.—C.E.

Molière, mō-lē-rē (assumed name of Jean Baptiste Poquelin, 1622-73), dramatist, b. Paris; d. there. He studied under the Jesuits in Paris, graduated in law at Orléans, and in 1643, changed his name, and joined the “troop” of the Béjart and in conjunction with them started L’Illustre Théâtre which proved a failure. His first important play “Les Précieuses Ridicules,” was presented in 1659 at Paris, but after his literary production was interrupted despite the opposition of those who he offended by depicting them too faithfully; his family troubles, his tremendous responsibilities as a manager, as an actor who regularly assumed the most difficult rôles, and as a playwright who was often compelled to compose with extreme rapidity. Outside of the many “Farces” which contribute little to his glory, Molière wrote a group of comedies in which he is little concerned with plot and dénouement, but in which he depicts in immortal “types” the foibles and ridiculousness of humanity at large: the Miser, the Misanthrope, the Hypocrite, the Podantic Woman, the Parvenu, the Quack. His masterpieces are: “Le Misanthrope,” “L’Avare,” “Tartuffe,” which provoked long and bitter controversies, because, while seemingly attacking false devotion only, Molière indirectly throws discredit upon true piety also; “Les Femmes Savantes,” “Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme,” “Le Malade Imaginaire.” Molière is the true father of French comedy; some of his characters are destined to live forever.—C.E.; Matthews, Molière, N. Y., 1910. (F. P. P.)

Molina, Luis De (1535-1600), theologian, b. Cuenca, Spain; d. Madrid. He entered the Society of Jesus at Alcalá. Installed as professor of philosophy at Coimbra, and later promoted to the chair of theology at Evora, Fr. Molina spent 20 years the “Summa” of St. Thomas. In 1592 he was called to Madrid to the Jesuit school of the science of moral philosophy. To him we are indebted for important contributions in speculative, dogmatic, and moral theology, as well as in jurisprudence. Molina’s chief work is the “Concordia,” concerned with the problem of reconciling grace and free will. A theory for this reconciliation, Molinism, is named after him.—C.E.

Molinism, term used to designate one of the theological systems which purpose to reconcile grace with free will. It was first scientifically developed by Luis de Molina (1535-1600), a Spanish Jesuit, and was, in all its essentials, adopted by the Society of Jesus. It seeks the ultimate solution of the difficulty in the free created will, but precisely as prepared and assisted by Divine grace. For the infallibility of the connection of grace with the consent of the free will, it falls back upon God's foreknowledge through the scientia media, a mediate
(not an immediate) knowledge.—C.E. (H. o.)

Molinos, Miguel de (1640-96), founder of Quietism, b. Muniesa, Spain; d. Rome. Ordained priest at Valence, in 1622 he settled at Rome in the cursus of Sant' Alfonso belonging to the Spanish Discalced Augustinians. Accused of pernicious teachings by the Jesuits and Dominicans, the Inquisition ordered his books to be examined, but acquitted him. He was, however, arrested by the Holy Office, 1685, and the report of the process against him was read in the Dominican church of Santa Maria sopra Minerva, 1687. He was declared heretic, sentenced to life imprisonment, to penitential garb, to recite the Crede and one-third of the Rosary, and to make his confession four times a year. He taught interior annihilation as the means of obtaining purity of soul, perfect contemplation, and peace, and the licitness of impurity, as only the sensual man, insinuated by the devil, is concerned. His teaching was condemned by a Bull of Innocent XI, 1687, and his works prohibited.—C.E.

Molloy, Gerald (1834-1906), theologian and scientist, b. near Dublin; d. Aberdeenshire, Scotland.
Educated at Castleknock College, he entered the priesthood and occupied the chair of theology at Maynooth, 1857-74, when he was made professor of natural philosophy at the Catholic University of Ireland, becoming rector, 1883. He was assistant commissioner under the Educational Endowments Act, served on the Board of Intermediate Education, and became a member of the Senate, Fellow, and finally Vice-chancellor of the Royal University of Ireland. He was an authority on electricity. Among his writings are: "Geology and Revelation" (1870) and "Gleanings in Science" (1888).—C.E.

Moloch, möl'ök (Heb., môlêch, king), a divinity worshiped by the idolatrous Israelites, his cult being supposed to have been introduced into Israel by Solomon (3 K., 11); a form of Baal, representing the sun-god in his destructive aspect. His worship consisted of offering human sacrifices, especially children, causing them to "pass through the fire" after they had been put to death (4 K., 16, 17).—
C.E.

Molokai, an island of the northern Pacific group formerly called Sandwich Islands, now the Territory of Hawaii, belonging to the United States. Its area is 261 sq. m. and it is fifth in size and population of the eight large islands. In 1866 the United States Board of Health moved the leper settlement from Kalihi, Oahu, to the Molokai Peninsula, a projection of land on the northern part of the island.
Here are situated the United States Leprosarium and the Baldwin Home, while the old hospital at Kalihi, founded in 1866, is retained for those who have the disease in its early stages. The most famous persons connected with the settlement are Mother Damien, "the Apostle of the Lepers," who labored for the spiritual welfare of the lepers, 1873-89, and Brother Dutton, who assisted him, 1886, and eventually carried on his work. There are two missions in the settlement: St. Philomena's, Kalawao, and St. Francis's, Kalaupapa.—C.E.

Molyneux, Robert (1738-1808), Jesuit missionary, b. near Formby, England. Entering the Society of Jesus, 1757, he was appointed pastor of Philadelphia, 1772; later in Bohemia and Newtown, Md.; opened the first parish school and edited the first Catholic catechism in America. One of the signers of the "Form of Government," 1784, petition for appointment of a bishop in the United States, 1788; at tended the synod of 1791 as vicar-general of the southern diocese. President of Georgetown College, 1793-96 and 1806-08, he was named superior of the Jesuits in America, 1806.

Monaco, monarchy of Europe, on the Mediterranean Sea, surrounded, except along the coast, by eastern France on the mediter­ ran Sea, surrounded, except along the coast, by eastern France on the Monarchism, a heretical system, begun about the 2nd century, which so distorts the monarchy (monarchia) of God as to deny the distinction of Persons in the Trinity. It takes the three following forms: (1) Crass Monarchism absolutely denies any distinction of Persons in the Trinity and concludes naturally that the Father became incarnate and died on the cross. Hence the name of Patrrippassians. (2) Modalist Monarchi­ anism, championed by Sabellius c. A.D. 50, recognized a distinction in the Trinity, not of Persons but of energies or modes. The Deity is one Person but manifests Itself under different modes; in creation as the Father, in redemption as the Son, in sanctification as the Holy Ghost. Sabellius was condemned by Pope Callistus. (3) Subordinationism, which admits a real and true distinction of Persons in the Trinity but denies equality between them.

—C.E.

Monasteries, Double, comprising communities of both men and women dwelling in contiguous establishments, united under one superior, in order that the spiritual needs of the nuns might be attended to by the priests. The system, of eastern origin, sprang up with monasticism and came into the West, to Gaul, probably through the influence of Cassian. The idea spread to Belgium, Germany, and Spain, and came into favor in England with the monastery of St. Hilda at Whitby in the 7th century. Other prominent examples are St. Ethelreda's, Ely; Sheppey, Barking, and Kildare. The dual community, subject to abuses and in scant favor with the Church, gradually declined about the 10th century, but revived with the reform of Fontevrault, 1099, and flourished with the Gilber­ tines, 1146, and the Bridgettines, 1346. The supreme rule was generally in the hands of an abbe, though a priori was superior of the Gilbertines, and one church was used in common for liturgical offices.

For rule see Fontevrault; Bridgettines; Gilber­ times. Such communities have long ceased to exist in the Western Church.—C.E.

Monasteries, Suppression of. Besides the extensive losses suffered by the Church as a result of the Reformation, civil authorities of certain European countries, desirous of the lands and income enjoyed by the religious orders, carried on a systematic seizure of monastic properties, notably in Germany, the Iberian peninsula, Italy, and England. In Germany and the Austrian dominions in the 18th century, Josephinism, a politico-religious movement named for Emperor Joseph II, made the Church subservient to the State. The continued existence of abbeys and convents was made dependent on their ability to prove themselves of material utility. Widespread secularization of monastic property for the benefit of Catholic German governments followed. The Netherlands, Liége, and certain regions of Switzerland annexed by France, witnessed the complete disappearance of their religious houses. During the reign of Joseph II, 1782, suppressions occurred within the Empire. In Switzerland, revolutionary wars brought destruction to the monasteries. In Spain, the government established by Napoleon authorized the suppression of all religious congregations, 1812. Restored and abolished several times, in 1859 houses of which disposal had not been made were given over to the care of the bishops. Certain orders which sent clergy to the colonial possessions, e.g., Augustinians, Dominicans, and Franciscans, were permitted to retain some of their foundations. About 1833 the monasteries of Portugal suffered similar treatment, with the exception of those of the Franciscans who ministered in the Portuguese colonies.

In Italy, Leopold, later Emperor Leopold II, sought the suppression of the monastic orders in the 18th century. The new Napoleonic governments were imbued with an anti-religious spirit which led to suppressions and confiscations in the various political sections of the country. With the establishment of Italian unity there came a general dissolution of the monasteries, those not charged with the care of souls being confiscated and sold. No decree was extended against the reconstitution of the communities, and some foundations have thus been able to carry on their work. The suppression of the English monasteries dates from the reign of Henry VIII. Thomas Cromwell, appointed by the king to visit the religious houses and to report on conditions found therein, delegated the task to certain commissioners. The fate of the monasteries, however, had been sealed before, and not as a result of, this visitation, designed to bring charges against the inmates. Chief of the investigators were Layton, Legh, Ap Rice, and London, who made their accusations in letters reporting on their work, and in the document “Comperta Monastica” which they drew up for Cromwell. The truth of the charges thus rests solely on the word of the inquisitors, whose careers make their testimony reasonably open to doubt. However, at the wish of the king, a decree of Parliament, enacted with reluctance, 1536, suppressed the smaller religious houses, i.e., those having a yearly income of less than £200. Popular resistance to the pillaging of these houses was organized in some sections of the country, and for the supposed “treason” of their superiors some of the larger abbeys were seized by the king. The wealth accruing to the crown as a result of these acquisitions did not fulfill Henry’s expectations, and he again sent out his agents, demanding the surrender of the larger monasteries, a work accomplished by cajolery, threats, and coercion. Parliament confirmed the new properties to the king, 1559.—C.E.; P.C. Augustine.

Monastery, Canonical Erection of. The general requirements for the canonical erection of a monastery, whether of regulars or moniales, apart from the requirements of the Order’s constitutions, are: (1) permission of the Holy See, i.e., of the Congregation of Religious (Can. 497); (2) permission in writing of the Ordinary of the place (Can. 497); (3) sufficient provision for the housing and sustenance of the community (Can. 496). This monastery be a domus formata, it is required that at least six members of the community be professed, of whom four at least must be priests, if the Order is clerical (Can. 488. 5). This general legislation does not affect the special privileges enjoyed by any religious order.—C.E.; P.C. Augustine.

Monasticism or Monachism (Gr., monos, alone), denotes the mode of life, characterized by self-denial and asceticism, which is followed by religious living secluded from the world, according to a fixed rule and under religious vows, in order to perfect themselves in the love of God. It is here considered especially of religious orders, such as friars, canons regular, clerks regular, and recent congregations, which differ from the monastic orders properly so called in that the former follow some particular work, e.g., preaching, teaching, etc., while the life of the monk is lived primarily for its own sake, and its effect on the subject, though indirectly for the good of others also. The two principal forms of monasticism are the cenobitical or solitary, and the cenobital or family type (see HERMIT; CENOBITE). Eremetical monasticism traditionally dates from 305, when St. Anthony, after twenty years’ seclusion, was sought as spiritual guide by numerous hermits who had gathered around him in northern Egypt. The solitary or Antonyan type of monasticism obtained in northern Egypt from Lycoopolis to the Mediterranean, and large numbers of hermits following a semi-eremitical life arose at Nitria and Scete. No rule governed the monks, who were characterized by a spirit of individualism. This type of monasticism spread to Palestine, Syria, Italy, and Gaul, and later affected the independent growth of the religious life in Ireland, Wales, and Scotland. About 318 St. Pachomius developed cenobitical monasticism in southern Egypt, and introduced the common life. Gradually it practically replaced the eremitical throughout the world. The systematic organization of the monasteries of St. Pachomius pressed the highly centralized rule later introduced in the religious orders. Work as an essential of the daily life of the monks also distinguished the Pachomian followers from those of St. Anthony. Greek monasticism received impetus from St. Basil, who founded a monastery at Neo-Caesarea, in Pontus, c. 360, and inaugurated full community life there, marked by prayer, work, and scriptural reading. He placed greater value upon work than upon the austerities heretofore practised. To him is due the present monachism of eastern Europe, which is however now more noteworthy for the contemplative life of its followers than for its element of work.
MONASTICISM

MONK

The Rule of St. Benedict of Nursia, drawn up in the 6th century, was the most notable factor in the spread of monasticism throughout western Europe. The extreme austerities and rivalry in asceticism of the earlier monks were dropped in the new régime. The vow of stability which he introduced bound a monk for life to a particular monastery, a development of great importance which furthered the family life of the individual monastery, which Benedict sought. Recitation of the Divine Office is the principal occupation of the followers of the monastic life; to it all work must be subordinated. Agriculture, the copying of manuscripts, education, the fine arts, historical and patristic writings, and missionary work have engaged the monks at various periods throughout their history. The monastic life was embraced by women at an early date; their history follows the same course as that of the monks. The sisters of Sts. Pachomius, Basil, and Benedict each governed a community of nuns in accordance with rules drawn up by their respective brothers. —C.E.; Feasey, Monasticism, Lond., 1898; Hannay, Spirit and Origin of Christian Monasticism, Lond., 1863; Montesquieu, The Monks of the West, Lond., 1896; Woodhouse, Monasticism, Ancient and Modern, Lond., 1896.

Monica, Saint (333-87), mother to hermits or anchorites but from an early period, apart from the world, under the vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, in accordance with the rule of St. Benedict, whether they lived as hermits or in Later, he was but a mere boy when they first saw the light. The place of discovery was variously set down as Paderborn, Prague, Liège, Antwerp and Glatz. Subsequent attempts were made to revive the legend, notably in the early 19th century, when an updated edition appeared professing to issue from the Propaganda Press and bearing the testimonies of various Jesuit authorities. Unfortunately, however, the forger discovered a new general, “Felix Aconiti,” a personage utterly unknown in the annals of the Society. The external evidence is no less convincing. Bishop Lipski of Cracow (1610) and all Jesuit writers have denounced the fabrication from the first. To these may be added such pronounced anti-Jesuits as von Lang, Döllinger, Friedrich, Huber and Reusch, as well as the Protestant historian Gieseler.—C.E. (w. nec.)

Monk (Gr. monachos), term originally applied to hermits or anchorites but from an early period, by popular rather than scientific designation, a cenobite (q.v.), or member of a community of men living apart from the world, under the vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, in accordance with the rule of a particular order. The word monk seldom occurs in the official language of the Church. By frequent use of the Latin equivalent, monachus, to describe the brethren in the Rule of St. Benedict, whether they lived as hermits or in community, it came to be associated with those religious bodies which in some measure reproduce the old Benedictine rule, i.e., Cluniacs, Cistercians, Trappists, as distinguished from the orders of mendicant friars, "clerks regular," and religious congregations of men. Other well-known orders of monks are the Carthusians, Preamonstratensians, and Camaehloses.—C.E.

Monograms, two or more letters intertwined, forming one character; often used in Christian art.

Monophysites and Monophysitism (Gr., monos, single; physis, nature), an heretical sect which arose in the 5th century, teaching that there was but one nature in Christ, as a reaction against Nestorianism. Nestorius had held that in Our Lord the humanity was a human nature, and the divinity was a divine nature. Some early Monophysites, prominent among whom was Entyches, archimandrite of a monastery near Constantinople, endeavored to save the unity of the Word Incarnate by suppressing the human nature. Other members of the sect spoke of a single combined nature which was both human and divine. Outstanding among the first exponents of Monophysitism were Dioscorus (condemned at Chalcedon, 451) and Timothy Ælurus, both patriarchs of Alexandria. This heresy still prevails in the East among the Copts and the Syrian Jacobites.—C.E. (J. J. G.)

Monopoly, Moral aspects of. Monopoly (Gr., monopolia) signifies exclusive sale or exclusive privilege of selling. Present usage extends the term to any degree of unified control over a commodity sufficient to enable the person or corporation in control to limit the supply and to fix the price. The proportion of the supply that must be controlled in order to attain these ends ranges between little over 50% in some cases, and 70-90% in the majority. In all cases however, monopoly implies the ability to regulate the supply and prices beforehand and to fix both at some point other than that which would have been fixed by the natural action of the market under normal competition. A monopoly of itself is not immoral. Its morality depends entirely upon its actions and its effects. Specifically its morality is determined by the prices it fixes and the methods it employs towards actual or potential competitors. Monopolistic prices are not unjust provided they do not exceed the limits laid down by the objective, and subjective rules of justice, viz.: that a commodity should be sold at a price sufficiently high to fairly remunerate all who have contributed to the production of the article; and a price that is approved by competent and fair-minded men. This principle holds true even when the monopolistic price is higher than the price that obtained, or would have obtained, under the stress of competition. For the selling price of the commodity is the source of remuneration to all concerned in the production, and unless this insures a proper return, the price, no matter how low, is unjust. On the other hand a selling price more than sufficient to render fair returns to the different agents of production is also unjust. This just remuneration comprises: (1) a living wage to all laborers, and something more to those: (a) who possess exceptional ability or skill; (b) who put forth unusual efforts; (c) who perform disagreeable tasks; (d) who turn out unusually large products; (2) fair profits for the business man on account of his activities as director of industries; (3) a fair rate of interest on the actual amount of money invested in the business, which rate will be determined by the rate prevailing in competitive businesses subject to the same amount of risk. This is the commonly accepted norm. Even where the monopoly has complied with the double rule of justice cited, there is no good reason why in the case of reduced cost of production, the monopoly should absorb all the benefits of the improvement. It should share them with the consumer in the way of reduced prices, as a compensation for the social dangers inherent in every monopoly.

Public opinion regards as immoral most of the methods used by monopolies to harass and to eliminate their competitors. Among the most notable are: discriminative underselling; the factor's agreement; railway favoritism. (1) Discriminative underselling means a monopoly selling its goods at a loss in the territory where it desires to eliminate competition, while raising prices elsewhere. The unjustly high price is the moral cause of the act whereby the unprofitably low prices are established, and consequently of the competitors' ruin. The same holds true in cases where the monopoly universally lowers its prices only to raise them exorbitantly when competition is killed. However no injustice is done if the monopoly lowers its prices and keeps them lowered after the competitors have failed, or simply raises them to the profitable though just level because no unjust means have been used. (2) The factor's agreement is a convention between the merchant and the monopoly, whereby the merchant agrees to handle no goods, or no goods of a certain kind, except those manufactured or controlled by the monopoly. The agreement always implies intimidation of the merchant on the part of the monopoly for in the event of the merchant's refusal to make the agreement, the monopoly refuses to sell him any goods at all. Thus the independent dealers are victims of a secondary boycott and lose the patronage of the merchant through intimidation. Since there is no good reason for the intimidation and refusal of intercourse on the part of the monopoly, and since the ultimate aim of the monopoly is to raise the price after the rivals are eliminated, the competitors are unjustly victimized. (3) Railway favoritism is the most serious of all monopolistic methods. Essentially it consists in the fact that the goods handled by the monopoly are carried by the railroad at a rate so much below that charged to independent dealers, that the latter are either ruined, or must be content with insufficient profits. Railway favoritism is immoral because: (a) it is forbidden by law, being condemned by sound general opinion; (b) the railroad as a quasi-public agency is under obligation to treat all its patrons with the same distributive justice that the state would be obliged to accord them were it the owner of the railroad; (c) the lowered prices granted the monopoly imply exorbitantly high rates extorted from the independent shippers. The monopoly is a formal cooperator in this injustice in as much as it requests, urges and even intimidates the railroad into granting the preferential rates. The monopoly is always the beneficiary in such cases.

Of itself then, monopoly is not necessarily unjust, but experience teaches that the power of committing injustice inherent in every monopoly cannot be unreservedly intrusted to the average man, or group of men. Hence it is the duty of the state to prevent the existence of unnecessary monopolies, and to exercise strict supervision over the necessary ones, in order to prevent monopolistic injustice.—C.E.; Ely, Monopolies and Trusts, N. Y., 1900; Howe, Privilege and Democracy in America, N. Y., 1910. (J. J. Mcc.)

Monothelism (Gr., monos, single; theos, God), the religious system that admits belief in one and only one supreme God. First and foremost in this system comes Christian Monotheism which began with the belief in the existence of Christ, the Son of God, as the leader of a liberal Catholicism, which he extended to the people. His principal articles of faith are to be found in the early creeds of the Christian Church, such as the Apostles’ Creed, the Nicene (cf. Denzinger-Bannwart, “Enchiridion,” 1-40). The principal present day forms of non-Christian Monotheism are: (1) Jewish Monotheism which among the Jews is practically the same as Jehovah of the Jews.—C.E.; Fisher, The Monothelites and Monothelitism (Gr., monos, single; thelos, will), a heresy which, in the 7th century, began within the Church out of an attempt to conciliate the Monophysites. The latter, confusing the idea of personality with the undivided activity of a single will, held that there was a kind of divine-human will and divine-human operation in Christ, the Man-God. The Monothelites admitted the orthodox doctrine of the existence of the two natures but claimed that these natures had a common will and a common activity. This view was strongly urged by Sergius, patriarch of Constantinople, who had enlisted the support of Pope Honorius in his cause, and opposed by Sophronius, a Palestinian monk, later patriarch of Jerusalem. After dividing the Eastern Church for over half a century, the controversy was brought to a close by the Sixth General Council (Constantinople, 681) when the doctrines of the Monothelites were formally condemned.—C.E.

Monsabré, Jacques Marie Louis (1827-1907), orator, b. Blois, France; d. Havre. Ordained a secular priest, 1851, he received his diocesan ordination, 1855, to enter the Dominican novitiate. After preaching the Lenten sermons in Lyons, Monsabré was assigned to St. Thomas’s convent, Paris, where he gave conferences. For several years he preached in the principal cities of France, Belgium, and even in London, conducting retreats, novenas, and triduums. His reputation was really made by his Advent sermons at Notre Dame Cathedral, 1869. Fr. Monsabré preached in this cathedral for twenty years. He conceived and executed the plan of expanding the whole system of Catholic dogmatic theology, and published 48 volumes on theological subjects.—C.E.

Monseigneur, môn-sâ-n’yôr (Fr., My Lord), honorary form of address formerly given to the higher nobility of France, particularly the dauphin, to Church dignitaries and even to the Saints; in present French usage reserved to archbishops, bishops; vicars-general and other prelates.—C.E. (s. u.)

Monsignor, môn-sâ’nyôr (It., monsignore, My Lord; abbr. Mgr.), generic title of distinction attached to numerous dignities conferred by the Pope. All ecclesiastical dignitaries, with the exception of cardinals, such as patriarchs, archbishops, bishops and persons attached to the pontifical household, have a right to this title, though in English speaking countries usage calls for the more specific forms of address, “Your Grace” and “Your Lordship” for such men as the Pope and the Pope respectively.—C.E. (s. u.)

Monstrance. See Ostensorium.

Montalembert, môn-tâ-lân-bâr, Charles René, Comte de (1810-70), b. London; d. Paris. After graduating from the College St. Barbe, he traveled through Ireland where he met O’Connell. In 1831 he joined the staff of La Mennais’ news-paper, L’Avenir, and conducted campaigns in favor of Poland and Ireland. He fought for liberty of education until the passage of the “Falloux Law,” 1850. He separated from L. Mennais, 1836, and continued his fights for the liberties of the Church throughout the Second Republic. Unfortunately he disagreed with such men as Louis Veuillot and Dom Guéranger, and became the leader of a liberal Catholicism, which he expounded in his Mechlin speeches (1863). They were disapproved by Pius IX and were partly responsible for the publication of the Encyclical “Quanta Cura.” He opposed the definition of the pope’s infallibility, but died before its promulgation. Orator and historian, member of the French Academy from 1851, his best known works are: “The Monks of the West” and “Life of St. Elizabeth of Hungary,” both long known to English readers. His “Speeches” and “Polemies” each comprised three volumes.—C.E.; Lecanuet, Montalembert, 3 vols., Paris, 1895-1901. (K. P. B.)

Montallegro, a sanctuary of the Blessed Virgin Mary in Liguria, Italy, near Rapallo, built about 1557. According to tradition, the Blessed Virgin appeared (2 July, 1557) on Monte Leto, to Giovanni Chichizola, a peasant, and showed him a picture of her passing from earthly life, saying that it had been transported by angels from Greece, and that she would leave it on the mountain side as a pledge of her love. The picture was placed in the principal Church of Rapallo for veneration, but two days later it mysteriously disappeared and was Montanists, schismatics of the 2nd century, named from Montanus, a Phrygian, who, c. 158, shortly after his conversion to Christianity, proclaimed himself a prophet and called the people to gather in the plain of Pergouza, there to live a more spiritual life in preparation for the second coming of Christ which he said was near. In his frenzied ecstasies, he spoke not as God's messenger, but as God, thus, "I am the Lord God Who dwell in man." (Epiphanius, Hær. XLVIII, 11.) Two women, Maximilla and Prisca, were associated with him and had similar ecstasies. At first the innovations were not doctrinal but disciplinary. The "Spirit" ordered three Lents to be observed, and re-marriage and flight from persecution were forbidden. The greatest danger lay in the claim that the Holy Ghost was now supplementing the revelation of Christ, overruling the authority of the bishops. The Asiatic Churches were in a turmoil, but the new prophecies were declared heretical, and the Montanists were excommunicated by local bishops (Eusebius, V, 16; 17). The news of the so-called "new outpouring of the Spirit" traveled all over the Catholic world, to Rome, to Africa, and to Spain, and a prophet of the "Spirit" was admitted to the Union (8 Nov., 1889), area 417,182 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 548,889; Catholics (1928) 72,755. The founder of the missions in Montana was Bishop Theophylact, c. 202, Belisarius, Fr. Pierre Jean de Smet (q.v.). In 1841, with Fr. Nicholas Point and Fr. Gregory Mengarini, he established St. Mary's Mission, on the Bitter Root River, near the present site of Stevensville. A chapel was quickly built, with the assistance of the Indians, and the mission flourished for about ten years, being abandoned for a time after 1850 and reestablished by Fr. Giorda, 1866. The name of one of its early priests, Fr. Antonio Ravalii, S.J., who arrived there in 1845, survives in the present name of the county. The Mission of St. Ignatius, founded for the Flatheads of eastern Washington by Fr. de Smet in 1844, was later reestablished at a point about 30 m. above Missoula by Fr. Adrian Hoecken. Fr. Point preached to the Blackfeet in 1846, but the permanent Mission of St. Peter near the present Great Falls was only founded by him and Fr. Hoecken, 1859. The earliest white settlements to have churches were Hell Gate (later moved to Missoula, 1863, where Fr. U. Grassi was the first pastor, and Frenchtown, 1865. Fr. Giorda ministered at Alder Gulch (now Virginia City), 1863. Included in the state are the Dioceses of Helena and Great Falls (qq.v.). Catholic influence on the place-names of the state is shown in the following: Desmet, Ravalii, St. Ignatius, St. Pauls, St. Peter, St. Phillip, St. Regis, St. Xavier. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in Montana:

- Catholic Church: 78,113
- Methodist Episcopal Church: 72,415
- Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.: 6,792
- Protestant Episcopal Church: 4,607
- Northern Baptist Convention: 4,073
- Lutheran Synodical Conference: 4,033
- Congregational Churches: 3,841
- Disciples of Christ: 3,719
- Lutheran United Norwegian Church: 3,693
- Serbian Orthodox Church: 2,790
- Lutheran Norwegian Synod: 2,203
- Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints: 1,469
- Methodist Episcopal Church South: 1,258
- All Other Denominations: 9,239
- Total Church Membership: 137,566

Monte Cassino, ABBEY OF, near Rome, the cradle of the Benedictine Order, founded 529, at Monte Cassino, by St. Benedict, who wrote his famous rule there. The abbey was burned by Lombards, 580, and restored by Abbot Petronax, 718. It was again sacked, 884, and restored, 949. It reached the zenith of its reputation under Abbot Desiderius, 1058-87, when the school of copyists and miniaturists became famous throughout the West. In...
1321 John XXII made the church of Monte Cassino a cathedral and its abbot, a bishop. The change proved disastrous, for the bishop was often a secular prelate who adopted the income for his personal use. Urban V temporarily restored the one known as the Cassinese Congregation. It was confiscated by the Italian Government with the other religious houses, 1866, but the abbot was given the title Guardian, in view of his administration of the diocese, one of the most extensive in Italy, which was united to the See of Atina, 1818.

Montenegrò. See SERBIA, CHOSÁT, AND SLOVENIAN STATE.

Montes Pietatis, charitable credit organizations from which the poor may borrow money by depositing objects of nominal value as a security. Money is lent only to the needy cases to relieve immediate and pressing financial wants and as they are on a strictly non-profit-making basis the funds they receive are expended in maintaining the establishment and in the furtherance of charitable works. The institution was founded to combat the usurious exactions of the Jewish money lenders and Lombard travelling bankers of the Middle Ages, and the first mons pietatis was established in Perugia, 1462, through the instrumentality of the Franciscan, Michele Carevano of Milan, and Barnabò da Terni and Fortunato Coppoli of Perugia. They were disseminated throughout Italy through the efforts of this order, particularly in the person of Bl. Bernardino of Feltre whose insistence on interest to protect the institution's permanency raised a controversy among the theologians who considered it usury. By papal Bull, 4 May, 1516, Leo X declared the institution meritorious and the public expression of anti-mons pietatis sentiments incurred excommunication. Consequent thereto the institution spread rapidly throughout France, Italy, and Spain. —C.E.

Month's Mind, the Mass of requiem, offered for the departed on or near the thirtieth day after decease or burial. (ED.)

Mont-Laurier, Diocese of, Quebec; est. 1913; comprises Wright, Terrebonne, Argenteuil, Montcalm and part of Labelle Counties; suffragan of Ottawa. Bishops: Francis Xavier Brunet (1913-22), Joseph Eugene Limoges (1922). Churches, 52; priests, secular, 62; priests, regular, 12; religious women, 173; seminary, 1; normal school, 1; academies, 8; institutions, 9; parochial schools, 253; Catholics, 42,115.

Montmagny, Charles Huault de (d. c. 1651), 2nd French Governor of Canada; b. France; d. St. Christopher, in the Antilles. He was educated by the Jesuits, joined the Order of Malta, 1622, and fought against the Moslems and corsairs of Africa. He reached Quebec, 1636, to rule as governor, and at once set about improving the fortifications and plans of the city. During his three terms of office (1636-48), he encouraged missionary work among the Indians, aided the foundation of Montreal, and was noted for his administrative powers. —C.E.

Montmarte, mōn-mär'tr, a northern section of Paris situated on a hill overlooking the rest of the city; commune from 1790-1860. Prior to the 9th century two churches stood on this hill, one midway up, on the traditional site of the martyrdom of St. Denis; the other, said to have replaced a temple to Mars, on the summit. This second church was reconstructed in the 12th century and consecrated, 1147, by Pope Eugenius III, with St. Bernard of Clairvaux and Peter the Venerable officiating as deacon and subdeacon respectively. In 1095 the two churches became the property of a monastery, first occupied by the monks of St-Martin-des-Champs, and later by the Benedictines. For centuries Montmartre was a popular place of pilgrimage as a shrine of the Blessed Virgin, and a layman, M. de la Daunieres, in 1534, St. Ignatius and his companions, among them St. Francis Xavier, made their vows. In recent years it has become more famous as a center of devotion to the Sacred Heart, since the erection of the National Basilica. Proposed during the troubles of 1870-71, this was started 1876, as an expiatory offering to the Sacred Heart, to obtain the release of the pope and freedom for France. After a meeting of 70 architects, Abadie was entrusted with its construction. Built in Romanesque style surmounted by a Byzantine dome, it has cost something over $8,000,000, and is one of the most imposing of modern religious edifices in the world. Motivated by a like desire to make expiation, a new confraternity of the Sacred Heart of Jesus was established in Montmartre, 1876, and in 1894 was privileged to incorporate into itself other confraternities, of like name and object, throughout the world.

Montreal (Fr., mont réal, mount royal). While New France was still in its infancy the Compagnie de Notre-Dame de Montreal was formed in Paris by M. Olier, founder of the Society of Saint-Sulpice, and a layman, M. de la Dauniers. Urged by a desire to carry the Faith to the new colony, they found a staunch supporter in Maisonneuve who purchased the island of Montreal from the Companigie des Cent-Associés, 1640, for purposes of colonization. He arrived at the foot of Mount Royal, 1642, and named his colony Ville-Marie, now Montreal; in his party was Mlle. Mance, founder of the Hôtel Dieu, later confided to the care of the Sisters of St. Joseph, of La Flèche. She was followed, 1653, by Marguerite Bourgeoys who, five years later, established the Sisters of the Congregation, for the education of girls, and, 1694, the Charron Brothers came to establish the General Hospital of Montreal. It was not until 1657 that the Sulpicians, four in number, came to the colony, under the direction of M. de Quesnel. A few years later, 1663, the original Compagnie de Notre-Dame, now reduced to eight members and weary of the losing struggle to carry on their colony, ceded their rights and duties to the Society of Saint-Sulpice. With assistance from France the priests paid off many of the debts, and by 1666 the seven Sulpicians were laboring in Montreal. They were entrusted with the mother parish of Notre Dame, canonically erected, 1678, and now marked by the beautiful church built by M. Roux, 1825-30, containing the tomb of Lavérendrye. The superior filled the position of vicar-general to the bishop, and it was in their house that Bishop Pontbriand took refuge after the English victory on the Plains of Abraham. Although the new governors forbade the reception of novices into the Order, they permitted the priests driven out of France during the Revolution, to enter Canada, and among those who came were twelve Sulpicians; thus the Congregation of Montreal was saved from complete extinction. The College of Montreal had been founded, 1767, the Hôtel Dieu and the house of the Sisters of the Congregation, both destroyed by fire, were rebuilt, 1765 and 1769, and in 1836 Montreal was erected into a diocese. This event was followed by rapid progress in the work of education; the Brothers of the Christian Schools arrived the following year; the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, 1852, and the Congrégation de Notre-Dame, founded, 1840, was followed by the Sœurs de la Providence, 1894; by order of the Sacred Congregation of Propaganda a branch of Laval University was opened in Montreal, 1876, and in 1896 the Jesuits established Loyola College. Among recent events of importance to the city were: the twenty-first Eucharistic Congress, held there, 1910, and the raising of the cathedral to a basilica, 1919, the same year in which Laval University became the University of Montreal—C.E.

Montreal, Archdiocese of, Quebec; diocese, 1836; archdiocese, 1886; comprises the City of Montreal, the counties of Chambly, Deux-Montagnes, Hochelaga, Jacques-Cartier, L'Assomption, Laval, Magog, St.-Jean and part of the counties of Argenteuil, L'Ascension, Terrebonne and Verchères; suffragans; Saint Hyacinth, Sherbrooke, Valleyfield and Joliette. Bishops: John J. Lartigue, S.S. (1836-70), Ignatius Bourget (1840-76). Archbishops: Edward Charles Fabre (1876-96), Paul Bruchési (1897). Churches, 230; priests, secular, 657; priests, regular, 505; religious women, 9023; seminaries, 7; university, 1; colleges, 10; Catholic schools, 820; children in schools, 148,344; institutions, 85; Catholics, 61,805.

Montreal University, Montreal, Canada, formerly Laval University, Montreal Branch; made independent, 1919; conducted by the diocesan clergy; faculties of theology, law, medicine, philosophy, letters, pure science, dentistry, arts; schools of veterinary science, pharmacy, social science, political economy and journalism, agriculture, commerce, dietetics, optometry and a polytechnical school. Connected with the University are schools of modern teaching, church music, drawing, domestic science, public hygiene, and pedagogy, and a conservatory of music. Students, 668; degrees conferred in 1929, 540.

Montserrat, island, dependency of the British Empire, in the British West Indies, administered by nominated executive and legislative councils; area, 32 1/2 sq. m.; pop., 11,732. Ecclesiastically the island belongs to the Diocese of Roseau (q.v.) on the Island of Dominica, B.W.I.; priest, 1; parish, 1; Catholics, 613.

Moore, Arthur, Count (1849-1907), b. Liverpool; d. Moorestown, Tipperary, Ireland. Elected to Parliament, 1874, he worked constantly to better conditions in Ireland. During the Gladstone Parliament, 1880-85, he was a follower of Parnell, but never advocating violent measures, he did not favor the full program of the Land or National Leagues. His independence cost him his seat, 1885, but he continued to render splendid service to advance Catholic interests and Home Rule by his speeches and newspaper articles. The greater part of his fortune he contributed to Irish charities, establishing and endowing the Cistercian Abbey at Roscrea. Through his efforts a sufficient number of Catholic chaplains were obtained for the navy; for this service he was thanked by the Irish Bishops through a special resolution passed at Maynooth, 1903—C.E.

Moore, Thomas (1779-1852), poet and biographer, called the "poet of the people of Ireland," b. Dublin; d. Devizes, England. At an early age he exhibited great skill in rhyming and at fifteen had poems published in the "Anthologia Hibernica." Graduated from Trinity College, Dublin, 1798, he went to London to study law, but literature attracted him more, and his early works met with immediate success. He accepted appointment as registrar of the Admiralty Court of Bermuda, 1803, but after six months moved to London the following year. His "Epistles, Odes, and Other Poems," treating of his travels in the United States and Canada, returning to London the following year. His "Epistles, Odes, and Other Poems," treating of his travels, appeared in 1806; the first of his "Irish Melodies," the best loved of his works, in which he set words to the old national airs of Ireland, was published in 1817. Other poetical works are: " Corruption and Tolerance," a satire, 1818; "Theocritus, a Philosopher, Satire," 1809; "Intercepted Letters or the Two-penny Post Bag," a light satirical work, 1813; "Lalla Rookh," an oriental romance, 1819; the first of the "National Airs," 1818; and the "Loves of the Angels," an oriental poem, 1822. In this last year he turned his attention to prose writing and from then on figures mainly as a prose writer. His prose works include: "History of Captain Rock and his Ancestors," dealing with English misrule of Ireland; "Life of Sheridan," 1825; "Life of Byron," 1830; "Life of Lord Edward Fitzgerald," 1831; and "Travels of an Irish Gentleman in Search of a Religion," 1834.—C.E.; Gwyn, Thomas Moore, Lond., 1905.

Moralities, a development of the miracle plays. In the moralities the matter was allegorical rather than historical and its object was ethical, the cultivation of Christian character. Abstract ideas were substituted for human personalities of the Bible or legendary narrative. These abstractions were represented as human beings on the stage; in many moralities the characters were not all abstract qualities; there were angels and devils, priests, doctors, and the fool, under various names, usually that of the "Vice." Four main plots were used in the earlier moralities and the versification was constantly varied. Later there appeared a modified morality, or interlude, dealing with portions only of a man's life and limiting the ethical teaching to warnings against sin or exhortations to learning and study. This "transformed morality takes its place as one of the threads which went to make up the wondrous web of the Elizabethan drama." —C.E.

Morality may be defined as human conduct in so far as it is freely subordinated to the ideal of what is right and fitting. This ideal governing our free actions is common to the race, but the uniformity regards principles rather than their application. While there are exceptions, in general, it may be said that the common voice of the race proclaims it to be right for man to reverence his parents; to care and provide for his children; to be master of his own appetites; to be honest and just in his dealings, even to his own damage; to show benevolence to his fellows in time of distress; to bear pain and misfortune with fortitude. The advance in morality lies in the better application of the accepted principles, in the widening of their binding scope, and in the removal of inconsistent corruptions. The relation of morality to religion has always been a subject of keen discussion. The positivist and idealist schools teach that morality is independent of religion, but the Church has always taught that apart from religion, the observance of the moral law is impossible because morality has a necessary relation to man's last end, which is God, and secondly, the obligatory character of morality is based upon the Divine Will. Moreover, on account of original sin, man's vision of the moral law has become obscured, and the control of his passions has been lost, and hence without Divine aid he cannot long observe the moral law. It has been shown repeatedly in the histories of individuals and of nations that morality divorced from religion has no binding force. The chief conditions necessary for the growth and development of morality in the individual and the community are a right education of the young in the home and the school, where religion and virtue are impressed upon the child, a healthy public opinion, and sound legislation.—C.E.; Devas, Key to the World's Progress, Lond., 1906; Cathrein, Religion and Morals.

Moral Sense, the feeling for what is right, with or without any accompanying intellectual judgment. There is no question here of a specific faculty operating; the consensus of opinion is opposed to assuming any such faculty. The moral sensibility presupposed by this term seems rather to be the result of the interplay of the imagination and the feelings with the intellect, in respect to moral ideals, and to ideas of personal dignity and responsibility.

(Moral Theology) is the science of moral obligation. Its field is the commandments of God, of the Church, and of every lawful authority, hence, all our duties towards God, our neighbor, and self. See Theology.—Koch-Preuss.

Moran, PATRICK FRANCIS (1830-1911), cardinal, 3rd Abp. of Sydney, b. Co. Carlow, Ireland; d. Sydney, Australia. Educated at the Irish College, and the Propaganda, Rome, he was ordained, 1853. He was appointed vice-rector of the Irish College, Professor of Hebrew at the Propaganda College, 1886 he became secretary to Card. Cullen, and professor of Scripture at Clonliffe College. Selected as coadjutor-Bp. of Ossory, he was consecrated Bp. of Olha, and established many religious institutions, introduced the Sisters of Mercy into the Irish work-houses, and erected industrial schools conducted by the Sisters of Charity. The Brief of Dr. Moran's translation to Sydney was issued, 1884, and he occupied this see until his death. Among his principal works are: "Memoir of Oliver Plunket," "Persecutions of Irish Catholics," "Irish Saints in Great Britain," "Civilization of Ireland"; he also contributed to the Catholic Encyclopedia.—C.E., XIV, 336.

Moravian Church (Unitas Fratrum), a religious association formed near Kunwald, Bohemia, 1457, "to foster pure scriptural teaching and apostolic discipline." The Unitas Fratrum, or Church of Brethren, known at the present time in England and America as the Moravian Church, was established, 1735. In 1734 the first Moravian missionary came to Pennsylvania, and an attempt was also made at missionary work in Georgia. An act of Parliament, 1749, recognized the Moravian Church as "an ancient Protestant Episcopal Church," giving it standing and privileges in all British dominions. During colonial times Bethlehem, Nazareth, and Lititz, in Pennsylvania; and Salem, North Carolina, were organized as exclusive Moravian villages. Between 1844 and 1856 this exclusive system was abolished and the church organization was re-modeled to suit modern conditions. Having no doctrine of its own, it is broadly evangelical, and in harmony with Protestants on the essentials of Christian teaching. The Moravian principle is "in essentials, unity, in non-essentials, liberty, and in all things, charity." Accepting the Apostles' Creed as formulating the prime articles of faith found in the Scriptures, it emphasizes the personal mediatorship of Jesus Christ as true God and true Man, in His life, sufferings, death, and resurrection. They practise infant baptism; and holy communion, which is celebrated about six times a year, is open to communicant members of other churches. The Moravian Church is a modified episcopacy in government. They publish two weekly periodicals and a monthly. Foreign missionary work is carried on in North, Central, and South America, the West.
MORAVIAN CHURCH

Indies, South Africa, Australia, the borders of Tibet, and among the lepers in Jerusalem. In 1916 there were 156 stations, with 195 outstations, and 1,496 preaching places; 42 American and 312 European missionaries, with 2,166 native missionaries and helpers; 156 organized churches, with 39,683 members. There are two other bodies: Evangelical Union of Bohemian and Moravian Brethren in North America, and Independent Bohemian and Moravian communicants.

Moray, ancient diocese in Scotland, founded by King Alexander. The inhabitants of the region were evangelized by St. Gildas of Ireland in the 5th century. The first bishop, Gregory, c. 1150, administered the territory on the southern shore of Moray Firth, bounded s. by the bishoprics of Argyll and Dunkeld, e. by Ross and Argyll, w. by Aberdeen. Bp. Andrew de Moray, 1223-42, established the diocesan seat at Elgin; the last pre-Reformation bishop was Patrick Hepburn, 1535-73. The cathedral at Elgin was dedicated, 15 July, 1224. At present Moray is a diocese of the Scottish Episcopal Church.

Morganatic Marriage (L.L., morganatica, a dowry given the morning after a wedding), the valid and licit union of a prince or a member of a ruling house with a woman of greatly inferior rank, contracted with the understanding that the children have no right to succeed to the title of their father. They are usually provided for by a gift or dowry to their mother, whence the name.

(M. F. E.)

Moriscos, a name given to Spanish Mohammedans and their descendants who were permitted to remain in Spain under pretense of conversion to Christianity. They remained the implacable enemies of their conquerors with whom they differed in religion, dress, language, etc., and plotted with the Mussulmans. Philip II tried to make them renounce their dress and language, whereupon they revolted and engaged in a bloody struggle against Spain, 1567-70. The defeated Moriscos were transplanted to the interior and finally expelled from Spain, 1609.

Mormons. See Latter-Day Saints.

Morning Star, a title of Christ in Apocalypse, 2: 22. The Morning Star, the Lord’s ultimate gift to the conqueror, is Jesus Himself. Among the stars of the spiritual firmament He is the brightest, the Light which enlighteneth every man; the Star of Dawn whose coming precedes the sunrise of the Day of God. The image, with its reference to the dawn, applies to the present spiritual life, in which the faithful already possess Christ. (w. s. e.)

Morning Star, The, the official weekly organ of the Archdiocese of New Orleans, published in New Orleans, La.; founded, 1868; circulation, 25,000.

Morocco, monarchy of Africa, on the north-western coast; area, 218,525 sq. m.; pop. (1926), 5,309,146. In 1219 five of the earliest disciples of St. Francis of Assisi, Saints Berard of Carbio, Peter de Sanguinimano, Accursius, Otho, and Adjutus, were missionaries to this region; they and seven others sent later were tortured and beheaded.

Franciscans and Dominicans continued to labor there, and in 1234 the See of Morocco was erected. In the 15th century there were bishoprics also at Ceuta and Tangier. In 1923 the Vicariate Apostolic of Morocco was divided so that the portion remaining under that name is approximately the Spanish zone of the country, and the new Vicariate Apostolic of Rabat comprises the part where French is spoken. The following Catholic statistics cover the vicariate before this organization took place: founded, 1908; chs., 45; pp., 109; srs., 158; Catholics, 100,121.—C.E.

Morse (Lat., morus, biting) or Monile, Fibula, Firmale, or Pectorale, ornamented cloth or metal clasps attached to the front edges of a cope, to prevent it from slipping. It is worn by cardinals and bishops.

(C.E.)

Mortal Sin (Lat., mori, death), a grievous offense against the holy Ghost who sanctifies us. It deprives one of sanctifying grace and thus prevents one from acquiring merit or sharing in the satisfying merits of the Church. It tarnishes the soul, and causes remorse of conscience, an inclination to evil, darkening of the intellect, weakening of the will. It deprives one of the right to heaven, and entails penalties, some of which are incurred in this life, and the loss of God forever as well as eternal punishment.—C.E., XIV, 5; Manning, Sin and Its Consequences, N. Y., 1904; Koch-Preuss; Slater, Manual of Moral Theology, N. Y., 1908.

(M. G. B.)

Mortification (Lat., mortificare, to cause death), a practise of Christian asceticism the purpose of which is twofold: negatively, to cause death to sin, to overcome the desires of the flesh, to conquer evil habits; positively, through penances, hardships, austerities and continued good actions, so to strengthen the will that a man may pursue a desired object despite difficulties. A natural form of mortification is used by anyone who labors long hours to be successful; supernatural mortification aims at progress in virtue and the possession of God and depends on sanctifying grace. (Rom., 8).—C.E.; Maturin, Self-Knowledge and Self-Discipline, Lond., 1905.

(M. O. N.)

Mortmain (O.F., morte meyn, dead hand), inalienable possession of land, a dead man’s clutch on it. The term signifies possession in perpetuity; possession of land, or tenements, by any corporation.
It was at one time invoked, particularly in England, to question the title of religious and charitable trusts, with a view to misappropriating them, especially such as were invested in the Catholic Church. The policy never found favor in the colonies except in Pennsylvania, in order to prevent dedications of property to superstitious uses, and it can have no place in the jurisprudence of the United States.

—C.E.

Mortuarium (Lat., morte, death), term applied: (1) to a little paid by the heirs of a landowner to the landlord, commonly the best head of cattle; (2) to a portion, received by bishops, from the estate of deceased clergymen; (3) to bequests made to churches (Decretals, 3); (4) to the quota demanded for funerals not performed in one's own parish; (5) to death notices; (6) to a chapel, or hall for the dead, or morgue.

—C.E.

Mosaic (Gr., mosaioü, pertaining to the Muses), a term derived directly from the French mosaique, was probably confined to work formed of small cubes of marble, glass, etc., as distinguished from work formed of pieces of glass, etc., cut to a required shape. The earliest examples are the Roman pavements of the Republic and Empire. The great Christian art of glass mosaics arose in the 4th century. The work in the churches of Ravenna is the finest of the early period. In the 6th century the great mosaics of St. Sophia were executed and also those of St. Apollinare Nuovo, Ravenna. In the 11th century the Roman School of decorative mosaic was derived from Byzantium through Southern Italy. The mosaics of the 12th century are remarkable for their development of design. Work of this character is sometimes known as cosmati. The great period of Christian mosaic was probably that of the 13th century. The names of Cimabue, Giotto, Cavallini, Torriti are connected with this period, and to it belong some of the mosaics of St. Mark's, Venice, and many of the Roman churches. After the 14th century mosaics were superseded by frescoes and the work deteriorated. The pontifical works for mosaics were established first in 1727, and the Italian mosaicists have executed some important works. Modern mosaic work has been used in London in St. Paul's Cathedral, and Westminster Cathedral, in Paris in the Panthéon and Madeleine.

—C.E.

Mosaic Legislation, a body of civil, moral, and religious enactments, found in the last four Books of the Pentateuch and ascribed to Moses by an unbroken Jewish and Christian tradition. The foundation of the whole Law is the Decalogue (Ex., 20), and the nucleus is the “Book of the Covenant” (Ex., 20-23). The Civil Laws are mostly found in Exodus 18-23, and Deuteronomy 16-26. The Moral Laws are found in the texts already mentioned (Ex., 20-23), supplemented by Leviticus, 11-20, and Deuteronomy 5. The Religious and Ceremonial Laws, referring to persons, places, days of worship, to sacrifices and holy things, are found in Exodus, 25-29, and especially in Leviticus, 1-27. The superiority of the Mosaic Legislation comes chiefly from its religious character, as it proclaims God as the sole fount and sanction of all laws, and from its moral prescriptions which are summed up in the love of God and of the neighbor. Since it was destined to pave the way for the coming of the Redeemer and of the New Law, its figurative character is very much in evidence (cf. Gal., 4; Heb., 10).

—C.E. E.

Moses (Heb., Mošheh, “saved from the waters”), Hebrew liberator, law giver, and prophet. He belonged to the tribe of Levi and was born in Egypt (15th century B.C.), at a time of grievous persecution, when Pharaoh had ordered the killing of all male Hebrew children (Ex., 1). Exposed on the waters of the Nile, he was rescued by Pharaoh's daughter and educated at court. Having killed an Egyptian to save one of his brethren from ill-treatment, he fled to Midian where he married Jethro's daughter (Ex., 2). God appeared to him in the burning bush and commanded him to go and deliver his brethren (3), with the help of his brother Aaron, but Pharaoh stubbornly refused to let the Israelites go, and the terrible chastisements known as the Ten Plagues of Egypt, only hardened his heart (7-10). However the last one, viz., the death of every first born, forced him to yield, and the Hebrews departed, after celebrating the first Pasch (11-13). They began, under the leadership of Moses, a long and wearisome journey in the direction of the Promised Land, the dramatic episodes of which are related in the remaining chapter of Exodus and in Numbers. Only a few can be enumerated here: The Passage of the Red Sea and the Canticle of Moses (Ex., 14-15); the Manna (16); the promulgation of the Law on the top of Sinai (19-31); the many revolts of the people, who are saved each time by the intervention of their leader (Ex., 16; Num., 13-14, 21); the march from Mount Sinai to Cades, and the stay at Cades for 38 years during which the present generation is condemned never to enter the Promised Land (Num., 10-20); Moses himself is excluded from it because of his lack of confidence at the “Waters of Contradiction” (ib., 20); Balaam's Prophecies (23-24). The Israelites finally reached the banks of the Jordan, after defeating the Amorrites and Moabites, and Moses died on Mount Nebo after pronouncing the three memorable discourses preserved in Deuteronomy (q.v.). He was buried in the valley of Moab, but “no man knows his sepulchre” (Deut., 34), and “there arose no more a prophet in Israel like unto Moses” (ib., 10)—Cf. art. on Exodus, Numbers and Deuteronomy.—C.E., Gigot, Outlines of Jewish History, N. Y., 1918.

—F. P. D.
Most Christian King, a title of the Kings of Portugal. It was bestowed on John V (1706-50) and on his successors for his great aid in building ecclesiastical structures, and his efforts in behalf of the canonization of Saints. (M. P. H.)

Most Faithful King, a title of the Kings of Portugal. It was bestowed on John V (1706-50) and on his successors for his great aid in building ecclesiastical structures, and his efforts in behalf of the canonization of Saints. (M. P. H.)

Most High, name for God, occurring frequently in the O.T. and N.T., used also for Christ in the decree, "Gloria in Excelsis Deo." (E.)

Mosul, Archdiocese and Diocese of, Mesopotamia, Iraq. (1) Archdiocese of the Syrian rite, re-established, 1790. Athanasius Dallal was transferred to the see, 1936, succeeding Gregory Habra, appointed 1901. Churches, 20 priests; religious women, 20; schools, 15; Catholics, 7,000; religious sisters, 20; schools, 15; Catholics, 3,100. (A. C. E.)

Mote and the Beam. A parable forming part of the Sermon on the Mount, and read in the Church of the first Sunday after Pentecost (Matt., 7; Luke, 6). It was not intended to discourage fraternal correction, but directed against all those, of whom the Pharisees were striking examples, who are inclined to judge harshly of others and to disregard the correction of their own faults. To prevent them from becoming blind leaders of the blind, Our Lord warned not only His Apostles, but all His followers, whether superiors or not, to strive first and above all at self-sanctification. Then enlightened by their own experience they would know better how to direct others; and enlightening others by their own example, they could reprove and counsel with more authority and persuasiveness.—Fonck, tr. Leahy, Parables of the Gospel, N. Y., 1915. (A. C. E.)

Mother, a title used to designate the superioress of a large community or congregation of religious women. It is used principally to designate the superior general of an entire congregation, the provincial superior, if the congregation be divided into provinces, and sometimes to designate the local superior of an independent community. In some communities, as in the Society of the Sacred Heart of Jesus, it is the title of a professed religious. (A. C. E.)

Mother Mary! at thine altar, hymn written in the 19th century by Rev. F. W. Faber.

Mother of God, title of Our Lady first used by St. Elizabeth at the Visitation, "And whence is this to me, that the mother of my Lord should come to me," (Luke, 1, 43). Found in early liturgical prayers, according to St. Cyril (5th century), this term Theokos (bearing God) was perfectly familiar to the ancient fathers. It was employed by St. Ignatius of Antioch (c. 90) and St. Athanasius (c. 375), and finally sanctioned at the Council of Ephesus (431).—Polle-Preuss, Mariology, St. L., 1922.

Mother of Mercy, a title by which the Church salutes the Blessed Virgin in the Salve Regina: "Hail, holy Queen, Mother of Mercy." It is intimately connected with her other titles, Mother of Divine Grace, and Mediatrix of All Graces. Through the merciful hands of Mary, His Mother, Jesus dispenses graces to man. (N. M. W.)

Motive (Lat., movere, to move), whatever moves the will to act, necessarily something good, or something that attracts the mind under the appearance of good, useful, or pleasant. Every voluntary act must have something good, or apparently good, in view. Happiness, immediate or remote, is the motive of every action, the happiness one derives from life, health, home life, friendship, riches, distinction, pleasure, uprightness, knowledge of God in the present, and the happiness of perfect union with God in the future. Motive thus becomes a principal of action on account of the objective worth of the good to be obtained and of the subjective disposition or inclination of the agent. This is why we are said to know a person from motives, to judge of character by the aims and ideals of the person in question and of the methods employed to attain them. (E.)

Motu Proprio (own accord), words used in rescripts, to signify that the Pope does not condition concession or dispensation on legislative enactment, designates informal method the Pope uses to make a decree, for example Pius XI made the uses of the Ks. of C. and Roman playgrounds papal by his Motu Proprio, March 25, 1929.—C.E. (J. D.)

Mount Angel College and Seminary, St. Benedict, Ore., founded 1887; conducted by the Benedictine Fathers; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; graduate school; professors, 30; students, 209; degrees conferred in 1927, 4.

Mount Carmel, Feast of Our Lady of, instituted among the Carmelites c. 1380 as a feast of thanksgiving in commemoration of favors received through the intercession of the Blessed Virgin. It was assigned to 16 July, the traditional date on which the Blessed Mother appeared to St. Simon Stock and gave him the brown scapular (1251). Sixtus V approved the feast, 1557, and 1609 it became the patronal feast of the Carmelite Order. Benedict XIII extended it to the entire Latin Church, 1726.—C.E. (N. M. W.)

Mount Mellagrey Abbey, near Carlow, Ireland, founded 1833, by Father Vincent Ryan and a band of Cistercians monks from Melleray Abbey in Brittany. Made an abbey, 1835; conducts a seminary; community, 82; priests, 24.

Mount of Beatitudes, name given to the place where Our Lord, surrounded by people from all parts of Palestine, delivered the Sermon on the Mount and taught His Apostles the Lord's Prayer (Matt., 5-7; 8). Tradition locates it on the mountain of Karn Hattin in Galilee, near Nazareth and Cana.

Mount of Offence. See Mount Olivet.

Mount Olivet. See Mount Olivet.
MOUNT OLIVET

and prophesied its ruin and the end of the world (Matt., 24) — C.E., XI, 244.

Mount Saint Bernard College, Antigonish, Nova Scotia, conducted by the Sisters of the Congregation of Notre Dame; affiliated with the University of St. Francis Xavier's College; school of domestic science and home economies; professors, 15; students, 105; degrees conferred in 1929, 14.

Mount Saint Charles College, Helena, Mont., founded 1910; conducted by the diocesan clergy; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; summer school; professors, 15; students, 108; degrees conferred in 1929, 5. There is a preparatory seminary under secular clergy; students, 197.

Mount Saint Clare Junior College and Academy, Mount St. Mary's, Md., founded 1920; conducted by the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; special course; professors, 5; students, 60.

Mount St. Joseph Abbey, Roscrea, Ireland; Cistercian Abbey, founded 1878, by Dom Bruno Fitzpatrick, abbot of Mount Melleray. Community, 70; priests, 27.

Mount Saint Joseph College, Philadelphia, Pa., conducted by the Sisters of St. Joseph; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; special courses; summer school; professors, 30; students, 124; degrees conferred 1929, 18.

Mount Saint Joseph on the Ohio, College of, Mt. St. Joseph, Hamilton Co., O., founded 1920; conducted by the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul; preparatory school; colleges of arts and sciences, education, home economics, music; extension courses; summer school; professors, 24; students, 263; degrees conferred in 1929, 14.

Mount Saint Joseph's College, Dubuque, Ia., founded, 1843; name changed to Clarke College, 1929; conducted by the Sisters of Charity, B.V.M.; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; extension courses; summer school; professors, 35; students, 250; degrees conferred in 1929, 30.

Mount St. Mary's College, Chesterfield, Derbyshire, England, conducted by the Jesuit Fathers; founded, 1842, by Fr. Randal Lytheeoe as a partial revival of the Jesuit mission district of the Immaculate Conception founded by Fr. Richard Blount, S.J., first provincial of the English Province, c. 1633; prepares for Oxford and Cambridge senior and junior local, and London University matriculation examinations. Staff, 27, including 18 professors; students, c. 250.

Mount Saint Mary's College, Emmitsburg, Md., founded 1808; conducted by the diocesan clergy; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; professors, 21; students, 312; degrees conferred in 1929, 35—C.E.

Mount Saint Mary's College, Los Angeles, Cal., founded 1925; conducted by the Sisters of St. Joseph; college of arts and sciences, music; professors, 38; students, 185; degrees conferred in 1929, 21.

Mount Saint Mary's Seminary, Emmitsburg, Md., founded 1808; under secular clergy; professors, 10; students, 110.

Mount Saint Mary's Seminary of the West, Norwood, Cincinnati, Ohio, founded 1829; under secular clergy; professors, 15; students, 220.

Mount Saint Vincent, College of, Mount St. Vincent-on-Hudson, New York, N. Y., founded as a preparatory school in New York City in 1847; college founded, 1910, at the mother-house of the Sisters of Charity of St. Vincent de Paul, who conduct the college and preparatory school; includes colleges of arts and sciences, journalism, education, social service, music; graduate and extension courses; buildings include chapel, laboratories, gymnasium, library, museum, and art studios; professors, 77; students, 545; degrees conferred in 1929, 137.

Mount Thabor, thâ'bôr (Ar., Jebel et Tour, mountain of mountains), distinguished for its picturesque site and outline, rises above the Plain of Esdraelon, 5 m. s.e. of Nazareth. It played an important part in the history of Israel, was the boundary between the tribes of Issachar and Zabulon; here Debbora assembled 10,000 Israelites under Barac to attack and destroy Sisar and his army (Judges, 4); poetically treated by the prophets, Jer., 46; Osee, 5; and Ps. 88. Traditional scene of the Transfiguration of Our Lord.

Movable Feasts (Lat., festa mobilia), feasts which occur earlier or later in different years, depending principally on the date of Easter, which is always the first Sunday after the first full moon after the vernal equinox, the opening day of Spring, or March 21. Easter may come as early as March 22, or as late as April 25. Lent, with its opening day (Ash Wednesday) and its six Sundays, is shifted backward or forward by the date of Easter. Forty days after Easter comes Ascension Day; ten days later. Pentecost or Whitsunday; and a week later, Trinity Sunday, followed by four days by the feast of Corpus Christi. The other Sundays of...
MOVABLE FEASTS

the year are numbered consecutively after Pentecost until the following Advent. Each of the above-mentioned festivals and other important days and seasons of the Church’s year is treated briefly under its own title, and is so numbered in the calendar.

The Mozarabic Rite, or Mozorab, a group of tribes, famous in the mission annals of Spain, belonging to the Arawakan stock. In savage state they subsisted upon hunting and fishing, living in rude huts and leading a wandering life. They excelled in boat making, pottery and music and had a method of picture writing. Polygamy was not common. They were cannibals and tortured prisoners of war. The first mission was founded by the Jesuit Fr. Cipriano Baraza in 1674. On the expulsion of the Jesuits from Spanish America, 1676, the Mozorab Missions were turned over to the Franciscans. Today they are noted for their upright character and industry. They excel as weavers, builders and wood-carvers. Numbering about 30,000, they are zealous Catholics.

—C.E.

Moyes, James (1851-1927), writer, theologian, and controversialist, b. Edinburgh; d. London. Educated in Ireland, France, and Rome at the Venerable, he was ordained, 1875, and appointed professor at St. Bede’s College, Manchester. He was appointed canon theologian of Salford Chapter, 1891, and of Westminster Chapter, 1895. In 1896, he served on the Papal Commission at Rome on Anglican matters on which he was an authority, and in 1903 he was chosen as sub-delegate Apostolic for the Mozarabic Rite.

He turned over to the Franciscans. Today they are noted for their upright character and industry. They excel as weavers, builders and wood-carvers. Numbering about 30,000, they are zealous Catholics.

—C.E.

Moxos Indians, or Moyos, a group of tribes, famous in the mission annals of Bolivia, belonging to the Arawakan stock. In savage state they subsisted upon hunting and fishing, living in rude huts and leading a wandering life. They excelled in boat making, pottery and music and had a method of picture writing. Polygamy was not common. They were cannibals and tortured prisoners of war. The first mission was founded by the Jesuit Fr. Cipriano Baraza in 1674. On the expulsion of the Jesuits from Spanish America, 1676, the Mozorab Missions were turned over to the Franciscans. Today they are noted for their upright character and industry. They excel as weavers, builders and wood-carvers. Numbering about 30,000, they are zealous Catholics.

—C.E.

Mozzetta (It., mozzo, cut short). Short, cape-shaped garment of silk or wool, colored red, violet or black, reaching to the elbow and with an open front that may be fastened with a row of small buttons. At the neck there is a small ornamental hood. It is worn by the pope, but by special privilege it may be worn by cardinals and certain abbots and bishops. The mozzetta is a non-liturgical vestment. —C.E.

M.R. = Missionarius Rector (Missionary Rector).
M.S. = Missionaries of La Salette.

M.S.C. = Missionaries of St. Charles; also Missionaries of the Most Sacred Heart (Missionariorum Sacratissimi Cordis).

Munns, James (1758-1833), philosopher; d. London. Arriving in London, 1811, 1841, he studied the planets and searched for Greek manuscripts. In Venice he discovered part of the Greek Arithmetic of Diophantus, continued his observations, refuted the attempted quadrature of the circle by Cuse, and computed a calendar with the location of sun and moon, the eclipses, and the dates of Easter for the next 30 years. Müller went to Nuremberg, 1471, to establish an observatory for the determination of astronomical constants, and to publish astronomical literature. He was recalled to Rome to settle the reform of the calendar, and made Bp. of Ratisbon. —C.E.

Müller, Johann (1801-88), physiologist and comparative anatomist, b. Coblenz, Germany; d. Berlin. After teaching medicine at Bonn and anatomy at Berlin, he devoted himself to research in physiology. He is considered the founder of modern physiology, because of his personal contributions to the science and his power of coordinating the results obtained by his predecessors, and of directing into new fields of investigation his own disciples. Throughout his life Müller was a loyal adherent of the Catholic Church. —C.E.; Walsh, Makers of Modern Medicine, N. Y., 1910.

Müller, Karl (1818-93), religious painter, b. Darmstadt, Germany; d. Neuenahr. After four years of study in Rome he became one of the noteworthy artists of the Düsseldorff school, combining the spiritualty of the early masters with much sweetness and grace. His principal painting was “The Birth of Mary,” in the Church of St. Apollinaris, at Remagen. Part of the cartoon for a projected “Coronation of Mary” is in the Berlin National Gallery. In the church of St. Remigius at Bonn is his altar-painting, “Christ with the Disciples at Emmaus.” —C.E.

Mullingar, market town in Co. Westmeath, Ireland, containing a cathedral for the diocese of Meath. It was an ancient palatinate town, and possessed a Dominican convent founded in 1239, confiscated by Queen Elizabeth. Here are St. Finian’s College, St. Mary’s Cathedral, and a convent of the Loreto Nuns.

Mundelein. See Saint Mary of the Lake Province Seminary.

Mungo, Saint. See Kunigunde.

Muñoz, Gil Sanchez (Clement VIII), antipope (1425-29), b. Teruel, Spain. He was elected in opposition to Martin V by three schismatic cardinals after the death of the antipope Pedro de Luna. Alfonso V of Aragon, who was hostile to Martin, had Muñoz solemnly crowned, but the other kingdoms of Europe gave him no support. Finally Alfonso submitted to the pope. Muñoz resigned his claims in the Council of Tarragona, recognized Martin V, and was made Bp. of Majorca.—Pastor.

Münster, town in Westphalia, Germany, former state of the Holy Roman Empire. Founded c. 795 by Charlemagne, Miemegen, as it was called until the 11th century, grew up around a monastery established by its first bishop, St. Ludger. Although the bishops, from the reign of Bp. Ludwig I, Count of Tecklenburg (1169-73), exercised sovereign rights and were formally acknowledged as “Princes of the Empire” by Frederick II in 1220, yet numerous conflicts with the citizens resulted in the Diocesan Feud (1450-57) and in the curtailment of many of their prerogatives. The principality over which the prince-bishops had temporal jurisdiction lay n. of the Lippe, extending as far as the upper Ems and the Teutoburg Forest. Following the spread of Lutheranism, a reign of terror was inaugurated in the city (1533-35) by the Anabaptists who were finally defeated after a long siege conducted by the bishop and Philip of Hesse. In 1803 the diocese was secularized by the Imperial Delegates Enactment and it became the property of Prussia in 1813. The town contains a cathedral, built for the most part between 1225 and 1265; the 14th-century Church of St. Lambert; the 12th-century Church of St. Ludger; and a university, established in 1771. The present diocese, reorganized in 1821, of which the town of Münster is the seat, has a Catholic population of 1,748,046; 444 priests; 491 churches and chapels; 1,040 secular priests; 166 regular priests; 20 religious houses for men; 354 for women; 311 schools.

Muratori, Luigi Antonio (1672-1750), librarian, b. Vignola, Italy; d. Modena. Educated by the Jesuits and at the University of Modena, he was ordained in 1694, and in 1695 commenced his work of collecting unedited ancient manuscripts, at the Ambrosian library in Milan. In 1700 he became archivist and librarian in Modena; 1716-33 provost of Santa Maria della Pomposa. He published a collection of historical documents which he had brought to the support of the Este family in their quarrel with the pope. This was followed by his great “BeritaItalicarum Scriptores ab anno anno Christianae 500 ad annum 1500” (writers on Italian affairs of the year 500-1500 of the Christian era, a work of 28 volumes (1723-51) for which “Indices chronologici” (chronological indexes) were published in 1885. “Antiquitates italicæ mediæ aevi” (Italian antiquities of the Middle Ages, Milan, 1732-42) contained, in its third volume, the Muratorian Canon (q.v.). His other writings include treatises on religious questions, charity, freedom of thought in religious matters, and literary and philosophical works. Despite attacks made upon some of his works he was held in high esteem as a priest.—C.E.

Muratorian Canon, the first part of a fragmentary Roman document of c. 170, named after its discoverer L. A. Muratori, which preserves an almost complete list of the writings of the New Testament.—C.E.; Text by Buchanan in Journal of Theol. Stüd. VII (1907).

Muniz, Pedro, Bartolomé Esteban (1617-82), painter, b. Seville; d. there. He scarcely left his native city except for several years in Madrid, 1642-45, when under the guidance of his teacher, Velasquez, he studied the Italian and Spanish masterpieces of the capital. His work is almost exclusively religious, the exceptions being some portraits and a few genre pieces, such as the well-known pictures of boys eating fruit. He is preeminently the painter of the Immaculate Conception, having treated this subject twenty times. Two beautiful examples are in the Louvre, and several in the Prado in Madrid. Other notable paintings often reproduced are “The Holy Family,” in the National Gallery, “The Madonna and Child” of the Pitti Gallery, and the “St. Anthony of Padua” of the Seville cathedral.—C.E.; Calendar, 1908.

Murphy, John B. (1857-1916), surgeon; b. Appleton, Wis.; d. Mackinac Island, Mich. Made known first by the “Murphy Button,” this surgical genius sustained his reputation by his numerous writings and clinical lectures. He was professor in Chicago’s best medical schools and head of the staff of Mercy Hospital. When President Roosevelt was shot by a maniac in Milwaukee, he had himself brought to Mercy Hospital, Chicago, to be treated by Dr. Murphy. He was at that time acclaimed both at home and abroad “the greatest clinical teacher of the day.” He was awarded Leterate Medal, 1902, and in 1910 Pope Benedict XV made him Knight Commander of the Order of St. Gregory.—C.E. Suppl. (L. J. K.)

Murray, Patrick (1811-82), theologian, b. Clones, County Monaghan, Ireland; d. Maynooth College. Educated at Maynooth College, he was elected a Dunboyne, or senior student, 1835. He received a curacy in Dublin, became professor of English and French in Maynooth, 1858, and became professor of theology there, 1841. The remainder of his life he devoted mainly to theological science. In 1879 he was made prefect of the Dunboyne Establishment, which position he held until his death. Dr. Murray wrote for the Dublin Review and for magazines, besides publishing four volumes called “Essays, Chiefly Theological.”
His greatest work was “De Ecclesia Christi,” a masterpiece in positive and controversial theology.—C.E.

Murray, Thomas Edward (1860-1929), Knight of St. Gregory and Knight of Malta, inventor, b. Albany; d. Long Island. At an early age he was an expert machinist and showed signs of inventive genius which culminated in his obtaining patents for 110 inventions, more than any other inventor except Thomas Edison. Besides maintaining general supervision of his own corporations, he effected combinations of all the electric companies in Brooklyn and New York, which resulted in the formation of the New York Edison Co., the United Electric Light and Power Co., and the Brooklyn Edison Co., a design of more economical plants than any in the country. He won the Longstreth Medal of Merit for his numerous inventions of safety appliances and high commendation from the War Department for his invention of an electric welding process for the manufacture of 9.4 in. mortar shells.

Music, Ecclesiastical. Although music was often employed among the Jews to enhance religious ceremonies, the primitive Christians were restrained in their religious manifestations, and it is only in the 4th century that we find mention of psalm-singing, by Tertullian. In the monasteries of Syria and Egypt two forms of rendering the psalms and canticles of the Bible were developed: the antiphonal chant, which consisted in the alternation of two choirs; and the responsorial chant, which was solo singing in which the congregation joined in a refrain. The first was introduced into the Western Church in 386 by St. Ambrose; and the Alleluia chant, a peculiar kind of responsorial singing in which the Alleluia formed the refrain, was also a continuous development in this choral singing, known later as the plain-chant, reaching its climax in the reign of St. Gregory the Great (d. 604). Tradition claims that this pope compiled and revised the numerous melodies already accepted, established a schola at Rome for training singers, and drafted the antiphonary for general use. This resulted in the spread of the Gregorian chant, written in neumatic notation and later in the modern staff notation, over the entire Church. Antiphony had been adopted for the Mass in the 5th century; and in the 9th, two new forms of Mass music were added, the Sequences and the tropes, the famous “Dies Irae” being a product of this period. With the Renaissance and the Reformation came the rise of polyphony and the neglect of plain-song melodies, which were then used as themes or subjects for contrapuntal or many-part treatment and also supplied the basis of the psalms and hymns of Protestantism. Efforts were made by the popes to restore the traditional chant, because its style, which permitted the words of the text to predominate, was more suitable to the Liturgy than the colorful and florid polyphonic music. Palestrina (d. 1594) endeavored successfully to fit the figured music to ecclesiastical needs. The Medicean Gradual was a revision of the Gregorian chant which appeared in 1615. A new interest in the plain-chant began to be aroused in the 19th century. The historic validity of the Medicean edition was attacked, a thorough examination of MSS. was instituted in the Benedictine monastery of Solesmes, France, and after over 20 years of research, the “Liber Gradualis” was published. This was followed by a new epoch inaugurated by Pius X who, in 1904 by his Motu Proprio, ordered that only the traditional plain-chant and the purer and stricter forms of choral music, sung by men and boys, were to be permitted in liturgical functions. Since then, a new Vatican edition has appeared and every effort is being made to revive this ancient chant which has grown up with the Liturgy itself and is an admirable combination of prayer and music.—C.E.; Weinmann, History of Church Music, N. Y., 1910.

Mustard-seed, subject of a parable of Our Lord (Matt., 13). It takes only two texts, less than 70 words, to tell how the seed, least of all seeds, “becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come, and dwell in the branches thereof.” This is a prophecy as well as a parable of the growth of the Church, as described in Vassall-Phillips’ book “The Mustard Seed,” Lond., 1912. (Ed.)

Mwanza, Vicariate Apostolic of, Province of East Africa; by a decree of 1929 two new vicariates (Bukoba and Mwanza) were formed from old Victoria Nyanza Vicariate; entrusted to the White Fathers, Vicar Apostolic: Anthony Oomen (1929), Catholics, 11,000.

My God, I love Thee not because, See O Deus, Ego amo te.

My Jesus! say what wretch has dared, hymn written by St. Alphonsus (1696-1787) and translated by Rev. E. Vaughan.

Myrrh, m'rrh, city of Lycia in Asia Minor, about 2 m. inland from its port Andiraca, where on his journey to Rome, St. Paul and the other prisoners were removed to “a ship sailing into Italy” (Acts, 27; in the Vulgate Lystra is substituted for Myra).—C.E.;

Myrrh (Heb., mor), gum resin used as an ingredient in incense and the oil of Extreme Unction. In ancient times it was used as perfume and was presented by one of the Magi to the Infant Jesus as emblematic of suffering. It was also used for embalming and for an anodyne.

Mysore, Diocese of, India, comprises the territories of the Maharaja of Mysore, and the British provinces of Coorg, Kollegal taluk, and the taluk of Hosur, Salem district; established 1886; suffragan of Pondicherry; entrusted to the Society of Foreign Missions of Paris, and the diocesan clergy. The Abbé Jean Dubois labored there. Bishops: Jean Coadou (1886-90); Eugene Kleiner (1890-1910); Augustin Basle (1910-15); Hippolyte Teissier (1917-22); and Maurice Despatures (1922); residence at Bangalore. Churches and chapels, 210; priests, 68; religious women, 313; seminaries, 1; schools, 73; institutions, 17; Catholics, 61,347.

Mysteries, revealed truths which are above human understanding, but not contrary to reason. There are mysteries of a kind all around us. We do not understand how life originates, nor how the food we eat becomes part of ourselves. The chemist can not change milk into flesh and blood. No man, however wise, can make a blade of grass. If there are mysteries in nature it is not surprising that there are mysteries in the Author of nature. There are three great and fundamental mysteries in the Catholic religion: (1) the Trinity; (2) the Incarnation; (3) the Eucharist; to which Mgr. Kolbe adds that of the Mystical Body of Christ. We believe these mysteries, not because we understand them but because we can discover them by unaided reason, but solely on the word of God. Who has declared them, God is incomprehensible to finite intelligence. By revelation He tells us something of His nature or His works which otherwise we should never know. How there are three persons in God, how God became man in the Incarnation, how the Eucharist is Jesus Christ, we do not know; but on God's word we know that these mysteries are true.

The Christian religion alone has mysteries in its teaching. Every other religion proclaims only such things as man can originate and understand. St. Augustine declared that he could not believe the Christian religion was divine, if it taught only that which man could devise and comprehend. Any religion that is from God, and tells us about the nature of God, must proclaim truths that are above human comprehension: "hardly do we guess aright at things that are upon earth... But the things that are in heaven, who shall search out?" (Wis., 9). We are a mystery to ourselves; much more should the Creator be a mystery to us. If faith required us to believe only what was demonstrated it would not be faith at all, but evidence. The merit of faith consists in the fact that we sacrifice our intellect on the altar of God's word. We believe because God, who is truth itself, is our authority.

Mysteries serve the two-fold purpose of giving us knowledge of God, otherwise unattainable, and affording us the means of making an act of sublime faith in God. The greatest theologian does not understand the mysteries of faith any more than a child of six. To believe on the word of God is not to renounce reason, but to make good use of it. God does not ask us to understand Him but to trust and to love Him.—C.E.; Kolbe, The Four Mysteries of the Faith, N. Y., 1926. (m. j. w.)

Mystical Body of Christ. A mystical body having Christ as its head. St. Paul is the foremost exponent of this doctrine (1 Cor., 6, 12, 12-14, 20, 27; Eph., 4, 11-13, 15-16; Col., 1, 18, 24). It is chiefly this: Christ as the head of the Church exercises in a mystical, supernatural manner the same life-giving influence of the Church as the human head in the human organism. From Christ proceeds that supernatural life which unites the members among themselves and with Him. Growth, increase, both intensively (sanctity), and extensively (in numbers) depends on this vivifying union, which is fostered and preserved principally by the Holy Eucharist. Notwithstanding number and diversity of members, there is but one holy, C.E.; (m. m.)

Mystical Rose, a traditional title given to Our Blessed Lady, an invocation in the Litany of Loreto. The rose is considered the queen of flowers, the red rose symbolic of love, the white rose, of purity. Mary's love for God was always perfect, while she was, and is, always the Immaculate. Mary is the mystical rose without thorn, the "Rose of Paradise," the "Rose of Lourdes," can be also called the "Rose of Loreto."—C.E.

Mystical Theology, that branch of theology which deals with the higher forms of mental prayer and with the extraordinary phenomena in the lives of the saints, such as ecstasies and visions. See Mysticism.

Mysticism (Gr., mpya, initiate), the secret intercourse of a fervent soul with God. Considered in its entirety it forms a branch of theology, called mystical theology. The word mystical signifies something obscure, occult, or mysterious. A person initiated into mysteries may be called a mystic, and the science which treats of mysteries may be called mystical. This science may be called secret, in the sense that the great things of God are secret. They are secret on account of their magnitude, according to the words of Our Saviour: "He that can take, let him take it" (Matt., 19); their dignity: "To you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven; but to them it is not given" (Matt., 13); and the unfitness or inability of men to receive them: "Give not that which is holy to dogs" (Matt., 7). It is also holy secret because it leads to the higher sanctification of souls, according to the three ways of perfection: the purgative, the illuminative, and the unitive. Among the eminent mystical writers in the Catholic Church are: Pseudo-Dionysius, the so-called Areopagite, St. Bernard, St. Thomas, St. Anselm, St. Bonaventure, Hugh and Richard of St. Victor, Gerson, St. Teresa, and St. John of the Cross.—C.E.; Poutrait, tr. Jacques, Christian Spirituality, Lond., 1921; Peers, Spanish Mysticism, Lond., 1924; Turner, History of Philosophy, Bost., 1903. (m. j. w.)

Mythology (Gr., mythos, tale; logos, science), the product partly of the tendency of the human mind to realize, and partly of man's attempts to account for, the origin of such factors in life as fire, disease, and death, and to explain the succession of natural phenomena in an age of ignorance. When a fanciful personification of nature's forces occupied the place of scientific knowledge. Hence arose the mystical stories of the gods, many of which in later generations gave scandal because of their absurdity and immorality. Mythology, being born of ignorance and imagination, has no legitimate place in sound religious belief. The principal divisions of myths correspond to the chief problems which the world presents to the curiosity of man.

A few examples are myths of stars, the sun, the moon, death, heroism, and romance. The best known systems of mythology are the Babylonian, Egyptian, Greek, Roman, and Scandinavian. The most famous gods are the Babylonian Gilgamesh and Ishtar; the Egyptian Osiris, Isis, Ra, Ptah, and Thot; the Greek and Roman Zeus (Jupiter), Hera (Juno), Ares (Mars), Hermes (Mercury), Aphrodite (Venus), Pallas Athene (Minerva), Apollo, Hephaestus (Vulcan), Eros (Cupid), and Dionysus (Bacchus); the Scandinavian Odin (Woden), Thor, Freya, and Tiw, for whom respectively are named the days of the week, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, and Tuesday.
Nabor and Felix, Saint, martyrs (303), d. Milan. According to tradition they were soldiers under Maximian Hercules, martyred for the faith. They are also said to have been companions of St. Januarius of Mauretania. St. Ambrose mentions them in his works, and a basilica was built in honor of them at Milan. Feast, R. Cal., 12 July. — C.E.; Butler.

Nabuchodonosor II, nāb-uch-ō-don'o-sōr (Heb., O! Nebo, protect the boundary), King of Babylon (c. 605-562 n. c.). He took pride not only in the arts of war, but in works of peace, and his long reign marks the height of the grandeur reached by the second Babylonian Empire, when, through his efforts, Babylon became one of the wonders of the world. Of a humane disposition, he repeatedly spared Jerusalem, and destroyed it only when it became a political necessity (4 Kings, 25; Dan., 1). He commanded that Sidrach, Misach, and Abdenago be placed in the fiery furnace, from which they were rescued by an angel of the Lord (Dan., 3). God punished him for his pride: "Therefore I, Nabuchodonosor, do now praise, and magnify, and glorify the King of heaven: because all his works are true, and his ways judgments, and them that walk in pride he is able to abase" (Dan., 4). — C.E.

Nagle, Nano (1728-84), foundress of the Presentation Order, b. Ballygriffin, Ireland, d. Cork. She was educated in Ireland, and later in France where she entered a convent. Returning to Ireland, she went to Cork and fought against the ignorance and vice prevalent there. Later she established schools for boys and girls, and an asylum for aged and infirm women. To perpetuate her work she erected a convent, and a community of Ursulines came to Cork, 1771. As the Ursuline Rule did not permit entire consecration to the visitation of the sick and the education of poor children, she founded the Presentation Order, 1775. — C.E., XII, 398.

Nagpur, Diocese of, India, comprises the greater part of the Central Provinces and Berar; the part of the Nizam's territories north of the Godavari, the part of the Central India agency south of the Nerbuda, a part of the Orissa, and the stations of the Rewah State on the Kutni-Bilaspur Railway line; area, 124,000 sq. m.; erected, 1887, by division from the Diocese of Vizagapatam; suffragan of Madras; entrusted to the Missionaries of St. Francis de Sales of Annecy, France. Bishops: Alexis Riaz (1887-92); Charles F. Pelvat (1893-1900); J. M. Crochet (1901-03); E. M. Bonaventure (1905-07); Francis S. Coppell (1907). Churches, 33; priests, secular, 13; priests, regular, 34; religious women, 119; colleges, 3; high schools, 5; elementary schools, 49; pupils in elementary schools, 1542; institutions, 24; Catholics, 22,000. — C.E.

Nag's Head Story, a false historical legend purporting to describe the consecration of Matthew Parker, Elizabeth's Anglican archbishop, from whom all the Anglican clergy derive their orders. The facts of his consecration were so obscured in mystery especially to the Catholic party, that they, in all good faith, gave credence to the tale and honestly endeavored to maintain it. According to the report, Matthew Parker and others, who were unable to obtain consecration from any Catholic bishop, while at the Nag's Head Tavern in Cheapside received consecration from Scoy, the deprived bp. of Chichester. Scoy was supposed to have consecrated them by placing a Bible on the neck of each, saying, "Receive the power of preaching the Word of God sincerely." In such fashion were the Anglican Orders believed to have their origin. The story is a false. Matthew Parker was actually consecrated in the private chapel of Lambeth, 1559, but his consecration was invalid because of the dogmatical and liturgical defects in the Ordinal used. (M. P. H.)

Nahum, Book of, a book of the Bible, written between the sixth and seventh century B.C. It is a poetical masterpiece. — Seisenberger, Practical Handbook for the Study of the Bible, N. Y., 1911. (U. F. M.)

Nails, Holy, nails with which Our Saviour was fastened to the Cross, and which according to tradition were found by St. Helena. It is not certain whether there were three or four, more probably four. St. Ambrose and others record that St. Helena had one nail converted into a crown for Constantine and another one into a bridle for his horse. It is probable that the iron crown of Lombardy, preserved at Monza, is identical with this crown. The holy nails venerated in more than 30 places of Europe are imitations, some of which may contain filings of the true nails. — C.E. (A. V.)

Naim, nām (Heb., pleasantness), city where Christ raised the widow's son to life (Luke, 7), situated on the northwest ridge of Jebel Dahy, the Little Hermon. — C.E.

Name of Mary, Feast of the Holy, feast of the entire Latin Church, celebrated on the Sunday within the octave of the Nativity of the Blessed Virgin. It was first observed at Cuenca, Spain, 1513, then extended to the universal Church and assigned to its present place and rank by Innocent XI (1683) in thanksgiving to God and the Blessed Virgin for the liberation of Vezzene, when Assurbanipal took Thebes, and the fall of Ninive (606). The author calls himself the Elecite. The suggestion (since the 16th century) that Eclesite, or Elcesai, was in As-syr. aya, as well as the older theory that it was in Galilee are not very probable. The prophet was probably a Judean, living under Manasses. Israel was already divided into 2 parts by the death of David (Dan., 3), God spared Jerusalem, and destroyed it only when it became a political necessity (4 Kings, 25; Dan., 1). He commanded that Sidrach, Misach, and Abdenago be placed in the fiery furnace, from which they were rescued by an angel of the Lord (Dan., 3). God punished him for his pride: "Therefore I, Nabuchodonosor, do now praise, and magnify, and glorify the King of heaven: because all his works are true, and his ways judgments, and them that walk in pride he is able to abase" (Dan., 4). — C.E. the Society of Mary (Marians) and of the Congregation of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate.—C.E.

Names, Christian, names given to individuals at their Baptism. One of the duties of pastors in regard to Baptism is the exercise of care, in order that a Christian name be given to the one baptized. This accords with a venerable Catholic custom always insisted upon by the Church, and now reaffirmed as a law in the new Code of Canon Law.

The Roman Ritual and Roman Catechism warn against the choice of “obscene, fabulous or ridiculous names” and “names of vain deities or of impious pagans.” The names of the saints are to be kept secret by the household who bear them, sources of imitation, protection, and intercession.—C.E. (F. T. B.)

Names in New Testament. Of the 173 names of persons given in the N.T., 62 are of unknown meaning. Of these 60 are taken from the Greek, one Greek from Latin, and one from the Hebrew. In the O.T., the majority of proper names are derived from the Hebrew; in the N.T., from the Greek. In the latter, of the names dealing with the Deity, the first seven are derived from the Greek, the others Greek from Hebrew. They are: Ananias, Jehovah protects; Heli, Jehovah is high; Elizabeth, worshipper of God; Gabriel, strong man of God; Gamaliel, God recompenses; Michael, who is like God? Nathanael, gift of God; Timothy, honoring God; Matthias, gift of Jehovah; Jesus, Jehovah saves; John, gift of God; Zachary, Jehovah remembers; Zebedee, gift of God. A large class of proper names for men and women is made up of adjectives denoting personal characteristics, such as Andrew, manly; Asenath, incomparable; Bernice, victorious; Clement (Lat.), kind; Eunice, victorious; Pudens, modest; Timon (Heb.), honorable; Zachaeus, pure. Names of things, and words referring to trades or avocations were taken as proper names: Anne, grace; Judas, praise; Onesiaphorus, bringer of profit; Philologus, lover of words; Sosipater, saviour of his father. Names of animals and plants are not frequent, the only example being Damaris, heifer; Dorcas and Tabitha, gazelle; Susanna, lily; and Rhode, rose-bush. Names derived from numbers are Quirinus, fourth: Tertius and Tertullus, third. Names without Christian significance and probably derived from pagan mythology are: Apollo, contracted form of Apollonius, belonging to Apollo; Diotrephes, nourished by Jupiter; Pebea, shining; Epaphroditus, beautiful; Apollyon, Hermes, and Hecate. "Bar" in a name means "son of," e.g., Barabbas, son of the learned man; Barnabas, son of consolation; Barsabas, son of Sabas; Barthineus, son of Timai; Bartholomew, son of Tolmai. There is only one word derived from a color, Rufus, red. Names derived from kindred are Thomas and Didymus, twin; and Trophimus, foster-child.—C.E., X, 673.

Names of God. Names of God are names, others attributes. It is not always easy to distinguish between them. The following are found in Holy Scripture:

Almighty, Gen., 17, 1.
Benign, II Ensd., 9, 17.
Blessed, Gen., 14, 20.
Creator, II Mac., 1, 24.
Father, Matt., 6, 9.
First and Last, Is., 4, 6.
God of Peace, Rom., 15, 33.
God of Vengeance, Ps., 93, 1.
Great, Ps., 76, 14.
Hidden, Is., 45, 15.
Holy, Apoc., 4, 8.
Hope, Rom., 15, 13.
I am who am, Ex., 3, 14.
Immortal, I Tim., 1, 17.
Invisible, Col., 1, 15.

Names of Our Lord. Various names have been given to Our Lord in Holy Scripture and the liturgy of the Church. These are given below as found in the Old Testament, used by Himself, by the Apostles and Evangelists, and by others, particularly in the liturgy.

In the Old Testament

Almighty Word, Wis., 18, 15.
Brightness of Eternal Light, Wis., 7, 26.
Child, Is., 7, 10.
Child, Is., 9, 6.
Child, Is., 9, 6.
Child, Is., 9, 6.
Desired of all nations, Agg., 2, 8.
Emmanuel, Is., 7, 14.
Expectation of nations, Gen., 45, 10.
Father of World to Come, Is., 9, 6.
God the Mighty, Is., 9, 6.
Holy One, Ps., 15, 10.

Used by Himself

Bread of Life, John, 6, 35.
Door, John, 10, 9.
Good Shepherd, John, 10, 11.
Life, John, 11, 25.
Light of the World, John, 9, 5.
Lord, John, 13, 13.
Master, John, 13, 13.

Used by the Apostles and Evangelists

Advocate, I John, 2, 1.
Almichty, Apoc., 1, 8.
Alpha and Omega, Apoc., 1, 8.
Amen, Apoc., 3, 14.
Author and Finisher of Faith, Heb., 12, 2.
Author of Life, Acts, 3, 15.
Beginning and End, Apoc., 1, 8.
Blessed God, Mark, 14, 61.
Christ, Matt., 1, 18.
Christ Jesus, I Tim., 1, 1.
Corner-stone, Eph., 2, 21.
Day Star, 2 Peter, 1, 19.
Faithful Witness, Apoc., 1, 5.
First and Last, Apoc., 1, 17.
First Born from the Dead, Apoc., 1, 5.
Gallilee, Matt., 26, 69.
God of the Jews, Rom., 3, 29.
Great Pastor, Heb., 13, 20.
Head, Eph., 4, 15.
He that is to come, Heb., 10, 37.
High Priest, Heb., 2, 17.
Jesus Christ the Just, I John, 2, 1.
Key of David, Apoc., 3, 7.
King of Kings, Apoc., 19, 16.
Life Eternal, I John, 1, 2.
Living Stone, 1 Peter, 2, 4.
Lord Jesus Christ, Acts, 10, 48.
Lord of All, Gal., 4, 1.
Lord of Lords, Apoc., 19, 16.
Mediator, Heb., 9, 15.
Only Begotten of the Father, John, 1, 14.
Our Lord Jesus Christ, Rom., 1, 14.
Ps. Nestrum, 1 Cor., 5, 7.
Power of God, 1 Cor., 1, 24.
Priest, Heb., 8, 4.
Prince of the kings of the earth, Apoc., 1, 5.
Rabbi, John, 1, 38.
Rock, 1 Cor., 10, 4.
Rock of Scandal, Rom., 9, 33.
Root of David, Apoc., 5, 5.
Saviour of the World, John, 4, 42.
Son of David, Matt., 12, 35.
Son of God, Matt., 8, 29.
Son of the Living God, Matt., 16, 16.
Star of the morning, Apoc., 2, 28.
Stone, Matt., 21, 42.
Stone of stumbling, 1 Peter, 2, 8.
Teacher, John, 2, 2.
That which was from the beginning, 1 John, 1, 1.
Vicim, Eph., 5, 2.
Wisdom of God, 1 Cor., 1, 24.
Word, John, 1, 1.
Word of God, Apoc., 19, 13.
Word of Life, 1 John, 1, 1.

USED BY OTHERS
Adonai, O Antiphons.
Angel, in liturgy of Mass.
Captain of the Martyrs, Of­
Captain of our salvation,
Christ our King, First WIth­ Christmas Day, Vespers (I).
Christ the Lord, Saturday
Christ the Lord, Saturday WIth­
Christ the Lord, Saturday within the Octave of Christ­
Christ the Lord, Saturday within Octave of Chris­
Christ the Lord, Saturday within Octave of Chris­
Christ the Lord, Saturday with­
Church of St. Philip Neri, the Church of St. Clare
Church of St. Joseph, Serrapoli, 1282.
City in northern Italy. Founded by City of Charity maintain in Shanghai a free hospital;
City under Joseph Bonapa­
City in southern Italy. Founded by City of St. Philip Neri, the Church of St. Clare
City under Joseph Bonaparte in 1806, it was finally annexed to Italy in 1861.
City of the English, shrine of the martyrs' relics, the harrow
City under Joseph Bonapa­
Clare and the Monastery of S. Domenico Maggiori (1255), containing the cell of St. Thomas Aquinas, are rich in art treasures, and the secular buildings, including the royal palace and the museum have interesting archaeological collections.
Clare and the Monastery of S. Domenico Maggiori (1255), containing the cell of St. Thomas Aquinas, are rich in art treasures, the secular buildings, including the royal palace and the museum have interesting archival collections. Naples is the seat of an archdiocese, whose first bishop was St. Asprenucus, Titus in art treasures, and the secular buildings, including the royal palace and the museum have interesting archival collections. Naples is the seat of an archdiocese, whose first bishop was St. Asprenucus, Titus in art treasures, and the secular buildings, including the royal palace and the museum have interesting archival collections.
Corsica, 1778, he attended the college of Autun, after which he was at the military schools of Brienne and Paris, and at Valence garrison as lieutenant. He was made brigadier after the capture of Toulon, and from his victory at St. Roch's church, 1795, through the Italian Campaign, March, 1798 (resulting in the Holy See's surrender of important territories and the imprisonment of Pius VI), and the Egyptian Campaign, May, 1798, his military career was brilliantly successful. During his consultation with the Concordat with the Holy See, 1801, was passed as a law with the Organic Articles, establishing Catholicity as the state religion. At the coronation ceremonies in Notre Dame, 1804, Napoleon crowned himself and the empress, although Pope Pius VII had been induced to officiate, on condition that Napoleon should previously go through the coronation ceremonies with the bishops, as religious ceremony with Josephine, the widow he had civilly married, 1798. This marriage was performed on the eve of the coronation. The pope's refusal to annul Jerome Bonaparte's marriage, Napoleon's refusal to act when the French Civil Code was introduced into Italy, extension of Napoleon's domains by the Treaty of Presburg, occupation of the papal state, 1806, general attitude of Pius not to regard Napoleon's enemies as his, resulted in strained relations between them, and when Pius required Joseph Bonaparte to submit to the Holy See's suzerainty before recognizing him as King of Naples, Napoleon threatened to cease regarding the pope as temporal prince, and to cut his peoples from communication with Rome. Pius was forced to annul parochial schools, 28; pupils in parochial schools, 3584; institutions, 7; Catholics, 28,338.—C.E.; Hazlitt, Life of Napoleon.

Nashville, Diocese of, Tennessee, comprises the State of Tennessee; area, 41,750 sq. m.; suffragan of Cincinnati. Bishops: Richard P. Miles (1838-69); James Whelan (1859-63); P. A. Fechan (1865-80); Joseph Rademacher (1883-93); Thomas S. Byrne (1894-1923); Alphonse J. Smith (1924-28). Churches, 52; priests, secular, 52; priests, regular, 20; religious women, 616; college, 1; academies, 5; parochial schools, 28; pupils in parochial schools, 3584; institutions, 7; Catholics, 28,338.—C.E.

Natal, Vicariate Apostolic of, Natal Province, Union of South Africa (British possession), bounded N. and E., sw. and w. by the boundaries of the Vryheid and Ngotshe Districts (Zululand), x. by Transvaal, w. by the Orange Free State, 1609; parochial schools for colored children, 13; pupils, 3490, are colored, 190 are Indian, 1894.

Natchez, Diocese of, Mississippi, embraces the State of Mississippi; area, 46,340 sq. m.; suffragan of New Orleans. Bishops: John J. Chanehe (1841-52); J. O. Van de Velde (1853-55); William II. Elder (1857-80); Francis Janssens (1881-88); Thomas Howard (1888-90); John H. Gunn (1891-1911); Richard O. Gerow (1924). Churches, 109; priests, secular, 52; priests, regular, 22; religious women, 258; college, 1; academies, 6; parochial schools for white children, 29; pupils, 4681; parochial schools for colored children, 13; pupils, 2147; institutions, 2; Catholics, 33,585 (of whom 3490 are colored, 190 are Indian).

Nathanael, (Heb., God has given), a disciple of Jesus Christ, from Cana in Galilee (John, 21), praised by Our Divine Lord as “an Israelite indeed, in whom there is no guile” (John, 1), and enumerated among the Apostles as a witness to the miraculous draught of fishes, after the Resurrection (John, 21). It is generally held that Nathanael is to be identified with St. Bartholomew the Apostle, since one is not distinguished from the other. The Evangelists who mention Bartholomew tell nothing of Nathanael, and St. John who speaks of Nathanael is silent concerning Bartholomew.—C.E. (J. M. N.)
National Baptist Convention, body of Negro Baptists organized at St. Louis, Mo., 1886; the Colored Free Will Baptists and Primitive Colored Baptists are included in this convention. The purpose of the organization was “to consider the moral, intellectual, and religious growth of the denomination, to deliberate upon the great questions which characterized the Baptist churches, and further, to advise and consider the best methods possible for bringing us more closely together as churches and as a race.” Doctrinally and administratively in harmony with the Northern and Southern Conventions, they hold more strictly to the Calvinistic doctrine, and in government refer to an ecclesiastical council the settlement of any difficulties that arise. There is one official periodical. Foreign mission work is carried on in Central, South, and West Africa: the West Indies; and northern South America. In 1916 there were 13 missionaries with 90 native helpers; 88 churches, with 19,812 members; and 52 schools with 15,511 pupils. In the United States in 1929 there were 19,276 ministers, 21,868 churches, and 5,044,228 communicants.

National Catholic Agricultural Federation of Spain, a non-political cooperative organization of Catholic farmers in Spain. It was founded in 1914 to combat the exactions of the capitalists who controlled small farms and within a few years it included over 500,000 members and 4000 local societies. It has cooperative banks, insurance systems, etc. In its program it encourages the establishment of a small farm system on the ideas contained in Pope Leo XIII’s encyclical on labor conditions; and it declares for the maintaining of the high religious and moral principles of its members. It is under the active patronage of the Catholic clergy.

National Catholic School of Social Service for Women, Washington, D. C., founded, 1921; conducted by the National Council of Catholic Women; affiliated with the Catholic University of America; special service department; professors, 12; students, 36; degrees conferred in 1929, 9.

National Catholic Alumni Federation, an association organized in New York City, 1 Dec., 1924. The necessity for such an organization was first advocated by the St. Francis Xavier Alumni Association; the result of the first meeting of the committee was the federation, which was approved by Card. Hayes, 17 Dec., the same year. The purpose of the federation is to further the educational and intellectual ideals for the attainment of which Catholic colleges are founded, and to uphold and advance the ideals of higher Catholic education.

National Catholic Welfare Conference, formerly National Catholic Welfare Council, organization, inaugurated 24 Sept., 1919, which succeeded the emergency National Catholic War Council founded in 1917. Its administrative committee is established in five departments: (1) Department of Education, which safeguards the interests of Catholic education; (2) Department of Press, Publicity, and Literature, which has charge of the news service and issues the N.C.W.C. weekly news sheet to 3 dailies and 84 weeklies; (3) Department of Social Action, which deals with industrial relations, civic education, social welfare, and rural life; (4) Department of Laws and Legislation, which protects Catholic interests in state and nation; (5) Department of Lay Organization, which endorses to organize Catholic men and women. The Executive Department supervises the work of the Welfare Conference as a whole and keeps in touch with government officials. The work undertaken and inaugurated by these various departments includes study clubs, religious vacation schools, Catholic clubs in non-Catholic colleges, weekday religious instruction for public-school children, collection of Catholic war records, retreats for the laity, organization of Catholic farm women, and publication of Catholic book lists for teacher-training institutions.—C.E. Suppl.

National Catholic Women’s Union was organized under the auspices of the Catholic Central Verein (q.v.) in 1916 to promote the participation of women in charitable activities. They encourage lectures, spiritual retreats, mass meetings, and religious celebrations. The headquarters are at Quiney, Ill., where a monthly bulletin is issued. Membership, 60,000.

Nationalism, the consciousness of oneness among a people based on a common heritage of traditions and customs, and often also of language. In its aspirations it centers around national unity and independence. In these latter times fired by a wildly extravagant devotion to country, it has, in the spirit, degenerated into jingoism and chauvinism. As such it is characterized by emotional appeals to a glorious past, a belligerent attitude in foreign relations, a contemptuous disdain of foreigners, a heartless disregard of the rights of minorities, and an arrogant assertion of leadership in the family of nations. Defying the nation, it does not recognize the sovereignty of principles of justice and hence subscribes to the immoral slogan: my country right or wrong. Nationalism has been called “the great heresy of our times” (Pius XI). (A. J. M.)

National University of Ireland, Dublin, one of the two universities established as a result of the New Universities Act passed, 1908, by which the Royal University (1880-1908) was suppressed. It was created denational but subserves Catholic interests. Faculties: art, philosophy and sociology, Celtic studies, science, law, medicine, engineering and architecture, and commerce. Constituent colleges: University College, Cork, professors, 29, student body, 466 (1920-27); University College, Dublin, professors, 48, and student body, about 1280; University College, Galway, professors, 25, and student body, 186. St. Patrick’s College, Maynooth, is a “recognized college” of the National University.

Native American Party, political organization founded, 1841, by a state convention in Louisiana. Its principles were the proscription of those who professed the Catholic faith, and the exclusion of foreign-born citizens from all offices of trust and emolument in the government, whether federal, state, or municipal. It became merged in Know-nothings (q.v.).

Nativity of Christ, Feast of the. See Christmas.
Nativity of Our Lord (in Art). Among the many masters who have represented the subject are: Alberti, Credi, Civerchjo, Correggio, David, A. Delta Robbia, L. Delta Robbia, Dettman, Dürer, El Greco, Fra Angelico, Francja, Ghirlandajo, Lippi, Lochner, Luini, Master of the Glorification of Mary, Murillo, Pacchiarotto, Palma, Perugino, Pinturicchio, Rembrandt, Santa Croce, Sarto, and Udeh.

Nativity of the Blessed Virgin Mary, Feast of the, 8 Sept., probably originated after the Council of Ephesus, 431, which established her right to the title of "Mother of God." It was first mentioned in a hymn composed by St. Romanus, an ecclesiastical lyricist of the Greek Church, 536-556; adopted by the Roman Church in the 17th century.—C.E.

Naturalism (Lat., natura, nature), a viewpoint in philosophy and theology insisting exclusively on the natural as distinguished from the transcendent and the supernatural. This may be restricted to physical nature, denying the supra-sensual and the spiritual; as such it is equivalent to materialism; to nature in the pantheistic, monistic sense, hence denying a distinct First Cause; or finally to nature in the deistic sense of created reality, denying any intervention of the First Cause, whether providential or supernatural. In each sense it has a wide application in every field of knowledge; as a whole it has been condemned by several popes, especially Pope Pius IX, in the Vatican Council.—C.E.; Ward, Naturalism and Agnosticism, London, 1890. (J. A. B.)

Natural Law, the sum total of the ethical precepts implanted by God in the rational nature of man, through the observance of which he, as a free intelligent being, might attain his natural destinies. It is that universal, unchangeable, eternal law which St. Paul says is indelibly written by the Creator in our hearts or in our very nature, urging us to observe the moral order, to do good, and avoid evil. The ultimate basis and source of the natural law is the eternal law or Divine reason ordering and directing all things in accordance with their natural inclinations to their proper acts and ends. The expression or participation of this eternal law in free rational creatures is the natural law which may be summed up in the general prescription to do good and avoid evil, to live in conformity with right rational nature, or to observe the moral order as Divinely constituted and sanctioned. The conduct of all men is subject to the moral law with which, as to its primary or general principles at least, is naturally promulgated or known through human reason. Because of the consequences of original sin, Revelation alone can provide complete knowledge of its secondary and especially of its remote principles as applied to the complexities of life. The due regulation of our free actions in conformity with the prescriptions secures their right ordering in which consists the natural perfection of our rational nature, and which at the same time constitutes a necessary condition for supernatural perfection, for, according to St. Thomas, "As grace presupposes nature, the Divine Law presupposes the natural law." (C.E., IX, 77. n. 3.)

Natural Selection, a theory which seeks to explain by natural causes the occurrence of every kind of adaptation which it is to be met with in organic nature, on the assumption that adaptations of every kind have primary reference to the preservation of species, and therefore, also, as a general rule, to the preservation of their constituent individuals. This theory was first proposed by Darwin and is based on the following principles: overproduction of organisms and the consequent struggle for existence; the variations of organisms, useful and harmful, and the preservation of the useful, and destruction of the harmful; overcrowding; accidental destruction; change of habits; and migration. This theory is also termed the survival of the fittest (Herbert Spencer). It has not been established by fact, and is not now advanced even as a hypothesis to explain the origin of species.—O'Toole, The Case Against Evolution, N. Y., 1925. (J. A. B.)

Natural Theology, that branch of philosophy which investigates what human reason unaided by Revelation can tell us concerning God; distinguished from dogmatic theology which treats of the science of God in the light of Revelation. This science endeavors: (1) To demonstrate the existence of God from the visible things of the world through such principles as those of finality and causality: "For the invisible things of God are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even as God's eternal power and Divinity" (Rom., 1). (2) To establish something about the Divine attributes. Since effects resemble causes we can affirm of God certain perfections possessed by creatures, such as Truth, Love, Beauty. Since the effect differs from the cause and does not necessarily exhaust the perfections of the cause, we negate of God what it is in creatures. (3) To tell us something about God's relation to the world. God is related to us as an object is related to a science, e.g., life can exist without biology, and matter without physics. We are related to God as a science is related to its object, e.g., biology cannot exist without animals nor botany without plants. (4) To throw some light on the action of Divine Providence, conservation, and the problem of evil.—Boedder, Natural Theology, N. Y., 1906. (J. A. B.)

Nature (Lat., nasci, to be born), a substance not merely existing by itself (per se), but as containing a principle of action or motion. The terms nature and substance are frequently used as synonyms. In the concrete a natural unitary whole may be regarded first as an entity existing by itself, not merely as a modification inhering in some other being, in which case it is called an essence; or we may regard the unit as belonging to some specific kind of reality, i.e., as being the kind of thing it is, in which case it is said to be an essence; or we may consider it as the ultimate complete principle from which all the activities of the unit proceed, and in this sense it is called a nature. The nature, then, of a thing is the substance or essence regarded as the complete ultimate principle of the activities of a natural unit. We understand by natural unit (as opposed to artifact; (d. A. ex.) or as a single unit of parts), a unit of which the component parts are, of the very intention of their being, parts and not complete entities in themselves. It is clear from this that sub stance, essence, and nature are in the order of natural existence one and the same thing. Nature in this sense is only mentally distinct from substance. The term nature is also more broadly applied to the whole collection of single substances or natures. Thus we speak of universal nature, applying the term first to the universe of corporeal substances, e.g., the laws of nature, and again to the universe of all created things, e.g., the natural order.—C.E.; Rickaby, General Metaphysics, N. Y., 1909. (J. A. M.)

Naturism, term designating the worship of nature, which, according to the claim of some modern philosophers, e.g., Tylor, Spencer, and Réville, was the primitive form of religion and the basis and source of all existing forms. There are three phases of Naturism as a theory of religion. (1) Ethnographic Naturism holds that there is human life in all things, both animate and inanimate. (2) Philosphic Naturism, based on the idea that there is unity in animated nature and that God is the soul of the world, is the essence of Pantheism, the Neo-Hegelian school, and Transcendentalism. (3) Science-Naturism teaches the identity of God with nature, the veneration and service of humanity or mankind, and the contemplation of the mysterious and unknown powers of the world.—C.E.; The History of Religions, Catholic Truth Society, St. L., 1911; Le Roy, The Religion of the Primitives, N. Y., 1922.

Navarre, former kingdom in the northeastern part of the Iberian peninsula, now forming part of the department of Basses Pyrénées, France, and the districts of Pamplona, Aoiz, Estella, Tafalla, and Tudela in Spain. The inhabitants of the western Pyrenees successfully resisted the Romans, Visigoths, and Arabs, but were vanquished by the Franks in the 9th century. They later regained independence, and their first king was Eneco Arista (839) whose son, García II Eneco, intrepidly resisted the Moors. García's son, Fortun García, after a reign of 22 years became a monk at Leyra, the oldest convent in Navarre. Fortun's son, Sancho García I, surnamed Abaure (965-925), pushed the Moors beyond the Pyrenees, and Sancho the Great, his successor, further advanced into Navarre, and in 1006 defeated the Moors. Sancho the Great (970-1033), the realm rose to its greatest importance, extending from Galicia to Barcelona. At his death the lands were divided never to be reunited, and Navarre became dependent upon its more powerful neighbors. Ecclesiastical activity for the first time reached the height of its power. Under his grandson, Sancho the Great (1033-37), the kingdom fell to the Moors, and the kingdom became subject to them. Under his son, Sancho el Fuerte, the kingdom became independent once more. The dioceses of Pamplona and Oca were united in 1079 to Burgos, in 1055 Palencia was reestablished by Sancho el Fuerte, and in 1081 the town of Galice was reestablished by Sancho the Great, and in 1085 the town of Calahorra, wrested from the Moors after 300 years of occupation, absorbed those of Najera (1045) and Alaba (1088). Sancho also reestablished the See of Pamplona and arranged synods at Leyra (1022) and Pamplona (1023) to reform ecclesiastical life. Sancho el Fuerte took the revenues of churches and convents in return for important privileges, and in 1108 granted the See of Pamplona his palaces and possessions in that city. After his death his subjects awarded the crown to Thiibault de Champagne who fostered the poetry of the troubadours. His son, Thiibault II (1253-70), married Isabel, daughter of St. Louis of France whom he accompanied on a crusade to Tunis. In 1276 Navarre passed to France and remained until 1328, when the Navarrese proclaimed independence and awarded the crown to Philip of Evreux. Refusing to join the Holy League against France, Navarre came under the ban of the Church and was seized by Don Fabrique de Toledo (1312) for Ferdinand the Catholic of Aragon, who was recognized as king. Lower Navarre north of the Pyrénées was left to France, and Spanish Navarre remained a viceroyalty until formally incorporated into the Spanish monarchy in 1833.—C.E.

Nave, central open space of a church, west of the choir or chancel and separated therefrom by a wall or screen. It is divided from the side aisles by columns, shafts, or piers, and is roofed with timber or vaulted in masonry. Colloquially, nave indicates the portion of a church reserved for worshippers, including the central and side aisles, and crossing transepts.—C.E.

Navigators' Islands, Vicariate Apostolic of. See Samo Islands.

Nazareth, the town of Galilee where the Blessed Virgin dwelt and where Christ lived the first 30 years of his life, situated in a hollow plateau between the hills of Lebanon, the ancient town occupying the triangular hillock in the north. In earliest times it was the home of priests on their way to the Temple of Jerusalem, and up to the time of Constantine, exclusively Jewish. By 570 the dwelling of Mary had been converted into a basilica and in the 7th century the church of the Nutrition of Jesus was erected. The toleration of the Moslems... who conquered Galilee in 637 did not last, for the Crusaders were compelled to leave the town, 1187, and all the Christian buildings were destroyed in 1263. The Franciscan friars, arriving in the 14th century, were driven out twice, but in 1629 were allowed to build a church, which was, however, ruined by the Bedouins. The friars built the present church in 1730. In 1909 explorations below and about it revealed the plans of the ancient basilica of Constantine, which the Crusaders copied. The Franciscans built their church so that fifteen steps led down to the ancient Chapel of the Angel, and two to the grotto with its altar of the Annunciation. The choir of the church is directly above the grotto; the chapel is the traditional site of the house of the Virgin; and the church of the Nutrition marks the home of the Holy Family.—C.E.; Meistermann, New Guide to the Holy Land, Lond., 1907.

Nazarian or Nazirite (Heb., to consecrate, to separate), among the Hebrews one separated from the common ways of men, and by vow consecrated to God. Though the vow of the Nazarite is pre-Mosaic, its codified form is found in Numbers, 6. According to this law, Nazarites might be of either sex. They were bound not to cut the hair or beard; to abstain from any wine, or fruit of the vine, or any strong drink; not to touch a dead Roman body or enter the house of the dead; and to offer sacrifices proper to their state. The Nazarite vow was either perpetual or temporary, the minimum being 30 days. Similar custom exists among the Arabs. —C.E.

Nazarus and Celsus, Saints, martyrs. Nothing is known of them except that their bodies were discovered at Milan by St. Ambrose, c. 396. Their apocryphal legend relates that Nazarius was born at Rome, fled to Upper Italy during the persecution of Nero, and traveled through Gaul with Celsus, a young convert of Cimiez. He was beheaded at Milan in 68. Feast, R. Cal., 28 July.—C.E.; Butler.

N.D. = Notre Domina, Notre dame (Our Lady).

Near East Welfare Association, Catholic, established by the Holy See, 1928, by merging all existing works of the Church in the United States in behalf of Russia and the Near East; confided to the care of the cardinals and bishops of the United States, with headquarters in New York City. The immediate concern of the Association is the relief of physical distress, but in order to insure humanity against a repetition of casual conditions, the Holy Father set forth a program of social and spiritual service, including the erection of colleges, schools, and orphanages, instruction in sanitation and hygiene, the maintenance of agricultural communities, the fortifying of religious principles, and a frank study of the causes perpetuating schism between East and West. To aid in understanding these peoples, the “Pontifical Institute for Oriental Studies” was founded in Rome and is largely dependent on the Association for support. In addition to the program outlined, the Association has cooperated with the League of Nations, the American Red Cross, and other international relief agencies; and a special fund has been created for Russians in France. The Association, a permanent pontifical society, may be called the pope’s “community chest” for international charities.

Nebo, Mount, a mountain of the Abarim range, of the Jordan and the Dead Sea, from which Moses surveyed the Promised Land (Deut., 34), and where he died (Deut., 34). The location of Mount Nebo is doubtful, but it is identified by some with the modern Jebel Neba, a ridge on a plateau sw. of Hesebon.—C.E.

Nebraska, the 15th state of the United States in size, the 31st in population, and the 37th to be admitted to the Union (1 March, 1867); area, 77,510 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 1,296,372; Catholics, 32,296,372; Catholics, (1928), 1,547,156. One of the earliest Catholic settlements of Nebraska was founded in Dakota County in 1855 by a group under the leadership of Rev. J. F. Tracy. It was known as S. Patrick’s Settlement, and from his church of St. John, Fr. Tracy attended similar colonies in Omaha, and in Nebraska City, where there was soon a German group under the Benedictine, Fr. Hartig. In the former city a church was erected, 1856, on land donated by Gov. Alfred Cumming, the first Mass having been said in his house. In 1874 a group of Catholics from Boston, led by Gen. John O’Neill, settled in Holt County and founded the town which still bears their leader’s name. Some members of this settlement moved shortly into Greeley County, to a site still known as O’Connor, named in honor of Bp. James O’Connor of Omaha. Included in the state are the dioceses of Omaha, Lincoln, and Grand Island (qq.v.). Catholic influence on the place-names of the state is shown in the following: Loretto, Sacramento, St. Ann, St. Columbans, St. Edward, St. Helena, St. Libory, St. Mary, St. Michael, St. Paul. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in Nebraska:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Church</th>
<th>Members</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Catholic Church</td>
<td>135,527</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Church</td>
<td>92,414</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran Synodical Conference</td>
<td>82,630</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.</td>
<td>78,944</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disciples of Christ</td>
<td>75,012</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northern Baptist Convention</td>
<td>56,112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congregational Churches</td>
<td>28,210</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran General Synod</td>
<td>21,421</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran General Council</td>
<td>17,257</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran Synod of Iowa</td>
<td>12,482</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Episcopal Church</td>
<td>12,227</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Brethren in Christ</td>
<td>11,984</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>German Evangelical Synod</td>
<td>9,556</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Evangelical Church</td>
<td>7,028</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All Other Denominations</td>
<td>43,341</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Church Membership</td>
<td>440,791</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

—C.E.; Shea.

Necessity, a word which denotes that which must be as it is without the possibility of being otherwise, is opposed to contingency, a state or condition event which need not be as it is, and hence may be, or might have been, otherwise. Logical or mathematical necessity is that which unconditionally follows from accepted principles or postulates. Physical necessity is but the constant behavior of things of nature; thus, the sun must rise. Moral necessity is obligatory conduct for beings possessing free will. Thus, it is morally necessary to keep promises and contracts.

Necrologies, or Obituaries, lists which contain the names of the dead whose souls are to be prayed for. These lists were kept principally by religious orders, monasteries, and cathedral chapters. They contained the names not only of the deceased brethren, but also of the servants and the benefactors. The lists were frequently made up in book-form, though sometimes they were to be found on the margins of martyrologies. At one time the names were read out at the Mass, but later the custom arose of reading them in the chapter. These medieval necrologies form an important source both for history and philology. The following year books now contain such lists: "Annuaire Pontifical Catholique," "The Catholic Directory for the United States," "Catholic Directory of England and Wales," "Australian Catholic Directory," "Irish Catholic Directory," "The Catholic Directory for the Clergy and Laity in Scotland," "Catholic Directory of India."—C.E.

Necromancy (Gr., nkekros, corpse; montecia, divination), special mode of divination or seeking after knowledge of future or hidden things, by evocation of the dead. Found in every nation of antiquity, mentioned in the Bible and forbidden by the Mosaic Law, necromancy was a common practice among the pagans in the early Christian era. It gradually became associated with alchemy, witchcraft, and magic, and was often known as the "black art" owing to a faulty derivation of the term from niger (Lat., black). During the Middle Ages it was condemned by the Church; theologians held that necromancy is due to the agency of evil spirits, because the means are inadequate to produce the expected results. It received a new impetus during the Renaissance by the revival of the Neo-Platonic doctrine of demons, and in recent times it has reappeared under the name of spiritism.—C.E.

Negligence, the conscious, or partly conscious, omission of a duty with the implication of inertness in the intellect rather than in the will. It is morally imputable at the moment of the intellectual fault, provided that the fault is at least confusedly foreseen. Externally, it may constitute negative cooperation with another's wrongdoing. It is distinguished at common law as slight, ordinary, or gross. See OMISSION.—C.E.

Negro Martyrs of Uganda, Blessed (d. 1886). They were Christian pages of Mwanga, King of Uganda, Africa, who, influenced by the Arabs, began a persecution against the Christians. Thirteen were burnt alive, the other nine were put to death in various horrible ways. They were the first Negroes to be beatified by Rome. Beaufitul 1920, Feast, 3 June.

Nehemias, the hero of 2 Esdras, also called Nehemiah, and eunuch to the Persian court of Susa, who obtained the commission to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem in the 20th year of Artaxerxes I (445 B.C.). Sanballat, his chief opponent, was unsuccessful in trying to prevent the work which had been so long desired by all the Jews that each family agreed to build a section of the wall as a monument to its zeal. Nehemias cared for the famine-stricken and stopped usury. He reestablished the Jewish population with volunteers and a draft of one-tenth of the rural population. To accomplish this he made use of an older list of Jews who had returned to Jerusalem under Zoroabel (538 B.C.). Nehemias celebrated the completion of his work by a feast, on the occasion of which he confirmed the nation in its observance of the Law of Moses. After 12 years of labor, Nehemias returned to Susa, but was compelled to journey again to Judea, in order to correct abuses that had crept in there during his absence. Among these were marriages with Samaritans and heathens, and failure to support the Levites by tithes.—C.E.; Schumacher; Pope.

Neighbor. The term in the Gospels is stripped of all national restriction or limitations, and denotes all our fellow men without distinction. In the fundamental text (Matt., 5, 43), Christ rejects the distinction between neighbor and enemy, and teaches that the enemy who hates, persecutes, and calumniates His disciple, is to be loved, to be prayed for, and done good to. The enemy is to be treated as the O.T. commanded to treat the neighbor, and thus any man, whatever his feelings or attitude may be towards us, is our neighbor. The Parable of the Good Samaritan (Luke, 10), illustrates this teaching by showing that neighbor includes in a special manner our fellowman in need. The one who proceeds to help the unfortunate in need, without inquiring into his race, religion, etc., answers truly the notion of neighbor. The precept of love of the neighbor is one of supreme importance; it is the Law and the Prophets (Matt., 7). The measure of that love is the love which we have naturally for our own selves (Matt., 19). We should do to our neighbor, therefore, all the good we would wish done to ourselves (Matt., 7). There must be no selfish motive, for this would spoil our love in the eyes of God (Luke, 14). In love of the neighbor there can be no room for hatred, or any kindred feeling, in the heart of the disciple; hence one will always be ready and willing to forgive (Matt., 18).

An unforgiving attitude on our part would move God to refuse us the forgiveness of our debts to Him (Matt., 6). Love of the neighbor will prevent us from judging him, bearing in mind our own shortcomings and weaknesses (Matt., 7), make us willing to do everything possible to save him (Matt., 18). Even when the neighbor shows bad will and persecutes us (Matt., 5), or remains indifferent, and for the sake of the general good, has to be cut off from the communion of the Church (Matt., 18), he remains our neighbor with the claims upon us involved in that term (Matt., 5).

Nélaton, Auguste (1807-73), surgeon, b. Paris; d. there. As surgeon in the St. Louis Hospital he suggested the ligature of both ends of the arteries in hemorrhages, developed plastic surgery, and invented the Nélaton probe with the porcelain knob. He was a member of the Paris Academy of Medicine and the French Institute of Science. His best known book on surgery is "Elements of Surgical Pathology."—C.E.

Nellore, Diocese of, India (British possession), comprises the Districts of Nellore, Guntur, Kurnool, Anantapur, Cuddapah, and the northern part of Chittoor; entrusted to the Foreign Missions of Mill Hill; suffragan of Madras; established, 1928, by division from the Archdiocese of Madras.

Nemrod (Nimrod), descendant of Chus, represented as the founder of the Babylonian Empire (Gen., 10) and "a mighty hunter before the Lord," identified by some as Gilgamesh, the hero of the Babylonian epic. He reigned over Arach, Babylon, Ashur, and Chalanne, and is described as builder of Ninive. From the supposed root of his name (Heb., Moran, he revolved), he has been credited with having instigated the building of the Tower of Babel and as being the author of Babylonian idolatry.—C.E.

Necophyte (Gr., neophytos, newly planted), one who has entered upon a new and better state of life, e.g., a convert to the Faith, a candidate for the priesthood, a seminarian, a novice in a religious order.—C.E. (Ed.)

Neo-Scholasticism, name given to the revival of medieval Scholasticism within the last 100 years. It is a philosophical tendency born among Catholic thinkers which aims at bringing into general use the methods and teachings of the great Schoolmen. Its protagonists maintain that it does not mean a return to the unchanged systems of the medieval Scholastics, but an attempt to bring the acquisitions of modern science into harmony with their principles and fundamental doctrines, and the abandonment of their erroneous notions, especially those concerning the physical universe. The Neo-Scholas-

NESTORIUS

Nestorius and Nestorianism. Nestorius, Patriarch of Constantinople (5th century), while combating the Arians, came to accept the view that in Christ the two natures stand for two personalities which are united in one moral person. This doctrine had previously been prevalent in the School of Antioch where it was held by Diodorus of Tarsus and Theodore of Mopsuestia of whom Nestorius was the disciple. Like his master Nestorius refused to admit that Mary was the Mother of God, but claimed she was only the mother of Christ. He was condemned by the ecumenical councils of Ephesus (431) and Chalcedon (451). Many of his followers persistently adhered to their beliefs and formed a powerful religious body, part of which has survived to our own day.—C.E.

"Ne Temere" Decree, an important article of matrimonial law, issued by Pius X, which went into effect at Easter, 1908. It extended to the whole world the "Tametsi" Decree of the Council of Trent in a modified form. It does not affect the marriages of non-Catholics who have never been Catholics, but does affect Catholics who have fallen away from their faith. The decree takes its name from its opening words, signifying "Lest rashly..." Its principal features are as follows:

1. It extends to the whole Church the impediment of clandestinity, which previously had been in force only in certain parts; it makes a marriage invalid unless performed by a parish priest in his own parish, or by a bishop in his own diocese, or by a delegate of either, in the presence of at least two witnesses.
2. No pastor and no bishop can validly perform a marriage outside the limits of his own territory without the permission of the parish priest or bishop of the place.
3. If a pastor or a bishop, within the limits of his territory, should join a couple, neither of whom resides therein, the marriage is valid but unlawful, being an infringement on the rights of the pastor of the parties.
4. Under certain circumstances a valid and licit Catholic marriage may take place without a priest (see Marriage without a priest).
5. Marriages must be registered in the place or places where the contracting parties were baptized.

Netherlands, monarchy of Europe, w. of Germany, on the North Sea; area, 13,220 sq. m.; pop. (1927), 7,625,938. Christianity was preached in this region as early as the 7th century, especially from the British Isles; in 695 the saint was consecrated Bp. of the Friesians. Under the Friesian Duke Radbod the missionaries were severely persecuted and some were killed. Pepin of Heristal, who defeated Radbod and became ruler of the Franks and the Friesians, gave his protection to the Church, and assisted in the establishment of the See of Utrecht, with St. Willibrord as first archbishop. Among his assistants was St. Boniface. Churches and schools were built, and the region became a center of Christianity for that part of Europe. In the 16th century, because of the prevalence of Calvinism, the Catholic dioceses of the country were reorganized and increased in number, but they were suppressed by persecution, and frequently even vears Apostolic were kept from their vicariates by the States-General. In 1572 the 19 martyrs of Gorkum were hanged. The public exercise of Catholicity was prohibited, but the faith was kept by many in private, and gradually the rights of Catholics achieved recognition. The Constitution of 1848 granted complete religious liberty, and in 1853 the country was reorganized into five dioceses. Catholic statistics:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Utrecht</td>
<td>1853</td>
<td>120</td>
<td>850</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'s-Hertogenbosch</td>
<td>1853</td>
<td>465</td>
<td>987</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Breda</td>
<td>1853</td>
<td>113</td>
<td>459</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Haarlem</td>
<td>1853</td>
<td>290</td>
<td>771</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>'s Gravenhage</td>
<td>1853</td>
<td>228</td>
<td>988</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

* Approximate.

—C.E.

Nets are mentioned in the Bible sometimes in connection with the hunting of wild animals (Ezech., 19), and with the catching of birds (Pro., 1), but most commonly with fishing, particularly in the N.T. In the O.T. a term denoting the fisher's net appears (Is., 19; Hab., 1); another word is used in the Hebrew corresponding to drag (Hab., 1, 15-16), and to net (Hab., 1, 17). The differences between the various kinds of nets designated by these words in the Hebrew text are not known for certain. The N.T. references supply more definite information, since several of the Apostles were fishermen, and the Lake of Genesareth so often the scene of events related by the Evangelists. Besides the more generic word diktyon meaning net in general (Matt., 4; John, 21), we have Amphiblestrot, from a verb meaning to cast around, thus a casting net (Matt., 4; Mark, 1), which corresponds with the modern shakabek of the fishermen on the Lake of Genesareth. Sagwe in Matt., 13, is the drag net, the Dywaf of the modern fishermen of the lake.

(E. A. A.)

Neum, term in medieval music theory denoting a kind of melody, or a notational sign. Applied to a melody, neum means a series of tones sung without words, generally on the last vowel of a text. The usual place of such neums is in responsorial singing in the Mass. The more important use of the term is that in which it means the signs used in the notation of Gregorian Chant.—C.E.

Neumann, John Nepomucene, Venerable (1811-69), Bp. of Philadelphia, b. Prachatitz, Bohemia; d. Philadelphia. He entered the seminary of Budweis but before his ordination came to America, 1836; was ordained by Bp. Dubois of New York, and devoted four years to missionary labors in western New York. In 1846 he joined the Redemptorist Order; served as superior of that order in Pittsburgh; and in 1848 was made vicar provincial of the Redemptorists in America. Elected to the See of Philadelphia, 1852, he worked indefatigably to promote education in his diocese, and to minister to the spiritual and material welfare of his flock. He was prominent at the Council of Baltimore, 1852. Noted for his devotion to the Blessed Sacrament, he was the first American bishop to introduce the Forty Hours devotion into his diocese, 1853. The cause of his beatification was introduced in 1896.—C.E.

Nevada, the 6th state of the United States in size, the 48th in population, and the 30th to be admitted to the Union (31 Oct., 1864); area, 110,690 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 77,407; Catholics
Nevada having been mainly a desert waste until the mines attracted settlers, c. 1856, the history of the Church is not very extensive. Contemporary with the organization of the Territory of Nevada in 1861 was the building of the first church by Rev. H. P. Gallagher, at Genoa. Three years later a church was erected at Austin by Fr. Monteverde, and by 1871 Fr. Merrill had built one at Reno. The most notable pioneer priest of Nevada, however, was Rev. Patrick IVTouogue, later appointed the first Bp. of Sacramento. After having been a miner in California, he decided to become a priest and studied in Chicago, and then at St. Sulpice in Paris, where he was ordained in 1861. He served first as a missionary to the Indians of California and was sent by Abp. Alemany, in 1863, to Virginia City, Nev., where he built a church and established the St. Vincent de Paul Society, as well as two schools, an orphan asylum, and a hospital, all much needed in the unorganized mining community. The state includes parts of the dioceses of Salt Lake and Sacramento (q.v.), Catholic influence on place-names of the state is shown in the following: St. Clair, St. George, St. Thomas, San Jacinto. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in Nevada:

- Catholic Church: 5,743
- Protestant Episcopal Church: 1,207
- Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.: 444
- Lutheran Synodical Conference: 273
- Northern Baptist Convention: 444
- All Other Denominations: 689
- Total Church Membership: 16,145

New, dependency of the British Empire, in the British West Indies, administered by a nominated executive council and a legislative council; area, 50 sq. m.; pop., 38,214. Ecclesiastically the island belongs to the Diocese of Roseau (q.v.), on the Island of Dominica, B.W.I., but there are so few Catholics here that there has never been a permanent mission.

New, term frequently occurring in Holy Scripture to signify the change of heart from infidelity to faith, from sin to virtue. Faith is like a new birth; grace acts like a new leaven; the Christian baptism was abandoned until 1605, when after several futile efforts a settlement was made at Port Royal (now Annapolis, Nova Scotia), by Pierre Du Guast, Sieur Doane, son of the Protestant Episcopal Bp. of New Jersey, entered the Church and the priesthood. During his active career in the city he was instrumental in bringing about a better understanding. The new St. Mary’s was built, 1856, a priory (later an abbey) and St. John being added. A mother house of the Sisters of Charity was established, 1860; the Christian Brothers began their educational work, 1866; the House of Good Shepherd was founded, 1875; and the Dominican Nuns from Uxillins, France, made a foundation, in 1880. The corner-stone of a new cathedral was laid, 1890, and the city now has 33 Catholic churches, and a Catholic population of 150,000.

Newark, Diocese of, New Jersey, embraces Hudson, Passaic, Bergen, Essex, Union, Morris, and Sussex counties; area, 1699 sq. m.; established, 1853; suffragan of New York. Bishops: James R. Bayley (1853-57), Michael A. Corrigan (1873-80); Winand M. Wigger (1881-1901), John J. O’Connor (1901-27), Thomas J. Walsh (1898-1903). Churches, 273; priests, secular, 475; priests, regular, 240; religious women, 3775; colleges, 2; seminaries, 5; high schools, 34; commercial high schools, 35; parochial schools, 138, pupils in parochial schools, 82,823; institutions, 31; Catholics, 72,500.

Newbattle Abbey, near Edinburgh, Scotland, founded 1140, by St. David, king of Melrose and possessed valuable coal mines. It suffered from English incursions, especially in 1385. A part of the monastery was again destroyed by the Earl of Hertford. At the Protestant Reformation but few monks remained. The monastery was converted into a secular house.—C.E.

New Fire, Blessing of, a ceremony of Holy Saturday. It takes place at the door of the church, probably because in ancient times it was necessary to use flint and tinder, producing smoke, because a burning-glass was used. The new fire is carried to the altar in a procession, and the branches of a triple candle are lighted from it, and later the paschal candle. (J. F. P.)

New France, name given to the French claims and possessions on the North American continent, from 1524 when Verrazano (q.v.) reconnoitered the coast and claimed the country for Francis I of France, till their surrender in 1763. It comprised, with the exception of the English colonies of Virginia, Maryland, New England, and New York, the greater part of North America from Hudson Bay to Mexico, including the basins of the St. Lawrence, the Great Lakes, and the Mississippi Valley, Labrador, Nova Scotia (till 1713), New Brunswick, and part of Maine. Jacques Cartier (q.v.), who dedicated the land to the Catholic Faith, failed in his attempt to plant the first colony on the banks of the St. Lawrence, 1534-43, and the project was abandoned until 1605, when after several futile efforts a settlement was made at Port Royal (now Annapolis, Nova Scotia), by Pierre Du Guast, Sieur de Monts, and Samuel de Champlain. When Port Royal was destroyed by the English, Champlain sailed to the St. Lawrence, where he founded Quebec, 1608, and established the first permanent French colony in New France. With the desire to possess the land went the determination to protect the natives and to establish firmly there the name of Jesus Christ. "France aimed to subdue not by the sword but by the Cross, not to overwhelm and crush the nations she invaded, but to convert, civilize, and embrace among her children the (Parkman, Pioneers of France, 462). Probably at the suggestion of Champlain, but in response to the urgent solicitation of the Recollects the Jesuits came in 1625 to take up the work of the missions inaugurated by their predecessors, Biard and Massé, at Port Royal, 1611, and by the Recollects. The "religion" of their missionary labors stirred the soul of France, and inspired in her noble youth the spirit of sacrifice, and the abandonment of a life of ease for the perilous work of the Indian missions that meant untold hardship, and, for many, cruel torture and martyrdom. The expansion of French influence was powerfully promoted by these intrepid missionaries who penetrated the far wilderness, often alone, sometimes side by side with the great explorers and discoverers, winning the admiration, confidence, and friendship of the savage tribes by their courage and self-denial, converting many, and attaching them indissolubly to New France.

The Jesuit Frs. Jogues and Raymbault, penetrated as far as Sault Sainte Marie in 1641, and were, says Bancroft, "the first missionaries to preach the gospel a thousand miles in the interior, five years before John Eliot addressed the Indians six miles from Boston." Frs. Claude Dablon, Claude Allouez, and Jacques Marquette established missions on Lake Superior, 1680, and were the first to inform the world of the rich copper mines of the region. It was Dablon who appointed Marquette to undertake the expedition, joined by Louis Joliet as leader, which resulted in the discovery of the Mississippi from the north, and inspired La Salle's explorations of the great river with the Franciscan Fr. Louis Hennepin, in 1678, which added the vast territory of Louisiana to New France. The bulk of the trade of New France was in furs, and the custom of inducing the Indians to trade furs for rum was a matter of bitter contention between the ecclesiastical and the civil authorities.

From the beginning New France was engaged in almost incessant warfare with the English colonies and their Iroquois allies, but notwithstanding her vast and sparsely populated territory she repelled the invader until, abandoned to her fate by the motherland at the instigation of Voltaire and other malignant or short-sighted publicists, she lost her last fight under the gallant Montcalm on the Plains of Abraham, Quebec, 14 Sept., 1759. Among illustrious names in the history of New France are those of François de Montmorency Laval, first bishop; Marc Lescaert, colonizer; Jean Talon, first intendant; Argenson and Frontenac, governors; de Maisonneuve, founder of Montreal; Iberville, naval commander and colonizer of Louisiana; Bienville, founder of New Orleans; De La Vérendrye, explorer of the West; and Montcalm, soldier.—Garneau, Histoire du Canada, Paris, 1929; Wrong, The Rise and Fall of New France, N. Y., 1928; Finley, The French in the Heart of America, N. Y., 1915.

New Hampshire, the 43rd state of the United States in size, the 41st in population, and the 9th to be admitted to the Union (21 June, 1788); area, 9,341 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 433,083; Catholics (1926), 149,257. Early Puritan prejudice against Catholics was continued in the state constitution of 1784, which included a religious test that barred Catholics from office. Religious disqualifications were only finally abolished in 1877. The few Catholics who settled in the region were attended first from Boston by the Rev. François Matignon, a former professor at Orleans, and later by the future Bp. Cheverus. The permanent establishment of the Church in the state was connected with the conversion of Rev. Daniel Barber and his son, Virgil Horace Barber, both Episcopalian ministers, the former at Claremont, N. H., and the latter the principal of an academy near Utica, N. Y. The son entered the Church first, 1817, and in 1818 he visited his father, who was contemplating the same step, with a Dominican from New York, Rev. Charles D. Ffrench. The latter preached to the Catholics of Claremont and said Mass for them in the home of Daniel Barber. Ultimately the entire Barber family became Catholics, the father joining the Society of Jesus, 1820, when his wife made her profession as a Visit. In 1828 Fr. Barber was sent by Bp. Cheverus to Claremont, to erect the first Catholic church and school of New Hampshire. Many of the congregation of Claremont and others were converted. In 1828 Fr. Ffrench was sent to Dover and by 1836 the church of St. Aloysius was dedicated there. By 1848 Manchester had a resident pastor, the devoted priest, Rev. Wm. McDonald, who built the church of St. Anne. The state comprises the Diocese of Manchester (q.v.). The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in New Hampshire:

- Catholic Church .......................... 136,020
- Congregational Churches .................... 20,094
- Northern Baptist Convention .................. 15,927
- Methodist Episcopal Church .................. 18,574
- Protestant Episcopal Church .................. 6,715
- Orthodox Church (Hellenic) .............. 4,250
- Unitarians ............................. 2,939
- Free Baptists ........................... 2,898
- All Other Denominations ..................... 8,668
- Total Church Membership .................... 210,736

—C.E.; Shea.

New Hebrides, Vicariate Apostolic of, Oceania (Anglo-French possession), comprises the New Hebrides, Banks, and Torres Islands; prefecture, 1901; vicariate, 1904; entrusted to the Marist Fathers. Vicar Apostolic: Victor Donoué, S.M. (1904); residence at Port Vila. Churches, 16; chapels, 10; priests (Marists), 20; religious women, 30; schools for catechists, 42; institutions, 3; Catholics, 2,335.—C.E.

Newhouse Abbey, Lincoln, the first Premonstratensian abbey in England, founded, 1143, by Peter de Cousel with monks from Lieguen Abbey near Calais, France. From it were founded Premonstratensian Abbeys at Alnwick, Barlings, Bileigh, Coverham, Croxton, Dale, St. Agatha's, Newbo, and Sully, all in England. It was consecrated by Henry VIII. Only parts of the old foundations remain.—C.E.

New Jersey, the 45th state of the United States in size, the 10th in population, and the 3rd to be admitted to the Union (18 Dec., 1787); area, 8,224 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 3,155,900; Catholics (1928), 855,027. New Jersey’s early history is marred by the bigotry against Catholics which characterized most of the colonies. In 1680 a Catholic, William Douglass, was refused his seat in the General Assembly, as an elected representative from Bergen County, because of his religion. In 1701 tolerance was extended to all but “papists,” and even in the Constitution of 1776 Catholics were tacitly excluded. The first priests to visit the scattered Catholics of northern New Jersey were two Jesuits, Fr. Thomas Harvey and Fr. Charles Gage, who had come from England in 1682 with Gov. Thomas Dongan of New York. Mass was said by them in Woodbridge the year of their arrival. About 1748 Fr. Theodore Schneider, S.J., from Goshenhoppen (now Bally), Pa., visited the German Catholics of New Jersey, without arousing opposition, since he also exercised his profession of medicine. Other early missionary priests were the Jesuits, Fr. Ferdinand Farner (Steinemeyer) and Fr. Robert Harding of Philadelphia. The former’s records of baptisms in private houses in various parts of New Jersey, extending from 1758-81, are still preserved. Early in the 19th century French refugees from Santo Domingo who had settled at Elizabeth, Hoboken, and elsewhere were visited regularly by Fr. Pierre Vianney, Fr. Jean Tissorant, and Fr. Pierre Malou, the latter being stationed at Madison. Augustinian missions were established at Cape May and Trenton in 1803 and 1805, and a member of that order, Fr. Philip Lariscy of New York, was an active missionary in New Jersey, c. 1821. The German Catholics settled at Bally, Pa., visited Haddon (now Echo Lake) in 1803, had a rude plank chapel in 1803. Trenton had the first substantial church, built in 1814, named in honor of St. Francis, and served by priests from Philadelphia. The first church at Paterson, St. John’s, was built in 1821, by Fr. Richard Bulger; and St. John’s Church at Newark was built in 1826, by Fr. Gregory Pardow. Included in the state are the dioceses of Newark and Trenton (q.v.). The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in New Jersey:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Religion</th>
<th>Membership</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Catholic Church</td>
<td>790,764</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>131,211</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church in the U.S.</td>
<td>102,296</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Protestant Episcopal Church</td>
<td>67,996</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northern Baptist Convention</td>
<td>62,769</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reformed Church in America</td>
<td>37,950</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran General Council</td>
<td>19,680</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>National Baptist Convention</td>
<td>19,149</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Russian Orthodox Church</td>
<td>11,308</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congregational Churches</td>
<td>10,839</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jewish Congregations</td>
<td>15,720</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All Other Denominations</td>
<td>69,298</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Church Membership</td>
<td>1,357,363</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

—C.E.; Shea.

New Law, the Law enacted by Christ as found in the N.T. in the Gospels and the letters of the Apostles, and in the traditions of the Church, in contradistinction to the Old Law as found in the O.T. (Ex.)

Newman, John Henry (1801-90), cardinal, convert, and leader of the Tractarian Movement; b. London; d. Edgbaston, England. He was educated at Ealing, and at 15 “converted” to the necessity for dogma and an Apostolic Church. In 1816 he matriculated at Trinity College, Oxford, and in 1818 won a scholarship tenable for nine years. Despite a breakdown, which lowered his scholastic rank, he was elected fellow of Oriel. He was ordained, 1824, becoming curate of St. Clement’s, Oxford, where he developed a more religious bias. In his formative period he acquired knowledge of Catholic doctrine from various Oxford clergymen, notably Whately and Hawkins. He was made vicar of St. Mary’s, 1828. After quarreling with Hawkins, he resigned his tutorship, 1832, and took a Mediterranean cruise with Froude. Upon his return to England, the Tractarian Movement, of which he was the philosopher and the guide, began with Keble’s Assize sermon on “National Apostacy,” 14 July, 1833. To bring about a restoration of the primitive Church, Newman undertook to write “Tracts for the Times,” from which the Tractarian Movement takes its name, until “Tract 90” (distinguishing the corruptions assailed in the Anglican Thirty-nine Articles from the acceptable doctrines of the Council of Trent), forced him, because of its Roman leanings, to resign his living at St. Mary’s. He then designated his position the via media (middle way), maintaining from 1833, that England lay midway between Rome and Geneva, Catholicity and Luthero-Calvinism. From 1839 the via media appeared, as he saw it, to have the support of Pope Gregory XVI in his subterfuges of past heresies. After 1841 he lived with friends at Littlemore in monastic seclusion, and Fr. Dominic, a Passionist, received him into the Catholic Church, 1845. Ordained at Rome, 1846, he returned to England, near the close of 1847, as an Oratorian, residing successively at Maryvale, St. Wilfred’s College, Cheadle, St. Ann’s, Birmingham, and finally at Edgbaston where, but for four years in Ireland, when he wrote “Idea of a University,” he lived for 40 years. Early in his priesthood he established the London Oratory. The “scientific” history, cultivated by the “Rambler,” the proposed Oxford oratory, and the pope’s temporal power, then in the balance, were questions which brought him into conflict with other prominent Catholics, but his position was justified by his greater perspicacity and foresight. Opportunity to clear all mistrust came, 1858, with Kingsley’s careless attack, precipitating the “Apologia pro vita sua,” a “religious autobiography of unsurpassed interest,” revolutionizing “the popular estimate of its author.” Trinity made him honorary fellow, 1875, Leo XIII elevated the aged Oratorian to the cardinalate, 1879. His influence in the Anglican as well as the Catholic communion was profound, inducing many hundreds to follow him. Universally considered one of the great masters of prose style, in the realm of poetry, e.g., his

Seal of New Jersey

New Melleray Abbey, Peosta, Ia., Trappist monastery, founded, 1849, by Fr. James O’Gorman of Mt. Melleray, Ireland; made an abbey, 1859. Priests: 5; brothers, 15.

New Mexico, the 4th state of the United States in size, the 43rd in population, and the 47th to be admitted to the Union (6 Jan., 1912); area, 122,634 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 360,350; Catholics (1928), 167,262. The first attempts at founding a permanent mission were made, 1581, by the Franciscans from Mexico, Fr. Agustín Rodriguez, Fr. Juan de Santa María, and Fr. Francisco Lopez, who gave the region the name of New Mexico. The result, after an auspicious beginning, was the successive deaths of all three at the hands of the Indians. A second beginning was made in 1597 under the military leader, Don Juan de Oñate. He was accompanied by Fr. Alonzo Martinez and nine Franciscan companions and in 1598 the first mission was established and a church built at San Juan de los Caballeros, about 30 m. n. of Santa Fé. The latter settlement, a white colony, was founded and named, c. 1606, a church being built some time after 1622. By 1608 the Franciscans could report 8000 baptisms among the Indians, and by 1626 the number had grown to 34,000, among 37 missions. Prominent among the missionaries were Fr. Alonzo de Benavides, Fr. Nicholas Lopez, and the saintly mystic, Mother Maria de Jesus de Agreda. In 1680, Indian revolts against Spanish government and against the efforts of the missionaries to put down pagan practises culminated in a massacre during which 21 missionaries were killed, the churches destroyed, and all traces of religion obliterated. In 1692, however, the missions began to be restored under the governor, Antonio de Vargas, assisted by Fr. Francisco Corvera and several associates. For 150 years the missions had a checkered history under Mexican bishops living far from them. The revival of faith came after the cession of New Mexico to the United States in 1848, and the appointment of the zealous apostle, Rev. John B. Lamy, as vicar Apostolic of the territory in 1850. The state includes the Archdiocese of Santa Fé, and a part of the Diocese of El Paso (q.v.). Catholic influence on place-names of the state is shown in the following: Lamy, Las Cruces, Iagües, St. Unis, San Acacia, San Antonio, San Fidel, San Ignacio, San Jon, San José, San Lorenzo, San Marcelo, San Mateo, San Patricio, San Rafael, San Ysidro, Santa Cruz, Santa Fé, Santa Rita, Santa Rosa. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in New Mexico:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Church</th>
<th>Membership</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Catholic</td>
<td>177,727</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>4,485</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.</td>
<td>3,892</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disciples of Christ</td>
<td>2,244</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All Other Denominations</td>
<td>7,680</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Church Membership</td>
<td>209,809</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

—C. E.; Shea.

New Norcia, Abbey Nullius of, Benedictine abbey, in southwestern Western Australia, founded, 1846, for the Christianization of the aborigines. Established as an abbey nullius and prefecture Apostolic, 1867; suffragan of Perth. Dom Rudesindus Salvado (d. 1900) founded the mission. His successors at the head of its administration were Fulgentius Torres (1901-14) and Anselm Catalan (1915). Churches, 11; priest, secular, 1; priests, regular, 19; religious women, 25; seminary, 1; high schools, 3; primary schools, 5; boarding schools, 4; institutions, 2; Catholics, 2600.—C.E.

New Orleans, city, Louisiana. From its very early history Catholics have been connected with the development of New Orleans. Catholic missionaries accompanied the Catholic discoverers, De Soto, Monjas, and Vargas, and in 1699 the explorers of the territory embracing New Orleans. It was placed under the authority of the Bp. of Quebec, and the Indians of the territory were under the spiritual jurisdiction of the Jesuits. In 1718 Bienville selected the present site of New Orleans as provincial headquarters and the plans as drawn up by the Chevalier Le Blond de La Tour included a parish church which was dedicated to St. Louis, and occupied the spot which the old St. Louis Cathedral later occupied. In 1721 Fr. François de Charlevoix, S.S., one of the earliest historians of Louisiana recounts that he "said Mass in a large wooden warehouse... a chapel being under construction at the time." The "Company of the West" to which New Orleans was transferred, 1717, by the Duke of Orleans, was obliged to furnish and support churches and priests under the authority of the Bp. of Quebec. On the division of Louisiana into three ecclesiastical portions, May, 1722, New Orleans was entrusted to the Discalced Carmelites, who were superseded by the Capuchins in 1740 and in 1751, the Rev. Beaubois, S.J., the founder of the Jesuit mission in New Orleans, brought over a congregation of Ursulines to minister in a hospital and school. They reached New Orleans, 6 Aug., 1727, and founded the first convent for women within the present limits of the United States. The convent they occupied was the oldest building within the territory of the Louisiana Purchase, and into it they received the first American-born nun, an Iroquois Indian, Mary Turpin. The Jesuits also introduced into Louisiana the culture of sugar-cane, oranges, and figs. Despite their many valuable contributions and their work among the Indians and Negroes, the superior Council of Louisiana, imitating that of Paris, suppressed the society in its province, confiscated their property, and expelled its members. Fr. Boudin, S.J., the patriarch of the colony, too old to leave, was maltreated until Étienne de Boré rescued and sheltered him. Subsequent to thecession of Louisiana to Spain the Spanish Capuchins came to New Orleans where they caused difficulty by their severe censure of the laxity of the French Capuchins. To ameliorate conditions Fr. Cirilo de Barcelona was appointed auxiliary Bishop of the Bp. of Santiago de Cuba, under whose tutelage New Orleans had been placed, with residence at New Orleans. By a fire which devastated the city, 21 March, 1788, the church, Capuchin convent, school, and Fr. Cirilo's house were destroyed. Through the generosity of Don Andreas Almonaster y Roxas the house for the clergy, school, and hospital were rebuilt, and a new cathedral, charity hospital, Ursuline chapel, and leper hospital were constructed. In 1793 Rt. Rev. Luis Pefialver y Cardenas was consecrated first bishop of the newly-created See of St. Louis of New Orleans. He inaugurated a program of strict reform in which connection he called the first and only synod held in colonial New Orleans.

Following the sale of Louisiana to the United States several clergymen and nuns withdrew from New Orleans. The Ursulines who remained were assured by President Jefferson that they and their property would be unmolested, and by appeal to the legislature had a law passed, 28 Jan., 1818, providing that testimony when required of a nun should be taken at the convent by commission. To accommodate the great increase of English-speaking people, including Irish immigrants, St. Patrick's church was dedicated, 21 April, 1833. In 1842 Bp. Blanc and Fr. Rousselou, V.G., founded the Sisters of the Holy Family for the care of colored orphans and aged poor, the first colored sisterhood established in the United States. In connection with charitable work among the Negroes the name of Thomy Lafon, colored philanthropist, is important. It was through his generosity that Abp. Janssens later was enabled to erect an asylum for boys, reformatory for colored girls, and improve the home for aged Negro paupers. During the period of rapid increase in churches, beginning 1844, the church of the Immaculate Conception, credited with being the first church in the world dedicated to the Immaculate Conception, was erected. In 1847 the Jesuits resumed activities in the city and the erection of their college was begun. The Fathers of the Congregation of the Holy Cross established a manual industrial school for male orphans, 1855, and opened their college, 1879. The establishment of several institutions of higher education including a seminary, hospitals, asylums, and various charitable institutions followed rapidly. The city at present has 52 churches, 47 parochial schools, including those exclusively colored in attendance, and about 251,000 Catholics.

New Orleans, Archdiocese of, Louisiana, embraces Louisiana between 31° N. latitude and 91° W. longitude; area, 13,090 sq. m.; diocese, 1793; archdiocese, 1850; suffragans: Alexandria, Lafayette, Little Rock, Mobile, and Natchez. Bishops: Luis Pefialver y Cardenas (1793-1801), Francis Porro (bishop-elect), Louis W. Dubourg (1815-24), Joseph Rosati, C.M. (1824-27), Leo de Neckère, C.M. (1829-32), Anthony Blanc (1835-60), J. M. Odin (1861-70), Napoleon J. Perché (1870-83), F.X. Leray (1883-87), Francis Janssens (1888-97), Placide L. Chapelle (1897-1905), G. A. Rouxel (1899-1908), James H. Blank, S.M. (1900-17), John W. Shaw (1918). Churches, 229; priests, secular, 137; priests, regular, 190; religious women, 1293; university, 1; colleges, 6; seminaries, 3; academies, 13; high schools, 2; parochial schools, 81; pupils in parochial schools, 27,487; institutions, 18; Catholics, 341,565.

New Rochelle, College of, New Rochelle, N.Y., founded, 1904; conducted by the Ursuline Nuns; college of arts and sciences; summer school; professors, 51; students, 777; degrees conferred in 1929, 151.

New Subiaco Abbey, Little Rock, Ark., founded by the Benedictines, 1878, raised to an abbey, 1891; conducts a seminary and college. Abbot, 1; priests, 35; clerics, 11; brothers, 21; students, 56.

New Thought, a form of philosophy based on the progressive ability of mankind, which its adherents have collected into a more or less definite system, though they deny the applicability of that term. Its fundamental ideas are: (1) that God is omnipresent and immanent in all created things; (2) that man is a divine soul "a microcosm of God"; (3) that he is under the domination of universal law. New Thought denies all idea of atonement, regarding evil "as only misdirected energy." Its purpose is, through thought, to direct that energy properly. It recognizes no authority save the voice of the soul speaking to each individual, hence each man's actions are determined solely by and for himself.—Allen, The Message of New Thought, Lond., 1914.

Newton, John (1823-95), general and engineer, b. Norfolk, Va.; d. New York. The son of Gen. Thomas Newton, he graduated at the U. S. Military Academy, 1842, was commissioned major, 1861, distinguished himself in the Civil War, in 1863 was brevetted major-general of volunteers, brigadier-general and major-general of regulars. He was commissioned lieutenant-colonel of engineers in the regular service, 1865, superintended the work on the improvement of the Hudson River between Troy and New York, on the channel between New Jersey and Staten Island, the harbors on Lake Champlain, and removed the dangerous rocks in Hell Gate, the water-way between the East River and Long Island Sound. He was made commissioner of public works of New York, 1886, a post he resigned to become president of the Panama Railroad Company, 1888. Early in his life he entered the Catholic Church.—C.E.

New World, The, official weekly organ of the Archdiocese of Chicago, published in Chicago, Ill., by the Catholic Press Co.; founded, 1892; circulation, 68,750.

New Year's Day. See Circumcision, Feast of the.

New Year's Eve (Veil of the Circumcision), commonly observed in Catholic churches by a service of reparation for the misdeeds of the year passing, and of thanksgiving and joy on the opening of the new year. The Psalm “Miserere” and the hymn "Te Deum" are chanted, and the sermon is followed by Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament.

It was introduced into the United States at St. Francis Xavier's Church, New York, in 1883. (Ed.)

New York, the 29th state of the United States in size, the 1st in population, and the 11th to be admitted to the Union (26 July, 1788); area, 48,294 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 10,385,227; Catholics (1928), 3,290,150. Illustrious names glorify the early annals of the Church in New York. Bl. Isaac Jogues (q.v.) was martyred in 1646, at Ossernenon, near Auriesville, after having suffered excruciating tortures at the hands of the Mohawks on a previous journey through their lands in 1642. His companion, René Goupil, a devoted lay volunteer, or donné, had then been put to death, but Fr. Joseph Chauveau; Jacques and Jean de Lamberville. The Onondaga mission was restored in 1667 under Frs. Jacques Fremin, Jean Pierron, Jacques Bruyas, Julien Garmond, in New York City; the counties of Dutchess, Orange, Putnam, Rockland, Sullivan, Ulster, and Westchester in New York State; also the Bahama Islands (British possessions); area, 9121 sq. m.; Catholics (q.v.). Catholic influence on the place-names of the state is shown in the following: Carmel, St. Albans, St. Bonaventure, St. Clara, St. Huberts, St. James, St. Johnsville, St. Josephs, St. Lawrence, St. Remy, St. Regis Falls. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in New York:

Total Church Membership ........................................ 4,315,404

Catholic Church ........................................ 2,745,552
Methodist Episcopal Church ................................. 328,259
Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. ............................ 227,945
Protestant Episcopal Church .............................. 225,844
Northern Baptist Convention ................................ 182,443
Jewish Congregations ........................................... 113,924
Lutheran General Council ...................................... 73,584
Reformed Church in America .................................. 66,773
Congregational Church ........................................ 65,021
All Other Denominations ...................................... 289,287

New York, Archdiocese of, New York, comprises the boroughs of Manhattan, Bronx, Richmond, the counties of Dutchess, Orange, Putnam, Rockland, Sullivan, Ulster, and Westchester in New York State; also the Bahama Islands (British possessions); area, 9121 sq. m. (New York, 4717 sq. m.; Bahama Islands, 4404 sq. m.); diocese, 1808; archdiocese, 1850; suffragens: Albany, Brooklyn, Buffalo, Newark, Ogdens...
The Catholic Church had no foothold in New York until the end of 1664, as in the earlier period of Dutch history, Catholic worship was not tolerated, although Bl. Isaac Jogues, S.J. (q.v.), had been hospitably received by Gov. Kieft, Dutch Governor of New York. The first Mass is believed to have been celebrated (30 Oct., 1683) in a chapel located on the present site of the custom-house. Thomas Dongan, Catholic Governor of New York, enacted, 1683, the first law establishing religious liberty passed in New York, and, in 1685, the first Catholic educational institution in New York State, the New York Latin School, was established by the Jesuits Frs. Thomas Harvey, Henry Harrison, and Charles Gage. The law enacted by Gov. Dongan was nullified by the New York Assembly, 1691, and a Bill of Rights passed which excluded Catholics from its provisions; in 1711, another law was passed barring Catholics from office and from franchise. The severity with which these laws were enforced, and the intensity of the anti-Catholic feeling of the Revolution period practically abolished the Catholic colony there. The few remaining were ministered to by Fr. Ferdinand Steinmayer (or "Fr. Farmer") who celebrated Mass in such places as a loft in Water Street. On the restoration of peace the number of Catholics increased rapidly. On 10 June, 1785, largely through the instrumentality of the Spanish minister, Don Diego de Garoqui, an act of incorporation was secured for the "Trustees of the Roman Catholic church of the City of New York," and 4 Nov., 1786, St. Peter's Church at Barclay and Church Streets, the first permanent structure for a Catholic Church erected in New York, was opened. A Dominican, Fr. William O'Brien, famed for his relief work in the pestilence, 1795-98, is considered the organizer of it. In 1808 when Fr. Anthony Kohlman, S.J., was its pastor the congregation numbered 14,000, of which the majority were Irish and the remainder French, German, and Italian. The increasingly large number of Catholics necessitated the building of another church and, 4 May, 1815, St. Patrick's Cathedral, on Mott Street, was formally dedicated by Bp. Cheverus of Boston. The present St. Patrick's Cathedral, occupying the block between Fifth and Madison avenues, Fiftieth and Fifty-first streets, was dedicated 25 May, 1879. It is eleven in size of the great churches of the world.

The first bishop appointed was Fr. Richard Luke Concanen, an Irish Dominican, consecrated 24 April, 1808, at Rome; he died, however, before reaching the United States, and the first bishop in residence was another Irish Dominican, Rev. John Connolly consecrated at Rome, 6 Nov., 1814. Bp. John Hughes the fourth bishop and first archbishop of New York is the really great figure in the constructive period of New York's history; he abolished church trusteeship, caused the overthrow of the Public School Society subservient of Catholic interests, and was honored by presidents and statesmen for his patriotism and comprehension of American statesmanship and government. In his successor Abp. John McCloskey, New York claims the honor of having a native son made, 1875, the first American cardinal. In conjunction with St. Patrick's Cathedral a parochial school was opened, 1815, and this with St. Peter's parochial school founded, 1801, was the pioneer of the Catholic system of free parochial schools throughout the United States. The arrival of various religious orders, e.g., Ursulines, 1812, Sisters of Charity, 1817, Religious of the Sacred Heart, 1841, gave an impetus to the foundation of numerous other schools. Under the able supervision of the Jesuits a college known as the New York Literary Institution was in operation until 1813, when due to the uncertain status of the order at that period it was disorganized. The foundation of several institutions of higher education followed rapidly; among these may be mentioned Mount St. Vincent Academy and College, Manhattanville College, Manhattan College, Fordham University, and Xavier College. Out of the Xavier Alumni Sodality which was established, 1863, by students of the last named college grew the Catholic Club of New York City. It is a social and cultural organization and its membership comprises prominent figures in the community who are active in sponsoring movements for the advancement of the Church. Worthy of mention are its early presidents Joseph Thoron, Franklin H. Churchill, Charles G. Herbermann, Edwin T. Slevin, William Lummis, R. Duncan Harris, and Robert J. Hugnet, all outstanding figures in the city. The club possesses a valuable library of over 50,000 volumes including several rare manuscripts.

The role played by New York Catholic publishers in Catholic education is important, for from early times New York has been a great producing and distributing center for Catholic literature of all types. The first Catholic book published in New York was an edition of Pastorini's "History of the Christian Church," which was published by Bernard Dornin, the first publisher of exclusively Catholic works in the United States. The first American Year Book, the "Catholic Laity's Dictionary to the Church Service with an Almanac for the Year 1817," was published by Matthew Field. In 1837 the great firm of Sadlier was founded and commenced its career with an edition of Butler's "Lives of the Saints," and the Bible in monthly parts; Benziger Brothers opened a New York branch of its famous German publishing house in 1853, and the Catholic Publication Society was founded, 1866, by Fr. Isaac Hecker, C.S.P. Other well-known Catholic publishing houses of more recent foundation in the city are the America Press, publishers of the weekly review "America;" P. J. Kenny and Sons, The

In Catholic charitable work New York may be considered the pioneer city, and as early as 1809 a subscription for the relief of the poor was raised under the direction of Fr. Kohlman. In 1817 an orphan asylum was founded in charge of the Sisters of Charity and the "New York Catholic Benevolent Society" for its supervision was incorporated, 1817, as "The Sisters of Charity," the first Catholic society in the state to be so legalized; in 1829 the Union Emigrant Society, the forerunner of the Irish Emigrant Society and the Emigrant Industrial Savings Bank, was founded, and was followed by the establishment of several other societies for immigrant aid.

St. Patrick's, the first New York Conference of the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, which was established 1849, has exercised a widespread influence on charitable work and was largely responsible for the foundation of the great Catholic Protectory. The city has several Catholic hospitals, reform schools, fresh air homes, settlement houses, prisoner aid societies, day nurseries, foundling asylums, etc. That Catholics have figured prominently in the cultural, civil, scientific and social life of New York City may be further attested by the following list which includes only a few of the numerous renowned New York Catholics: Gunning S. Bedford, famed physician who organized University Medical College, "first professor of obstetrics who ever held an obstetric clinic in the United States"; John R. Brady, first Catholic judge of the Supreme Court; Charles G. Herbermann (q.v.); Francis Kernan, statesman and U.S. senator, 1876-82; Bruno Oscar Salmi, first Catholic judge of the Supreme Court; John Newton, engineer, famed for his bridge at Hell Gate; Lorenzo da Ponte, first instructor of Italian at Columbia and first in the United States to point out the beauties of Dante; Denis O'Brien, first Catholic judge of Court of Appeals; Thomas O'Conor, a pioneer American Catholic editor, published "Shamrock, or Hibernian Chronicle," 1810, compiled a history of the War of 1812; Condé Pellen (q.v.) poet, philosopher, and educator; Thomas Fortune Ryan, financier. The Catholic population of New York City (1929) is 2,160,000.

New Zealand, self-governing dominion of the British Empire, in the South Pacific Ocean; area, 103,566 sq. m.; pop., 1,244,489. The first Catholic in New Zealand was Thomas Poynton, an Irishman who settled in Hokianga in 1829. In 1835 New Zealand was made a separate diocese, the Apostolic of Western Oceania, and in 1836 its first vicar Apostolic and seven Marist Brothers arrived. Catholic colonization was begun by Irish peasants and evangelization by French missionaries. In 1842 New Zealand constituted a separate vicariate, and in 1848 it was divided into the two dioceses, Auckland and Wellington. The Diocese of Dunedin was formed from part of the Diocese of Wellington in 1860. Wellington was raised to an archiepiscopal see in 1887, and the same year the Diocese of Christchurch was created. Ten years later, New Zealand, formerly subject to Australia, was made an independent ecclesiastical province. From the beginning, the church was striving to convert the native Maoris. When the Marists retired from the Diocese of Auckland to that of Wellington in 1850, there were over 5000 neophytes. By 1853 the Diocese of Wellington included about 1000 native Christians, and homes and schools had been founded. The Maori mission flourished until 1860, the beginning of the racial war in which practically all the Catholic missions were destroyed. The work of the Marists, and the Mill Hill Fathers, who are gradually restoring the missions, is most promising.

New Zealand included in 1929 the following ecclesiastical divisions: Archdiocese of Wellington. Dioceses: Auckland, Christchurch, Dunedin (q.v.); Churches, 583; secular priests, 190; priests regular, 149; religious women, 1516; colleges, 3; seminaries, 2; high schools, 43; primary schools, 162; charitable institutions, 19; Catholics, 175,714.—C.E.

Nez Percés (Fr., pierced noses) or Sahaptin, Indian tribe formerly located in Western Idaho and adjacent portions of Oregon and Washington. They were so named by French traders from their custom of wearing a dentalium shell through a hole bored in the septum of the nose. In their primitive condition they were a semi-sedentary tribe, depending on hunting and fishing, living in houses, and wearing skins. Polygamy was practiced; inheritance was in the male line; their religion was animistic and free from elaborate myth and ritual. The clan system was unknown, and the chiefs were usually elected. When first known, 1805, they numbered 6000, but have dwindled in numbers until in 1928 there were only 1387 who live on the Fort Lapwai reservation in northern Idaho. Christianity was introduced by the Catholic Iroquois and Canadian employees of the Hudson's Bay Company traders. The Jesuits, assisted by the Sisters of St. Joseph, carry on missionary work among them at St. Joseph's mission, Slickpoo, Idaho.—C.E., XIII, 326.

Niagara Seminary, Niagara Falls, N. Y., founded 1856, attached to Niagara University, under Vincentians; fathers, 39; lay professors, 9; brothers, 2; students, 460.

Niagara University, Niagara Falls, N. Y., founded 1856; conducted by the Vincentian Fathers; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; graduate school; professors, 31; students, 350; degrees conferred in 1929, 47.
Nicæa, Councils of, respectively the First and Seventh Ecumenical Councils, held at Nicæa in Bithynia. The First Council of Nicæa was held in 325 on the occasion of the heresy of Arius. Other matters dealt with were the controversy as to the time of celebrating Easter and the Meletian schism. The Second Council of Nicæa was held in 787 to deal with Iconoclasm.—C.E. (M. P. H.)

Nicaragua, republic of Central America; area, 51,660 sq. m.; pop., 638,119. Spanish explorers and conquerors in the 16th century brought with them missionaries, and in 1584 the Diocese of Nicaragua (now Managua) was erected. Until 1822 the country was part of the Spanish province of Guatemala (q.v.). It became an independent republic in 1840. Church and State are separate, and the constitution guarantees freedom to all forms of religious worship, but special privileges to none. Champlain recommended constructing a canal across the country early in the 17th century, and Admiral Ammen (q.v.), as head of a commission appointed by the U. S. government, advocated this in his report, 1872. The country is thus divided for ecclesiastical administration:

Managua, A. 1913 35 44
Granada, D. 1913 24
Leon, D. 1913 26
Managua, D. 1924
Bluefields, V.A. 1918 14 9 11 15,000

—C.E.

Nicene Creed, the doctrinal decree formulated against Arius by the First Council of Nicæa in 325 so called because it is composed in the form of a profession of faith. Drafted by Eusebius of Cæsarea, it was accepted by the Council after some modifications had been made therein.—C.E.; Lumby, History of Creeds, Lond., 1880. (P. K.)

Niceno-Constantinopolitan Creed, a profession of the Christian faith, which is accepted by the Catholic Church, the Eastern Churches separated from Rome, and by most Protestant Churches. It is more complete than the Apostles' Creed and expresses explicitly the consubstantiality of Jesus Christ with God the Father, which the Arians denied, and the Divinity of the Holy Ghost, which the Macedonians rejected. It received its name from the false assumption that it is an amplification of the Nicene Creed which was supposed to have originated at the First Council of Constantinople in 381. However, it antedates the Council by several years. In the 11th century Rome approved of the insertion into it of the word "Filioque" (and of the Son), which declared against the Greeks that the Holy Ghost proceeds from both Father and Son. This creed has found a place in the Ordinary of the Mass.—C.E.; Lumby, History of Creeds, Lond., 1880. (P. K.)

Niche, a recess for the reception of a statue, to give it emphasis, frame it effectively and afford protection; one of the chief characteristics of Gothic architecture. Sculpture was introduced in the Romanesque period, but the frame was little more than the flanking shaft supporting an arch. The Gothic builders realized that sculpture to be architectural must be incorporated with the building. This was done by the canopied niche which also protected the statue and produced a rich composition of line, light, and shade. The wall was recessed and a pedestal added. In the 14th and 15th centuries the canopy was elaborately decorated.—C.E.

Nicholas I (Gr., victor of the people), Saint, Pope (858-867), b. Rome; d. there. Elected after the disintegration of the empire of Charlemagne, he found Christianity threatened by laxity in the observance of moral and civil law. To uphold Divine and Church law against princes and worldly bishops, he protected the minor clergy and suffragan bishops against their exactions. He upheld the right of appealing to Rome, against the decisions of Abp. Hincmar of Reims; defended the integrity of the marriage bond against Lothair II; and supported Ignatius, Patriarch of Constantinople against the in­truder, Photius. Feast, R. Cal., 13 Nov.—C.E.; Mann.

Nicholas II (Gerhard of Burgundy), Pope (1058-61), b. Chevron, France; d. Florence, Italy. Bp. of Florence, he was elected at Sienna, after the antipope John Mincius had established himself at Rome, and at once advanced with an army and seized the city, where he was enthroned, 1059. Under the influence of Hildebrand he labored to suppress simony and clerical concubinage among the Milanese. In regard to Sicily, he concluded an alliance with the Normans which promised peace to that country. One of the most important acts of his pontificate was the enactment of a law regulating papal elections.—C.E.; Mann.

Nicholas III (Giovanni Gaetani Orsini), Pope (1277-80), b. Rome, c. 1216; d. Soriano, Italy. As cardinal-deacon he played an important part in papal affairs after 1244. While pope he attempted to free Rome from foreign influence, and to check the Angevins in central Italy. At the request of the Tatar khan he sent Franciscan missionaries to Persia and China.—C.E.

Nicholas IV (Giobolamo Masci), Pope (1288-92), b. Ascoli, Italy; d. Rome. He was a Franciscan, general of his order, mediator between France and Castile, and Card.-bp. of Palestrina. As pope he was unduly influenced by the Colonna, and supported the Angevins in Sicily against James of Aragon, while opposing Rudolf of Hapsburg in Hungary. During his pontificate missionaries were sent to Bulgaria, Ethiopia, China, and the Tatars.—C.E.

Nicholas V (Tommaso Parentucci), Pope (1447-55), b. Sarzana, Italy, 1397; d. Rome. A patron of literature and the fine arts he had come in contact with the Renaissance movement in Rome while in the service of Bp. Albergati. At the Council of Florence, 1438, he took a prominent part in the discussion of Patristic and Scholastic philosophy with the Greeks. When elected he restored parts of Rome, welcomed Humanists, and founded the Vatican Library which he designated was to be

NICÉA

679

NICHOLAS V

NICÉN

679

NICHOLAS V
opened to all scholars. At the request of James II of Scotland, he issued a Bull, 1450-51, providing for the foundation of the University of Glasgow. He did much to weaken the conciliar theory among the nations of Christendom; received the submission of the antipope Anacletus; and his adherents; and set up legates to France and Germany to reform abuses. He granted self-government to the Romans and performed the last imperial coronation in Rome, that of Emperor Frederick III, 1432. His efforts at union with the Greeks failed. This, together with the fall of Constantinople and the discovery of republican conspiracies in Rome, dealt him a fatal blow.—C.E.; Pastor.

Nicholas V, antipope. See Rinalducci, Pietro.

Nicholas of Cusa or Nicholas Cretius (c. 1400-64), cardinal, b. Cues, Germany; d. Todi, Umbria. At the Council of Basel he labored for a reform of the calendar and the union of the churches, but upheld in theory the superiority of the council. He himself, however, as legate to Germany, was particularly noted for his reform work under Nicholas V. In 1450 he was named Bp. of Brixen, but was driven from his see by Sigmond, Count of the Tyrol, who vehemently opposed his attempted reforms. In his philosophy Nicholas of Cusa cast off Aristotelian methods and definitions for deep speculations and mystical forms of his own; in theology, he discussed the Trinity profoundly, and though some have proclaimed his idea of God pantheistic, his writings are all strictly Christian. Among his theological treatises the most famous is “De visione Dei.”—C.E.

Nicholas of Flüe, Blessed, confessor (1417-87), hermit, b. and d. near Sachseln, Switzerland. He was a cantonal judge who, after many years of married life, became a hermit and was noted for his prophetic powers and his supernatural gift of abstinence from food. Represented as a warrior, or land; d. Briel. He studied at Heidelberg, became a hermit and was noted for his property powers and his supernatural gift of abstinence from food. Represented as a warrior, or land; d. Briel. Feast, R. Cal., 9 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Nicholas of Tolentino, Saint, confessor (1246-1306), b. Sant' Angelo, Italy; d. Tolentino. A model of holiness from childhood, he excelled in his studies and at an early age was made canon of St. Salvator's Church. He joined the Hermits of St. Augustine, 1263; was ordained priest, and devoted himself to missionary labors. He practiced austere mortification; was favored with visions and experienced many miracles. Patron of mariners, merchants, and sailors. Emblems: a chalice. Canonized, 1446. Body in the Augustinian church at Tolentino. Feast, R. Cal., 10 Sept.—C.E.; Butler.

Nicholas of Lyra (1270-1340), Franciscan exegete, b. Normandy; d. Paris. His “Postille,” in which he emphasizes the literal sense of Sacred Scripture, has placed him in the foremost rank of biblical scholars. The first scriptural commentary printed, it was for centuries a favorite manual and Luther owed much to it.—C.E.

Nicholas of Myra (or of Bari), Saint, confessor (d. c. 352), Bp. of Myra, b. Patara, Lycia, Asia Minor; d. Myra. Although he is popular in the Greek as well as the Latin Church, nothing is historically certain about him except that he was Bp. of Myra in the 4th century. In his youth he is supposed to have made a pilgrimage to Egypt and Palestine; shortly after his return he became bishop. During the persecution of Diocletian he was imprisoned, but released after the accession of Constantine, and attended the Council of Nicea. He was buried in the cathedral at Myra, but in 1087 Italian merchants stole his body and carried it to Bari, Italy. The numerous miracles St. Nicholas is said to have wrought before and after his death are outgrowths of a long tradition. In art are as various as his miracles. In Germany, Switzerland, and the Netherlands it is the custom to make him the secret purveyor of gifts to children on 6 Dec.; in the United States and some other countries St. Nicholas has become identified with the popular Santa Claus. Patron of Greece, Russia, Naples, Sicily, Apulia, Lorraine, Limerick, etc., of mariners, merchants, cooperers, pawnbrokers, travelers, bakers, brewers. Emblems: children, mitre, vessel. Relics in the crypt of St. Nicholas at Bari. Feast, R. Cal., 6 Dec.—C.E.; Butler.

Nicholas of Myra, Bp. of Myra, b. Patara, Lycia, Asia Minor; d. Myra. Although he is popular in the Greek as well as the Latin Church, nothing is historically certain about him except that he was Bp. of Myra in the 4th century. In his youth he is supposed to have made a pilgrimage to Egypt and Palestine; shortly after his return he became bishop. During the persecution of Diocletian he was imprisoned, but released after the accession of Constantine, and attended the Council of Nicea. He was buried in the cathedral at Myra, but in 1087 Italian merchants stole his body and carried it to Bari, Italy. The numerous miracles St. Nicholas is said to have wrought before and after his death are outgrowths of a long tradition. In art are as various as his miracles. In Germany, Switzerland, and the Netherlands it is the custom to make him the secret purveyor of gifts to children on 6 Dec.; in the United States and some other countries St. Nicholas has become identified with the popular Santa Claus. Patron of Greece, Russia, Naples, Sicily, Apulia, Lorraine, Limerick, etc., of mariners, merchants, cooperers, pawnbrokers, travelers, bakers, brewers. Emblems: children, mitre, vessel. Relics in the crypt of St. Nicholas at Bari. Feast, R. Cal., 6 Dec.—C.E.; Butler.

Nicolet, Diocese of, Quebec, comprises Arthabaska, Drummond, Nicolet, Yamaska, and portions of Shefford and Bagot Counties; established, 1885; suffragan of Quebec. Bishops: Elphège Gravel...
(1885-1904), J. H. S. Brunault (1904). Churches, 71; priests, secular, 187; priests, regular, 4; religious women, 56; seminaries, 2; normal school, 1; college, 1; academies and continuation schools, 36; primary schools, 681; pupils in primary schools, 15,315; institutions, 6; Catholics, 88,567.

Nicolet College, founded at Nicolet, Canada, 1863, by Bp. Pierre Denaut of Quebec. Bp. Plessis contributed generously to reorganize, enlarge, and endow it. A classical course is given here, under the supervision of the secular clergy.

Nicomedes, SAINT, martyr (c. 71), Roman priest; arrested for assisting the martyrs in their persecutions and for burying them. His catacomb is on the Via Nomentana at Rome, under the grounds of the Villa Patrizi. Some of his relics were transferred to Milan and Parma. Feast, R. Cal., 15 Sept.

Night-watch, one of the vigils or four ancient divisions of the night, during which public or official prayer was offered in the earliest days of the Church. The Matins and Lauds of the Divine Office most probably represent these watchs.

Nimbus (Lat., cloud), in Christian art, a glow or ornamental circle around the head of a saint, emblematic of his sanctity. Natural phenomena in the refraction of light may have suggested the symbolical nimbus. The pagans used a disc-shaped halo or circle of light for gods, heroes, and persons of distinction. In early Christian art the nimbus was used arbitrarily as an emblem of human great-ness, not of divinity. It became the custom to use the square nimbus in portraits of the living, and to reserve the round for the saints. In the course of centuries the idea became more prominent that a nimbus must be given to God, and as a symbol of the grace of God it was given to the saints. Since the Renaissance the nimbus has been more delicately fashioned and sometimes has been omitted. Closely related to the nimbus are the halo, aureole, and glory (qq.v.).—C.E.

Ninian (Ninias, Ninus, Dinan, Ringan, Rengan), SAINT, confessor (d. c. 432), bishop and apostle of Christianity in Scotland, b. Cumberland; d. Whithorn. He was the son of a converted British chief. After 13 years spent at Rome, he was consecrated by St. Siricius, and began his mission in his native land. He built the white stone church at Whithorn in 307. He is venerated as one of the greatest Scottish saints. Relics preserved at Whithorn, lost during the Reformation. Feast, 16 Sept. —C.E.; Butler.

Ninive (modern KUYUNJIK), ancient capital of Assyrian empire on eastern bank of Tigris, opposite Mosul. It existed as early as 1800 and in the time of Sennacherib (7th century) was the capital of the empire, the center of the worship of Ishtar, and well known in the O.T. in connection with the prophets, especially as the theater of Jonas’s mission. It was abandoned by Sargon; beautified by Sennacherib, who built a magnificent temple which was completed by Esarhaddon and Asurbanipal. Ninive fell under the combined attacks of the Medes under Cyaxares and the Babylonians under Nabopolassar in 606 B.C. Recent excavations have revealed the library of Asurbanipal and various ancient sculptures and coins.

Nirvana, nir-va’na (Skt., nīs, out; ēva, a blow­ing), in the Buddhistic religion, a state of absence of desire and pain; in its completeness after death, and based wholly on the notion of karmic retribution. The Nirvana, which stands on a lower level than the Christian ideal, which appeals to motives of disinterested as well as interested love, because it is a union of friendship with God in heaven.

Nobili, Robert de’ (1577-1656), missionary, b. Montepulciano, Italy; d. Mylapur, India. He entered the Society of Jesus, and labored in Madura, Mysore, and the Karnatic, adopting the mode of life of the Brahmins in their zeal for their conversion. He is the author of several apologetic and doctrinal works in Tamil, Telugu, and Sanskrit. —C.E.

Noble Guards, the highest ranking corps of the papal military service. It originated in the Cavel­loggieri (light cavalry) which formed the mounted guard of the popes. Reorganized several times, it assumed its present name under Pius VII, 1815, new regulations being given by Leo XIII. The pope appoints the commander, always a Roman prince, and all members must show a 60 years line of nobility recognized in the Papal States. Their only public appearance is with the pope at public functions, withdrawing when he does; the privilege of conveying the tidings to newly appointed cardinals belongs exclusively to them.

Nocte surgentes vigilemus omnes, or Now, from the numbers of the night arising, hymn for Matins from the third Sunday after Pentecost until the Sunday nearest 1 Oct. It was written by Pope St. Gregory the Great. (540-604). There are about 20 translations; the English title given has been changed to adapt it to the text of the Roman Breviary.—Britt.

Nocturnal Adoration. See Adoration, Per­petual.

Nocturns (Lat., nocturnus, by night) (1) original night Office, hence the term; (2) division of Matins consisting of three psalms or groups of psalms with three lessons.—C.E.

Noe (Heb., rest), son of Lamech, and ninth patri­arch of the Sethite line, who, with his family, was saved in the Ark, from the Deluge, dying 350 years later at the age of 950. Many non-Catholics maintain that the Bible narrative is derived from a Babylonian epic, but numerous and important discrepancies render this untenable. The scriptural story is a parallel independent form of a common tradition.—C.E.

Noël, a French religious song, sung at Christmas, which had great vogue in the 11th century, reached its height in the 17th century, and has survived in a certain form to the present day. The words were often paraphrases of liturgical texts set to naive and pastoral melodies; the song was popular in every part of the country and was sung in every dialect.

Noël Chabanel, Blessed, martyr (1613-49), b. southern France; d. near St. Jean, Canada. He entered the Society of Jesus at 17 and taught in various Jesuit colleges. From 1643 until death, he labored among the Huron Indians in Canada. Although intolerance by a deep religious vocation to convert these Indians, Fr. Chabanel found life among them extremely arduous. In spite of the difficulty of learning the language, of overcoming his natural repulsion for the savages, and of adjusting himself to the mode of life, he persisted and even bound himself by a sacred vow to remain with them until death. Little is certain concerning the nature of his death. According to Fr. Ragueneau, he was killed by Louis Honareenhax, a member of his tribe who had apostatized from the faith, and who later confessed his guilt. Beatified, 1925.—C.E., III, 551; Wynne, Jesuit Martyrs of North America, N. Y., 1925.

Noemi, no' mi (Heb., beautiful), wife of Elimelech and mother-in-law of Ruth, related to Booz (Ruth, 1 and 2). She had migrated to Moab in a time of famine, and returned to Bethlehem after her husband’s death. (P. F. B.)

Nonconformists, those who refused to accede to the demands of the four “Acts of Uniformity” passed in England from the reign of Edward VI to that of Charles II. By these it was required of all ministers that they accept certain conditions as to the conduct of public worship, especially the use of the Book of Common Prayer with certain prescribed ceremonies. Those who would not conform set up for themselves separate conventicles, and became the foundation of English Protestant sectarianism. In later usage the term Nonconformist includes every denomination outside the Church of England, Catholicism alone excepted.—C.E. (P. F. B.)

None (Lat., nona, nine), in the Divine Office, the Office of the ninth hour (about 3 P.M.). Like the other Lesser Hours of the Office it arose from private devotion, but became a public fixed custom from the 4th century. In structure and content it is similar to the other Lesser Hours.—C.E. (J. G. K.)

Non Expedit (Lat., it is not expedient), a decree of the Sacred Penitentiary, 29 Feb., 1686, forbidding Italian Catholics to take part in parliamentary elections lest their participation be interpreted as an approval of the spoliation of the Holy See. This policy was continued under Leo XIII, but was modified by Pius X, 11 June, 1905, in the Encyclical “Certum Consilium.”—C.E. (M. E. B.)

Non ilam crucium ungula, non fem, or THE AGONIZING HOOKS, THE RENDING SCOURGE, hymn for Matins on 25 Jan., feast of St. Martina. It was written by Pope Urban VIII (1568-1644) and has 4 translations; the English title given is by E. Caswall.—Britt.

Non-Jurors, the name given to the bishops and clergymen of the Anglican church, who in 1689 refused to take the oath of allegiance to William and Mary and their successors under the Protestant Succession Act of that year. They considered William and Mary in the light of regents, rather than sovereigns, since they felt that their oaths of office had bound them to the Stuart family. They were suspended and later deprived of their offices. After the death of James II, some of them rejoined the Anglican Church, while others held out until the death of Charles Edward in 1788. They were conscientious men who suffered much for their convictions. The name is also applied to the Catholic clergy of France, who refused to take the oath of the Civil Constitutions of the clergy in 1790. They constituted the vast number of the clerical body of France. They paid for their loyalty to the unity of the Church and to the Holy See by having to endure bitter persecution.—C.E. (M. P. H.)

Non-Uniat Churches, eight groups of schismatical or heretical Churches, which separated from Rome at various periods since the 4th century. (The letters A.B.C. refer to the corresponding Uniat Churches in the article UNIAT CHURCHES) A. The “Orthodox” Church (q.v., with 17 subdivisions); B. Nestorian Church (Persia); C. Coptic Church (Egypt); D. Abyssinian Church; E. Jacobite Church (Syria); F. Malabar Christians (India); G. Armenian Church; H. Bulgarian Church (considers itself part of the “Orthodox” Church, but is not so considered by some bodies of the Orthodox Church).

No Popery Riots. See Gordon Riots.

Norbert, Saint, confessor (c. 1090-1134), Abp. of Magdeburg, founder of the Premonstratensians, b. Xanten, Germany; d. Magdeburg. He served as almoner to Emperor Henry V for a time; but decided to embrace the religious life. He joined the Benedictines of Sieburg, received Holy Orders, and founded a monastery at Prémontré, near Laon. Having given his property to the poor he traveled about France and Netherlands, preaching and combating heresy; and in 1129 was created Abp. of Magdeburg he enforced many valuable reforms. Canonized, 1582. Relics at Prague. Feast, R. Cal., 6 June.—C.E.; Butler.

Norfolk, Dukes of, of the family of Howard, hereditary earls-marshal of England, many of whom were Catholics. John Howard (1430-85), received the dukedom in 1483. Thomas (1473-1554), 3rd duke, was the uncle of Anne Boleyn; he was a tool of Henry VIII, acquired rich monastic loot, and was created earl-marshal in 1533; he persecuted the Catholics, and his career as a military leader was marked with devastation. Accused of treason in 1544, his life was saved by Henry VIII’s timely death, but he remained in prison till Mary’s accession. Thomas (1536-72), 4th duke, a Protestant, married Mary Fitzalan, daughter of Henry, twelfth Earl of Arundel; later he planned to marry the imprisoned Mary Queen of Scots, but was executed for treason. Henry (1628-84), 6th duke, and third Earl of Arundel, was noted for his munificence: he withdrew to Bruges after the Titus Oates Plot. Henry Granville Fitzalan (1816-60), 14th duke, was converted to Catholicism through the influence of Montalembert and was noted for his benefactions to Catholic works. Henry Fitzalan (1847-1917), 15th duke, was President of the Catholic Union of Great Britain. Postmaster-general (1900-05), and renowned for his efforts in behalf of the Church.—C. H. C.

Norman Architecture, division of the Romanesque style, originated by the Normans and introduced into England by William the Conqueror. To a limited extent the Normans retained the general style of the French churches, and borrowed from the early Gothic. The early period of Norman architecture is characterized by massiveness; the pillars were generally low and broad, the arches heavy and round. Towers were extensively developed, and carving and sculpture were used. Semi-circular arches distinguish Norman from Gothic and other styles of architecture. Examples of Norman architecture are Canterbury Cathedral, and the great churches of Lincoln, Durham, Winchester, Gloucester, and St. Paul’s in London.

Norridgewock, formerly Narantrouac, town, Somerset Co., Maine, the center of the missionary work of Fr. Rito (q.v.) among the Abnaki Indians (1694-1724), now the site of a monument erected to him, 1833, by Bp. Fenwick. A mission was established here, 1868. The chapel and village were destroyed by the English during Queen Anne’s War, 1705, and a dictionary of the Abnaki language, now at Harvard College, was carried off. After being again destroyed, 1724, the mission was restored, 1730.

North American College, founded at Rome, 1839, by Pope Pius IX for the training of young men for the priesthood. The students, who number about 100, attend the lectures at the Propaganda.

There is a fine collegiate church with marble altars and a painting of the Madonna over the high altar.

Northampton, Diocese of, England, comprises Northamptonshire, Bedfordshire, Buckinghamshire, Cambridgeshire, Huntingdon, Norfolk, and Suffolk; suffragan of Westminster. Names of many prominent persons of the Reformation period are associated with the diocese. Bishops: William Wareing (1850-58), Francis Amherst (1588-79), Arthur Riddell (1880-1907), Frederick Keating (1908-21), Dudley Cary-Elwes (1921). Churches and chapels, 107; priests, secular, 80; priests, regular, 49; elementary schools, 31; other schools, 29; charitable institutions, 2; Catholics (est.), 20,386.

North Borneo, protectorate of the British Empire, in the northern part of the Island of Borneo, administered by a governor in Borneo and a court of directors in London; est. area, 31,106 sq. m.; pop., 257,804. Christianity was preached in North Borneo in 1687 by Father Ventimiglia, a Theatine. In 1855 the northern part of the island was erected into an independent prefecture under Rev. Charles Quartermor, a Spaniard. He arrived at Labuan in 1857 accompanied by several missionaries who remained with him until 1860. Unassisted, Fr. Quartermor was unable to continue the task of evangelization, so he appealed to Rome to place the mission in charge of an institute. In 1881 the Propaganda put the mission of North Borneo and Labuan under the jurisdiction of the Society for Foreign Missions of Mill Hill, England, who have remained in charge since that time. North Borneo in 1929 was comprised in the Prefecture Apostolic of North Borneo.

North Borneo, Prefecture Apostolic of, Malay Archipelago (British possession) mission, 1687; prefecture, 1855; divided and changed 1927; entrusted to the Foreign Missionaries of Mill Hill. Prefect Apostolic: Augustine Wachter (1927). Churches and chapels, 22; schools, 16; pupils, 800; orphanages, 2; Catholics, 6000.

North Carolina, the 27th state of the United States in size, the 14th in population, and the 12th state to be admitted to the Union (21 Nov., 1789); area, 52,426 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 2,559,123; Catholics (1928), 7365. Mass was first celebrated in North Carolina in 1584, by a priest who had come on business from Madeira. Rev. Patrick Cleary of Funchal. He officiated in the home of Mrs. Alexander Gaston, whose distinguished son, William Gaston, wished to bring about the repeal, in 1835, of the article in the North Carolina Constitution of 1776 which kept from office "those who denied the truth of the Protestant religion." For nearly 50 years the few Catholics of North Carolina were served only by visiting priests. These included Fr. Le Mercier at Raleigh in 1865, Rev. Joseph de Chorivire of Fayetteville in 1812, Rev. Nicholas Kerney of Norfolk at Newbern and Wilmington in 1819. Finally in 1823 Rev. Francis O'Donohue was sent by Bp. England of Charleston to Washington, N. C., and the church of St. John the Evangelist was built. St. Patrick's was erected in Fayetteville the next year, when Newbern was also organized as a parish. Although it was only in 1840 that the first church there, St. Patrick's, was built. The state includes the Diocese of Raleigh and the Abbey Nullius of Belmont (q.v.). Catholic influence on the place-names of the State is shown in the following: St. Paul's, Trinity, Valle Crucis. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in North Carolina:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Religious Denomination</th>
<th>Number of Members</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Catholic Church</td>
<td>7,590</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northern Baptist Convention</td>
<td>279,112</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>National Baptist Convention</td>
<td>212,019</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Missionary Episcopal Church South</td>
<td>109,794</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church</td>
<td>74,365</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church in the U.S.</td>
<td>57,836</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>26,364</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Free Will Baptists</td>
<td>22,914</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>African Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>20,433</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
The three great Baptist missionary societies, including separate societies of women, have placed themselves under its direction. As a result of this change greater unity, economy, and efficiency were obtained. Feeling the influence of the trend towards denominational union and fellowship, there has been a movement towards achieving affiliation with the Disciples and Free Baptists. Almost complete union has resulted with the Free Baptists. The Northern churches are not as strongly Calvinistic as the Southern, however they interchange membership and ministry on terms of equality. The dividing line between the white and Negro churches in the Northern Convention is not so apparent as in the Southern. They publish two official periodicals, and 15 others. Foreign missionary work is carried on in India (including Burma and Assam), China, Japan, Africa, and the Philippine Islands; in Europe, in Sweden, Germany, France, Belgium, Spain, Finland, Denmark, Norway, and Russia. In 1916 in Asia and African countries there were 5 countries occupied; 127 stations with resident missionaries; 188 American missionaries, with 9185 native helpers; 7392 churches, with 83,391 patients. The European work was carried on by 2512 agents, and there were 1205 organized churches with 142,979 members; 2510 Sunday schools, with 132,423 members; and 6 theological seminaries with 73 students. In the United States in 1926 there were 9291 ministers, 7611 churches, and 1,289,966 members.

NORTHERN TRANSVAAL

NORTH DAKOTA, the 16th state of the United States in size, the 36th in population, and the 39th to be admitted to the Union (2 Nov., 1889); area, 70,837 sq. m.; pop. (1921), 641,000; Catholics (1928), 117,968. The first missionary within the limits of North Dakota was the Rev. Joseph Sèvère Dumoulin, sent by Bp. Pelissé of Quebec to minister to a colony of Canadians who had been driven south from Fort Douglas (now St. Boniface), near Winnipeg, in 1818, by the destruction of their crops, and who settled at Pembina. Soon after Fr. Dumoulin had been recalled in 1823, an American priest, Rev. George Anthony Belcourt, took his place as resident pastor at Pembina and did missionary work among the Indians and in early white settlements. He even accompanied his people on their summer hunting excursions to the southwestern mountains, taking the opportunity to instruct the children. The tireless missionary, Fr. Pierre de Smet, visited the Mandans and the Gros Ventres, Indian tribes of North Dakota, in 1844. He passed through their country again in 1868 on the way to his famous peace-making conference with Sitting Bull. In 1862 a mission was established near Fort Totten by Fr. Jean Baptiste Génin. The state includes the dioceses of Fargo and Bismarck (q.v.). Catholic influence on the place-names of the state is shown in the following: Mount Carmel, St. Anthony, St. John, St. Thomas. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in North Dakota:

- Catholic Church ........................................ 95,859
- Lutheran United Norwegian .......................... 23,940
- Lutheran Norwegian Synod .......................... 15,947
- Methodist Episcopal Church .......................... 13,470
- Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A. ................. 9,296
- Lutheran Synodical Conference ....................... 8,972
- Congregational Churches .............................. 8,913
- Northern Baptist Convention ....................... 6,208
- Lutheran Synod of Iowa .............................. 6,101
- Lutheran Haute’s Synod ................................ 5,799
- Lutheran Norwegian Free Church .................... 5,593
- Lutheran Joint Synod of Ohio ....................... 3,829
- Lutheran General Council ........................... 2,864
- German Evangelical Synod ........................... 2,676
- Protestant Episcopal Church ......................... 2,455
- Evangelical Association ............................. 2,290
- All Other Denominations ............................ 12,618
- Total Church Membership ............................ 225,477

C.E.; Shean.

Northern Baptist Convention, a body delegated from the Baptist churches of the North and West and organized at Washington, D. C., 1907.
prizes the two civil districts of Zoupant-Sberg and Waterburg; established, 1910, by division from the Vicariate of Transvaal; entrusted to the Beneficentines of Stuiaazzo, Prefect Apostolic: Salvator Van Nuffel, O.S.B. (1922); residence at Pietersburg. Churches, 6; chapel, 1; priests, 6; schools, 4; pupils, 117; Catholics, 603.

North Solomon Islands, Prefecture Apostolic of, Oceania (English possession), comprises the Islands of Bougainville, Buka, Shortland, and Choiseul; established 1898; entrusted to the Marist Fathers. J. Foran, S.M. (1898-1918); Maurice Boch, S.M. (1918); residence at Bougainville, New Guinea Territory. Churches, 15; chapels, 182; priests, 18; religious women, 19; central schools, 20; village schools, 182; Catholics, 9506.

Norway, monarchy of Europe, occupying the western side of the Scandinavian Peninsula; area, 124,964 sq. m.; est. pop., 2,788,893. Christianity had reached this region by the 10th century; some of the vikings were baptized in England and Normandy, and they brought back missionaries with them. Haakon the Good and Olaf Trygvesson, two of the earliest kings of united Norway, gave their protection to Christian churches and priests and attempted to abolish pagan sacrifices. Sigurd, an Anglo-Saxon bishop, is sometimes called the Apostle of Norway. About the year 1000 the nation divided, part of it coming under the control of Canute the Great, of Denmark; Olaf Harوالsson, who reestablished the separate and independent kingdom of Norway, became its patron saint. He made the whole kingdom nominally Christian, though the faith had not yet been established throughout the land, and he built churches and schools. The early dioceses were suffragan to the Archdiocese of Lund until 1152, and then to the Archdiocese of Trondheim (Nidaros); they became numerous and prosperous, and church buildings and furnishings are the chief representatives of the early development of Norwegian art. With the subjection of Norway to Denmark in the 16th century, Catholicism was gradually superseded almost entirely by Lutheranism. Churches were destroyed and their lands confiscated by kings and nobles, many monasteries were suppressed, and, in the persecution of Catholics, many nobles, and especially the clergy, were exiled, imprisoned, or executed. The number of Catholic priests and religious in Norway is not known; according to ecclesiastical authorities, the number of Catholics in the year 1888 was about 12,000.

Notary, name of several monks of St. Gall. (1) NOTKER BALLULUS, Blessed (c. 840-912), b. Jonswil, St. Gall. He composed a martyrology, and a metrical biography of St. Gall. He was also the author of the "Gesta Caroli Magni," a collection of legends; in addition he introduced the sequence, a new kind of religious lyric, into Germany. Beati­fied, 1512. Feast, 6 April. (2) NOTKER LABEO (c. 950-1022) translated several works from Latin into German (a thing till then unheard of), including Vergil's "Bucolica," and Aristotle's "De categoriis," and wrote treatises in German on music and rhetoric. (3) NOTKER (c. 940-1008), Bp. of Liégo, introduced the study of Greek into the School of Liégo and laid the foundation of its great scholastic fame. -C.E.

Notre-Dame, Paris, a Gothic cathedral situated on the Ile de la Cité, was occupied by a pagan temple during the Roman Empire, by the Church of St. Stephen during the 5th century, and finally by St. Marie, or Notre-Dame, Cathedral. The foundation stone was laid by the exiled Alexander III, and the structure was consecrated in 1182. Its only known architect was Jean de Chelles. During the Revolution it was dedicated as a "Temple of Reason," 1793; mutilated and closed, 1794; given to the "constitutional" Catholics, 1795; and restored to the orthodox Catholics, 1802. During the work of restoration under Viollet-le-Duc, 1840-79, the central spire, 148 ft. high, was added. Of special note are the triple façade, the sculpturing, the rose windows, and the gargoyles. The cathedral is 139 yds. long and 62 yds. wide and consists of a choir and apse, a short transept, and a nave with double aisles. It contains the Crown of Thorns and a portion of the True Cross. In the Norwich, ancient diocese, England, founded 1094, with Herbert Losinga (formerly of Elmham) as first bishop, the beginnings of the see dating actually from the 6th and 7th centuries, with the foundation of the dioceses of Dunwich and Elmham. The last Catholic bishop was John Hopeton (1554-58).

Notaries, persons appointed by competent authority to draw up official or authentic documents which are issued from chanceries or tribunals. As soon as a bureau for ecclesiastical documents was established, we find evidence of notaries, and in the time of Julius I (4th century) the notaries formed a kind of college presided over by a "princicerius" or chief. At present the only ecclesiastical notaries are the officials of the episcopal and Roman curiae, who also act as secretaries, and those who are appointed to the ordinary tribunals of the Holy See, the Rota, and the Signatura. They are similar to registrars and clerks of the court in civil trials, and are usually clerics. -C.E.; P.C. Augustine.

Notitia Episcopatum, official documents for eastern countries giving the list and hierarchical rank of the metropolitan and suffragan bishoprics of a Church. The hierarchical order included the patriarchs, greater metropolitans, bishops, exempt bishops, and suffragan bishops. Among these documents are the "Ecthesis of pseudo-Epiphanius," and "Notitia of Basil the Armenian." -C.E.
Souls in Purgatory.

Ronan year), month of spt'cial devotion to the heresy. The sect was still flourishing in the Orient a number of writings of Novatian, only two have himself as head of the sect, and had a large num­ber of adherents who enlarged the scope of his in the 5th century. Though St. J eron1e mentions himself to be elected by three rural Italian bishops.

come down to us, “De Cibis J udaicis” and “De edication. In spite of opposition he was ordained by

A.ntioch. vVhile a catechumen he was thought to be possessed and was consequently exorcised. Because of serious illness he ,vas baptized by affusion, but 'vas not confirmed, which made him irregular for ordination. In spite of opposition he was ordained by Pope Fabian, 250, and subsequently appointed to a prominent position in Rome. He hoped to be elected as successor of Fabian who was martyred,

251. Cornelius was chosen, and N ovatian caused himself to be elected by three rural Italian bishops.

The Council of Carthage, 251, supported the claims of Cornelius who at one excommunicated Nova­ tian. He set up a schismatical church, appointed himself as head of the sect, and had a large num­ber of adherents who enlarged the scope of his heresy. The sect was still flourishing in the Orient in the 5th century. Though St. Jerome mentions a number of writings of Novatian, only two have come down to us, “De Cibis Judaicis” and “De Trinitate.” That Novatian died a martyr’s death during the persecution of Valerian is doubtful.—C.E.

November (Lat., novem, nine; 9th month of the Roman year), month of special devotion to the Souls in Purgatory.

Novena, nine days of public or private devotion in the Catholic Church to obtain special graces; in imitation of the Apostles who were gathered to­gether in prayer for nine days between Ascension Thursday and Pentecost.—C.E.

Novena of Grace, a novena made in honor of St. Francis Xavier, which owes its origin to the saint himself, who promised Fr. Mastrilli, S.J., in 1633, that “all who would earnestly ask his inter­cession with God for nine days in honor of his canonization would infallibly experience the effects of his great power in heaven and would realize whatever they asked that would contribute to their salvation.” It is now made publicly in many churches, 4-12 March.

Novena of the Sacred Heart. The Holy See has granted indulgences for nine days of prayer in honor of the Sacred Heart. They may be gained twice yearly, once in connection with the Feast of the Sacred Heart and once at any time during the year, using any form of prayers approved by com­petent ecclesiastical authority. The grant is an amplification of the indulgences first granted 31 Jan., 1818, for the novena composed by Fr. Charles Borgo, S.J., and printed at Ferrara in 1778. This novena was translated into many languages and contributd greatly to the spread of the devotion to the Sacred Heart. (4.c.)

Novena to the Holy Ghost. There are two indulgenced novenas to the Holy Ghost. One, in preparation for the feast of Pentecost, for the re­conciliation of non-Catholics, is usually made pub­licly in all parochial churches; the second may be made at any other time of the year.—Henry, Cath­olic Customs and Symbols, N. Y., 1925. (C. a. n.)

Novice, one who having been regularly admitted into a religious order, and, and already confirmed in a higher vocation by a certain period of probation as a postulant, is prepared by a series of exercises and tests for the religious profession. The institu­tion of a time of trial to prepare the religious candidate for his future career is a very ancient one dating from at least the 5th century. No specific higher vocation by a certain period of probation as a postulant, is prepared by a series of exercises and tests for the religious profession. The institu­tion of a time of trial to prepare the religious candidate for his future career is a very ancient one dating from at least the 5th century. No specific nullius, or FROM THE TRUTH THY SOUL TO TURN, hymn for Matins on the feast of St. Hermengild, 15 April. It was written by Pope Urban VIII (1568-1644). The English title given is by E. Caswall.—Britt.

Numbers, the fourth Book of the Bible. The name is not so felicitous as that of the preceding books, since it illustrates the contents of the opening chapters only, dealing with the numbering or census of the people. The best division is as follows. (1) The Hebrews prepare to depart from Mt. Sinai (1-10); (a) the census (1-4); (b) some supplementary laws (5-6); (c) last events before the departure (7-10). (2) From Mt. Sinai to Cades (10, 11-12). (3) Cades (13-20): (a) the spying of the Promised Land, revolt, and chastisement (13-14); (b) revolt of Core, Dathan, and Abiron (15-17); (c) the waters of contradiction (20). (4) From Cades to the Plains of Moab (22-34): (a) Balaam’s oracles (22-24); (b) idolatry and impurity (25); (c) new census and new laws concerning the sacrifices (26-30); (d) punishment of the Madianites and first division of the conquered territory (31-35). The last chapter deals with the Levitical cities and the cities of refuge.—C.E., XI, 649; Pope.

Nullius, or no, diocese understood, term occurring in such phrases as abyss nullius, prelature nullius (qq.v.).

Nullity, Decree of, a judgment by a competent court that a certain marriage was and is invalid, i.e., never a marriage. See MATRIMONIAL COURT.—Ayrinhac, Marriage Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law, N. Y., 1919.

Nunc Dimittis, THE, or CANTICLE OF SIMEON, a prayer said by Simeon on the occasion of the presentation of Jesus in the temple, beginning with "Nunc dimittis servum tuum, Domine" (Now Thou dost dismiss Thy servant, O Lord). It is one of the three "evangelical canticles." Included in the Roman Breviary for Compline daily throughout the year, it is recited on 2 Feb., the feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin or Candlemas, at the blessing of the candles, and forms the Tract in the Mass of the feast when the latter follows Septuagesima. The "Nunc Dimittis" is at once a petition, a prophecy, and a hymn of thanksgiving (Luke, 2), St. Matthew eight (Matt., 5), but in those eight are contained these four, and in these four, those eight. In the four are embraced the cardinal virtues, and in those eight, they are set forth in a number full of mystery.—C.E.; Messmer, Outlines of Biblical Knowledge, St. L., 1927. (M.J.W.)

Nunc Sancte nobis Spiritus, or COME, HOLY GHOST, WHO EVER ONE, hymn for Terce throughout the year. It may have been written by St. Ambrose (340-397). There are about 20 translations. The English title given is by Card. Newman.—Britt.
Nuns, women who devote themselves in various religious orders to the practice of a life of perfection. The institution of Sisters dates from the earliest ages of the Church, and very likely women were the first to embrace the religious state for its own sake, without the missionary work and ecclesiastical duties proper to men. There are various kinds of nuns, some taking solemn vows, others simple vows, congregations under pontifical authority, and diocesan communities. In each order there are slight variations as to regulations, constitutions, dress, functions, etc., but the principal objects of all congregations are practically the same: either purely contemplative, seeking personal perfection by close union with God, or partly contemplative and partly active in works of charity, such as the education of youth, the care of the sick, orphans, lepers, lunatics, the wayward, and the aged.—C.E.

Nuptial Mass and Blessing. There is a special Mass assigned for marriages. It has prayers and other parts appropriate to the occasion, and may be said on many days of the year. On very important feasts the Mass of the day is said, with a commemoration of the nuptial Mass (see Closed Times). The nuptial blessing is read by the priest after the Pater Noster of the Mass, and is never given apart from the Mass. If the woman has received it at a previous marriage it is not repeated. The bishop may give permission for it even during the closed times. It is directed rather to the woman than to the man, that “her marriage may be to her a yoke of peace, and that they may see their children’s children, even to the third and fourth generation.”—C.E., X, 5.

Nuremberg Chronicle, an historical account of the monasteries of Bavaria, Franconia, and Swabia, written by Sigmund Meisterlein, 1488. It was widely read because of its popular character and strict adherence to truth.—C.E.

Nyassa, Vicariate Apostolic of, Nyassaland Protectorate, central Africa (British possession); mission, 1889; vicariate, 1897; its limits were changed in 1904, 1913, and 1926; entrusted to the White Fathers. Vicar Apostolic: Mathurin Guilleminé (1911); residence at Bembecke. Catholics, 27,000.

Oates, Titus (1649-1705), a notorious informer due to religious frenzy, and urged on by the Whig Party, refused to consider or to allow the courts to consider. Oates’s popularity soon began to wane, and in May, 1680, he was tried for perjury and convicted. He was sentenced to be whipped, degraded, pilloried, and imprisoned for life. Judge Jeffreys said of him: “He has deserved more punishment than the laws of the land can inflict.” Later, in the reign of William and Mary, he obtained a royal pardon and a pension, which was withdrawn in 1693 at the

O

Oakesley, Frederick (1802-80), writer, b. Shrewsbury, England; d. Islington. He was a Fellow of Balliol and Anglican incumbent of Margaret Chapel, London, but followed Newman into the Catholic Church, and was ordained priest, 1847. His chief works include: “Aristotelean and Platonie Ethics”; “The Subject of Tract XC examined”; “Life of St. Augustine”; “Historical Notes on the Tractarian Movement.” He exercised wide influence by his personality and his writings.—C.E.

O Antiphons, or Great Antiphons, recited from 17 to 23 December inclusive at the Magnificat in Vespers, one being said each day. They are written in poetic, scriptural prose, it is not known when or by whom, but they date at the latest from the 9th century. The antiphons address Our Lord under scriptural titles and conclude with a petition to the coming Saviour. Their opening words are: O Sapientia (O Wisdom), O Adonai, O Radix Jesse (O Root of Jesse), O Clavis David (O Key of David), O Oriens (O Orient), O Rex Gentium (O King of the Gentiles), O Emmanuel. Several translations, both in prose and in verse, are in existence. The first antiphon reads: O Wisdom, that proceedest from the mouth of the Most High, reaching from end to end mightily, and sweetly disposing all things: come and teach us the way of prudence.—C.E.

Oates, Titus (1649-1705), a notorious informer due to religious frenzy, and urged on by the Whig Party, refused to consider or to allow the courts to consider. Oates’s popularity soon began to wane, and in May, 1680, he was tried for perjury and convicted. He was sentenced to be whipped, degraded, pilloried, and imprisoned for life. Judge Jeffreys said of him: “He has deserved more punishment than the laws of the land can inflict.” Later, in the reign of William and Mary, he obtained a royal pardon and a pension, which was withdrawn in 1693 at the instance of Queen Mary. In 1680 he was taken up by the Baptists, only to be again expelled from the ministry for dishonesty. In 1691 he attempted another fraudulent plot, but it came to nothing.—C.E.; Pollock, The Popish Plot, Lond., 1903.

(A. J. H.)

Oath, the calling upon God to witness the truth of a statement. As an appeal to the testimony of God, it is an act of religion. An oath may be: assertory, whereby God is called to witness the truth of an assertion of fact, past or present; or promissory, whereby God is called upon as a witness to a resolution, a vow, or an agreement made with another party, and as a guaranty and pledge of future fulfillment. To have a valid oath there must be the intention, at least virtual, of invoking the testimony of God, and a word or sign by which such an intention is manifested. Such a word or sign is contained in the formulas, "God is my witness," "I swear by God," "May God destroy me if," etc. Other expressions such as "By my conscience" or "As God lives" are at most doubtful.

To make an oath lawful it is necessary that what one swears be true or at least beyond a prudent doubt or, in the case of a promissory oath, be sincerely intended and not unlawful. Moreover there must be a sufficient reason for taking an oath. Such sufficient reason is had when an oath is ordered by lawful authority or required for God's honor or our own or our neighbor's good.—C.E.; P. C. Augustine.

Oaths, English Post Reformation, exacted by the Crown after it had imposed Protestantism on England. The Oath of Royal Supremacy introduced by Henry VIII, 1534, repealed by Mary and revived by Elizabeth, was chiefly concerned with the succession. The Oath of Allegiance to James I, also called the Oath of Obedience, introduced 1606, doing away with the deposing power of the pope, was objectionably worded, fraudulently intended, and a dishonor to the Holy See; its influence was everlasting by Elizabeth, was chiefly concerned with the succession. The Oath of Allegiance to James I, also called the Oath of Obedience, introduced 1606, doing away with the deposing power of the pope, was objectionably worded, fraudulently intended, and a dishonor to the Holy See; its influence was great and its consequences lasting and far-reaching. These oaths fell into temporary desuetude when the Puritans came into power, and the Oath of Adjudication under the Commonwealth, 1643, imposed monstrous penalties on anyone refusing to take it, the refusal branding him a papist; this oath, however, was sparingly enforced. The Test Oath, 1672, 1678, also called the Declaration of Attestation Oath, compelling office holders to make a "declaration against Transubstantiation" and other tenets, marks the consummation of English anti-Catholic legislation, as it insured that no Catholic could be admitted to office without renouncing his faith.

The Quebec Act, 1771, was the first tolerant measure for Catholics since Mary's reign. The Irish Oath, 1774, was followed by the so-called relief bills, and other tests involving also English Catholics, until, owing to the influence of Daniel O'Connell and the Irish, Catholic Emancipation was granted, 1829, without any tests.—C.E.

Oblation, Book of. See Amalas.

Obedience (Lat., ob, near; audio, hear), submission to the will or law of one who exercises authority; to the Will or law of God, to the laws of the Church; to a lawfully constituted superior, civil or religious. With poverty and chastity it is one of the chief counsels of Christ. It may be practised by persons living outside a religious community in regard to spiritual directors. Usually it is the subject of a vow in a religious order or congregation. It implies exterior performance of a command, and, as far as possible, interior also.—C.E.

Obedience, Religious, that general submission which religious vow to God, and voluntarily promise to their superiors, in order to be directed by them in the ways of perfection and in labors of zeal according to the purpose and constitutions of their order. It is composed of three elements: the sacrifice offered to God of the individual's independence in the generality of his actions, at least of such as are exterior; the motive, namely, person, perfection, and, as a rule, also the performance of spiritual or corporal works of mercy and charity; the express or implied contract with an order which accepts the obligation to lead him to the end for which he accepts its laws and direction.—C.E.

Obedientiaries, in the Middle Ages, a term denoting the lesser monastic officials appointed by the superior of the monastery, to which he might assign extensive powers in their own departments. The usual classification of obedientiaries, varying however in some monasteries, includes the cantor or precentor, assisted by the subchantor or subcantor, the sacrist or sacristan, assisted by the subsacrist, the reader, and the servers in kitchen and refectory. With poverty and chastity it is one of the chief counsels of Christ. It may be practised by persons living outside a religious community in regard to spiritual directors. Usually it is the subject of a vow in a religious order or congregation. It implies exterior performance of a command, and, as far as possible, interior also.—C.E.

Oberammergau, Passion Play of, first mentioned 1633, when the people of Ammergau, to obtain relief from the black death vowed to produce the play every ten years. It was enacted and well known as early as 1634, hence productions must have appeared before that date. The text was written about 1600 and contains traces of two older dramas. A Passion text by the Augsburg Meistersinger, Sebastian Wild, was woven into it together with parts of the Weilheim Passion Play of Rector Johann Achel. In the 18th century the Benedictine Rosner remodelled the text after the Jesuit drama. This version was reduced to a simpler form 1780, by the Benedictine Knipeferger. Finally P. Otmar Weiss and M. Daisenberger gave it its present simple and dignified form and transcribed the verse into prose. Stage and costuming are adapted to modern requirements. The music is by Roehn Dedler.

Oblate (Lat., oblatum, offered), a person who unites with some religious order in order to do certain actions in accordance with its rules and thus share in its merits and spiritual benefits, though remaining a layman and living outside of the monastery or convent.—C.E.

(J. F. S.)
Oblates (Lat., oblatum, past participle of offere, to offer), Orders of, communities of men or women, not professed monks or nuns, who have been offered to God, or have dedicated themselves to His service in holy religion, in houses under the Rule of St. Benedict, children vowed and given by their parents to the monastic life who were commonly known as oblates, until the Council of Toledo (656) forbade their acceptance before the age of 10. Later, oblates denoted laymen or women pensioned off by royal and other patrons upon monasteries or benefices, where they lived as in an almshouse or hospital. With the introduction of lay brethren into monasteries in the 11th century, oblates were the workmen or servants who voluntarily subjected themselves while in the service of the monastery, to religious obedience and observance. Afterward the oblate made a vow of obedience to the abbot, gave himself and his goods to the monastery, and was in the order renewed by a pastor. During the Middle Ages, the title oblate was granted to anyone who, for his generosity or special service to the monastery, received the privilege of lay membership, with a share in the prayers and good works of the brethren. This title is still given to lay persons who follow a rule of life under the direction of a religious order.

Oblate Sisters of Providence, a congregation of colored nuns founded at Baltimore, Md., 1828, by Fr. Jacques Joubert de la Muraille, a Sulpician, for the education of colored children. The order has 16 houses, including parish schools, academies, and homes, in the United States and Cuba. The mother-house is in Baltimore; the total number of religious is 164.—C.E.

Oblates of Mary Immaculate, religious order founded, 1816, at Aix, Provence, France, by Charles Joseph Eugène de Mazenod, composed of priests and lay brothers. It was formed to repair the havoc caused by the French Revolution and its principal aim is the instruction and conversion of the poor, missions, retreats, and catechism courses, especially in rural parishes; the direction of seminaries, and the training of priests are its chief duties. In 1841, 2000 new fields of labor were opened to the Oblates. They established themselves in England, Canada, the United States, South America, South Africa, Asia, and Western Australia. The general administration was moved from Marseilles to Paris, 1863; the persecutions of 1902 obliged its removal to Liège, 1903, whence it was transferred to Rome, 1905. Some of the prominent general of this congregation include: De Mazenod, J. Fabre, L. Soullier, C. Augier, A. Lavillardière, and A. Doutenwill, the present general. Statistics: 17 provinces; 1 vice-province; 10 vicariates; 3048 religious, of whom 16 are bishops, 1563 priests, 584 scholastics, 611 lay brothers, and 274 novices (1775 aspirants).—C.E.

Oblates of St. Charles, a diocesan religious society founded in 1578 under the title of "Oblates of St. Ambrose" by St. Charles Borromeo in collaboration with G. Martinelli and the "Priests of the Holy Crown" who served the basilica of the Holy Sepulchre at Milan. The society was divided into six groups, two remaining at the city house, the others laboring in various parts of the diocese. Dispersed by Napoleon, 1810, the surviving community of Our Lady of Rho was reorganized in 1848 by Bartolommeo Romilli under the name, "Oblates of St. Charles." The members, all priests, take a simple vow of obedience to the bishop, whom they assist in the government and administration of the diocese, managing seminaries, colleges and schools, giving retreats, serving vacant parishes, and engaging in mission work. Fr. Ratti (the future Pius XI) was a member of this society. Oblates were established in London under CARD. Wiseman, with rules drawn up by Card. Manning, approved 1857, 1877. Installed at St. Mary of the Angels, Bayswater, they undertook various apostolic labors in the dioceses of Westminster and Southwark, especially in reviving the English secular clergy. Their ecclesiastical studies consist chiefly in ascetical and mystical theology. Statistics: approximately 12 houses, including missions, elementary and higher schools, especially for boys, in the dioceses of Westminster and Brentwood, in or near Milan, at Rome, Paderborn, and Poitiers; members total about 300.—C.E., I, 404.

Oblates of Saint Francis de Sales (of Troèse), congregation of priests and lay brothers founded originally by St. Francis de Sales, and re-established in 1871 by Fr. P. Louis Brisson who began St. Bernard's College near Troyes. The congregation gradually developed in France and numbered seven colleges and five other institutes of learning when the government closed them all, 31 July, 1905. At this time the mother-house was transferred to Rome and the congregation divided into three provinces: Latin, German, and English; the first comprising France, Belgium, Italy, Greece and South America; the second, Austria, Germany, and the southern half of its southwest African colony; the third, England, the United States, and the northwestern part of Cape Colony. Statistics: 4 provinces in Latin countries, also American, Austrian, and Rhenish; missions in Africa.—C.E.

Oblation (Lat., oblatum, offering), the offering of the altar bread about to be consecrated. It is placed on the paten and raised aloft by the priest with his eyes on the crucifix. If other particles are to be consecrated, they should be placed on the corporal, or in a chiborium resting on the corporal, as for their valid consecration the priest makes the intention of consecrating all that are so placed.

O Bluest Creator of the Light! See LUCIUS CREATORE OPTIME.

Obligation. Obligation or moral duty implies the practical imperative necessity of doing freely what is morally good and avoiding what is morally evil. It is of the very essence of law, natural, ecclesiastical, or civil, to which all must necessarily be subject. The sense of moral obligation is universal, being an attribute of man's rational nature, which is so constituted that the will is physically necessitated to tend towards perfect goodness and perfect happiness while being physically free in its choice of imperfect earthly goods. Moral obligation constrains man to adopt the necessary means of obtaining his ultimate end by pursuing the line O'Brian, William (1852-1928), journalist, author, b. Mallow, County Cork, Ireland; d. London. He took up journalism, founding and editing "United Ireland," elected to Parliament from Mallow, 1883, he represented different Irish constituencies until his retirement from public life, 1918. In 1903 he was a member of the Land Conference which settled the land question. O'Brien organized the All-for-Ireland League, 1910, and the Independent Parliamentary Party, for the union of all classes and creeds in Ireland and home rule by consent. Prosecuted nine times for political offenses, he spent over two years in prison. Author of "When We Were Boys," "A Queen of Men," "Irish Ideas," etc.

Obsessions, name applied to the Friars Minor of the Regular Observance, one of the branches of the Franciscan Order, incorporated in the single Order of Friars Minor by Leo XIII's Bull "Felicitate quadam," 1897.

Obstinacy, a tenacious adherence to one's own opinion, will; unreasonable insistence on doing things in one's own way; an attitude which often leads the mind against the known truth of the matter in hand. It is admissible in the case of doubt or suspense of judgment. But there is a positive obligation to avoid a voluntary proximate occasion, whether it be absolute or relative, present or absent.---C.E. (R. G. B.)

Occasion of Sin, an external circumstance which of its own nature or because of man's frailty inclines and leads to sin. An occasion is proximate if the danger of sinning is certain or probable, remote if such danger is slight. It is absolute if of itself it leads us to sin, relative if only on account of weakness it becomes an occasion of evil-doing. It is voluntary if it may easily be shunned, otherwise it is involuntary. It is present if we have it with us without seeking it; otherwise it is absent. There is no obligation to avoid a remote occasion, unless we foresee that it will soon be proximate. But there is a positive obligation to avoid a voluntary proximate occasion, whether it be absolute or relative, present or absent.---C.E. (R. G. B.)

Occult Art, Occultism, originally, scientific experimentation was classed as occultism. At present, occult art is limited to practises in which invisible, spiritual powers or agencies are experimented with for the purpose of securing information from them or enlisting their aid; such as magic, theosophy, spiritism, divination, and witchcraft. Magic is traceable back to the Chaldeans and Persians whose priests, because they were supposed to be learned in secret lore, were called magi (s. magus). The art of magic consists in actually experimenting with spiritual beings or forces, consulting them, enlisting their aid; such as magic, theosophy, spiritism, divination, and witchcraft. There is no obligation to avoid a remote occasion, unless we foresee that it will soon be proximate. But there is a positive obligation to avoid a voluntary proximate occasion, whether it be absolute or relative, present or absent.---C.E. (R. G. B.)

O'Connell, Daniel (1775-1847), orator and leader, surnamed "The Liberator," b. Carfin, Co. Kerry, Ireland; d. Genoa, Italy. He studied at St. Omer and Douai where his stay was cut short by the French Revolution and in 1798 was called to the Irish Bar. Though the penal laws had been relaxed, Catholics had only limited legal rights and O'Connell determined that they should have a voice in the making of the laws and should have religious freedom. The French Revolution had O'Carolan, Torlogh (1670-1737), poet and musician, b. Meath, Ireland; d. Ballyfarnon. He lost his sight when a boy, but later became renowned as a harper, and was known as "the last of the Irish bards." Many of his songs are of a lively Pindaric nature, and full of curious turns and twists of meter to suit his airs, and have been utilized by Thomas Moore for many of his "Melodies."---C.E.

O.C.C. = Order of Calced Carmelites.

O.C.D. = Order of Discalced Carmelites.

O.Cist. = Cistercian Order.

O.C.S. = Order of Carthusians.
sired him with a horror of violence and he determined to secure his end by peaceful means, with the cooperation of the oppressed masses. His first public appearance, 1800, was to denounce the projected union of parliaments, but when the act was passed, he organized the Catholics to fight for emancipation. He struggled unavertedly against bigotry and government oppression for years, opposing the proposed English veto power over episcopal elections and welcoming George IV to Ireland, 1820. By 1826 his Catholic association was strong enough to contest parliamentary elections successfully; two years later he himself won the election in Clare amidst tremendous popular enthusiasm. He then refused to take the anti-Catholic oath in pursuance of law; the crisis had come; Wellington feared a rebellion, so the Government capitulated, granting Catholic Emancipation, 1829, and O'Connell was unceremoniously King of Ireland. He now bent his efforts towards reform of the poor and tithe laws, and above all to repeal the Union. Eventually the Repeal Movement made mighty strides, monster meetings were held throughout the country. O'Connell was flung into prison but was released on appeal. Unfortunately his health began to fail, the generation of Young Irelandans was chafing under his prudent discipline; then came the horrors of the Great Famine. He was forced to seek restoration in a warmer climate and wished to die in Rome; but the end came after he reached Genoa. He had bequeathed his heart to the Eternal City and his body to Ireland, where it rests under the beautiful round tower at Glasnevin, Dublin.

—John (1810-83), writer; son of preceding, b. Dublin; d. Kingston, Co. Dublin, Ireland. He was a writer of literary and polemical power, but lacked tact in politics and came into conflict with the Young Ireland party.—C.E.; MacDonald, Daniel O'Connell, Lond., 1929.

O'Connor, Charles (1710-91), Irish scholar, b. Belanagare, Ireland, one of the last great Gaels who continued the unbroken traditions of their race. With Dr. Curry, he was the real lay leader of the Irish Catholics of his day and founded the Roman Catholic Committee. 1757. His "Discourses on the History of Ireland" is a learned work.—C.E.

O'Connor, Charles (1804-81), lawyer, b. New York; d. Nantucket, Mass. He was admitted to the New York bar and made rapid progress, and the case of Stewart v. Liepensard, 1843, permanently established his fame. He played an important part in the State Constitutional Convention of 1846 to which he was nominated by all political parties. In 1872 he was nominated by the Democrats for president of the U. S. Among his later important cases were his defense of Edwin Forrest, of Jefferson Davis, and his prose'sion of William Tweed for municipal corruption.—C.E.

O.C.R. = Order of Cistercians Reformed, or Trappists.

Oct. = octava (octave (Breviary)).

Octaves (Lat., octava, eighth) are made up of a feast-day and the seven days following it. Only certain feasts, and those of higher rank, are placed by the Church on her calendar as with the form of an octave. As the memory of the feast is more or less kept up during its octave, it is plain that the purpose in arranging a feast with an octave is to honor the mystery of religion or saint venerated on the feast itself. The Octaves of Christmas, Epiphany, Easter, Ascension, Pentecost, and Corpus Christi are privileged, i.e., either the Mass or Office, or at least a commemoration is repeated each day, with precedence over the Feasts.—C.E. (W. C. H.)

Octavius (VICTOR IV), antipope (1159-1164), d. Lucca, Italy. While legate to Germany he gained the reputation of being rapacious and over-ambitious. Upon the death of Adrian IV he sought in vain to have himself elected and at the imposition of Alexander III he seized the papal mantle and rushed out to his followers charging the new pope. The Frangipani and the friends of Frederick Barbarossa secured Rome for him but popular discontent forced him to flee. Barbarossa, dreading excommunication by the lawful pope, summoned a Council at Pavia, 1160, to settle the two claims but in reality, to install Octavius. The legates refused to support the antipope, who died soon after.—Mann.

October (Lat., octo, eight; eighth month of the Roman year), month of special devotion to the Holy Rosary.

O'Curry, Eugene (1796-1862), scholar, b. Dunaha, Co. Clare, Ireland; d. Dublin. Appointed to the topographical and historical department of the Ordnance Survey of Ireland, 1834, he brought into touch with Irish MSS., which with his associate John O'Donovan he later published in part. In 1855 he obtained the chair of Irish history and archæology in the Catholic University of Dublin, where he delivered a remarkable series of lectures, published later as "Manuscript Materials of Ancient Irish History" and "Manners and Customs of the Ancient Irish." He was engaged in editing and translating the Brehon Laws when he died. The immense collection of letters and documents, the result of his and his associates' labors for the Ordnance Survey, were kept unpublished by the British government for fear of stirring up Irish national sentiment.—C.E.

O Deus, ego amo te, or My God, I love Thee, not because, hymn, not found in the Breviary. It was written by St. Francis Xavier (1506-52) and has about 25 translations; the English title given is by E. Caswall.—C.E.; Britt.

Odillo, Saint, confessor (c. 902-1044), Abbot of Cluny, b. Auvergne, France; d. Souvigny. Descended from a noble family of Auvergne, he entered Cluny in 901, and was made abbot three years later. Under his rule not only Cluny made rapid progress but Benedictine monasteries in general were reformed and many new foundations made. The Peace of God, which had such great economic importance, was largely due to his efforts.

St. ODIL}
OEDIPO

694

O FILII ET FILIAE

O Diovan, John (1806-61), historian and antiquarian, b. Atanenmore, Co. Kilkenny, Ireland; d. Dublin. Beginning the study of Irish at an early age, he was introduced by Hardiman to a circle of famous scholars, and became with O'Curry, his brother-in-law, the supreme authority on ancient Irish affairs. He was the mainstay of the chief Irish archaeological reviews of his day. He is most popularly known by his "Irish Grammar," and his edition of the Annals of the Four Masters. His series of scholarly letters written in connection with his work for the Ordinance Survey of Ireland, like O'Curry's, were kept unpublished by the British Government for fear of reviving flames of Irish patriotism.—C.E.

Odo of Pordenone, Blessed (1286-1331), Franciscan missionary, b. Villanova near Pordenone, Friuli, Italy; d. Udine. On his way to China, 1318, as a missionary, he passed through Persia, Java, and Ceylon, and on his return was the first European to penetrate the capital of the Dalai-Lama. For a long time doubt was expressed regarding the veracity of his travels, for he accepted so many fabulous stories, but Mandeville's plagiarisms from them were extremely popular in the Middle Ages, and were used as a manual by the geographers of that period.—C.E., XII, 281.

O'Dwyer, Joseph (1841-98), physician, b. Cleveland; d. New York. After graduating from public schools at London, Ontario, he studied and practised medicine in New York. The sight of so many children dying from suffocation in diphtheria led him to experimentation which resulted in his development of the system of intubation, one of the most valuable practical discoveries of his age.—C.E.

Ecolampadius, John (Hussgen; 1482-1531), theologian, organizer of Protestantism at Basel; b. Weinsberg, Swabia; d. Basel, Switzerland. While studying at Heidelberg he was deeply interested in mysticism, without obtaining a good foundation in Scholasticism to underlie his preaching. At Augsburg he joined the pro-Lutheran humanists, 1519. The following year he entered the Brigitines of Altomünster, but left, 1522, when his unorthodox opinions on confession and the Holy Eucharist rendered his position untenable. Settling at Basel, he advocated the new doctrines, adopting Zwingli's views on the words of institution at the Last Supper. Although he could not change conditions at Basel immediately, after he had won over the secular authority, he did not rest until Catholic worship was suppressed.—C.E.

Ecumenical councils (Gr., oikousmene, the inhabited world) are those to which the bishops, and others entitled to vote, are convoked from the whole world under the presidency of the pope or his legates, and the decrees of which having received papal confirmation, are binding on all the members of the Church. In normal times, when according to the Divine constitution of the Church, the pope rules in the fullness of his power, the function of councils is to support and strengthen his rule on occasions of extraordinary distress, heresies, schisms, relaxed discipline, or external foes. It is the action of the pope that makes the councils ecumenic. When the pope has spoken ex cathedra to make his own the decisions of any council, regardless of the number of its members, nothing further can be wanted to make them binding on the whole Church, and the pope and his cardinals are called the Ecumenical Patriarch and his council, with the right to depose, excommunicate, or punish any. See O'Donovan, WALTER, or WALTER OF EVESHAM (d. 1505), and vehemently opposed by the popes because it signified "imperial" or "universal" father. The Byzantine prelates persisted in using the title, which is now claimed by the Orthodox Patriarch of Constantinople.

Ecumenical Patriarch, a title first assumed by John the Faster, bishop of Constantinople (d. 595), and vehemently opposed by the popes because it signified "imperial" or "universal" father. The Byzantine prelates persisted in using the title, which is now claimed by the Orthodox Patriarch of Constantinople.

Ecumenical Patriarch, a title first assumed by John the Faster, bishop of Constantinople (d. 595), and vehemently opposed by the popes because it signified "imperial" or "universal" father. The Byzantine prelates persisted in using the title, which is now claimed by the Orthodox Patriarch of Constantinople.

Ecclesiastical buildings of the Middle Ages, in Upper Bavaria, near which King Karlmann erected a Benedictine monastery, 876, and built the abbey church of St. Philip the Apostle. The church and abbey, ransacked and burned by the Hungarians, 910, were rebuilt and entrusted to twelve Augustinian Canons and a provost, who remained until the secularization of the Bavarian possessions, 1803. Under their care was also the Liebfrauen-Kapelle with its miraculous image of Our Lady. The number of pilgrims who visit this shrine is so great that it has been necessary for the Augustinians to seek the aid of the Jesuits, Franciscans, Capuchins, Redemptorists, and some secular priests.—C.E.

Ecclesiastical buildings of the Middle Ages, in Upper Bavaria, near which King Karlmann erected a Benedictine monastery, 876, and built the abbey church of St. Philip the Apostle. The church and abbey, ransacked and burned by the Hungarians, 910, were rebuilt and entrusted to twelve Augustinian Canons and a provost, who remained until the secularization of the Bavarian possessions, 1803. Under their care was also the Liebfrauen-Kapelle with its miraculous image of Our Lady. The number of pilgrims who visit this shrine is so great that it has been necessary for the Augustinians to seek the aid of the Jesuits, Franciscans, Capuchins, Redemptorists, and some secular priests.—C.E.

Ecclesiastical buildings of the Middle Ages, in Upper Bavaria, near which King Karlmann erected a Benedictine monastery, 876, and built the abbey church of St. Philip the Apostle. The church and abbey, ransacked and burned by the Hungarians, 910, were rebuilt and entrusted to twelve Augustinian Canons and a provost, who remained until the secularization of the Bavarian possessions, 1803. Under their care was also the Liebfrauen-Kapelle with its miraculous image of Our Lady. The number of pilgrims who visit this shrine is so great that it has been necessary for the Augustinians to seek the aid of the Jesuits, Franciscans, Capuchins, Redemptorists, and some secular priests.—C.E.

Ecclesiastical buildings of the Middle Ages, in Upper Bavaria, near which King Karlmann erected a Benedictine monastery, 876, and built the abbey church of St. Philip the Apostle. The church and abbey, ransacked and burned by the Hungarians, 910, were rebuilt and entrusted to twelve Augustinian Canons and a provost, who remained until the secularization of the Bavarian possessions, 1803. Under their care was also the Liebfrauen-Kapelle with its miraculous image of Our Lady. The number of pilgrims who visit this shrine is so great that it has been necessary for the Augustinians to seek the aid of the Jesuits, Franciscans, Capuchins, Redemptorists, and some secular priests.—C.E.

Ecclesiastical buildings of the Middle Ages, in Upper Bavaria, near which King Karlmann erected a Benedictine monastery, 876, and built the abbey church of St. Philip the Apostle. The church and abbey, ransacked and burned by the Hungarians, 910, were rebuilt and entrusted to twelve Augustinian Canons and a provost, who remained until the secularization of the Bavarian possessions, 1803. Under their care was also the Liebfrauen-Kapelle with its miraculous image of Our Lady. The number of pilgrims who visit this shrine is so great that it has been necessary for the Augustinians to seek the aid of the Jesuits, Franciscans, Capuchins, Redemptorists, and some secular priests.—C.E.

Ecclesiastical buildings of the Middle Ages, in Upper Bavaria, near which King Karlmann erected a Benedictine monastery, 876, and built the abbey church of St. Philip the Apostle. The church and abbey, ransacked and burned by the Hungarians, 910, were rebuilt and entrusted to twelve Augustinian Canons and a provost, who remained until the secularization of the Bavarian possessions, 1803. Under their care was also the Liebfrauen-Kapelle with its miraculous image of Our Lady. The number of pilgrims who visit this shrine is so great that it has been necessary for the Augustinians to seek the aid of the Jesuits, Franciscans, Capuchins, Redemptorists, and some secular priests.—C.E.

Ecclesiastical buildings of the Middle Ages, in Upper Bavaria, near which King Karlmann erected a Benedictine monastery, 876, and built the abbey church of St. Philip the Apostle. The church and abbey, ransacked and burned by the Hungarians, 910, were rebuilt and entrusted to twelve Augustinian Canons and a provost, who remained until the secularization of the Bavarian possessions, 1803. Under their care was also the Liebfrauen-Kapelle with its miraculous image of Our Lady. The number of pilgrims who visit this shrine is so great that it has been necessary for the Augustinians to seek the aid of the Jesuits, Franciscans, Capuchins, Redemptorists, and some secular priests.—C.E.

Ecclesiastical buildings of the Middle Ages, in Upper Bavaria, near which King Karlmann erected a Benedictine monastery, 876, and built the abbey church of St. Philip the Apostle. The church and abbey, ransacked and burned by the Hungarians, 910, were rebuilt and entrusted to twelve Augustinian Canons and a provost, who remained until the secularization of the Bavarian possessions, 1803. Under their care was also the Liebfrauen-Kapelle with its miraculous image of Our Lady. The number of pilgrims who visit this shrine is so great that it has been necessary for the Augustinians to seek the aid of the Jesuits, Franciscans, Capuchins, Redemptorists, and some secular priests.—C.E.
translations. The title given above is by E. Caswall.—C.E.

O.F.M. = Order of Friars Minor, or Franciscans.

Og, øg, King of Basan (Bashan) in the country of the Amorrites (Jos., 12). He is described as lord over "the remnant of the Raphaims who dwelt in Astaroth, and in Edrei, and had dominion in Mount Hermon, and in Salecha, and in all Basan." He was a man of gigantic stature, whose bed of iron, nine cubits long and four cubits wide, was shown in Rabbath (Deut., 3). Many legends were spun about his name in the Orient and also in Europe.

(A. H.)

Ogdensburg, Diocese of, New York, embraces that part of Herkimer and Hamilton Counties of the northern line of the townships of Ohio and Russia, as well as the counties of Lewis, Jefferson, St. Lawrence, Franklin, Clinton, and Essex; area, 12,036 sq. m.; erected, 1872; suffragan of New York. Bishops: Edgar P. Wadham (1872-91); Henry Gabriels (1892-1921); Joseph H. Conroy (1921). Churches, 162; priests, secular, 147; priests, regular, 168; religious women, 492; college, 1; academies, 9; parochial schools, 26; pupils in parochial schools, 5031; institutions, 11; Catholics, 107,504.

O Gentilis hospita, or O House of Nazareth the Blest, hymn for Lauds on the Feast of the Holy Family, first Sunday after Epiphany. Pope Leo XIII (1810-1903) wrote it. Of the three translations, the title given above is by Mgr. Henry.—Britt.

Ogilvie, John, Venerable (1580-1615), martyr, b. near Keith, Scotland; d. Glasgow. He was converted from Calvinism at Louvain, and having joined the Jesuits returned to the Scottish mission. Some months later he was betrayed in Glasgow and hanged after torture.—C.E.

O Gloriosa virginit, or O Glorious Lady! throned on high, hymn for Lauds on feasts of Our Lady. It is attributed to Fortunatus (530-609). Fourteen translations are in existence; the title given above is by J. Doran and M. Blacker.—Britt.

O'Growney, Eugene (1863-99), priest and scholar, b. Ballyfallon, Co. Meath, Ireland; d. Los Angeles, Col. Ordained, 1888, he taught Irish at Maynooth College. As editor of the "Gaelic Journal" and one of the founders of the Gaelic League, he played a leading part in the movement to save the Irish language from extinction, especially through a valuable series of "Simple Lessons in Irish."—C.E.

O'Hagan, John (1821-1905), hagiographer, b. Stradbally, Queen's Co., Ireland; d. Dublin. He accompanied his parents to the United States as a youth, and was ordained for the Diocese of St. Louis, 1847. Six years later he returned to Ireland and was affiliated to the Archdiocese of Dublin. Notwithstanding a busy pastoral life, he devoted himself to historical research and compiled a great series of lives of the Irish saints; in addition to a voluminous history of the Irish in America.—C.E.

Oh come and mourn with me a while, hymn written by Rev. F. W. Faber in the 19th century.

O'Higgins, Ambrose Bernard (1720-1810), administrator, b. Co. Meath, Ireland; d. Lima, Peru. He was educated at Cadiz and after converting to South America entered the Spanish engineers' corps. His talent and energy were recognized and he was ultimately made Marquis of Orsorno and Viceroy of Peru.—BERNARDO (1776-1842), patriot, son of preceding, b. Chillan, Chile; d. Lima. He took part in the revolutionary war against Spain and was hailed as the liberator of Chile.—C.E.

Ohio, the 35th state of the United States in size, the 4th in population, and the 17th state to be admitted to the Union (19 Feb. 1903); area, 41,400 sq. m.; pop. (1920) 5,759,394; Catholics (1928), 1,065,879. Although the Jesuit Fr. Joseph de Bonnecamps accompanied Céloron de Bienville on his expedition through Ohio in 1747, and accompanied his Indians to the Indians they encountered, no mission was founded. In 1751 Fr. Armand de la Richardieu built a chapel at Sandusky, and ministered to the Indians until he was driven out through the hostility between the French and British. In 1790 a colony of French immigrants settled for a time near Galipolis and were cared for by the Dauphin Pierre Didier. When Fr. Stephen Badin visited the settlement in 1796 he found their numbers few and dwindling and the church neglected. An Indian mission, started in 1795 by Rev. Edmund Burke, a former professor in the Quebec Seminary, near Fort Miami on the Maumee River, was also short-lived. In 1812 Bp. Flaget of Bardstown made a journey through Ohio, baptizing the children of Catholics in Chillicothe, Lancaster, and Somerset. He said Mass in the home of the Dittoes near the last-named settlement, and when he sent a Dominican, Rev. Edward Fenwick, to the Ohio mission, in 1814, it was on a site given by the Dittoes that the first church, St. Joseph's, was erected in 1818. From this center Zanesville, Cincinnati, Chillicothe, and Lancaster were served by Fr. Fenwick or his nephew, Rev. Nicholas Young. The latter blessed the first church of Cincinnati in 1818. It was named Christ Church and was a rude plank structure erected at Vine and Liberty Streets, outside the limits of the city. After the consecration of Bp. Fenwick in 1822, the little church was moved by oxen into the city to a site on Sycamore Street, above Sixth. In 1820 the first church of northern Ohio was built at Dungannon, and named for St. Paul. Included in the state are the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, and the Dioceses of Cleveland, Columbus, and Toledo (qq.v.). Catholic influence on place-names of the state is shown in the following: Isle St. George, St. Bernard, St. Clairsville, St. Henry, St. James, St. John’s, St. Louisville, St. Martin, St. Mary’s, St. Stephen, Santa Fé. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in Ohio:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Church</th>
<th>Membership</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Catholic Church</td>
<td>2,291,793</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church in the U.S.A.</td>
<td>123,800</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disciples of Christ</td>
<td>145,015</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northern Baptist Convention</td>
<td>39,942</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Brethren in Christ</td>
<td>99,925</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reformed Church in the U.S.</td>
<td>52,578</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Protestant Episcopal Church</td>
<td>45,175</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congregational Churches</td>
<td>45,066</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>German Evangelical Synod</td>
<td>40,456</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran General Synod</td>
<td>39,050</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran Synodical Conference</td>
<td>30,233</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>National Baptist Convention</td>
<td>27,975</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Christian Church (Christian Convention)</td>
<td>26,129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Protestant Church</td>
<td>25,629</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran General Council</td>
<td>23,456</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Presbyterian Church</td>
<td>21,613</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jewish Congregations</td>
<td>20,151</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All Other Denominations</td>
<td>183,393</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Church Membership</td>
<td>2,291,793</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

—C.C.; Shea.

Oil of Catechumens, one of the three holy oils. It takes its name from its use in the ceremonies of Baptism, a catechumen being an instructed convert about to receive that sacrament. It is also called simply oleum sanctum (holy oil). It is also used in the consecration of churches, in the blessing of altars, in the ordination of priests, and in the coronation of Catholic monarchs.

Oil of Saints (MANNA OIL OF SAINTS), an oily substance, which is said to have flowed, or still flows, from the relics or burial places of certain saints; sometimes, the oil in lamps that burn before their shrines, the water that flows from the wells near their burial places, or the oil and water which in some way have come in contact with their relics. These oils are or have been used by the faithful, with the belief that they will cure bodily and spiritual ailments through the intercession of the saints with whom the oils have some connection. At present the most famous of these oils is the Oil of St. Walburga, mentioned as early as the 9th century. It flows from the stone slab and the surrounding metal plate on which rest the saint’s relics in her church in Eichstadt, Bavaria. A chemical analysis has shown that the fluid is water, but since it came into contact with the relics of the saint, the fact justifies the practise of using it as a remedy for diseases of body and soul. Among other famous oils are the Oil of St. Menas, from a holy well near the saint’s shrine in the Libyan desert, and the Oil of St. Nicholas of Myra, which emanates from his relics at Bari, Italy, whither they were brought in 1087.

—C.E.

Oil of the Sick, one of the three holy oils. It is the “matter” of the sacrament of Extreme Unction, and is also used in the blessing of bells.

Oil-stock, a cylindrical metal case usually made with three compartments screwed together, containing the Holy Oils for use on sick-calls. Letters on each part indicate the kind of oil therein. (J. F. S.)

Ointment, a soft, unctuous substance, which readily melts when applied to the skin. Among the Orientals of Bible times much use was made of sweet-smelling unguents, among which spikenard was the most famous. It is now generally believed to be the Xardostachya jatamansi, closely allied to valerian. It seems quite certain that this is the nard used by Mary of Bethany to anoint Our Lord (Matt., 26; Mark, 14; John, 12). The Apostles estimate the value of the pound of nard to be 300 denarii. Ointments were used commonly in religious rites and in the burial of the dead.—C.E.

O Jesus, Jesus! dearest Lord, hymn written in the 19th century by Rev. F. W. Faber.

Okeghem, or Ockenheim, Jean de (c. 1430-95), founder of the second Netherland school of music, b. probably Termonde, Flanders; d. probably Tours, France. He was a choir boy at Antwerp Cathedral, 1443, and is supposed to have become a pupil of Gilles Binchois and Guillaume Dufay. After receiving Holy Orders, he held the post of court chapel-master under three French kings, 1453-95, at the same time acting by royal appointment as treasurer of St. Martin’s Church at Tours. Among his compositions is a mass for four voices, and a motet for 36 voices, a masterpiece of high contemporary repute. In the annals of music he is considered an excellent contrapuntist and originator of the art which, through his pupils, was diversified among schools of music since his time; his innovation of allowing free voice entry on any interval was effective in developing the a capella style. —C.E.

Oklahoma, the 17th state of the United States, the 21st in population, and the 46th state to be admitted to the Union (16 Nov., 1907); area, 70,057 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 2,028,283; Catholics (1928), 54,990. Although the Spanish Franciscan, Fr. Juan de Salas, is known to have labored early in the 17th century among the Indians of the present state of Oklahoma, the real beginning of Catholicity dates from the formation of the Prefecture Apostolic of Indian Territory, under the French Benedictines, in 1877. Before that date the scattered Catholic Indians and few white settlers had been visited by missionary priests from Arkansas or Kansas. By 1880, Dom Isidore Robot, O.S.B., the first Prefect Apostolic, had completed the Sacred Heart Abbey in Pottawatomie County, which became the center of missionary activities among the Indians. He also founded St. Mary’s Academy, under the Sisters of Mercy. The appointment of Rt. Rev. Théophile Meerschaert, O.S.B., as Vicar Apostolic, in 1891, followed close on the opening of Indian Territory to the whites, and his life was that of a pioneer missionary, visiting remote settlements, on horseback often, and celebrating Mass occasionally in a dugout when no house was available. The Diocese of Oklahoma (q.v.) comprises the state. Catholic influence on place-names of the state is shown in the following: Sacred Heart, St. Louis, Sante Fé. The U. S. Religious Census of 1916 gave the following statistics for church membership in Oklahoma:
Catholic indicates their contention, viz.; that they have been particularly generous in passing it on, councils, in accord with the Old Catholic churches had added something thereto. Their principal powers-C.E.; Shea. are standing for the ancient faith, while the Council clee of papal infallibility as set forth by the Vati­

The Lithuanian National Catholic Church of America, organized by the Rt. Rev. in 1870. Their use of the term "old" concil in the United States. The Lithuanian National Cath­

Old Catholic Church in the United States. The Lithuanian National Cath­

St. Olaf. Patron of Norway. Buried in Trond­

Parochial schools, 7405; institutions, 5; Catholics,

In 1926 in the United States there were: 9 lions throughout France, and the institute still takes

The refusal of certain Catholics to accept the de­

Oliveant, Pierre (1816-71), Jesuit martyr, b. Paris; d. there. Born of irreligious parents he was converted by Lacordaire's sermons, while in the Normal School, and became an apostle of charity in the St. Vincent de Paul Society. After teaching history for some years at Grenoble and Paris he entered the Jesuits, 1845, stirred thereunto by the attacks being made on them by the state. Most of his life thenceforth was spent in Paris teaching and preaching. During the Paris Commune he was put to death in Rue Haxo. His remains were placed in the chapel of the Rue de Sèvres, and many extraordinary favors have been attributed to his intercession. See Commune.—C.E.

Olivia Branch, a symbol of peace. In ancient times it was used as a signal between contending armies, asking for a truce. It is often shown in the hand of the Archangel Gabriel, the messenger who announced the coming of the Prince of Peace.

Olive Oil, oil obtained from the pulp of olives. It is mixed with balsam in the making of chrism, which is used in the administration of certain sacraments. It represents the copious outpouring of sacramental grace which gives strength to the soul as oil does to the body. In the Old Testament God commanded that a lamp filled with purest oil of olives should always burn in the Tabernacle of the Testimony (Ex. 27); it was also used in many religious ceremonies, e.g., coronation of kings, consecration of the high priest, and ordination of the Levites, and was prominent in Mosaic ordinances (Ex. 30; Lev., 8; Deut., 28).

Oliver Plunket, Blessed martyr (1629-81), Abp. of Armagh, b. Loughcrew, Co. Meath, Ireland; d. London. Of an illustrious family, he was educated privately at Dublin, and at the Irish College in Rome. Ordained, 1654, he taught in the College of the Propaganda, 1657-69. Appointed Abp. of Armagh, he was consecrated at Ghent, 1669. During his episcopacy he convened a national council, 1670, a provincial synod, 1678, defended the rights of his see against Dublin, and promoted Catholic education. During the renewed persecution of the Irish Church, Plunket was arrested, 1679, and imprisoned in Dublin Castle. His trial was held in London in order to secure his conviction, and there he was hanged and quartered. Beatiified, 1920. Feast, 11 July.—C.E., XII, 169.

O'Loghlen, Sir Michael (1789-1846), lawyer, b. Ennis, Co. Clare, Ireland; d. London. He rose rapidly at the Irish Bar through the brilliancy of his pleading, and is particularly noted as having been the first Catholic solicitor-general, 1834, and of his pleading, and is particularly noted as having been the first Catholic solicitor-general, 1834, and he was hanged and quartered. Beatiified, 1920. Feast, 11 July.—C.E., XII, 169.

O'Lux beata Trinitatis, or O TRINITY OF BLESSED LIGHT, hymn for Vespers on Trinity Sunday. This is the original text of the hymn; the Roman Breviary text is "Jam sol recedit igneus" (q.v.). The hymn was written by St. Ambrose (340-397). There are 12 translations of the original text; the title given above is taken from the original text of the hymn; the Roman Breviary favors have been attributed to his intercession, to his pleading, and is particularly noted as having been the first Catholic solicitor-general, 1834, and of his pleading, and is particularly noted as having been the first Catholic solicitor-general, 1834, and he was hanged and quartered. Beatiified, 1920. Feast, 11 July.—C.E., XII, 169.

O'Merced. = Mercedarian Order.

O.M.I. = Oblates of Mary Immaculate.

Omission (Lat., omittere, lay aside, pass over), inertia of the will in despite of the intellect which urges it to act; or the quasi-positive act of withholding the dictated action. Morally, it presupposes that the intellect is urging some law or precept, and is then culpable in the same fashion as a culpable positive act.—C.E. (F. B.)

Omnipotence (Lat., omnis, all; potestas, power), all power, powerful attribute of God; the claim of Christ when commissioning the Apostles to teach all nations (Matt., 28). God can do everything that is possible; all things are possible to God. He cannot do what is of itself impossible. As He is infinitely holy, He cannot do evil; it is a sign of holiness that a creature cannot do evil which is possible. Since He is infinitely wise, eternal and unchangeable, He cannot do evil. His poder is not distinct from His knowledge and will in reality, but only in concept; all three are one in Him.—C.E.; Pohle-Preuss, God: His Knowability, Essence, and Attributes, St. L., 1921. (Ed.)

Omniscience (Lat., omnis, all; seire, to know), God knows all things simply and absolutely. He, first of all, adequately knows His own essence; He comprehends it in all its infinity, and He alone so comprehends it. Further He knows all things outside of Himself, all His creatures and everything that concerns them, whether these things be past, present or future. Nor is this knowledge like ours, successive in its operation. In God there is no succession of acts, all is present to Him always, the past as well as the future, everything is as if it were happening now, nor is there anything in all the world which is not present to Him always.—Pohle-Preuss, God: His Knowability, Essence, and Attributes, St. L., 1921. (A. C. A.)

Omnis expertem maculae Mariam, or Lo! Mary is exempt from stain of sin, hymn for...
Vespers (II) on 11 Feb., Feast of the Apparition of the Blessed Virgin Mary Immaculate, composed by an unknown author. It has two translations. The English title given is by the Benedictines of Stanbrook.—Britt.

Omophorion, vestment of the Greek Rite, corresponding to the pallium of the Western Church but worn by bishops as well as archbishops. It is a broad band ornamented with crosses and draped loosely over neck, shoulders, and breast. Probably derived from the civil omophorion, a shawl in general use that existed in the time of Isidore of Pelusium, c. 400, when it was made of wool and symbolical of the duties of bishops as shepherds of their flocks.

Onanism, the theological term for the crime committed by married persons, who in the performance of the conjugal act aim to prevent conception. The name is derived from Onan, the son of the Patriarch Judah, mentioned in the book of Genesis (38, 8). When Juda requested Onan to marry his (Onan's) brother's widow, in order to raise up of their flocks.

Onias (Heb., strength of the Lord), name of four Jewish High Priests of the 3rd and 2nd centuries B.C. Three are mentioned in 1 Mac, 12, as having received a friendly letter from Arius, the Spartan ruler, who claimed kinship and suggested an alliance. (2) Onias III (199-175); in 2 Machabees the beginnings of his pontificate are highly praised (2 Mac, 3). During his rule Heliodorus made his ill-fated expedition to Jerusalem to seize the alleged treasures of the Temple. (3) Onias IV was too young to succeed his father in the priesthood which fell into unworthy hands. He fled into Egypt where he built, near Heliopolis, a new temple for the use of the many Jews in Egypt (160 B.C.).—C.E.

O Nimis felix, meriteque celsi, or O Most than Blessed, Merit High Attaining, hymn for Lauds on 24 June, Feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist. It was written by Paul the Deacon (720-799). The English title given is by M. Blacker and G. Palmer.—Britt.

Only Begotten Son, The, one of Our Lord's own titles of Himself (John, 3.16).

Ontologism (Gr., ontos, being; logos, science), the doctrine that an intuition of God is the first act of our intelligence. Malebranche (1638-1715), was the first ontologist, assuming that thus alone he could account for the universal and necessary character of ideas. It was revived during the 19th century as an attempt to counteract modern subjectivism (Orestes A. Brownson in America). According to Gioberti (1801-52), our first judgment is "Being creates existence," and from this we deduce the existence and attributes of God, as well as all ideas of finite reality. Philosophically ontologism embodies many false assumptions and dangerous consequences, while its theological implications caused its definite condemnation in 1887, in the form of 40 propositions of Rosmini.—C.E. (J. A. B.)

O.P., or O.P. = Order of Preachers, or Dominicans.

Opes decusque regum reliquae, or Riches and Regal Throne for Christ's Dear Race, hymn for Lauds on 8 July, Feast of St. Elizabeth of Portugal. It was written by Pope Urban VIII (1598-1644). Of the three translations, the English title given is by E. Caswall.—Britt.

Opinion, assent to a probable proposition; an attitude of a mind inclining to one of two contradictory propositions, but without definitely excluding the other. If the motives in favor of one alternative clearly outweigh those on the other side, the mind tends to one or both parties, married persons should simply abstain from the conjugal act.—Bruehl, Birth Control and Eugenics, N. Y., 1928. (F. R.)

Once in Royal David's city, hymn written by Mrs. Cecil Alexander in the 19th century.

Onesimus (Gr., oneimos, advantageous, profitable), a native of Phrygia who robbed and fled from his master, Philemon, to Rome where he was converted to Christianity by Saint Paul, and thence sent back to his master with the "Epistle of Saint Paul to Philemon."—C.E.; Butler.

Optatus, Saint, confessor (4th century), Bp. of Milevis in Numidia. A converted rhetorician, he wrote a valuable treatise against the Donatists, in reply to Parmenian of Carthage, c. 366. Nothing further is known of his life. Relics in the cemetery of St. Callistus. Feast, 4 June.—C.E.; Butler.

Optimism (Lat., optimus, best), may be understood as a metaphysical theory, or as an emotional disposition. In philosophy, the theory proposed by Leibnitz (1646-1716), that the world, as the product of a Perfect, All-Good Creator, is the best conceivable world and essentially good. God foresaw all possible worlds, and was bound to choose the best. The fact of evil is explained as a necessary product of metaphysical finiteness and moral freedom. Physical evil is a punishment for abuse of the latter. In a more moderate sense, optimism holds that the world is good, and the best possible fulfillment of the purpose of the Creator. It is also an evolutionary theory that the world is constantly tending to a higher and more perfect state (Hegel). As an emotional tendency it is an habitual and persistent disposition to regard only the bright and cheerful aspects of life, minimizing what is distasteful.—C.E.; Keller, Optimism, N. Y., 1903. (J. A. B.)

Opus Operatum (Ex Opere Operato), a technical phrase used by theologians since the 13th century to signify that the sacraments produce considerable controversy. To these Gratian (1140) existence; the English title given is by E. Cas-destination. The acts of this council, approved by Pelagians' concerning original sin, grace, and pre-conferring the sacrament; the latter effect is desigand charitable institutions. The code of canon law cessation.-C.E.
OPUS OPERATUM

Counrul of, a provincial synod, the naming of the congregation. In this prayer the priest ormation of the Liturgy published every four weeks and charitable institutions. The code of canon law missionary of the church, set aside by ecclesiastical Church and Canada; instead of suppressing it, the Catholics were being persecuted. Orangemen still Baptism is an grace dependent upon the intention of the person conferring the sacrament; the latter effect is designated by the phrase ex opere operantis. The phrase is first found in the writings of Peter of Piotiers (e. 1130-1215), "The act of Baptism is not identical with the sign of Baptism because it is an opus operans.

Baptism is an opus operantium." The phrase was not in general use in the time of St. Thomas but it officially adopted by the Council of Trent and used to signify the objective character of the sacraments as producers of grace in opposition to the subjectivism of the Reformers (Trent, Sess. VII, can. 8). According to Trent, therefore, the term opera operantis signifies that the correct use of the sign instituted by Christ produces the grace irrerespectively of the merits of either minister or recipient (ex opere operantis), though the intention of conferring the sacrament is required in the minister and the intention of receiving in the recipient, if he be an adult, for a valid and worthy reception of the sacrament. For the council clearly states that the sacraments "confer Grace on those who do not place an obstacle therunto." (A. C. B.)

O Quot undis lacrimarum, of What a sea of Tears and Sorrow, hymn for Matins on 13 Sept.
Feast of the Seven Dolours of Our Lady. It is attributed to Callisto Palumbella who lived in the 19th century. Six translations of Mass and pre-existence; the English title given is by E. Cas-wall.—Brtt.

Oracle (Lat., orare, to speak), a Divine communication given at a particular place through partic-icularly appointed persons; also the place itself.
This form of divination existed in Babylon and As-yria, among the Hebrews, and in Greece and Rome.
The Delphic Oracle was perhaps the most famous, and exercised the greatest and most baleful influence. Christianity alone could conquer these homes of revelation; Constantine stripped Delphi and Do-orna, and under Theodosius the repression was completed.—C.E.

Orange, Council of, a provincial synod, the first, held in the year 11 at Orange in Southern France which issued thirty canons that have caused considerable controversy. To these Gratian (1140) and others added unauthentique ordinances. The Second Council of Orange (529) was the first in Gaul to publish a decision in matters of faith. Its deliberations were against the errors of the Semi-Pelagians concerning original sin, grace, and predestination. The acts of this council, approved by Pope Boniface II, were used by the Council of Trent in condemning Luther.—C.E.

Orangemen, a body of men in Ulster recruited in 1795 from the Ulster factions and the "Peep-of-Day Boys." It was called the Orange Society, taking its name from William of Orange, having Pretortant ascendancy and hatred of Catholicism as its battle-cry. It spread rapidly, having lodges in England and Canada; instead of suppressing it, the Government condoned its lawless acts, while the Catholics were being persecuted. Orangemen still celebrate in Ulster on the 1st and 12th of July, the anniversaries of the battles of Boyne and Aughrin.

Orange River, Vicariate Apostolic of, Orange Free State, Union of South Africa (British possession); has for its boundaries on the w., the Atlantic Ocean, on the S. Southwestern Africa and Bechu-naland, on the e. the eastern limits of Gordonia, Kenhardt and Fraserburg Districts, and on the s.
the southern limits of the province; extends from Van Rhynsdorp; entrusted to the Oblates of St.
Francis of Sales of Troyes; prefecture 1884; vicarate 1898.
Vicar Apostolic: Jean M. Simon, O.S.F.S. (1886), residence at Pella. Churches, 11; numerous stations; priests, 13; Oblate and O.S.F.S. Sisters; European, colored, boarding and day schools; Catholics, 5000.

Orans or Orans (Lat., orare, to pray), One of the most frequently depicted figures in the Roman Catacombs is this female figure, praying with outstretched arms. This ideal figure is regarded as a symbol of the soul in heaven praying for friends on earth. At first the Orans was represented in simplest garb but later became richly adorned. A remarkable Orans of the 4th century is supposed to represent the Blessed Virgin in the act of intercession.—C.E.; Northcote and Brownlow, Roma Sotterranea, Lond., 1879.

Orate Fratres, o-rátá fratrás (Lat., pray, brethren), the exhortation addressed to the people by the celebrant immediately after the Offertory and ablations in Mass and prayer. One of the most frequently used prayers in the Roman Mass is: "Orate Fratres, o-rátá fratrás; amen.
May the grace of the Lord be with you all. May the grace of the Lord be with you all. Amen." The phrase was not to pray). One of Oratorio, a musical composition for solo voices, chorus, orchestra, and organ set to a religious text generally taken from Holy Scripture. Said to have originated in St. Philip Neri's oratory, the first of these sacred dramas, the "Anima e Corpo" by Enriglio del Cagavieri, was performed in the oratory of the church of S. Maria in Vallicella, 1600, and the name "Oratorio" applied to the new form about 60 years later.—C.E.

Oratory (Lat., oratorium, from orare, to pray), as a general term, signifies a place of prayer, but in canon law means a structure, other than a parish church, set aside by ecclesiastical authority for prayer and the celebration of Mass. Oratories are usually connected with monasteries and convents and charitable institutions. The code of canon law (canon 1188) distinguishes three kinds of oratories:
(1) public, which is intended for the use of the members of a religious community or of an institution, but which the faithful at large may legitimately attend, at least during divine services, and to which they have access directly from the outside;
(2) semi-public, which is intended principally for the use of the religious community in whose house it is erected, and to which the faithful have no right of entry, though they may occasionally be allowed to attend some special function; (3) private, or domestic, which is erected in a private house for the blessed morsel, consisting of a piece of cheese and bread which the accused must swallow, if he was upon the water, he was declared not guilty; the established; cold water, into which the accused with to have his innocence established; the suspended loaf, a loaf of bread, through which a stick of which ordeal the accused must walk a certain dis­ance carrying a red-hot iron in his hands, or he outcome of which was looked upon as the judgment of God; the cross, before which the accuser and the lands comprised by its constitution confined, 1893; revised and again approved, 1925. It now exists as the "Congregatio interpose to vindicate the innocent or to punish the means used to determine the guilt or innocence of an accused person, in early medieval times. They were used in the belief that God would interpose to vindicate the innocent or to punish the guilty. They were resorted to when the ordinary means had failed, or when the contesting parties were unable to bring forth further necessary evidence. Ordeals were practised among many ancient people, but the medieval ordeals had their rise principally in the legal customs of the ancient Germanic pagans, and were in use among the newer Teutonic nations and in the old provinces of the Roman Em­pire, over which they held sway, lands comprised by the modern states of Germany, France, and England. They were never made use of by the tribunals of Rome. Among the ordeals were: the duel, the outcome of which was looked upon as the judgment of God; the cross, before which the accused and the accused stood with outstretched arms, and the first to let fall his arms was defeated; the hot iron, in which ordeal the accused must walk a certain dis­tance carrying a red-hot iron in his hands, or he must walk barefooted over red-hot ploughshares, and if he remained uninjured his innocence was es­tablished; cold water, into which the accused with arms and legs bound was cast, and if he floated upon the water, he was declared not guilty; the blessed morsel, consisting of a piece of cheese and bread which the accused must swallow, if he was to have his innocence established; the suspended loaf, a loaf of bread, through which a stick of wood was passed and placed in an opening made in another piece of wood, so that it could turn, and a person was considered guilty if it turned from west to east; the exanes in mensuris (Lat., trial by ballot), seldom practised, an ordeal probably de­cided by lot or by the measuring of the accused by a stick of determined length; and bleeding, in which ordeal, a person suspected of murder was forced to look upon the wounds of the victim, if these began to bleed afresh, his guilt was supposed to have been proven. The Christian missionaries and Churchmen generally were somewhat tolerant of the ordeals, excepting the duel. Their opposition would have been well-nigh fruitless; many of them were children of their age, and the ordeals were closely en­twined with the legal customs of the Teutonic peo­ples. On the other hand, the Popes always opposed these practices, and at an early date they began their efforts to suppress them. These prohibitions culminated in the general decree of Innocent III, at the Council of the Lateran, 1215. In the course of the 14th and 16th centuries the last vestiges of the ordeals disappeared.—C.E. (M. P. R.)

Order of Canons Regular of Prémontré (Premonstratensians, in England called White Canons), religious order founded in 1120, by St. Norbert, at Prémontré, near Laon, France, composed of priests, clerics, nuns, and members of the Third Order of St. Norbert. They follow the rule of St. Augustine with austere supplementary statutes, and have five particular ends: the singing of the Divine Office, zeal for the salvation of souls, the spirit of habitual penance, a special devotion to the Holy Eucharist, and devotion to the Immaculate Conception. The order spread rapidly in countries throughout Europe and Asia, and in 1770, 42 abbeys, conventions, and colleges were founded. Owing to the continuous wars in many countries, and in the East the invasions of the Tatars and the Turks, the heresies of Hus and Luther, and the French Revolu­tion, many abbeys were confiscated but provinces were established in England, Canada, the United States, and South America. Statistics, 5 provinces or circaries, 42 abbeys, and 1033 religious, priests, clerks, and lay-brothers. In 1866, a new congrega­tion of Norbertine canons since incorporated with the order, was formed at Frigolet by Dom Edmund Bonhoun and possessed 4 convents and 70 religious. The Norbertine Nuns form a Second Order of Pre­monstratensians, established in the Netherlands, Belgium, France, Spain, Poland, and Switzerland. A Third Order, Norbertine Sisters, have convents at Olmütz and Prague, Czechoslovakia.—C.E., XII, 357; C.E. Suppl., 604.

Order of Citeaux or Cistercians, a Benedic­tine reform, established at Citeaux, Burgundy, 1088, by St. Robert, Abbot of Molesme, to restore literal observance of the Rule of St. Benedict. Previous attempts at reform in monasteries of the Order of Cluny had met with little success when St. Robert with twenty companions, retired to Citeaux in 1095 to adopt a more severe regimen and restore the gravity and simplicity proper to monastic ceremonies. St. Robert's successor, St. Alberic, gave the monks their white habit and secured the community under Apostolic protection, 1100. From St. Bernard's entrance into the order, 1112, and his foundation of the colony at Clairvaux, 1115, dates a period of extraordinary development. The statutes were drafted by St. Stephen Harding and approved by Callistus II, 1119; decisions of the general chapters were codified, 1133, 1240, 1316, and 1335. The order numbered 350 abbeys in 1152, of which 54 were in England where the first foundation had been made at Waverly, 1159. Condemned many times by papal Bulls, the order conferred great benefits on society during its golden age (1134-1342) by charitable works and intellectual labors, producing also a great number of saints. During the later Middle Ages, the Cluniacs, or Cistercians, were split by the dissensions of those who countenanced abuses and the reformers who rose to combat them. The result was the division into Common and Strict Observance, but the latter was prevented from forming an independent order by the Bull of Alexander VII, 1666. Since 1892, however, they have been distinct and autonomous. The Reformation overthrow the monasteries in England, and the French Revolution further reduced the order to mere remnants of its former prestige. For restoration and further history of the Strict Observance, see Trappists. Certain modern congregations together with those that escaped the persecution now form the Common Observance. They are in England, Ireland, Italy, Austria, Germany, France, Belgium, Hungary, Bohemia, and Poland. Statistics: 9 congregations; 35 monasteries; 1053 religious.—C.E., III, 780.

Cistercian Sisters have existed as part of the order since 1125. There are Reformed Cistercian Nuns, or Trappistines, and Non-Reformed, or nuns of the Common Observance of Citeaux. The first genuine community of Cistercian Nuns in America was established, 1902, near Quebec.

Order of Clerks Regular (Theatines), religious order founded at Rome in 1524 by Gaetano del Conti di Tienne, Paolo Consiglieri, Bonifaio da Colle, and Giovanni Pietro Carafa, to recall the clergy to an edifying life and the laity to the practice of virtue. St. Gaetano and his companions endeavored to combat the errors of Martin Luther then threatening Italy; they founded oratories and hospitals and devoted themselves to preaching the Gospel and reforming lax morals. Despite the severity of their rule and strict vow of poverty, the congregation rapidly developed, both in Italy and in foreign countries. The Theatines were invited to Turin, Genoa, Venice, Milan, Padua, Piacenza, Parma, Modena, Florence, Naples, Palermo, Messina, Lecce, etc. In France they built the church of St. Anne la Royale; in Spain under Philip II, the Theatine cardinal Paolo Burali d'Arezzo filled various embassies at the command of the viceroy of Naples. In Portugal John IV, 1648, gave them a house and a college for the education of noble youth; in England, under Henry VIII, Thomas Goldwell, Bishop of St. Asaph, entered the order. The Theatines founded the first papal missions in foreign lands, as in Golconda, Peru, Mingrelia, Georgia, Islands of Sunda, Borneo, and Sumatra, Arabia, Armenia, Ava, Persia, and many other places. During the 19th century the order began to decline, and at the time of the suppression of religious orders, 1860, it was reduced to a shadow of its former greatness. Pius X in 1909 united the Theatines to the Spanish Congregation of the Holy Family, but this union was dissolved in 1916. Statistics: 2 provinces, 7 convents, 110 religious. A congregation of Theatine nuns, dating from c. 1583, and flourishing in Naples and Sicily, has now almost disappeared.—C.E., XIV, 557.

Order of Friars Minor, part of the First Order of St. Francis, commonly called Franciscans, formed by St. Francis of Assisi, 1209-07, and legally established, 1298. In 1217, all early reforms of the order, such as the Clareni, Colletani, etc., were united in one body henceforward known as Friars Minor of St. Francis, or Friars Minor of the Regular Observance, and the Conventual friars were constituted a separate order (see Order of Friars Minor Conventuals). In 1897 a reunion of later reforms of the order, and comprising the Observants, Recollects (1570), Reformati (1532), and Alcan.tarines (1496), was effected and approved by Leo XIII. The Franciscan habit is dark brown, confined by a white cord; sandals are substituted for shoes, except in cases of necessity. Activities of the order embrace an extensive field. The friars have served as preachers, missionaries, confessors, ambassadors, mediators, legates, and inquisitors against heresy; they hold a noteworthy record in the cultivation of the sciences, and have also devoted themselves to the support of the poor and the care of the sick and orphans. In 1927 the order numbered 100 provinces throughout the world, 1863 houses, and 24,925 religious.—C.E., VI, 281

Order of Friars Minor Capuchin or Capuc­chins, a branch of the first Franciscan Order and reform of the Observants of the Marches, instituted in 1525 by Fr. Matteo da Bassi. Aiming at a more perfect return to the primitive observance of the Rule of St. Francis, in resistance to the secularizing tendency which accepted certain relaxations, Fr. Matteo sought and obtained from Clement VII permission to strict adherence to the traditional rule of poverty, wearing the original Franciscan habit, and preaching the Word of God. In 1526, by Papal Brief, Fr. Matteo and two companions were exempted from the community life of the Observants, being permitted to live in hermitages, and in 1528 they were more effectually released from the jurisdiction of their superiors, being constituted a distinct family. The first chapter was held at Albacina, 1529, and drew up the new constitutions. The combination of the eremitical life and active ministry was the informing ideal, the former to be accomplished through small communities in secluded situations. The reform then counted 18 friars and 4 "hermitages or monasteries." So rapidly did it grow, admitting the Observants in great numbers, that two Briefs issued by Paul III (1534, 1535) forbade the further reception of Observants before their next general chapter, and in 1537 they were forbidden to establish houses outside Italy; but in 1574 this was revoked by Gregory XIII who accorded them the right to extend their provinces; in 1619 they were made independent of the Conventuals, having the power to elect their own minister-general. Notwithstanding the modifications which became necessary as the order increased in numbers, the Capuchins strove to maintain the simplicity and detachment which characterized them as true sons of St. Francis. Their constitutions were approved by Urban VIII, 1638; reviewed, modified, and approved anew by Pius X, 1909. The Capuchin reform was most influential in the Church in the 16th and 17th centuries when their works of charity in time of pestilence and need undoubtedly contributed to the success of their home and foreign missions. The devotion of the Forty Hours has been traced to their missionary zeal and they were particularly active in combating the errors of the Reformation. Missions were established in Abyssinia, India, Asia Minor, Arabia, Central and South America, and English-speaking countries. The friars entered England, 1599; Ireland, 1615; and North America, 1632. Their present establishment in the United States dates from 1857. The French friars have charge of the Canadian province. Statistics: provinces and commissariats, 53; convents, 910; mission prefectures and vicariates, 29; missions, 47; Seraphic colleges (preparatory for the novitiate), 95; congregations of the Third Order, 9016; religious, 11,104 (5480 priests, 3001 postulants, 1195 missionaries); students, 4213; Tertiaries, 1,141,450.—C.E., III, 320; Cuthbert, The Capuchins, N. Y., 1929.

Order of Friars Minor Conventual or Conventuals, one of the three religious bodies forming the First Order of St. Francis, with certain dispensations in regard to poverty. The separation of the Francisceans into two branches which came to be known as Observants and Conventuals formally dates from the Council of Constance (1415), though the tendency towards such a division had been manifest since the death of the founder, 1226. Both branches of the order continued under the same head until 1517. Members make their vows in accordance with new constitutions adopted, 1625. They acknowledge the dispensations contained therein and hence are not bound by all the obligations of the Observants and the Capuchin Friars Minor (q.v.). From their habit they are sometimes termed "Black Francisceans." The general of the order resides in Rome. Statistics: convents, 213; religious, 1800.—C.E., IV, 344.

Order of Friars Preachers, THE, commonly called DOMINICANS, was founded by St. Dominic at Prouille, France, and received pontifical letters from Innocent III, 1205, adopting the Rule of St. Augustine, with certain additions, 1216. The salvation of souls, especially by means of preaching, is the aim of the order, which soon spread in other countries. Preaching and teaching constitute the chief occupation of its members. They have also been entrusted with important commissions by various popes, and their missionary activities have been extensive. Literary and scientific writings of the Dominicans embrace a wide field, including works on the Bible, apologetics, canon law, history, philosophy, theology, and catechetical, pedagogical, and humanistic writings. The school of philosophy and theology of two of their number, Albertus Magnus and Thomas Aquinas, holds a unique place in the life of the Church. The Friars Preachers have also made notable contributions to the world of art. Although they suffered a considerable decrease in numbers and property due to the Reformation and the French Revolution, their spread in the New World counterbalanced these losses. They number 11 provinces and 2 congregations, with 358 houses, and 5302 religious. Twelve provinces are engaged in missionary work.—C.E., XII, 354; O'Connor, St. Dominic and the Order of Preachers, N. Y., 1916; MacInerney, History of the Irish Dominicans, Dub., 1916.

Order of Minims, members of the religious order founded in 1435, by St. Francis of Paula, on the same principle of organization as that of all mendicants. The society was first propagated in Italy and introduced by special royal favor into France in 1482. From France the Minims spread to Spain and in 1497, the Emperor Maximilian introduced them into Germany. At the death of St. Francis of Paula, 1507, there existed five provinces, spread over Italy, France, Spain, and Germany. For fifty-seven years the Minims had no written rule, but in 1493, the first rule, which was almost a copy of that of St. Francis of Assisi, was confirmed by Alexander VI, A second version of the rule which showed more independence of the Rule of St. Francis, was approved by Alexander VI in 1501. Finally a third definite text of the rule, still observed by the Minims, was confirmed by Julius II in 1506. The spirit which permeates this rule is one of great penance and abnegation. Statistics: provinces, 21 abroad, in Italy, 1 in Spain, and 500 religious.—C.E., X, 325.

Order of Our Lady of Mercy for the Ransom of Captives (Mercerianis), a congregation founded at Barcelona in 1218 by St. Peter Nolasco, especially devoted to the ransom of captives from the Moors, and following the rule drawn up by St. Augustine. The development of the order was immediate and widespread throughout France, England, Germany, Portugal, and Spain. As the Moors were driven back, new convents of Mercy were established at Montpellier, Perpignan, Toulouse, and Vich. Columbus brought some members of the Order to America, and they founded houses in Mexico, Cuba, Brazil, Peru, Chile, and Ecuador, and took an active part in the conversion of the Indians. Toward the end of the 18th century the mercedarians erected houses for the training of missionaries, and in the beginning of the 19th century they undertook elementary teaching in their convents. The mother-house is in Rome. Statistics: provinces, 8; vice-provinces, 4; commanderies, 80, and religious, 1300.—C.E., X, 197.

Order of Our Lady of Mount Carmel (Carmelites), an ancient order which venerates as its founder the Prophet Elias, who lived nine centuries before Our Lord Jesus Christ. Its Elian traditions, though contested by several modern critics, have nevertheless been approved by the Church, who in the Office for his feast has allowed the Order to call him its founder, and has placed his statue in the Basilica of St. Peter in Rome, among those of the founders of Religious Orders, with the following inscription: "Universus Ordo Carmelitarum Fundatorius S. Elia." (The Entire Order of Carmel to its Founder, St. Elias). This religious family, thus founded under the Old Law, continued to exist under the New, and eventually spread from Asia into Europe. Established historical records of the Order date back to the 12th century; the Rule it now observes is that given by St. Albert, Patriarch of Jerusalem. 1206, to the Hermits of Mount Carmel in Palestine. In 1452 this same Rule was mitigated by Pope Eugenius IV. The 16th century is memorable for the great reformation introduced into this Order by the Virgin of Avila, St. Teresa of Jesus, and St. John of the Cross. Since that time the Order has been divided into two branches, namely, that of the Calced Carmelites, who observe the Rule as mitigated by Eugenius IV, and that of the Discalced Carmelites, who keep the Primitive Rule of St. Albert, without any mitigation.

The Calced Carmelite Order, the official name of which is: "Ordo Carmelitarum Calectorum" or "Carmelitae Antiquae Observantiae" (O.C.C.), has its mother-house in Rome; it is established in continental Europe, in Spain, England, Ireland, Germany, Austria, Holland, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Malta, Palestine, the United States, Canada, Brazil, Porto Rico, Venezuela, Australia, and Java. The Order has under its care missions in Malang, Java, and in Paraacatí, Brazil. In addition to these, the Order conducts many educational institutions, especially in Chicago (U.S.A.), Terenure (diocese of Dublin), and in Oss and Oldenzaal (Holland), with a total of about 15,000 students. Statistics: 134 houses; 2800 religious, comprising priests, students, lay brothers, and novices.

The Discalced Carmelite Order, the official name of which is: "Ordo Carmelitarum Exccelecentorum" (O.C.D.), has its mother-house in Rome and is established in Spain, Italy, England, Ireland, Portugal, France, Belgium, Germany, Holland, Poland, Hungary, Austria, Yugoslavia, Malta, Palestine, Syria, Mount Lebanon, Mesopotamia, Persia, British India (in the Kingdoms of Travancore and Cochin), Egypt, the United States, Cuba, Mexico, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru, Chile, Uruguay, Brazil, Argentina, and Bolivia. Although the principal end of the Order is the contemplative life, it has an active side as well and undertakes missionary work with great success. Its houses, especially in many parts of America, are centers of apostolic life; and it has foreign, or Apostolic, missions in Urubá, Colombia, with one Prefect Apostolic, in Syria, Mesopotamia, Persia, and British India, comprising the Archdiocese of Verapoly, and the Diocese of Quilon, where it has under its care two preparatory seminaries, and the great central Apostolic Seminary of Puthempanny for the indigenous clergy, with 322 students; and, in addition to these, several hospitals, and orphanages, as well as the following educational institutions: 308 grammar schools, 2 normal schools, 40 high schools, 27 middle schools, with a total of 47,016 pupils. Among the many Saints of the Order, the most renowned are St. Teresa of Jesus, considered as the world’s greatest woman writer, St. John of the Cross, mystical Doctor of the Church, and the most exquisite of all the great Spanish poets, St. John of the Cross. Since that time the Order has been divided into two branches, namely, that of the Calced Carmelites, who observe the Rule as mitigated by Eugenius IV, and that of the Discalced Carmelites, who keep the Primitive Rule of St. Albert, without any mitigation.

The Carmelite Nuns (Daughters of St. Teresa), originated c. 1452 with the affiliation of Beguine communities to the ancient Order of Our Lady of Mount Carmel. Several of these semi-monastic groups, organized in the Netherlands in the 12th century, approached Bl. John Soreth, General of the Carmelite Order (1451-71), requesting to be affiliated. He gave them the rule and constitutions of the friars, adding some special regulations. The Carmelite nuns as they exist today, however, may claim St. Teresa as foundress, since the reform she inaugurated, 1562, amounted virtually to the establishment of a distinct order. The Teresianas spread so rapidly that in fifteen years sixteen foundations had been made. The order was introduced into Italy, France, Belgium, England, and Ireland. They came to the United States in 1790, and in 1875 to Canada. Offshoots of the French congregation are in Australia and Cochin-China. The Carmelite nun is strictly cloistered and leads a contemplative and severely mortified life. There is no mother-house, each convent being directed by a prioress under episcopal jurisdiction, or under the Fathers of the order, and each maintaining its own novitiate. No community may exceed 21 nuns. They have a total of 497 convents established in almost every country of the world, and the religious number about 10,000. —C.E., III, 354; Carmel, its History, Spirit, and Saints, N. Y., 1927; Mccaffrey, The White Friars, Dublin, 1926; Steele, Convents of Great Britain and Ireland, Lond., 1901.

Order of Preachers. See Order of Friars Preachers.
Order of Reformed Cistercians of Our Lady of La Trappe (Trappists), the reorganized congregation of the ancient Order of Citeaux founded 1098 by St. Robert in accordance with the Rule of St. Benedict, reformed by the Abbot de Rancé, 1664. Despoiled by the French Revolution, a number of the monks with their superior, Dom Augustin de Lestrange, took refuge in Switzerland and elsewhere until restored by the fall of Napoleon, 1815. Reunited in France under the title "Congregation of the Cistercian Monks of Notre-Dame de la Trappe," 1834, they were again divided by a decree of the Holy See, 1847, forming the two congregations of "The Ancient Reform of Our Lady of La Trappe," following the Constitutions of de Rancé, and "The New Reform of Our Lady of La Trappe," to conform to the Rule of St. Benedict. Many new foundations were made under this arrangement and by 1892 the congregations were strong enough to combine once more with one head and a uniform observance. Dom Sebastian Wyart under Leo XIII restored Citeaux as the mother-house and in 1894 the present Constitutions, derived from St. Benedict, were approved, confirmed in 1902, revised and approved by Brief, 1925. A general chapter, meeting annually, is presided over by the abbot-general who is elected for life and resides at Rome, where there is a procure. Each monastery maintains independently its own novitiate, there being no provincial divisions. Manual labor renders the monks self-supporting, but spiritual exercises and study occupy most of the day. Houses outside of France are in Belgium, the Far East (China, Japan, and Indo-China), Syria, and the United States, Canada, England, and Ireland. Statistics: 57 monasteries; 2080 religious, Cistercian or Trappist nuns, following a rule similar to that of the monks, number about 4000 in various parts of the world.—C.E., XV. 24.

Order of St. Benedict (Benedictines), broadly speaking, comprises all religious following the Rule of St. Benedict, though in its proper sense it does not include branches of the order which later became independent, such as the Cistercians and Camaldolese. The Benedictines, sometimes called Black Monks from their habit, were founded at Monte Cassino, Italy, by Benedict of Nursia, c. 529. The aim of the order is the personal sanctification of its members, who may undertake any work provided it be compatible with living in community and the performance of Divine Office in choir. The influence of the monks has manifested itself in missionary works, notably by the conversion of the Teutonic races, in the civilization of northwestern Europe, and in the fields of art, literature, and education. They engage in teaching, the practice of the arts, agriculture, in study, and the care of souls. Continual industry and an atmosphere of peace characterize their monasteries. Peace is their motto. Monte Cassino was destroyed by the Lombards, 581 or 589, and the monks were sheltered in the Lateran Basilica, Rome. Pope Gregory the Great established the Benedictine rule in his monastery of St. Andrew on the Celian Hill, and probably in six others which he founded, and introduced the order into England, whence its missionaries spread over Europe. In the 9th century barbaric invasions of Europe razed many monasteries, but a new period of Benedictine fame began with the establishment of the renowned Abbey of Cluny, 910. A number of the greatest universities of Europe developed from schools of the Benedictines, including those of Paris, Bologna, and Cambridge. Important among the offshoots of the order which were established during this period were the Camaldolese (1009), Vallombrosians (1039), Cistercians (1098), Sylvesterines (1231), and Olivetans (1319). Cluny's centralized method of government was followed by a number of monasteries which united themselves in groups, the groups later forming congregations. This was a deviation from the original idea of St. Benedict, who sought the total independence of each abbey.

The feudal system, by which abbots of some of the great Benedictine monasteries became feudal lords, the appointment of commendatory abbots (q.v.) and other social and political circumstances resulted in a period of decline for the order in the latter half of the 12th century until its revival after the Council of Constance (1414-18). Widespread reform ensued, and approximately 1500 abbeys could be counted in Europe at the time of the Reformation. All of these were centers from which civilization spread and some of them, especially Cluny, exercised a strong influence on the spirit, morals, and learning of their times. The French Congregation of St. Maur, dating from 1621, attained fame by reason of its extensive activity in the field of literature and the devout lives of its members. The French Revolution, wars, secularization, and similar causes took their toll of Benedictine foundations, so that in the early 19th century there were no more than 30 houses of the order extant. Since that time another revival has taken place, though later in the same century houses were closed in Spain, Italy, and France. At present the Benedictines number 15 congregations, viz: the Cassinese, English, Hungarian, Swiss, Bavarian, Brazilian, French, American-Cassinese, Swiss-American, Beuronese, Cassinese of Primitive Observance, Austrian (of the Immaculate Conception), Austrian (of St. Joseph), St. Otilian, and Belgian. Statistics: monks, 8176; abbeys and monasteries, 184; priories, 5; schools, 6. —Benedictine Nuns or Sisters of St. Benedict, women following the Rule of St. Benedict. As the abbeys of the Benedictine monks increased in number, monasteries for women were also established. St. Benedict's sister, Scholastica, ruled over such a community not far from the Abbey of Monte Cassino, though it is open to question whether this may be considered the actual foundation of the Benedictine nuns. Gradually the Rule of St. Benedict was introduced into convents of Gaul and the Council of Aix-la-Chapelle enjoined its observance in all nunneries of the empire. England, Germany, and other parts of the continent saw the rise of many convents, rivaling in number the abbeys of the monks in the Middle Ages. They sustained great losses due to the Reformation, the wars of religion, and the French Revolution. The convents were reunited in the congregational system, but are either under the direction of a particular abbey or else subject to the episcopal jurisdiction of the diocese in which they are located. The nuns engage principally in educational work, and now have 288 monasteries in the United States, British Isles, and Malta, Australia, Austria, Belgium, France, Germany, Switzerland, Spain, Holland, Italy, and Poland. In the United States there are 5120 members conducting 283 schools, 13 hospitals, 8 homes for aged and orphans, and 1 convent of perpetual adoration. Total number of religious, 11,678.—C.E., II, 443; Butler, Benedictine Monachism, N. Y., 1919; Destrée, The Benedictines, Lond., 1923.

Order of St. Dominic, a religious order embracing the Order of Friars Preachers (q.v.), which is the First Order, the Dominican Sisters (see Second Order of St. Dominic), and the Brothers and Sisters of Penitence of St. Dominic (see Third Order). Order of St. Saviour (Briitittines), order for monks and nuns founded by St. Bridget of Sweden, at Vadstena, 1346, approved by Urban V as a branch of the Augustinians. They engage in literary work particularly in the translation of religious writings. The order spread throughout Europe, but all except four houses disappeared during the Reformation. In the 17th century a society following modified form of the rule of the Brigitines was founded by Maria de Escobar, a Carmelite, in Spain, where there are now five houses.—C.E., II, 785.

Order of Servants of Mary (Servites), named the fifth mendicant order by Martin V, was founded in 1223 by seven noble youths of Florence, Bonifius, Bonajuncta, Amideus, Hugh, Manettus, Sosteneus, and Alexius, canonized, 1888, as The Seven Holy Founders. On the feast of the Assumption the Blessed Virgin appeared to the young men exhorting them to devote themselves to her service in retirement from the world. From their first establishment at La Camarzia, near Florence, they removed to the more secluded Monte Senario where the Blessed Virgin herself conferred on them the habit, instructing them to follow the Rule of St. Augustine and to admit associates. Official approval was obtained in 1249; confirmed, 1256; suppressed, 1276; definitely approved, 1504; and again by Brief, 1928. The order was so rapidly diffused that by 1295 there were 10,000 members with houses in Germany, France, Italy, and Spain, and early in the 14th century it numbered 100 convents, besides missions in Crete and India. The Reformation reduced the order in Germany, but it flourished elsewhere. Again meeting with political reverses in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, it neverthe- less prospered, being established in England, 1867, and in America, 1870. The Servites take solemn vows and venerate in a special manner the Seven Dolors of Our Lady. They cultivate both the interior and the active life, giving missions and teaching. An affiliation, professing exclusively the contemplative life is that of the Hermits of Monte Senario. Statistics: 9 provinces, 4 vice-provinces, 120 convents or mission residences; over 1000 religious. Reinstated in France, 1922. Cloistered nuns, forming a Second Order, have been affiliated with the Servites since 1619 when Bl. Benedetta di Rossi called the nuns of her community “Servite Hermitesses.” They have been established in England, Spain, Italy, the Tyrol, and Germany. A Third Order, the Mantellate, founded by St. Juliana Falconieri under St. Philip Benizi, c. 1294, has houses in Italy, France, Spain, England, Canada, and the United States. Secular tertiarys and a confraternity of the Seven Dolors are other branches.—C.E., XIII, 736; Steele, Convents of Great Britain and Ireland, Lond., 1900.

Order of the Holy Ghost, originated in the 13th century with the Hospital of the Holy Ghost at Rome and spread throughout Christendom. It was founded by Innocent III, through Guy de Montpellier’s lay community for the care of the sick in Provence and the Hospitales Mariae in Sassia, founded by King Ina, 715. By a.d. 1400, the order numbered in France more than 1500 houses and a century later nearly 400. Their possessions, generously enriched by donations were grouped into commanderies which were invaded by laymen and thus arose the self styled “Militia of the Holy Ghost.” The Order of Our Lady of Bethlehem was founded by Pius II, 1459, from the revenues of these commanderies. In 1700 an edict was issued declaring the Order of the Holy Ghost regular and not military. This order must not be confounded with the Royal Order of the Holy Spirit founded in France by King Henry III, 1578, to supersed the Order of St. Michael of Louis XI.—C.E., VII, 415.

Order of the Mass (Common of the Mass), that part of the Mass containing prayers which as a rule and for the most part remain unchanged and the rubrics or directions for the entire Mass, to be followed or filled in from the Proper of the Mass. It is inserted in the Missal between the Masses for Holy Saturday and Easter Sunday. It is distinct from the Proper of the Mass and from the Canon. (C. J. G.)

Order of the Most Holy Trinity (Trinitarians), religious order founded in the 12th century by St. John of Matha and St. Felix of Valois, at Cerfroid in the Diocese of Meaux, for the ransom of captives. During the lives of the founders, the order made 100 foundations; after their deaths it spread so rapidly, especially in the East, that Gregory IX in 1237 placed it under the direct protection of the Holy See. It was established in England, 1226, in Ireland, 1230, and from there the Trinitarians spread to every country. The Paris house erected in 1228, dedicated to St. Mathurin, soon surpassed Cerfroid and eventually became the residence of the general of the order. In France the Trinitarians suffered greatly during the English invasion of the 15th century and the wars of religion of the 16th. Towards the end of the 16th century they separated into the Discalced and the Reformed Trinitarians. Their rule, originally very austere, was mitigated in 1263, and in 1721 they adopted the rule of St. Augustine. The Trinitarians of Spain were separated from those of France under Fr. Juan Bautista of the Immaculate Conception; the latter added fresh austerity to their rule by founding the Discalced Trinitarians of Spain. This rule spread to Italy and Austria, and the Discalced also went to France, where they were suppressed by a papal Bull in 1771. An edict of Joseph II in 1784 suppressed them in Austria and the Low Countries, and the Revolution in 1789 suppressed them in all the territories to which they had spread. They have retained a few houses in Italy, Spain, and the Spanish colonies. Their chief house is the Basilica of St. John Chrysogonus at Rome, which was given to them by Pius IX, 1856. Statistics: 26 houses, 140 religious. Nuns have been affiliated to the order since 1256, but the true Trinitarian Sisters, forming an integral part of the congregation, date from 1612. They came to the United States, 1920. There are both Calced and Discalced Spanish Trinitarian Nuns with numerous houses in Spain.—C.E., XV, 45; C.E. Suppl., 741.

Order of the Presentation, founded at Cork, Ireland, 1775, by Nano (Honoria) Nagle, under the title Sisters of the Sacred Heart (which was changed to Presentation Sisters, 1791), for the education of the young. The Rule is adapted from St. Augustine. The Order has been in the United States since the foundation at San Francisco, 1854. All communities are independent of each other. The sisters conduct schools and orphanages in England, Ireland, Australia, India, Newfoundland, and the United States.—C.E., XIII, 397.

Order of the Visitation (Nuns of the Visitation of Mary (Visitandines, Galesians), founded by St. Francis de Sales and St. Jane de Chantal at Annecy, France, in 1610, as a congregation for the observance of the contemplative life and the care of children and young ladies needing home life and education, also for the visitation of the sick; canonically erected into a religious order, its active ministry abandoned and enclosure adopted, under the Rule of St. Augustine, 1618; constitutions by the founder. The method enjoined by St. Francis secures the benefit of the religious life to those who lack physical strength for the usual corporal austerities of the cloister by substituting the spirit of interior mortification. Boarding-schools are attached to many of the houses, e.g., that of Georgetown, D. C., founded in 1789, for secondary education. There are three grades among the sisters: choir-nuns, associate nuns (dispensed from the Oblate), and lay-sisters. St. Margaret Mary Alacoque (q.v.) was a religious of this order. Each convent is governed by a superior under the bishop of the diocese and independently of all other houses, there being no mother-house. Doubts regarding observance are referred to the house of Annecy. The order has about 260 houses in various countries of the world; the total number of religious is about 7000.—C.E., XV, 481.

Orders, Anglican, orders by which ministers of the Established Church are empowered to exercise authority in their congregations, to preach, teach, and perform the necessary ceremonies and pastoral services. The rites by which these Orders are conferred is that of the Edwardine Ordinal of 1552 as amended in 1662. This rite was fixed by six prelates and six others appointed by the king for the express purpose of supplanting among other rites that of ordination, which had prevailed in the Church from the beginning, since the Reformers in England as elsewhere considered it superfluous. It lacks the proper form, which is considered essential for validity in conferring Orders in the Catholic Church; and the intention of those who devised it, as well as those who first conferred it, was certainly not the intention required by the Church of Christ. The form did not specify definitely the nature of the Order to be conferred, and the officiating prelates would not intend to ordain priests to consecrate the Bread and Blood of Christ, to offer sacrifice, to celebrate Mass, since these were in execution at the time and the Ordinal was drawn up precisely to do away with them. The attempt at the close of the last century to have Anglican Orders recognized by the Church as valid occasioned the Bull of Leo XIII, 18 Sept., 1896, declaring them invalid.—C.E., I, 491 (8th ed.).

Orders (Lat., ordo, rank). Holy, a sacrament of the New Law, instituted by Christ, by which spiritual power is given and grace is conferred for the performance of sacred duties. There are seven orders in the Latin Church: four minor, acolyte, exorcist, reader, and porter; and three major, or sacred orders, subdeacon, deacon, and priest (Trent, sess. XXIII, can. 2). Since the fulness and the perfection of the priesthood, it is included in the priesthood. Though there are seven orders, there is but one Sacrament of Holy Orders. Three orders are of Divine institution, the episcopate, the priesthood, and the diaconate, and produce grace ex opere operato. Bishops are superior to priests and have greater power, while priests are in turn superior to deacons (Trent, sess. XXIII, can. 6, 7). The remaining orders are of ecclesiastical institution.

Matter and Form. For minor orders, the instruments whose use is commanded by the Roman Pontifical are the matter; the words pronounced by the minister as the ordindanda, the instruments, are the form. For the subdiaconate, the instruments used, i.e., paten and chalice, and the book of the Epistles, are the matter; the words, pronounced by the minister as he offers the instruments to the ordinandum, are the form. For the diaconate, the matter is the imposition of the right hand of the bishop on the head of the ordinandum; the words, "Receive the Holy Ghost," spoken by the bishop as he conforms the above action, are the form. There are two opinions regarding the matter and form of the priesthood and the episcopate. For the priesthood, some contend that the matter is the first imposition of hands made by the bishop; while the form is the prayer and the preface immediately following, as found in the Roman Pontifical. Others hold that the imposition of hands together with the giving of the instruments constitute the matter; while the form is the words pronounced by the bishop at the imposition of hands and the giving of the instruments. For the episco-pate some authorities declare that the essential matter is the imposition of hands made by the consecrating bishop; and the prayer pronounced by the bishop as he imposes hands is the form. Others claim that the partial or total matter is the imposition of the book of the Gospels on the shoulders of the consacratus, while the form is the words "Receive the Holy Ghost," pronounced as this action is performed. In practise whatever is prescribed by the Church in ordination must be observed; thus in this, as in other sacraments, the Church insists, that anything omitted, must be supplied.

Effects. The effects of the minor orders and the subdiaconate are to confer spiritual power, enabling the recipient to discharge the duties and offices proper to each individual order. The effects of the diaconate and of the major orders are the supernatural effects proper to a sacrament: (1) the increase of sanctifying grace as befits a sacrament of the living; (2) sacramental grace, i.e., the right to actual graces so that the Divine Office and its obligations can be rightly fulfilled; (3) an indelible character imprinted on the soul (according to the more common opinion, each of the above orders imprints a new character on the soul, distinct one from the other); (4) the bestowal of spiritual power, enabling the recipient to discharge the sacred offices, i.e., empowering priests to consecrate, to administer the sacraments, to preach, etc., the bishop to be the ordinary minister of Confirmation, to ordain, to consecrate, and the deacon to chant the Gospel, etc.

Minister and Subject. The ordinary minister of a valid ordination is a consecrated bishop; the extraordinary minister can be a priest who obtains the power to confer some orders, either from law or Apostolic indult, e.g., a cardinal or an abbot. nullius can confer first tonsure and the minor orders. The minister of episcopal consecration is a bishop, who is assisted by two other bishops; the Holy See can dispense from the need of co-consecrating bishops. Only a baptized male is capable of receiving Holy Orders; also there is required in the adult recipient an habitual intention of receiving the sacred order and the sacrament. For lawful ordination, the Church demands that the candidate is of due age and knowledge, is free from irregularity and communication, is of good life, and shows signs of a vocation, and finally that the interstices are observed, i.e., that the candidate for the priesthood shall receive and exercise the various orders, both minor and major, which precede the priesthood.

Ordinary, in ecclesiastical law, the name given to those who exercise ordinary jurisdiction in the external forum. As ordinary jurisdiction is by law attached to an office, he who has canonical possession of an office, can exercise the jurisdiction pertaining to the office. Therefore beside the Roman Pontiff, the name ordinary is applied to those who rule a diocese or a district tantamount to a diocese; i.e., diocesan bishops and their vicars general, prefects apostolic, or donlinicans. Of the lesser regular orders, the Knights of Livonia were the most important. Secular orders, dating from the 14th century, were fraternities of lay knights patterned on the regular orders of knighthood. In Great Britain, the Orders of the Garter, of the Bath, and of the Thistle originated before the Reformation, but are now Protestant, while those of St. Patrick, of St. Michael and St. George have always been so. In Austria and Spain there flourished the Order of the Golden Fleece, and in Piedmont, the Order of the Annunziata. There are very many religious or fraternal organizations whose titles begin with the word "Knights," e.g., Knights of Columbus; Knights of Father Matthew; Knights of the Blessed Sacrament; Knights of the Cross. For Pontifical Orders, see DECORATIONS, PONTIFICAL.

Ord.Fratr.Prred.= Ordo Praedicatorum (Order of Friars Preachers), or Dominicans.

Ordinary, in ecclesiastical law, the name given to those who exercise ordinary jurisdiction in the external forum. As ordinary jurisdiction is by law attached to an office, he who has canonical possession of an office, can exercise the jurisdiction pertaining to the office. Therefore beside the Roman Pontiff, the name ordinary is applied to those who rule a diocese or a district tantamount to a diocese; i.e., diocesan bishops and their vicars general, prefects apostolic, or donlinicans. Of the lesser regular orders, the Knights of Livonia were the most important. Secular orders, dating from the 14th century, were fraternities of lay knights patterned on the regular orders of knighthood. In Great Britain, the Orders of the Garter, of the Bath, and of the Thistle originated before the Reformation, but are now Protestant, while those of St. Patrick, of St. Michael and St. George have always been so. In Austria and Spain there flourished the Order of the Golden Fleece, and in Piedmont, the Order of the Annunziata. There are very many religious or fraternal organizations whose titles begin with the word "Knights," e.g., Knights of Columbus; Knights of Father Matthew; Knights of the Blessed Sacrament; Knights of the Cross. For Pontifical Orders, see DECORATIONS, PONTIFICAL.

Ord.Fratr.Prred.= Ordo Praedicatorum (Order of Friars Preachers), or Dominicans.

Ordinary, in ecclesiastical law, the name given to those who exercise ordinary jurisdiction in the external forum. As ordinary jurisdiction is by law attached to an office, he who has canonical possession of an office, can exercise the jurisdiction pertaining to the office. Therefore beside the Roman Pontiff, the name ordinary is applied to those who rule a diocese or a district tantamount to a diocese; i.e., diocesan bishops and their vicars general, prefects apostolic, or donlinicans. Of the lesser regular orders, the Knights of Livonia were the most important. Secular orders, dating from the 14th century, were fraternities of lay knights patterned on the regular orders of knighthood. In Great Britain, the Orders of the Garter, of the Bath, and of the Thistle originated before the Reformation, but are now Protestant, while those of St. Patrick, of St. Michael and St. George have always been so. In Austria and Spain there flourished the Order of the Golden Fleece, and in Piedmont, the Order of the Annunziata. There are very many religious or fraternal organizations whose titles begin with the word "Knights," e.g., Knights of Columbus; Knights of Father Matthew; Knights of the Blessed Sacrament; Knights of the Cross. For Pontifical Orders, see DECORATIONS, PONTIFICAL.

Ord.Fratr.Prred.= Ordo Praedicatorum (Order of Friars Preachers), or Dominicans. or for several functions, e.g., the rite of Baptism, the consecration of a church, Extreme Unction, etc.; and a brief conspectus of daily Office and Mass adapted to local calendars. A considerable number of Ordines are preserved among manuscripts from the 8th to the 12th century.—C.E.

Ordo (Lat., order), (1) originally a ritual book containing directions for sacred functions; (2) a brief conspectus of the daily Office and Mass as adapted to the local calendar. (c. J. D.)

Ord. Praem. = Ordo Premonstratensium, or Premonstratensians.

Oregon, the 9th state of the United States in size, the 34th in population, and the 33rd state to be admitted to the Union (14 Feb., 1859); area, 96,699 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 783,389; Catholics adapted to local calendars. A considerable number of Ordines are preserved among manuscripts from the 8th century to the Oregon country in the consecration of a church, Extreme Unction, etc.; size, the 34th in population, and the 33rd state to be admitted to the Union (14 Feb., 1859); area, 96,699 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 783,389; Catholics adapted to the local calendar. (c. J. D.)

The following statistics for church membership in Oregon:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Denomination</th>
<th>Membership</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Catholic Church</td>
<td>49,728</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church</td>
<td>27,866</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Presbyterian Church in the U.S.</td>
<td>16,672</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Northern Baptist Convention</td>
<td>15,635</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Disciples of Christ</td>
<td>15,399</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Congregational Churches</td>
<td>6,373</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Baptist Church</td>
<td>6,240</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Greek Orthodox Church (Hellenic)</td>
<td>5,722</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Seventh Day Adventists</td>
<td>4,976</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints</td>
<td>2,831</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Methodist Episcopal Church, South</td>
<td>2,045</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran Synodalf Conference</td>
<td>2,357</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Brethren in Christ</td>
<td>2,162</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Church of Christ</td>
<td>2,129</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lutheran General Council</td>
<td>1,945</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friends (Orthodox)</td>
<td>1,695</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>United Evangelical Church</td>
<td>1,695</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evangelical Association</td>
<td>1,480</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jewish Congregations</td>
<td>1,315</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Evangelical Associations, Apostolic Faith</td>
<td>1,142</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Churches of Christ</td>
<td>1,133</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>All Other Denominations</td>
<td>1,409</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total Church Membership</td>
<td>170,468</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

C. E.; Shea.

O'Reilly, Edmund (1811-78), theologian, b. London; d. Dublin. Ordained, 1838, he taught theology at Maynooth, later entering the Jesuit novitiate at Naples. He became professor of theology at the Catholic University of Ireland, rector of a house of spiritual exercises at Milltown Park, and Provincial of Ireland, 1863-70. His chief work is "The Relations of the Church to Society."—C.E.

O'Reilly, John Boyle (1844-90), poet, novelist, and editor, b. Douth Castle, Drogheda, Ireland; d. Hull, Massachusetts. He attended the National School, conducted by his father. After enlisting in the Ninth Hussars, he took part in the Fenian movement, but was betrayed and sent to Australia; whence in 1869, he escaped and found his way to Boston, where he became editor of the "Pilot," from 1870 until his death, of which he was also part proprietor. For 20 years he was an invaluable factor in Catholic progress in America. He wrote "How France Built Her Cathedrals," N. Y., 1921.—C.E.

O'Reilly, Myles William Patrick (1825-80), soldier, publicist, b. Ballbriggan, Ireland; d. Dublin. He was commissioned a captain in the Louth Rifles, 1854, and when the Roman crisis arose he offered his services to Pius IX against Garibaldi; raising an Irish brigade he fought heroically in every battle until the surrender of Spoleto (Sept., 1860). Subsequently he was elected a member of Parliament for Longford (1866-72) and was one of the founders of the Home Rule movement. In addition to his historical "Sufferings for the Faith in Ireland," his pen was ever active in defense of the Holy See and Catholic interests.—C.E.

Oresme, Nicole (d. 1382), one of the founders of modern science, b. Caen, Normandy; d. Lisieux. He was made Bp. of Lisieux in 1377. Though his Christological treatise "De communione idiomatum" was commonly used at Paris in the 15th century. Oresme is best known as an economist, mathematician, and physicist. He forestalled Descartes in employing analytical geometry, and anticipated Galileo's law of the space traversed in case of uniformly varied motion. His theory of weight was substituted for the Aristotelian by Copernicus and Giordano Bruno; and he again triumphed by demonstrating the diurnal motion of the earth more explicitly and clearly than Copernicus.—C.E.

Organ (Gr., organon, an instrument), a musical instrument used and approved by the Eastern Church as an aid to public worship. Because of its sonorous and majestic tone it is most appropriate for use in religious services. Organs are of two varieties, the pipe organ and the reed organ. The former, being more powerful, is generally used in churches. It consists of tubes of wood and metal called organ-pipes, with a bellows and wind-chest, and is equipped with "stops," by which the tones of various instruments are imitated. There is no authority for the story that the organ was invented or used by St. Cecilia, the patroness of music, with whose name it is associated as an emblem of art. It was evolved gradually from the simple "Pan's pipes," or syrinx, a set of tubes bound together by attaching a beating membrane, and a perforated plate which opened and closed the tubes, said to have been invented by a certain Ctesibius. Organs of large size, with two or more "manuals," or keyboards, are mentioned as early as 1350. The "coupler," an ingenious device for playing two or more notes of different octaves with one key, came into use c. 1450, and stops were added c. 1500. The "swell" (movable shutters varying the volume of sound), was invented by Jordan, an Englishman, in 1712. Reed organs, having vibrating metal tongues instead of pipes, came into use c. 1500. Modern church organs are supplied with air by powerful electric blowers. Other musical instruments are allowed in church under certain restrictions, with the sanction of the bishop.—C.E. (Z. V. S.)

Organic Articles, the name given to a law regulating public worship in France enacted under Napoleon at the same time as the French Concordat was voted upon, and published with the Concordat in 1802. Although the French Governments down till the separation in 1790 held that the articles were incompatible with the French constitution, the Holy See refused to admit their validity as they had been promulgated without the knowledge of Pius VII.—C.E., I, 756.

Oriani, Barnaba (1732-1832), Barnabite, scientist, b. Carignano; d. Milan. As astronomer of the Brera observatory for over 50 years he published frequent valuable dissertations; his memoirs containing his calculation of the orbit of Uranus and a table of elements of that planet were especially noteworthy.—C.E.

Oriental Church, Congregation for, deals with all matters concerning persons, discipline and rites of the Eastern Church, and questions arising from the relations with the Latin Church. This congregation has the same faculties for the Eastern Church which the other congregations, with the exception of the Holy Office, have in their various jurisdictions.

Orientation, the practice of turning toward the east in prayer, a pagan custom adopted by the early Christians who attached to it a new significance, for it pointed to the East. The East Christ lived on earth, and from the East He will come to judge mankind. Accordingly, they built their churches in "high and open places, facing the light," and buried their dead with feet toward the East. The Apostolic Constitutions directed that churches be erected with the head or apse toward the East, flames and gold stars on a fiery background, replaced the oriflamme of St. Martin as ensign of war. Oriflammes having little similarity succeeded one another through the centuries. At the battles of Poitiers, 1356, and Agincourt, 1415, the oriflamme fell into the hands of the English; after the Hundred Years' War it was no longer borne on the battlefield.—C.E.

Oriflamme, a royal banner, mentioned in the "Chanson de Roland" (11th century), which legend claims was given to Charlemagne by the pope, though there is no historical evidence of this. As Eudes, who became king, 988, was Abbot of St. Martin, the azure banner bearing the azure-de-lis, of the church of St. Martin of Tours, was the earliest military standard of the Frankish monarchy, remaining the symbol of royalty until the 14th century when the white standard of Joan of Arc was adopted. From the time of Louis VI, however, the oriflamme of the Abbey of St. Denis, the azure banner bearing the azure-de-lis, of the church of St. Martin de Tours, was universally observed from the 8th century onward, though under Constantine the opposite system was temporarily adopted, as in the basiliques of St. Peter, St. John Lateran, and San Lorenzo. Strict adherence to the custom was later made impracticable by the directions of city streets, although there is a Catholic church in Belfast, Ireland, twice as broad as it is long, to conform to the custom.—C.E.

Origen (185-253), a celebrated ecclesiastical writer, b. Alexandria, Egypt; d. Tyre, Phenicia. When his father Leonides was martyred, Origen, then a youth, had to support his family by teaching. He succeeded Clement as head of the catechetical school of Alexandria, which under him became a nursery of confessors and martyrs. About 215 he visited Palestine, where he was invited to preach, though still a layman. Later while journeying to Greece he was ordained at Casarea; Demetrius, Bp. of Alexandria, was displeased at this and Origen, forced to quit the catechetical school, 231, settled at Casarea in Palestine and resumed his teaching. During the Maximian persecution he visited Capadocia, and on his return completed his spiritual commentaries. Under Decius he was imprisoned and tortured and died some years later, probably from the effect of his sufferings. Origen was an extremely fertile writer, but many of his works have perished, while others exist only in translations. His commentaries on Matthew, John, the Canticle of Canticles, and the Epistle to the Romans are in part extant. He popularized the homily, being called its father, more than 20 of his discourses being preserved in Greek and 118 in Latin; in addition we have his brilliant polemic "Contra Celsum" and "De principiis," dealing with the Trinity, creation, free-will, and scriptural inspiration and interpretation. His masterpiece was the "Hexapla," an edition of the Old Testament, with the Hebrew and Greek texts in parallel columns, which except for some fragments of the Psalms (discovered, 1586, 1900) has perished. It was translated into Syriac and fortunately large portions of this Syro-Hexaplar text are extant. In this, the most colossal critical production of antiquity, estimated to have filled at least 6000 pages, he attempted to show the relationship of the Septuagint to the Hebrew text and the Greek versions of Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion.

Origen exerted a very great influence during his lifetime and after death, not only in the East but among the Latins, but certain doctrines—referred to under the name of Origenism, rightly or wrongly attributed to him, gave rise later to several sharp controversies. He laid down the proper doctrine regarding the Church and the rule of Faith; being human he may have made mistakes but, with his essentially Catholic disposition of mind, he does not merit to be ranked among the promoters of heresy. He has been accused of admitting only an allegorical interpretation of Scripture too freely, of Subordinationism, of teaching the eternity of creation, a necessary connection between created spirits and matters, and the final universality of redemption. It must be remembered, however, that he was the first to wrestle with many of the intricate problems involved therein, before theological language had acquired precision; that many of his assertions were based on hypotheses, which he at other times rejects or leaves open to discussion. The opinion of most modern scholars is that it is not proved that he incurred the anathema of the Church at the Fifth General Council, 533.—C.E.

Origen exerted a very great influence during his lifetime and after death, not only in the East but among the Latins, but certain doctrines—referred to under the name of Origenism, rightly or wrongly attributed to him, gave rise later to several sharp controversies. He laid down the proper doctrine regarding the Church and the rule of Faith; being human he may have made mistakes but, with his essentially Catholic disposition of mind, he does not merit to be ranked among the promoters of heresy. He has been accused of admitting only an allegorical interpretation of Scripture too freely, of Subordinationism, of teaching the eternity of creation, a necessary connection between created spirits and matters, and the final universality of redemption. It must be remembered, however, that he was the first to wrestle with many of the intricate problems involved therein, before theological language had acquired precision; that many of his assertions were based on hypotheses, which he at other times rejects or leaves open to discussion. The opinion of most modern scholars is that it is not proved that he incurred the anathema of the Church at the Fifth General Council, 533.—C.E.

Original Sin, not sin in the ordinary sense of a transgression of the law of God which one commits deliberately, it is one of the consequences of the sin of our first parent, Adam. As father of the human race, he was endowed with immortality, with reason and will in perfect control of the lower appetites, and with Divine grace enabling him to know and serve God in a manner far beyond the capacity of his natural powers, and therefore in a state above nature: the supernatural state. Through him these endowments were to be transmitted to all his descendants, not by inheritance, but by grace. This grace, though often the occasion of sin, is not in itself sinful; it is not original sin, as the early Protestants held, nor does it consist, as Luther believed, in such a decadence of our nature as to leave our reason incapable of understanding, our will without freedom, and our whole nature evil. Original sin does not so corrupt our natural powers as to render them incapable of natural virtues: it deprives us of the grace needed for virtues beyond our natural powers. All this is based on Holy Scripture, particularly on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, 5: "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into this world, and by sin death; and so death passed upon all men, in whom all have sinned." It is the subject of the Fifth Session of the Council of Trent.—C.E.; Prat, tr. Stoddard, The Theology of St. Paul, N. Y., 1926.

Orkney, ancient diocese in Scotland. As early as 565 Celtic missionaries including St. Columba had introduced Christianity into the islands. The exact date and the identity of those missionaries are unknown, although it is recorded that Thurlow was sent as bishop in 1507. Uncertainty is the result of conflicting records as there was contention between Abps. of Hamburg, York, and the Norwegians over ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Orkneys. The diocese comprised the Orkney Islands off the north coast of Scotland. William, 1162-68, was the first bishop with a fixed see at Kirkwall; the last pre-Reformation bishop was Robert Reed, 1541-58. The cathedral at Kirkwall, erected 1138, in honor of St. Magnus, whose remains it contains, is of strict Norman architecture relieved by a small amount of Gothic, and is at present used as a Presbyterian parish church. Close by is the Mass Tower dating from 1560, which was built by Bishop Reid.

Ormuzd, the modern Persian form of Ahura Mazda, the Good Spirit and Supreme God of the Avestic or Zoroastrian religion of the ancient Iranians and modern Parsees. He was the supreme god of the Persians during the period of the great kings, and the Creator of all good creatures. As a deity he stands far above both Hindu and Babylonian ideals and approaches the Judeo-Christian conception of Jehovah. He is represented as a crowned and bearded figure in a winged circle above the head of King Darius.

Orphanages (Gr., orphanos, deprived of parents), institutions dedicated to the rearing of orphaned children. The Jews and Greeks (apparently not the Romans) made the support of orphans a part of their recognized social order. The early Christians undertook this as a practical working-out of fraternal charity. In the 4th century, orphanages, of which we know them, were fostered by St. Ephraem, St. Basil, St. John Chrysostom and other bishops. The greatest figure in the history of the care for orphans is St. Vincent de Paul (1576-1660). Work for orphans was one of the great parts of his apostolate of charity, and for this work he established the Sisters of Charity, whose orphanages exist to this day in all parts of the world. Two modern reforms may be considered as valuable changes. The first is the recognition that whenever possible the orphan should not be left permanently in the orphanage, but should be given a place in the normal family life of some foster home. The second is the attempt to make the orphanage as much as possible like an ordinary home. The “cottage plan,” when financially possible, carries this out in much detail. Instead of one large building in which all the orphans live a common life, a number of small houses are provided, and the children are distributed among them in groups containing different ages and different types, supervised by an adult who should strive to fill the role of a parent to them.—C.E.; Bart, Orphans and Orphan Asylums, Buffalo, 1885.

Orphans (Gr., orphanos, without parents), children deprived by death of their parents. Their rearing will generally be undertaken by relatives, but among the poor the responsibility may fall upon public or private agencies. Unless the children are so defective as to be beyond the management of a private family, the practice of today is to “place” them, that is, to find for them a foster home in which they will be reared in normal family life. Successful placement of children requires a careful study of the child, of the foster parents, of the circumstances of the proposed foster home, so that all will be harmonious. For example, placing a nervous, sensitive child with irritable foster parents, is to invite difficulties for both parties. Moreover, after placement, supervision is almost always necessary, both to prevent a helpless child being exploited by unscrupulous foster parents, and to interpret the child to inexperienced elders. The ideal situation is a child placed so agreeable in all respects that the child will become, with or without legal adoption, a full member of the family.—C.E. (E. F. Mack.)

Orsini, one of the most ancient and distinguished families of the Roman nobility, supporters of the papacy and the Guelphs against the em-
ORTHODOX CHURCH

10. Church of Mount Sinai;
11. Church of Greece (Modern);
12. The Living Church (Russia; new);
13. Russian Church (Czarist: headquarters in Serbia);
14. Greek Orthodox Church in the United States;
15. Independent Greek Orthodox Church in America;
16. Greek Church in Western Europe (headquarters in London);
17. Greek Church in Australia.
—C.E.

Orthodoxy (Gr., orthodoxia, right belief or purity of faith), signifies correct belief or true faith. Since Christ founded only one true Church, faith is really orthodox only when in conformity with the doctrines of that Church. The term is sometimes used however by some who claim to be the true church, but who are nevertheless not in communion with the Church of Rome, e.g., the Orthodox Church.—C.E.

O.S. = Old Style (chronology).
O.S.A. = Order of the Hermits of St. Augustine, or Augustinians.
O Sacred Heart!, hymn written by Rev. F. Stanfield. The fourth verse reads:

O Sacred Heart!
Our trust is all in Thee;
For though earth's night be dark and drear,
Thou breathest rest where Thou art near,
O Sacred Heart!

O Salutaris Hostia, or O Saving Victim, opening wide, hymn sung at the Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament. It forms the last two verses of the "Verbum supernum prodiens (Nec Patris)."
—C.E.

O.S.B. = Order of St. Benedict, or Benedictines.
O.S.C. = Oblates of St. Charles.

Osscot (St. Mary's College), Staffordshire, England, founded, 1793, by a committee of Catholic nobility and gentry of England; opened, 1794, with Dr. John Baw as president. Offered to Bp. Milner, 1808, he accepted it and under his vigorous government it took on new life, the buildings were enlarged, and by 1840 its growth necessitated the building of a new college, designed by Joseph Potter. Under the presidency of Bp. Wiseman, 1840-47, the college gave hospitality to many English clergymen brought into the church by the Oxford Movement, among them, Newman. Its scholastic work was greatly developed by James Spencer Northcote (1860-77), who brought it into line with the non-Catholic public schools, but its success gradually declined and in 1889 it closed, opening a few months later as a seminary for the diocese of Birmingham. Converted into a central seminary for the midland and southern dioceses of England, 1897, it again became a diocesan seminary, 1909. Its library of 30,000 volumes contains the Harvington, Marini, Kirk, and Forbes collections, as well as valuable collections of early printed books and MSS.—C.E.

Osculatorium. See Peace-Plate.

Osee or Hosea. (Heb., deliverance), one of the minor prophets whose career is known only by his prophecy. The introductory verses record that he carried on his ministry during the reigns of the Judean kings Oziyas, Jothian, Acha and Ezechias; and in the days of Jeroboam II the son of Joas, king of Israel. Assuming that Jeroboam commenced his reign in 783 B.C., and that Ezechias ascended the throne in 721, we must conclude that Osee brought God's message to the people for a period of 60 years. The field of his activity lay in the kingdom of Israel, the kingdom of the 10 tribes that seceded from the house of Juda after the death of Solomon. The book is the first of the so-called Minor Prophets. It consists of 14 chapters, and presents only a brief summary of the message conveyed during a long career. It is difficult to arrive at any definite scheme of division which will satisfy all readers. Brevity commends the tri-partite sketch. The first part runs through 3 chapters, which assuredly form a connected whole. In a vivid and graphic discourse he portrays Israel as the faithless Bride. Despite her infidelities he does not forsake her. His imagery is rich and varied. His rhetoric is colorful and dramatic. The canonicity of this book was never seriously questioned; this may be due to the frequency and fundamental bearing of the citations made in the N.T. Twice does Our Lord repeat the familiar saying: "I will have mercy and not sacrifice." (Matt., 9 and 12; Osee, 6), and in the Gospel of Saint Luke He repeats: "Then shall they begin to say to the mountains; Fall upon us; and to the hills: Cover us." (Luke, 23; Osee, 10; Apoc., 6.).

The remaining citations are: Osee, 10, 1, in Romans, 9, 26; Osee, 2, 24, in Romans, 9, 25, and 1 Peter, 2, 16; Osee, 6, 3, in 1 Corinthians, 15, 4; Osee, 11, 1, in Matthew, 2, 15; Osee, 12, 14, in 1 Corinthians, 15, 54, and Hebrews, 2, 14. Used in the Breviary on the fourth Sunday of November and the following day. Used in the Missal, on Good Friday the lesson is taken from Osee, 6, 1-6; on the Friday of the Ember week in September the Epistle is taken from Osee, 14, 2-10. The half-verse, "Israel shall spring as the lily" (Osee, 14, 6), occurs as a versicle on the feast of St. Joseph, and on the feast of St. John before the Latin Gate; also in commemorations of doctors, confessors not bishops, and abbots.—C.E. (J. z.)

O.S.F.S. = Oblates of St. Francis de Sales.
O.S.H. = Ord. Sancti Hieronymi, or Hieronymites.
O.S.M. = Order of the Servants of Mary, or Servites.

O Sola magnarum urbiun, or BETHELHEIM, of NOBLEST CITIES, hymn for Lauds on the Feast of the Epiphany. It was written by Prudentius (348-413), and has 22 translations. The English title given is by E. Caswall.—Britt.

O Sol salutis, intimis, or JEREC, SALVATION'S SUN DIVINE, hymn for Lauds on Sundays and weekdays in Lent; Ambrosian school, 6th century. It has 12 translations; the English title given is taken from the Primer of 1706 attributed to John Dryden. —Britt.

Osmund, Saint, confessor (d. 1099), Bp. of Salisbury, b. Normandy, France. A nephew of William the Conqueror, who made him his chancellor in England and one of the Domesday Book commissioners, in 1078 he was consecrated Bishop of Sarum (a see later translated to Salisbury). He is noted chiefly for the formation of the Sarum Use, his shrine in Salisbury cathedral was destroyed under Henry VIII; canonized, 1457. Relics at Salisbury. Feast, 4 Dec.—C.E.; Butler.

Osory, Diocese of, Ireland, comprises Kilkenny and portions of Leix and Offaly counties; suffragan of Dublin. Early missionaries were Sts. Kieran and Canice. Bps. De Mapilton (1251-60) and Thomas Barry (1427-60) were also treasurers of Ireland. Other bishops were David Rothe (1620-58), De Burgo (1759-76), John Troy (1776-86), Dr. Lanigan (1780-222), Jere­miiah Kinsella, succeeded by Dr. Walsh (1840-72), Patrick Moran (1872-84), Abraham Brownrigg (1884-1928). Present bishop, Patrick Collier (1928)—C.E.; Butler.

Ostensorium, emblem in art associated with St. Clare of Assisi, St. Thomas Aquinas, and St. Alphonsus Liguori. In the case of St. Clare it is her proper attribute, in allusion to the miraculous dispersion of the Saracens thereby. St. Thomas composed the office of the Sacrament; it is still in use. St. Alphonsus is so represented because of his particular devotion thereto.

Ostraka (Gr., ostrakon, an earthen vessel), term applied to inscriptions, profane and ecclesiastical, on clay, wood, metal or other hard materials, which form a literary source for early Christianity. They are identified with oriental countries, particularly Egypt. The oldest extant ostrakon is Greek and dates from the 5th century.—C.E.

Oswald, Saint, martyr (c. 604-642), King of Northumbria, b. England; d. there. Son of King Ethelfrid, he was converted during his exile among the Scots. He reconquered his country from the Britons (635), erecting, on the battlefield, a wooden cross which, according to Bede, was considered miraculous. He built up a great kingdom, and with the aid of St. Aidan introduced Christianity, founding many churches and monasteries. He died in the Battle of Maserfeld against the pagan King Penda of Mercia. Patron of Zug, Switzerland. Relics at Durham (998), and Gloucester. Feasts, 5 Aug. and 7 Aug.—C.E.; Butler.

Oswin, Saint, martyr (d. 631), King of Deira in Britain, slain at Gilling, Yorkshire, by the adherents of Oswy, King of Bernicia. Feast, 20 Aug. and 15 Apr.—C.E.; Butler.

O.T. = Old Testament.

Othmar, Saint, martyr (d. 759), first abbot of St. Gall, d. Werd Island, near Eschenuz, Switzerland. He is one of the foundresses of the Abbey of St. Gall, where he built the monastery and introduced the Benedictine rule, and is one of the most popular saints in Switzerland. Relics at St. Gall. Feast, 16 Nov.—C.E.

O. Trinit. = Ordo Sanctissimae Trinitatis, or Trinitarians.

Ottawa, Archdiocese of, Ontario, Canada; diocese, 1849; archdiocese, 1886; comprises Laval, Prince Edward Island, and part of Argenteuil Counties in Quebec, and Carleton, Prescott, Russell, and part of Lanark in Ontario; suffragans: Pembroke, Mont-Laurier, Haileybury, and the Vicariate Apostolic of Northern Ontario. Bp.: Joseph E. B. Guigues, O.M.I. (1848-74). Abps.: Joseph T. Duchamé (1874-1909); Charles L. M. Guichet (1919-22); Joseph Medline (1922-27); William Forbes (1927). Churches, 109; priests, secular, 177; priests, regular, 207; religious women, 1761; university, 1; seminaries, 2; colleges, 2; academies and boarding schools, 22; pupils in schools (approx.), 30,000; institutions, 13; Catholics, 175,000.

Ottawa, University of, Ontario, Canada, founded, 1849; conducted by the Oblates of Mary Immaculately; parallel courses in English and French; faculties of theology, law, philosophy, and arts; professors, 27; students, 581.—C.E.

Otto, Saint (c. 1060-1139), Bp. of Bamberg, 1196. A Swabian noble, he entered the service of Henry IV with whom he sympathized in the investiture conflict, though never himself a partisan; received the pallium from Pope Paschal IV. He founded and reformed numerous monasteries and evangelized the Pomeranians. Apostle of Pomerania. Canonized, 1189. Feast, 30 Sept. and 30 June.—C.E.

Otto I, the Great (912-73), Roman emperor and German king, d. Memleben, Saxony; and successor of Henry I (d. 930), was crowned at Aix-la-Chapelle. Directing his efforts towards the establishment of a strong central power, he finally triumphed over the particularism of the nobles, thus preparing for a reorganization of the constitution, and extending his influence over France, Burgundy, and Italy, then in a demoralized condition. His victory at Lechfeld, 955, saved Germany from the Hungarian peril. To secure his power he planned an alliance between the Church and State, the spiritual hierarchy to be merely a branch of the royal service; this however necessitated control of the papacy, which he secured by going to the aid of the unworthy John XII, and was crowned emperor at Rome, 2 Feb., 962. He confirmed the privileges granted to the Church by the Carolingians and arranged that kings should not be consecrated before swearing allegiance to the German ruler. When John turned against Otto, the latter set up an antipope, Leo VIII, and made the Romans swear never to elect a pope without his or his son's approval.—C.E.

Otto II (955-83), Roman emperor and German king, d. Rome. Son of Otto the Great, he was frail in body but intrepid and arbitrary in spirit. He inaugurated an extravagant policy of imperialism, in which Germany and Italy were to wield the balance of power. Henry of Bavaria, resenting Otto's arbitrary disposal of Swabia, declared war, but Otto was victorious and Henry lost his duchy. In 978 he drove Lothair out of Lorraine, but failing to capture Paris made peace at Sedan, 980. Otto next entered Italy and saved the papacy from the oppression of the Roman faction headed by Crescentius; he then captured Tarentum; but his defeat near Cape Colonne cost him Apulia and Calabria, and ruined the imperial prestige in Lower Italy. Slavonia thereupon revolted and the missions east of the Elbe were destroyed. Returning to Italy to avenge his defeat, he died of malaria.—C.E.

Otto III (980-1002), Roman emperor and German king, b. Argentau, France; d. Harzburg, Germany. Son of Henry the Lion and nephew of Richard Cceur de Lion, his succession, 1198, was lost by the defeat of his supporters at Bouvines, 1214. Before his death the ban of excommunication was raised.—C.E.

Otto IV (c. 1182-18), Roman emperor and German king, b. Argentau, France; d. Harzburg, Germany. Son of Henry the Lion and nephew of Richard Cceur de Lion, his succession, 1198, was contested by Philip of Swabia, the nominee of the Hohenstaufens. Philip's seizure of the See of Mainz caused Innocent III to support Otto who, in return, made generous concessions to the Holy See, thus uniting Innocent's ambition to be lord of Italy. Public opinion turned toward Philip, however, 1204-05, and Innocent deserted Otto; Philip, triumphant, was murdered at Bamberg and Otto, by marrying his daughter, overcame all opposition. Crowned at Rome, 1209, he immediately laid claim to Sicily, was excommunicated, and Frederick II set up as his rival. Frederick was supported by France and the German princes and Otto's cause was lost by the defeat of his supporters at Bouvines, 1214. Before his death the ban of excommunication was raised.—C.E.

O Turn to Jesus, Mother! Turn, hymn written in the 19th century by Rev. F. W. Faber.

Owen (Lat., Audenans, Owen), Saint (c. 609-83), b. at Sancte; d. at Clichy-la-Garenne, France. Educated at the Abbey of St. Médard, he became chancellor to Dagobert I and is believed to have compiled the Saltic Law. In 640 he was consecrated Archbishop of Rouen, where he extinguished the remnants of paganism, Patron of innkeepers and cooks; invoked against deafness. Relics at Rouen. Feast, 24 Aug.—C.E.; Butler.
Our Lady of Perpetual Help, a title of the Blessed Virgin. A picture of this title representing Mary holding the Divine Child, is honored in the church of St. Alphonsus, Rome. It is said to date from the 13th century, and is an object of great devotion. The Arch-confraternity of Our Lady of Perpetual Help was enriched with many indulgences by Pius IX. Its patronal feast is extended to the universal Church, 1866. It is of special observance in England, where Our Lady is invoked under the title to restore England as “Our Lady's Dowry” to the faith, and is the patronal feast of the Dominican Republic in the West Indies.

Our Lady of the Elms, College of, Chicopee, Massachusetts, founded 1928; conducted by the Sisters of St. Joseph; sisters, 29; students, 37.

Our Lady of the Holy Rosary, Seminary of, Nueva Cáceres, Philippine Islands, founded 1793; restored, 1865; conducted by the Vincentians; students, 145.

Our Lady of the Lake, Seminary of, Cleveland, Ohio, founded, 1924; preparatory seminary under secular clergy; Students, 242.

Our Lady of the Lake College, San Antonio, Texas, conducted by the Sisters of Divine Providence; preparatory school; colleges of arts and sciences, education, sociology; home economics, music; graduate and special courses; summer school; professors, 72; students, 1019; degrees conferred in 1927, 18.

Our Lady of the Snow, Feast of, 5 Aug., commemorating the dedication of the church of Santa Maria Maggiore in Rome, built by Pope Liberius (352-366), restored by Sixtus III (430-440), who dedicated it to Our Lady. The feast receives its name from the legend that the Blessed Virgin had indicated with snow the spot on which she wished a basilica erected in her honor. It was extended to the universal Church by Pius V, the Mass and Office of the day being those commonly used on feast-days of the Blessed Virgin.—C.E.

Our Lady of Victory, Feast of, the primitive title of the present feast of the Most Holy Rosary. In gratitude to God and Our Lady for the victory over the Turks at the battle of Lepanto, 7 Oct., 1571, St. Pius V ordered an annual commemoration to be made of “Our Lady of Victory.”

Our Lady's Dowry, a name for the Blessed Virgin as its patroness, England, on account of the great devotion to her among the people in the Middle Ages, and among those who remained steadfast after the Reformation.—Bridgett, Our Lady's Dowry, London, 1875.

Our Missions, a missionary magazine published monthly in Techny, Ill., by the Society of the Divine Word; founded, 1920; circulation, 29,000.

Our Sunday Visitor, a Catholic weekly published in Huntington, Ind., by Our Sunday Visitor, Inc.; founded, 1912, by Bp. John F. Noll; circulation, 477,000.

Overbeck, Johann Friedrich (1789-1869), religious painter, b. Lübeck, Germany; d. Rome, Italy. After studying in Vienna he went to Rome, 1810, where he founded, with Friedrich Schadow and Peter von Cornelius, a school of painters called the “Nazarenes,” who aimed to restore to religious painting the truth and spirituality of the Italian primitives. His art study led him into the Church in 1811. His masterpiece, “Madonna of the Roses,” is in the Portiuncula in Assisi; other noted works are frescoes depicting the “History of Joseph,” and Tasso’s “Jerusalem Delivered.”—C.E.

Ox or Bull, emblem in art associated with St. Luke. It is symbolical of sacrifice and of death on the Cross.

Oxford, Catholic Worker's College, one of five institutions recognized by the British Board of Education as residential colleges giving “full-time instructions of a university standard in subjects of liberal education to adult students,” and where the full-time education has been interrupted by employment. The students are wage-earners and have come from nearly every industrial area in Great Britain. The archbishops of England and Wales are visitors and trustees of the college, which is governed by the executive of the Catholic Social Guild (q.v.); finances of the guild and college being separate, the principal being advised in regard to the students by an educational committee in Oxford. The course normally covers two years, of three terms each. Students receive tuition from university tutors, attend university lectures, and are enabled to prepare for the university diploma in economics and political science; their studies also include moral philosophy, social ethics, and philosophy of religion. The college was opened by the Catholic Social Guild in 1921, in memory of Father Charles Dominic Plater, S.J., “in order to provide special training for working-class students in the social sciences, with special reference to the application of Christian principles and the social philosophy of the Catholic Church.” While in Oxford the students are in touch with the problems of the C.S.G., the headquarters of which are in the same house, and on returning to their homes they frequently combine, along with other useful activities, the leadership of study circles, thus continuing their own study and imparting their knowledge to others. As British working-class organizations are so few, the college endeavors to train such leaders in order that sound principles may be diffused. Candidates for admission must give some indication of practical usefulness in their home surroundings; they must be sufficiently free from family ties, and have reasonable likelihood of regaining their former occupation; the age of entry is elastic, but in the case of a student who left school before the age of 14 it is essential that he should have done some further study. There are usually six or seven men in residence; since 1923 two or three women students, members of the college, are accommodated in the private residence of a lady in Oxford. Fees (£100 per annum) are, in some cases, collected by local committees of the C.S.G. or other Catholic societies.
the committee selecting the student; in other cases scholarships are provided by individual benefactors. Mass is celebrated daily in the college chapel. Principal: Rev. L. O’Rea, S.J., M.A. (e. v. w.)

Oxford, city, England, seat of the University. It is the cathedral town of the Anglican diocese erected schismatically by Henry VIII. Prior to that time it formed part of the diocese of Lincoln, and upon the restoration of the Catholic hierarchy, was included in the diocese of Birmingham.—C.E.

Oxford, University of. Developing from the schools which in Saxon times were grouped around the monastic foundation of St. Frideswide, it became famous as a home of learning in the 13th century. It was incorporated by Act of Parliament, 1571, under Elizabeth, becoming an Anglican institution until 1920, when the theological degrees of Doctor of Divinity required merely “a serious contribution to learning.” Lay Catholics may become members of the College, and attend their own chapel.

Colleges.—All Souls, founded 1437, by Henry Chichele, Abp. of Canterbury, in memory of those who fell in the French War. Balliol, founded c. 1263 by Devorgilla, widow of John de Balliol; Card. Manning was one of its scholars. Braunstone (commonly written and called B.N.C.), founded 1506, endowed by William Smyth, Bp. of Lincoln, and Sir Richard Sutton. Christ Church, the largest and wealthiest college, founded 1525, as Cardinal College by Cardinal Wolsey on the site of the suppressed priory of St. Frideswide (8th century), and reestablished by Henry VIII as Christ Church, 1546; the monastic church of 1120 serves both as the college chapel and the cathedral of the Anglican diocese of Oxford; includes the extinct Canterbury College (or Hall), founded by Abp. Islip, 1353. Corpus Christi, founded 1353, by Henry VII, the foundation of which was restored by Richard Foxe, Ep. of Winchester, as the College of St. Mary of Lincoln, in honor of the Blessed Virgin Mary, founded 1458, by William of Waynflete, Bp. of Lincoln, and dedicated to Sts. Peter, Andrew, Cuthbert, and against the Wycliffian heresy. Cripplegate, founded 1427, by James I through endowments of Thomas Tewdall and Richard Wightwick. Queens, founded 1340, by Robert de Egesfield, chaplain to Philippa, queen of Edward III. St. John’s, on the site of a house of studies for Cistercian monks, founded by Abp. Chichele, 1437, and dedicated to St. Bernard of Clairvaux; refounded 1555, by Sir Thomas White, in honor of St. John the Baptist. Trinity, founded 1555, on the site of the 13th century Durham College, for the Benedictines of Durham Abbey; Card. Newman was a scholar here in 1819. University, formerly claiming to have been founded 872, by King Alfred; actually by William, archdeacon of Durham, 1249. Wadham, founded 1612, by Nicholas and Dorothy Wadham, Worcester, founded 1530, as a memorial to Edward Bouverie Pusey, professor of Hebrew and studies for students belonging to the Franciscan Capuchins. —C.E.

Oxford Movement, the name given to an effort, originating c. 1833, at the University of Oxford, to restore to the Church of England certain primitive and Catholic teachings and practises, though without, in the aim of most of its adherents, uniting it with Rome. The attempts since the time of Elizabeth to satisfy all parties within the Established Church, and the State supremacy, had left it far from such a norm, and it was the desire of the Oxford leaders to bring it back. Among the first to be connected with the movement was John Keble, author of "The Christian Year." He was associated with Hurrell Froude and John Henry Newman (afterwards cardinal). Later they were joined by Edward Bouverie Pusey, professor of Hebrew and a man of great learning. His association with the movement made it respected even by its foes, and "Puseyism" became its common designation. The "Tracts for the Times" written by its leaders were a series of doctrinal and practical papers designed to set forth its aims, and had great effect in crystallising its teachings. "Tract 90," the last, openly advocated Roman teachings and precipitated a storm during which Newman entered the Catholic Church. The Oxford Movement did not, however, die out. Its influence on Anglican thought has been profound and is the basis of later "Anglo-Catholic" teaching. The social and missionary work of Anglicanism owes much of its revival to the followers of this movement, the consecration of whose lives to the cause has spurred such effort among all parties in the Anglican communion.—C.E.; Church, History of the Oxford Movement, Lond., 1891.

Ozanam, Jacques (1640-1717), mathematician, b. Bouligneux; d. Paris, France. Descended from a rich convert Jewish family; he was the author of numerous mathematical works and member of the Academy of Sciences; his "Récitations" (1694) is still popular.

—Antoine Faévé (1813-53), littérature and philanthropist, nephew of the preceding, b. Milan, Italy; d. Marseilles, France. He studied law at Paris, filled a judicial post at Lyons, and two years later returned to Paris to submit his brilliant doctorate thesis on Dante. He was a member of the faculties of Lyons, Paris and the Sorbonne. From his student days he was imbued with an ardent desire to serve the Church and to make known to all the benefits of Christianity. His writings, which include "Études Germaniques" (Germanic Studies), "Poètes franciscains en Italie" (Franciscan poets in Italy), and his masterpiece "La civilisation chrétienne chez les Francs" (Christian civilization among the Franks), were inspired by this motive. When only twenty, with seven companions, he laid the foundation of the St. Vincent de Paul Society; later he was one of the group who induced Archbishop de Quélen of Paris, to inaugurate the famous "Conférences de Notre Dame."—C.E.
where he introduced community life among the hermits who gathered around him. Before he died he had established nine monasteries for men and two for women. His order continued until the 11th century. Represented in hermit's garb, or crossing the Nile on the back of a crocodile. Feast, 14 May.—C.E.; Butler.

Paderborn (Lat., Pader Fontes, springs of the Pader), town, Prussia, Germany, and former state of the Holy Roman Empire. Founded in 777, it became a bishopric, c. 805. The temporal power of the bishops was confirmed by King Louis in 881, and about 1100 they became princes of the empire, and were actual sovereigns, though not over the whole of their diocese, which measured 1000 sq. m. In the secularization of 1803 this territory was assigned to Prussia. The cathedral dates from the 11th, 12th, and 13th centuries. Paderborn is now the seat of a new diocese established in 1821, with ecclesiastical authority only.

Padilla, pa'de'ya, Juan de (d. c. 1544), Friar Minor, protomartyr of the United States, b. Andalusia, Spain; d. Hall Co., Nebraska. He joined the Franciscan Order and, c. 1528, went to Mexico, there joining the Franciscan province of the Holy Gospel. Chaplain for the expedition to Nueva Galicia, under Nuño de Guzmán, 1529-31, from 1531-40 he engaged in missionary labors among the Indians and built the convent at Tzapotlan and the monastery at Tulancingo. In 1540 he set out with Coronado on the famous march to the Seven Cities, going as far as Quivira and the Lower Loup River in Nebraska. After the departure of the expedition, Fr. Padilla remained behind with Fr. Juan de la Cruz and Br. Luis de Ubeda to work along the Tiguez on the southern part of Tibet, to the Vicar Apostolic of which it is subject, pending a decree from the Holy See making it the independent Mission of Southern Tibet; area of Bhutan, 20,000 sq. m.; founded, 1883; entrusted to the Foreign Missions of Paris. Superior, Jules Douenel (1927). Priests, 5; religious women, 7; schools for boys, 11; school for girls, 1; orphanages, 2; Catholics, 893.

Padroado, the privilege of patronage extended by the pope to the King of Portugal over three episcopal sees in India, and repeatedly recognized by declarations of Rome from 1534-1606. When vicars Apostolic were appointed over territories included under the Padroado, a struggle ensued between the clergy of the Propaganda and that of the Padroado, both parties claiming canonical rights. Rome's repeated efforts to end the trouble were unsuccessful until in April, 1928, an agreement between the Holy See and the Republic of Portugal suppressed the Padroado.

Padua, city in Italy. The ancient "Patavium" of the Veneti, it was three times destroyed by Goths and Lombards (408-601), made a free commune, 1087, and its subsequent history is a succession of wars and civil disturbances until its capture by the Venetians, 1509. Among its famous buildings are the mixed Romanesque and Byzantine basilica of St. Anthony, begun, 1232, and containing numerous art treasures, and the monastery of the Benedectines dating from the 9th century. Padua, the birthplace of many celebrated men and women, gave many martyrs to the Church, Sts. Giustina and Daniel, and Bp. Maximus. The city is the seat of an ancient diocese, whose traditional first bishop was St. Prosdocimus (3rd century). At present Padua has 321 parishes, 817 secular priests, 457 churches and chapels, and 580,000 Catholics.—C.E.

Padua, pà'du-a, UNIVERSITY OF, said to have been established when part of the Studium of Bologna settled there, 1222. In 1274 by decrees of the Council of Lyons, it was given rights equal with those of Paris and Bologna; it acquired great renown and rivalled Bologna, especially in jurisprudence. The school of medicine was especially famed; the theological faculty was instituted by Pope Urban V, 1363. Always a cosmopolitan institution, attended by many Germans, when Venice came under Austrian domination, 1814, it was transformed. At present it has, besides the four ordinary faculties, a school of pharmacy and obstetrics, a school of applied engineering, scientific institutes, laboratories, a museum, botanical garden and observatory. Among the famous professors were the jurisconsults Alberto Galeotto. Guido Suzzara, Jacopo d'Arena, and Baldo; the canonists Jacopo da Piacenza and Francesco Zabarella; in medicine, Bruno da Longoburgo, Jacopo and Giovanni Dondi, Jacopo da Forlì, and Biagio Pelacani; the philosophers Pier Paolo Vergerio and Antonio Trombetta; the humanists Rolandino, Giovanni da Ravenna, Francisco Filibio, Vittorino da Feltre, and Lauro Quirino; and the eminent French Dominican theologian Hyacinthe Serry. Students, 2439.—C.E.

Pagan, Panagianism (Lat., paganus, villager, rustic), an expression of early Christians for heathen and heathenism, since the old idolatrous beliefs and practices lingered in country places after Christianity became common in the cities; one who does not acknowledge the true God and practices idolatry; natural religion tending to degenerate because unaided by true religion, distorting the knowledge of God and gradually accepting belief in many false gods, resting morality on uncertain principles and therefore degrading it; condition of humanity with which the Church had to struggle for a thousand years, gradually substituting in the more enlightened world a Christian civilization for what had survived of the old pagan and later Greco-Roman civilizations of more than five thousand years. It is owing chiefly to opposition to the Church, its persecution and suppression in many places since the Reformation that paganism is again asserting itself, and the new or neo-paganism is worse than that which preceded Christianity. The former clung to some distinctions between right and wrong, law and license: the new definitely rejects all such distinction and seeks to be a law unto itself.

Although Christian missionaries have made great progress in thwarting paganism, about two-thirds of the population of the world is still pagan. There are many and various obstacles to their conversion, e.g., hostile civil governments; strong racial traditions in favor of false religions; prevalence of corrupt moral practices, such as polygamy; but as all these obstacles have often been overcome by devout and courageous Apostles, the greatest difficulty must be considered to be the lack of a sufficient number of missionaries. The reasons of this shortage are easily understood; the vocation must be very select; the training is long and arduous, and includes the mastery of difficult languages that cannot be learned from books; when all this has been surmounted, there are the risks of travel in barbarous lands, disease, and persecution; only the very choicest spirits can successfully encounter these. The maintenance of missionaries is also very expensive; and it is too often the case that the existing bodies of devoted missionary priests are hindered by lack of funds from properly performing even their daily labors.

PAGANISM AND MORALITY AMONG THE GREEKS AND ROMANS. Pagan systems of morality may be divided into two main schools of thought, that of Hedonism, and that of Cynicism and Stoicism. In general, Hedonism teaches that the highest good and happiness lies in pleasure. Various philosophers differ as to whether this pleasure consists in a perpetually joyous disposition (Dionysius), in mere sensuality (Aristippus), or in a combination of rational and sensual enjoyment (Epicurus). The Cynics, on the contrary, taught that pleasure is an evil and that the truly wise man is above human laws. The Stoics endeavored to purify the views of this school. The earlier Stoics, Zeno and his disciples, believed that virtue, to be sought for its own sake, sufficed for human happiness. The later Stoics, the Romans, although influenced by Christianity, differed little from the early Stoics. Midway between these schools are the views of Socrates, Plato, and Aristotle. Socrates believed happiness the ultimate object of human activity, and virtue the necessary means to it; the virtues, however, are only varieties of wisdom. Plato held that the highest good consisted in imitation of God, the Absolute Good, only partly realizable in this life; virtue was the ordering of conduct according to the dictates of right reason, and included justice, temperance, fortitude, and wisdom. Aristotle, founder of systematic ethics, started from experience rather than theory; he maintained that true ultimate happiness could be had only by the most perfect activity of the reason, which springs in turn from virtue.—C.E.

Pain. There are two kinds of pain, pain of loss and pain of sense. (1) Pain of loss results: (a) in Hell, from the eternal loss of God, whose possession alone in the Beatific Vision can completely satisfy the desire of intelligent beings for happiness; (b) in Purgatory, from the temporary deprivation of Him, whom the soul realizes to be the source of all happiness; (c) in Limbo there will be no subjective pain of loss (not an article of faith, but the opinion of St. Thomas). (2) Pain of sense principally consists in the torment of fire. The nature of this fire is not known.—Pohle-Preuss, Eschatology, St. L., 1924.

Pain bénit. See BLESSED BREAD.

Painting, Religious. From the earliest ages of Christianity painting has served religion, and religion painting. Representations of dogmatic truth on the walls of the Catacombs show the close connection between religion and painting, and for centuries prior to the Renaissance the chief province of art was the decoration of churches and monasteries for the instruction and edification of the faithful. Pope Gregory the Great (540-604) said, "The picture is to the illiterate what the written word is to the educated." Artists and scholars worked in close collaboration and the mind of the theologian guided the hand of the painter in depicting biblical scenes or episodes from the lives of the saints. The cloister offered an ideal atmosphere of peace and leisure for fostering artistic talent, and the illumination of Bible or missal led naturally, in the case of the gifted, to the decoration of church or monastery walls. Moreover, through the spread of the religious orders the various arts were carried from one country to another. As patrons, popes and prelates excelled, e.g., to mention only a few, Boniface VIII, Martin V, Julius II, Sixtus IV, Leo X, and Innocent X. Recent excavations in Syria, Egypt, and Asia Minor have brought to light examples of religious painting dating from the first centuries after Constantine's championship of Christianity (313). In Rome after the emergence of the Christians from the Catacombs the barbarian invasions prevented the development of art, but in Constantine's capital on the Bosporus Byzantine art developed. Characterized by rigidity and splendor, it felt, for a time, the restraining influence of the Iconoclasts (725-880), determined to do away with pictorial or sculptured representation of sacred subjects, but the opposition of the Church to their narrow doctrines brought a rebirth to painting in the 9th century. It was carried into Italy by the Crusades and there its formalism was gradually replaced by more natural treatment. Cimabue was the originator of this humanized art of the 13th century, which the genius of Giotto set more firmly on its way. The influence of St. Francis, through the tender piety which he inspired, was so great that he is often called its father. The Siennese school, including Duece di Buoninsegna, Simone Martini, and the Lorenzetti brothers, produced beautiful examples of a reverent familiarity in treating WESTERN HALF OF THE FIRST MAP OF THE NEW DISCOVERIES, Drawn on Ox-Hide in Colors by Juan de la Cosa, A.D. 1500 (Madrid) PAINTING
[FRANCISCO ZURBARAN]

A BISHOP'S FUNERAL, LOUVRE
ST. GREGORY, MUSEUM, SEVILLE

ST. BONAVENTURE, DRESDEN
ST. BENEDICT'S VISION, MADRID
religious themes; the somewhat later work of Orcagna shows a growing realism. The etherealized beauty of Fra Angelico's saints and angels marks the transition to the work of the early Florentines, Masaccio, Filippo Lippi, Ghirlandajo, Botticelli, and Benozzo Gozzoli. The human element and the faithful representation of nature grow in importance. The Early Renaissance is ushered in by the Paduan Mantegna; the Bellini, and Carpaccio in Venice; and by the Umbrians, Da Forlì, Perugino, and Pinturicchio. The High Renaissance belongs to the period of the Cinque Cento (the "five hundreds," in reality the fifteen hundreds), the golden age of Italian painting, illuminated by the names of Michelangelo, Raphael, Correggio, and Da Vinci. Technique now reached perfection, and fidelity to nature and to the classic ideal left no room for any traces of earlier stiffness and restraint. In the Venetians of the period, Giorgione, Titian, Tintoretto, and Veronese, there is such freedom, such reveling in gorgeous color and in brilliant pageantry that they are unjustly accused of paganism in spite of fine achievement in essentially religious subjects. An effort to stem the tide of too great freedom is evident in the works of Fra Bartolommeo, Andrea del Sarto, Domenichino and the Caracci. The end of the Renaissance comes with Tiepolo.

Paralleling the development of painting in Italy we have the schools that flourished north of the Alps. The spirituality of the early Flemish artists, the Van Eycks and Roger van der Weyden, is blended with a more human quality in the later Memling and Quentin Matsys. During the Renaissance we have the masterpieces of the great Germans, Holbein, Dürer, and Hans Burgkmair, and after the glory of Rubens and of Van Dyck there is a return, in the early 19th century, to a more religious simplicity in the work of Overbeck and the Nazarenes in Germany. A somewhat similar movement was inaugurated in England by the Pre-raphaelites, Rossetti, Burne-Jones, and Holman Hunt. In America the name of John La Farge stands out prominently in religious painting. In medieval France, preoccupied with the decoration of Gothic cathedrals in which great wall-spaces were lacking, painting gave way to the development of stained glass. Later art took a more worthy turn under the influence of the court, the names of Nicholas Poussin and Claude Gellée in the 16th century being the only notable ones in religious painting. In the 19th century, however, religion inspired much of the work of Ingres, Delacroix, and Delacroix. More recently the names of Tissot, Puvis de Chavannes, Daguerre-Bouveret, and Lhermitte are notable. Few of the early religious painters of Spain won lasting fame; after 1500, however, there are several great names. El Greco (Theotocupoli) carried into the peninsula the influence of the Venetians. Herrera the Elder and his son established a typically national school. The naturalism of Ribera shows the influence of the Italian, Caravaggio. Murillo recalls the work of Del Sarto and Carlo Dolci. In the religious paintings of Goya a return to the spirit of the later Renaissance is evident. —C.E.; Muthet, History of Painting from the Fourth to the Eighteenth Century, N. Y., 1907.

Palestine (Lat., palatium, palace), primarily a person or thing connected with the imperial palace of the Caesars. In the Church the term was similarly transferred to persons connected with the papal court.

---

Palatine Cardinals, the title of certain cardinals whose position brings them into constant relationship to the pope. They are two in number, the cardinal-provost and the cardinal secretary of state. The latter resides in the Vatican.

---

Palatine Counts, title conferred on the ecclesiastical abbreviators who are under the immediate jurisdiction of the pope and the bishops-assistant at the pontifical throne. In the times of the Frankish kings and German emperors palatine counts were the representatives of the crown and as such presided in the high court of justice of a palatinate.

---

Palatine Guard, title of the papal guard established by Pius IX, 1859. Its duties in the papal service are directed by the majordomo and the high chamberlain (maestro di camera). The members are all Roman citizens and receive no remuneration for their services except a stipend for their uniform.

---

Palatine Library, original name of the Vatican Library, whose present name dates from 1588 when Sixtus V (1585-90) ordered a new building to house the books of the old Palatine Library. At present it refers to a collection in the Vatican which was donated from the Heidelberg Library by Maximilian of Bavaria, 1622. It contains from 10,000 to 12,000 printed books and about 2450 manuscripts.

---

Palma, Prefecture Apostolic of, Philippines; includes the Palawan, Cuyos, Calamianes, and Cagayancillo groups of islands; Iwahig Penal Colony; Culion Leper Colony, and the Ahorean Agricultural Colony; established 1910; entrusted to the Augustinian Fathers. Prefect Apostolic, Vicarian Roman Zarrato, O.S.A. (1911); residence at Princesa. Churches, 10; chapels, 139; priests, 12; religious women, 19; Catholics, 59,600.

---

Pale, the, name of the territory in Ireland where the English settlers lived, and the only place where the English held any real sway during the period from the conquest to about the time of Elizabeth. In the latter half of the 14th and in the 15th and 16th centuries, it was confined to a narrow strip of territory, a few miles in width, around the city of Dublin.

---

Palestine, mandate of the British Empire, Asia, comprising the districts of Jerusalem, Jaffa, Gaza, Beersheba, Samaria, Phenicia, and Galilee, administered by a High Commissioner and Commander-in-Chief, assisted by an Executive Council; areas, about 9000 sq. m.; est. pop., 887,000. The history of Christianity in Palestine during the first three centuries is practically that of Jerusalem; the new religion spread rapidly and as early as 1229 Franciscan and Dominican missions were established here. In 1328 the Franciscans received custody of the Holy Places and their influence is evident from the schools, hospitals, and dispensaries which they established. Missions have also been founded by the Salesians. In 1929 Palestine was under the jurisdiction of the Latin and Greek Orthodox Patriarchs of Jerusalem, and the Melchite Greek Patriarchs of Damascus.

Palladius, SAINT, confessor, apostle of the Scots, b. Rome; d. Scotland, 432. Of an ancient Gallo-Roman family, he was a deacon in the church of Rome. In 431 he was consecrated bishop of the Scots and sent to preach the gospel in Ireland, being the first bishop sent by Pope Celestine I to Ireland; he founded churches at Kelleen Corra, Tignory, and Donard. He is often wrongly identified with St. Patrick. Buried at Fordun, Aberdeen, Scotland. Feast, 6 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Palladius, SAINT, confessor, apostle of the Scots, b. Rome; d. Scotland, 432. Of an ancient Gallo-Roman family, he was a deacon in the church of Rome. In 431 he was consecrated bishop of the Scots and sent to preach the gospel in Ireland, being the first bishop sent by Pope Celestine I to Ireland; he founded churches at Kelleen Corra, Tignory, and Donard. He is often wrongly identified with St. Patrick. Buried at Fordun, Aberdeen, Scotland. Feast, 6 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Palladius, SAINT, confessor, apostle of the Scots, b. Rome; d. Scotland, 432. Of an ancient Gallo-Roman family, he was a deacon in the church of Rome. In 431 he was consecrated bishop of the Scots and sent to preach the gospel in Ireland, being the first bishop sent by Pope Celestine I to Ireland; he founded churches at Kelleen Corra, Tignory, and Donard. He is often wrongly identified with St. Patrick. Buried at Fordun, Aberdeen, Scotland. Feast, 6 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Palladius, SAINT, confessor, apostle of the Scots, b. Rome; d. Scotland, 432. Of an ancient Gallo-Roman family, he was a deacon in the church of Rome. In 431 he was consecrated bishop of the Scots and sent to preach the gospel in Ireland, being the first bishop sent by Pope Celestine I to Ireland; he founded churches at Kelleen Corra, Tignory, and Donard. He is often wrongly identified with St. Patrick. Buried at Fordun, Aberdeen, Scotland. Feast, 6 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Palladius, SAINT, confessor, apostle of the Scots, b. Rome; d. Scotland, 432. Of an ancient Gallo-Roman family, he was a deacon in the church of Rome. In 431 he was consecrated bishop of the Scots and sent to preach the gospel in Ireland, being the first bishop sent by Pope Celestine I to Ireland; he founded churches at Kelleen Corra, Tignory, and Donard. He is often wrongly identified with St. Patrick. Buried at Fordun, Aberdeen, Scotland. Feast, 6 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Palladius, SAINT, confessor, apostle of the Scots, b. Rome; d. Scotland, 432. Of an ancient Gallo-Roman family, he was a deacon in the church of Rome. In 431 he was consecrated bishop of the Scots and sent to preach the gospel in Ireland, being the first bishop sent by Pope Celestine I to Ireland; he founded churches at Kelleen Corra, Tignory, and Donard. He is often wrongly identified with St. Patrick. Buried at Fordun, Aberdeen, Scotland. Feast, 6 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Palladius, SAINT, confessor, apostle of the Scots, b. Rome; d. Scotland, 432. Of an ancient Gallo-Roman family, he was a deacon in the church of Rome. In 431 he was consecrated bishop of the Scots and sent to preach the gospel in Ireland, being the first bishop sent by Pope Celestine I to Ireland; he founded churches at Kelleen Corra, Tignory, and Donard. He is often wrongly identified with St. Patrick. Buried at Fordun, Aberdeen, Scotland. Feast, 6 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Palladius, SAINT, confessor, apostle of the Scots, b. Rome; d. Scotland, 432. Of an ancient Gallo-Roman family, he was a deacon in the church of Rome. In 431 he was consecrated bishop of the Scots and sent to preach the gospel in Ireland, being the first bishop sent by Pope Celestine I to Ireland; he founded churches at Kelleen Corra, Tignory, and Donard. He is often wrongly identified with St. Patrick. Buried at Fordun, Aberdeen, Scotland. Feast, 6 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Palladius, SAINT, confessor, apostle of the Scots, b. Rome; d. Scotland, 432. Of an ancient Gallo-Roman family, he was a deacon in the church of Rome. In 431 he was consecrated bishop of the Scots and sent to preach the gospel in Ireland, being the first bishop sent by Pope Celestine I to Ireland; he founded churches at Kelleen Corra, Tignory, and Donard. He is often wrongly identified with St. Patrick. Buried at Fordun, Aberdeen, Scotland. Feast, 6 July.—C.E.; Butler.
eated at Rugby and Oxford he spent the early part of his life in fruitless endeavors to have the Anglican Church recognized as a branch of the Catholic Church, and finally became a Catholic, 1855. His early writings deal mainly with the problem of intercommunion; as a Catholic he wrote a treatise on early Christian symbolism and a commentary on the Book of Daniel.—C.E.

Palmieri, Domenico (1829-1900), theologian, b. Piacenza, Italy; d. Rome. He entered the Society of Jesus, 1852, and taught in several colleges, finally becoming professor of Scripture and Oriental languages at Maestricht, 1880-87. He was one of the first to direct attention to the errors in Loisy's writings. His interesting "Institutiones philosophiae" (Philosophical Principles), delivered at the Roman College, followed the Scholastic method but differed from the common teaching of the School in many points, such as the composition of bodies, animal and plant life, the reality of accidents, and the necessity of intelligible species in cognition; his reputation rests chiefly on his treatises of dogmatic theology, so complete from the positive, Scholastic, and polemical viewpoints. His other works include a valuable work on moral theology based on Antonio Ballerini's studies, as a result of which he was named theologian to the Sacred Penitentiary; and a commentary on Dante's "Divine Comedy."—C.E.

Palm, Blessed, a sacramental of the Church, blessed and distributed to the faithful on Palm Sunday, to bring to mind the triumphal entry of Our Lord into Jerusalem, when He was met by a multitude bearing palms. Their use originated in the "miracle plays" of the early Middle Ages, and they are mentioned by the Venerable Bede, c. 700. The most suitable palm is the Oriental date-palm, when procurable. In the United States the southern palmetto is largely used, but any other kind of branches may be used if some species of palm cannot be obtained. The palms are blessed before the principal Mass on Palm Sunday, with a long blessing which includes a beautiful Preface. They are then distributed to the people, who should hold them during the reading of the Passion of Our Lord, and they should be preserved reverently at home. (J. R. S.)

Palm Sunday, Sunday before Easter, the sixth and last of Lent, and the beginning of Holy Week, commemorating Christ's triumphal entry into Jerusalem when olive and palm branches were strewed in His path. Before the Mass of the day the Palms are to be solemnly blessed. In connection with this blessing a procession is prescribed. The palms which have just been blessed are carried in the hands of the participants in the procession. It leaves the church proper, and should move entirely about the outer circumference of the church, where this is feasible. Before re-entering the church two chanters enter, and behind closed doors sing or chant the Gloria laus et honor, awaiting the answer from those still outside the door. The Cross-bearer strikes the door with the foot of the Cross, whereupon the door is opened and the procession enters. According to Almar this procession was already in vogue in the 9th century. There is no trace of it in Rome so early; however, in the Middle Ages it was quite common everywhere. In the 16th century the procession was often dramatic in its arrangements; it was almost a pageant in several places in Germany, and many of the processions went from one church to another at some distance. The way was often strewed with cloths of rare texture in imitation of what was done on the first Palm Sunday. Other bits of pageantry were the figure of the Christ riding on an ass. The palms burned supply the ashes for distribution on Ash Wednesday of the next year. Palm Sunday is also called Flower, Olive, Branch, Sallow, Willow, Yew, Blossom, and Fig Sunday.—C.E.; Guéranger, tr. Shepherd, The Liturgical year: Passiontide and Holy Week, Lond., 1896, (P. W. N.)

Panama, republic, Central America; total area, 32,380 sq. m.; pop. (1923), 442,522 exclusive of the Canal Zone; Canal Zone (area, 554 sq. m.), pop. (1923), 18,082. Missionaries were brought here by the Spanish explorers and conquerors in the 16th century. The Diocese of Panama was erected early in that century, and was at first suffragan to Lima. Under Spanish rule, Panama became a department of the Republic of Colombia (q.v.) until 1903, when independence was declared. The present Archdiocese of Panama, founded, 1925, is dependent directly on the Holy Sec. Churches, 82; priests, 62; Catholics, 376,000.—C.E.

Pancratius, Saint, martyr, one of the Fourteen Holy Helpers (q.v.). According to tradition he was born in Phrygia, brought to Rome, and, professing his Faith, was beheaded on the Via Aurelia, when only fourteen, but in what persecution is doubtful. He is the avenger of perjurors; numerous monuments to him exist throughout Europe, among them as were many ancient churches all over England; the London borough of St. Pancras gives its name to a railroad terminal in London. Relics in his own church at Rome, destroyed in 1798, head in the Lateran Basilica. Feast: R. Cal., 12 May.—C.E., X, 751.

Pandulf (d. 1226), papal legate and Bp. of Norwich, b. Rome, Italy; d. there. Papal envoy to England, 1213, King John surrendered his crown to him and received it back as fief of the Holy See; during the minority of Henry III he was practically ruler of England (1219-21).—C.E.

Pange Lingua Gloriae [Corporis], or Sing, MY TONGUE, THE SAVIOUR'S GLORY, hymn for Vesper on the Feast of Corpus Christi, and used as a processional hymn on Holy Thursday, Corpus Christi, and during the Forty Hours' Adoration. The two last verses, the "Tantum Ergo" (q.v.), are sung at Benediction of the Blessed Sacrament. Written by St. Thomas Aquinas (1227-74), it has approximately twenty-five translations; the one given is by E. Caswall.—C.E.; Brit.
PANGE

Pange Lingua Gloriosi [Lauream]. or SING. MY TONGUE, THE GLORIOUS BATTLE, hymn recited on Good Friday morning during the Adoration of the Cross. For Breviary use it is divided into two parts: (1) "Pange lingua gloriosi," hymn for Matins from Passion Sunday to the Wednesday of Holy Week (inclusive), and for Matins on 3 May and 14 September, Feasts of the Finding, and of the Exaltation of the Holy Cross; (2) "Lastra sex qui jam pergeit," hymn for Lauds for the same days as above. It was written by Venantius Fortunatus (550-609) and has approximately twenty-five translations; the one given is by J. Neale. The eighth verse reads:

Faithful Cross! above all other,
One and only noble tree!
None in foliage, none in blossom,
None in fruit thy peers may be;
Sweetest Wood and Sweetest Iron!
Sweetest Weight is hung on thee.

—C.E.; Britt.

Pantaleon. SAINT, martyr (c. 305), one of the Fourteen Holy Helpers (q.v.). According to legend he was the son of a rich pagan, but was instructed in Christianity by his mother; he studied medicine and became court physician to Emperor Maximianus; he was denounced to the emperor as a Christian by envious colleagues, but resisted firmly the temptations offered him to apostatize, was condemned to death, subjected to atrocious tortures from which he remained miraculously immune, and was finally decapitated. Patron of physicians and midwives; invoked against consumption. Relics at abbey of St. Denis, near Paris; his head is at Lyons. Feast, R. Cal., 27 July.—C.E.; Butler.

Pantheism (Gr., pan, all; theos, god), the opinion that everything is divine, that the world is an emanation or part of the essence of God. This is the way that one who believes in God states the opinion, but the pantheist believes that matter and its energies are God, in reality not having a proper conception of God at all. It is a more common opinion than people generally imagine. Insistence on the right of private judgment in matters of religion naturally creates a self-conscious which leads one to feel above the lot of human nature and in some manner equal to the Being on Whose revelation one passes judgment.—C.E.; Turner, History of Philosophy, N. Y., 1903. (ED.)

Panthéon (Gr., pan, all; theos, god), a building in Paris used as a monument to the great men of France. Originally it was a church dedicated to Ste. Geneviève, begun, 1764, designed in the classical style by Soufflot (1713-80), and continued by Rondelet (1734-1829). During the Revolution the Convention converted it into a memorial temple and called it the Panthéon. It was rededicated to religious uses, 1806, but seized for secular purposes, 1830, during the July Revolution. It was returned to ecclesiastical use, 1851, only to be reasserted by the secular authorities, 1885, as a national monument.

Paola. COLLEGE OF, Paola, Kansas, founded, 1895; conducted by the Ursuline Sisters; preparatory school; college of arts and sciences; summer school; professors, 8; students, 60. Papacy. term employed in an ecclesiastical and an historical signification. In the former use it denotes the ecclesiastical system in which the pope as successor of St. Peter and Vicar of Jesus Christ governs the Catholic Church as its supreme head. In the latter, it signifies the papal power viewed as a political force in history since the beginning of the Christian era. Pagan, barbarian, and Turk invaded Europe in turn, and succumbed to its civilizing influence. Art, science, and literature were preserved and perfected under the protection of the papacy, and from the Reformation to the present day its influence has been felt in every field of endeavor, in spite of opposition and oppression.—C.E.; The Papacy, ed. Lattey, St. L., 1924; Johnson, The Papacy and the Kingdom of Italy, Lon., 1928.

Papago Indians, an important tribe of Shoshonean stock closely resembling the Pina. Their habitat was Arizona and Sonora, Mexico. They were sedentary and agricultural and skilled in basketry. At enmity with the Apaches they were friendly to the whites. Fr. Kino founded the mission of San Xavier del Bac in 1697. They are now Catholics and civilized, numbering about 5000, almost all on Arizona reservations.—C.E.

Papal Flag, the flag of the Vatican State, consisting of a ground of white and yellow divided vertically into equal parts. The white part bears the seal of the Vatican State consisting of the tiara, or triple crown, and cross-keys, with the inscription: "Stato della Città del Vaticano." (E. V. W.)

Papal Letter, a publication or announcement of the pope, proceeding directly from him, or as is more frequently the case in modern times, issued by papal officials to whom such authority has been delegated. The first example apart from the Epistles of St. Peter is that of Pope Clement I (90-99). Their use increased in proportion with the development of papal primacy, and questions of faith or morals were subjects for letters, variously known with reference to their legal character, as decretal, as legis, as constitutum. More general letters, especially those of dogmatic importance, were called tomis, indiculis, commonitoria, epistolae sectoriae, etc. They were early incorporated in collections of canon law and ranked with canons of synods in importance and obligation. The early popes insisted that rescripts issued for individual cases should be observed in analogous ones, an example followed by the popes of the Middle Ages, a period during which the number of papal letters increased enormously. According to the canonists, Gratian in particular, every papal letter of general character was authoritative for the entire Church. The names of letters of general character were varied, e.g., constitution, decree (see DECREES OF ROMAN PONTIFFS AND CONGREGATIONS), or decretal; ordinances issued for individual cases were known as rescripta, responsa, or mandate. Instances of forged papal letters were frequent in this period. From the 13th century to 1900 a papal document was given legal form by posting it on the doors of St. Peter's, the Lateran, or the Apostolic Chancery, and in the Piazza del Campo di Fiori. Since 1909 they acquire force by publication in the "Acta Apostolicae Sedis." Modern Papal writings are divided into Constitutions, Decretals, Bulls, Briefs, and Apostolic Letters. The letters are deposited in the Roman archives, Private and official collections of papal letters exist.—C.E., IX, 262.

Papal States, States of the Church, less exactly the Patrimony of St. Peter, the civil territory subject to the popes as temporal rulers from 754-1870. They had their origin in the two donations made in 754 and 756 by Pepin, King of the Franks, to Pope Stephen II, of the Duchy of Rome, the Exarchate of Ravenna, and the Marches of Ancona, which had been recovered for the Holy See by Pepin from Aistulf the Lombard invader. This territory was enlarged by subsequent acquisitions, e.g., the grants of Charlemagne in 787, and of Countess Matilda of Tuscany, at her death, in 1115. The possession of these states gave the popes a position of sovereign independence, which guaranteed the free exercise of their spiritual authority. But they also became the occasion of much evil for the popes and the Church. Factions within, at different times, tried to usurp the papal power; emperors and kings attempted, and sometimes succeeded, in annexing them to their own dominions; yet, in spite of centuries of strife and the consequent varying fortunes of the Papal States, they remained, at the beginning of the French Revolution, substantially the same in extent as in the time of Charlemagne. In the 19th century the movement to unite the various principalities of Italy into one nation was successful. The years 1859-60 saw most of the papal territory annexed to the new Kingdom of Rome. The capital was yet to be obtained. The withdrawal of the French troops at the outbreak of the Franco-Prussian war, 1870, made this possible. On 20 September, 1870, the Italian troops attacked the city, and within a few hours were in possession of it. This ended the actual possession by the popes of the papal states, but the right to them endured until Pope Pius XI, in the Treaty of the Lateran, 11 February, 1929, ceded all but a small portion to the Kingdom of Italy.—C.E., XIV, 257. (M. E. D.)

Papias, Saint (2nd century), Apostolic Father, Bp. of Hierapolis. He is celebrated as the author of lengthy commentaries on the life, teaching, and works of Our Lord, which, however, now exist only in fragments. Earlier critics maintained that his writings propagated the belief that Christ will rule the kingdom of the just upon earth for a period of one thousand years; later commentators held this belief spurious. Feast, 22 Feb.—C.E.; Lightfoot, Essays on Supernatural Religion, Lond., 1889.

Papist, Impolite term used in English-speaking countries, to designate a member of the Catholic Church. Its origin can be traced to the Reformation, where it was first used to distinguish a Roman Catholic who believed in the supremacy of the Pope, from an Anglican who believed in the supremacy of the King. Papistry, papistic, and papistical are terms which are met with in English literature, all of impolite usage. (M. E. D.)

Papua, Vicariate Apostolic of, Oceania, comprises the British possessions in Papua (New Guinea), and in Torres Strait; entrusted to the Missionaries of the Sacred Heart. Vicars Apostolic: Abp. Louis André Navarre, M.S.C. (1887-1912); Stanislaus Henry Verjus, M.S.C. (1888-92); Guynot de Boinneu (1908). Residence at Yule Island.

Parable (Gr., parabole, a placing beside, comparison). The Greek word occurs frequently in the Greek O.T. as the translation of the Hebrew word middath, meaning: proverb, by-word, wise saying, similitude, parable. It occurs with especially frequent frequency in the Synoptic Gospels, where the parable is a characteristic of the teaching of Christ, not in the sense that Christ created the type (for we find parables occasionally in the O.T., and, independently, in Rabbinic Literature), but in the sense that Christ made a very special use of the parable; after Him the Apostles do not seem to have used it in their teaching. As used in the Gospels, the word parable means a narrative of more or less fictitious character, but dealing with objects or occurrences taken from nature or the life of man, which serve as terms of comparison to illustrate a supernatural truth of the moral, religious order. In this narrative the expressions are to be understood in their ordinary sense, the words keeping their natural literal sense. The parable thus differs from the allegory in which the words are used in the figurative sense, the allegory being really a series of metaphors, as for instance when our Lord says: I am the Good Shepherd; the Door; the Vine, etc. (John, 10; 15). It differs from the fable or apologue (which is not represented in the N.T.) in that the latter uses as actors, plants or animals, etc., which are made to speak and act more or less unnaturally, and in that the fable teaches a truth of the natural order or common sense. In the Gospels we find parables and allegories, and an intermediate class in which both kinds are more or less mixed. To understand a parable correctly, we must ascertain the precise point of the comparison, and subordinate the rest to that point, without trying to find a lesson in each one of the details of the story: several of the details are there simply to give consistency and interest to the narrative, but are not intended to convey a lesson. Thus for instance in the parable of the Cockle (Matt., 13, 24 sq.) the sleep during which the enemy oversows the cockle, and the servants of the good man of the house conceal no special mystery. Accordingly one must beware of finding in a parable a lesson about a point which the parable is not meant to illustrate, and of making applications to cases not intended by our Lord: thus from the fact that one-fourth of the seed yields fruit (Matt., 13, 3-9; 18-23) we may not infer that only one-fourth shall be saved. The parables, the number of which is given quite differently by the different authors, according to their more or less strict definitions of "parable," deal with truths of moral religious character, e.g., Prodigal Son, the Two Debtors; or with the Kingdom of God in its various aspects (nature, growth, consumption, etc.); see Matt., 13; these latter parables concerning the Kingdom of God are in fact prophecies of Our Lord concerning the future development of His work.—C.E.; Fonck, tr. Leahy, The Parables of the Gospel, N. Y., 1915; Ollivier, tr. Leahy, The Parables of Our Lord, Lond., 1927. (E. A. A.)

Parabolani (Gr., parabolas, reckless), members of a brotherhood who in the early Church voluntarily undertook the care of the sick and the burial of the dead, and constituted a bodyguard for the bishop. Probably organized during the great plague in Alexandria under Dionysius the Great, they received their name from the fact that they risked their lives in exposing themselves to contagious diseases. They had neither orders nor vows but were enumerated among the clergy and enjoyed clerical privileges and immunities. Their presence at public gatherings or in the theaters was forbidden by law. The Parabolani are not mentioned after Justinian's time.—C.E.

Paraclete (Gr., advocate or consoler), an appellation of the Holy Ghost. Christ promises to send the Apostles “another Paraclete” (John, 14, 16) so they may not be desolate orphans when He departs. Christ was the first advocate or comforter and He continues His advocacy for us in Heaven (John, 11, 1). The Holy Ghost is the advocate in the Church, Who pleads God’s cause with men, Who keeps the Church from error, and sanctifies souls through the ministry of the word and the sacraments. The supernatural power that produces all effects of grace on earth is appropriated to the Holy Ghost (q.v.) though really the work belongs to the Blessed Trinity.—C.E.; Marmion, Christ the Life of the Soul, St. L.; Devine, A Manual of Ascetical Theology, N. Y., 1902. (C. F. C.)

Paradise (O.Per., pairidæza, enclosure), Christian tradition has long applied the name to the Scriptural Garden of Eden, the home of our first parents before their fall. In the N.T. it signifies the future abode of rest and enjoyment in store for the just after death. It occurs only three times in the N.T., though the idea which it represents is frequently expressed in other terms, e.g., “Abraham’s Bosom” (Luke, 16, 22). It first occurs in Luke (23, 43), Jesus on the cross saying to the penitent thief: “Amen, I say to thee, this day thou shalt be with Me in paradise.” St. Paul, describing his ecstasy says he was “caught up into paradise” (2 Cor., 12). Lastly in the Apocalypse (2, 7), St. John hears the words of the Angel of Ephesus: “To him that overcometh, I will give to eat of the tree of life, which is the paradise of my God.” In all three passages the word refers to the heavenly kingdom.—C.E., XIV, 519; Gigot, (C. v.)

Paraguay, republic of South America, in the southern central part, between Bolivia, Brazil, and Argentina; area, 61,647 sq. m., exclusive of about 100,000 sq. m. in dispute with Bolivia; pop. (1926), 798,909, exclusive of about 30,000 in disputed territory. Before the middle of the 16th century Franciscan missionaries accompanied the Spanish explorers and conquerors, and later St. Francis Solanus was one of those who preached in this region and made many converts among the Indians. The Jesuits were active there in the 17th and 18th centuries until their expulsion in 1767. The country was under Spanish rule until 1811, when independence was declared. By the Constitution of 1870 the Congress is declared powerless to forbid the exercise of any religion; the Catholic Faith is recognized as the chief religion of the nation; and the organization of the Church is partly supported and partly controlled by the State. The present Diocese of Paraguay includes the same territory as the Republic, and is suffragan to the Archdiocese of Buenos Aires. Catholic statistics:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1647</td>
<td>125</td>
<td>101</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

—C.E.

Paralipomenon, the name of two books of the Bible which, from the Hebrew title, are also known as Chronicles. The two books really form a single work; this was divided into two by the Septuagint translators, that is those who first rendered the Hebrew Bible into Greek. The title of the books also comes from the Septuagint, being a transliteration of a Greek word meaning “things left out.” The translators seem to have regarded Paralipomenon as a supplement to the books of Samuel and Kings. The view is hardly correct, since Paralipomenon repeats matter contained in these other books when it serves the author’s purpose. The book is anonymous; but from very close resemblances of thought and style, it is judged to come from the same author as Esdras and Nehemiah—a single work; too—which continues its narrative. The writer belonged, most likely, to the beginning of the Greek period in Jewish history, opened by the victories of Alexander the Great in 332 B.C. The list of the high priests is brought down to Jekdoa (2 Esd., 12, 11), who according to Josephus was a contemporary of Alexander. “The books of Esdras and Nehemia, the style and the manner of composition indicate that the author lived in the Greek period." The aim of this author of Paralipomenon was to encourage his fellow-countrymen to be faithful to the Law, particularly to the prescriptions regarding worship in the Temple of Jerusalem. This aim determines the choice of his materials. The connection of the tribes of Israel, especially of those of Juda, Benjamin, and Levi, which comprised most of the nation after the Exile, with Israel, Isaac, and Abraham, is brought out by the genealogies which occupy the first nine chapters. In this matter special attention is given to the priests and Levites (1 Par., G). Chapters 10-29 of 1 Paralipomenon contain the history of David, dwelling particularly on what he did to establish and foster the worship of God, and to prepare for the building of the Temple. The second book relates the history of Solomon, the builder of the Temple, and of his successors in Juda down to the Exile. The kings who were faithful to God, namely, Solomon, Asa, Josaphat, Joas, Ezechias, and Josias, are given the greater part of 2 Paralipomenon as David is given the greater part of 1 Paralipomenon. The author restricts himself chiefly to what is of a nature to make his readers understand that the fortunes of the country depend on faithfulness in the service of God.—C.E.; Gigot. (w. s. b.)

Parallelism (Gr., para, beside; allos, other), is the balancing of one line of a verse against the other. It is the most distinctive feature of Hebrew poetry. If the second line repeats the thought of the first, the parallelism is synonymous, e.g., "Wash me yet more from my iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin" (Ps. 50, 4). Antithetical parallelism opposes one thought to the other: "For the Lord knoweth the way of the just: and the way of the wicked shall perish" (Ps. 1, 6). To expand the thought of the first line in the second is to use synthetic parallelism: "O Lord my God, in Thee have I put my trust. Save me from my persecutors and rescue me." (Ps. 7, 2). If the expansion is continued step by step through several lines the parallelism is cliamatic or stairlike.—C.E.; Boylan, Psalms, St. L., 1920.

Parasceve (Gr., paraskeue, preparation), day before the Sabbath, Friday; also day beyond certain feasts of sabbatical rank; the day the Pasch was observed more religiously than any other Friday. Although there is much dispute concerning the day on which Our Lord died, commentators generally agree that it was on the eve of the Pasch.—C.E.

Paray-le-Monial, town in central France, department of Saône et Loire, famous religious center. Population about 5000. The Benedictine priory was founded in 10th century and the monks were lords of the town until 1789. Among the places of pilgrimage are the Chapel of the Visitation where most of the visions of St. Margaret Mary Alacoque (c. 1564) took place, the Basilica of the Sacred Heart, a famous example of Cluniaice architecture, and the Hieron or temple palace, erected in honor of the Eucharistic King, which contains pictures and objects of art connected with the Holy Eucharist.—C.E.

Pardoners, name given to preachers of indulgences in the Middle Ages. They preached to obtain alms for building churches, constructing bridges, supporting the Crusades, etc. Unfortunately the practise gave rise to many abuses which led the Council of Trent to forbid the offer of any indulgence conditional on money contributions for a specified object.

Pardons and Pardoners, name given to preachers of indulgences at which an indulgence is granted and where pilgrims gather to spend the day in prayer, beginning with early Mass and a procession around the church. There are five kinds: St. Yves at Tré­guier, the Pardon of the poor; Our Lady of Runen­gol, the Pardon of singers; St. Jean-du-Doigt, the Pardon of fire; St. Ronan, the Pardon of the moun­tain; and St. Anne de la Palude, the Pardon of the sea. The Pardons begin in March and end in October and are most frequent between Easter and Michaelmas Day (29 Sept.).—C.F.

Parents, Duties of. Parents are obliged to educate their children for God and for eternal salvation. As they are born in original sin and liable to inordinate passions they must be directed by their parents towards good and brought under the saving influence of the Church and its means of salvation. Teachers and educators are the representatives or at least the assistants of parents. Hence they, too, must counteract in the child the twofold evil which clings to it, i.e., ignorance and propensity to evil. Parents are bound to provide for the temporal welfare of their children, for having begotten them they must continue to nourish them, and to develop their faculties and powers to fit them to provide for themselves.—C.E.; Spirago, The Catechism Explained; N. Y., 1899. (c. A. F.)

Paris, capital of France. The Roman Lute­cia, Paris became a Christian center at an early date, St. Denis and his companions, Sts. Rusticus and Eleutherius. Through the intercession of St. Geneviève, Paris was preserved from Attila's invasion, and under the Merovingian kings realized its widespread religious development, beginning with the conversion of Clovis. During the Carolingian period, Paris was defended by the celebrated Bp. Gislin in the worst of the Northman invasions, 885. In the 10th and 11th centuries, the city had numerous churches and monasteries, and from the beginning of the 12th century the monastic schools of Notre Dame were famous, although the University of Paris was not founded until the reign of Philip II, 1215. The cathedral was consecrated under Maurice de Sully, 1160-96. The feast of the Immaculate Conception was celebrated in Paris as early as the 13th century, which, especially the reign of St. Louis, was a period of great material prosperity, but the accession of the Valois began a turbulent time, eventually leading to the rise of Protestantism. Under the Gondi family visionach occupied the See of Paris for a century, religious congregations were widely developed. During the Revolution the life of the Church was suspended, the feast of Reason celebrated in Notre Dame, 1793, Catholic worship being resumed, 1802. Abp. de Belloy reorganized religious life and worship, 1802-08. During the Commune, 1872, Abp. Darboy was slain. The Catholic University was created under Abp. Guibert. Besides Notre Dame, the principal churches are St. Germain l'Auxerrois, memorable for signaling the Massacre of St. Bartholomew, St. Leu, the Madeleine, which Napoleon wished to make a Temple of Glory, St. Louis en l'île, St. Laurent, Montmartre Basilica, St. Sulpice, St. Séverin, and the Sorbonne; famous for the tomb of Richelieu. Distinguished abbeys include St. Germain des Prés, St. Victor, St. Denis (the new church of which inaugurated the pointed arch of Gothic architecture), and St. Jacques. There are eight principal pilgrimages in Paris, that of the tomb of St. Geneviève being, perhaps, the most popular. Paris is the seat of an archdiocese, administered by a bishop, who as the proper pastor is charged with the care of souls within the precincts of his parish. His duties are to preach, to administer the Sacraments to the members of his parish church, and to administer the parish property.—C.E., XI, 537. (b. r.)

Parker, Matthew (1504-75), second Anglican Abp. of Canterbury; d. London. Having studied at Cambridge, he was ordained and elected to a fellowship. In 1535 he was appointed chaplain to Anne Boleyn, Vice-chancellor of Cambridge, at the accession of Mary Tudor he resigned. Deprived of his preferments he retired until he was recalled by Queen Elizabeth, to be consecrated Abp. of Canterbury in 1559. Elizabeth decided to retain an episcopacy; hence it became necessary to devise some means of finding a bishop to consecrate the newly selected prelates. The circumstances of Parker's consecration, shrouded in secrecy, were unknown to the Catholic party who believed a rumor, since proved false, called "The Nag's Head Story" (q.v.). The "Register" at Lambeth, therefore, published a legal document testifying that Parker was consecrated according to the ordinal of Edward VI by Bp. Barlow. The Elizabethans were reticent about the consecration of their metropolitan, probably because of the reputation of the consecrators. Abp. Parker strove, during fifteen years primacy, to define the limits of the doctrines of the Reformers. He revised the Edwardian Articles in conversation, 1562. In 1566 he drew up a series of enactments concerning ecclesiastical matters, known as the "Advertisements." He also made a revised translation of the Scriptures called the "Bishop's Bible."

Parkminster (Charterhouse of St. Hugh), the largest Charterhouse in the world, near Cowfold, Sussex, England; founded, 1883, by the Carthusians; priests, 17.

Parliament, Clerical Participation in. To accept or even solicit membership in Parliament, i.e., in such bodies in the State as have the right to frame laws, a cleric or a religious needs the permission of the Holy See in those countries where there exists a special prohibition of the Holy See; such would be France. Where, however, no such prohibition has been made, a cleric or a religious may not aspire to, or accept, such offices without the express permission of his own ordinary and also of the ordinary of the place where the election is to take place. This legislation also holds for the Congress of the United States as well as for the legislatures of the various states as all of these are lawmaking bodies.—Ayrihac, General Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law, N. Y., 1923.

Parma, town and former duchy in northern Italy. A Roman colony in 183 B.C., Parma had a bishop in A.D. 378. From the 10th century the prelates enjoyed temporal power, but in 1106 it was resigned by St. Bernardo. Parma was erected into a duchy in 1545 by Pope Paul III, and this status continued until 1731, after which period it was controlled successively by Spain, Austria, France, and finally annexed to the Kingdom of Italy (1860). The town possesses a fine Lombard ca-

Parish-priest, a priest who by virtue of his office has the care of souls within the precincts of his parish. His duties are to preach, to administer the Sacraments to the members of his parish church, and to administer the parish property.—C.E., XI, 537. (b. r.)

Parish, University of, formed c. 1208, by the amalgamation of the ancient schools of Notre Dame, Ste. Geneviève and St. Victor; organized about the middle of the 13th century. It was composed of seven groups, the faculty of arts comprising the four nations, French, English, Norman, and Picard and the three superior faculties of theology, law, and medicine. The whole was governed by the rector, at the head of each faculty was a dean, and at the head of each nation, a proctor. At this period two degrees were conferred, the baccalaureate and the doctorate, and colleges were formed to establish suitable residences for the students. The University took an active part in public affairs during the Middle Ages and was the champion of orthodox Catholicity. It was suppressed in 1790 during the Revolution but was reorganized under Napoléon, 1808, who placed it under the direct surveillance of the Holy See; 1826 a constitution was granted by Pius VII, and it now numbers the faculties of letters, science, law, and medicine, and has 22,521 students.

—C.E.

Parish (Gr., para, beside; oikos, house), regularly and strictly, a definite territorial division of the diocese to which has been assigned its own church, a determined group of the people, and its own distinct rector, who as the proper pastor is charged with the care of souls. At times, however, there have been established in the same city or district occupied by regular parishes, national parishes for the faithful of different language or nationality, and in rare instances, parishes consisting of a few families or of a certain class of persons without any relation to territory; such parishes can no longer be established without Apostolic indult. The territorial subdivisions of vicariates and prefectures Apostolic are called quasi-parishes when rectors of their own have been assigned to them.—C.E.; P.C. Augustine; Ayrihac, Constitution of the Church, N. Y., 1925. (J. T. T.)
Parma, seat of a diocese, directly dependent on the Holy See; Catholic population, 232,913.

Parochial Mass, a Mass celebrated for the parishioners on all Sundays and Holy Days of obligation. The parish priest is not obliged to celebrate it, but if he does not he must offer his Mass for that intention. If it is a High Mass it is preceded by the aspersion of water and the blessing on Sunday. It is accompanied by an instruction, special prayers, announcements, etc.—C.E.; Wuest, tr. Mulaney, Matters Liturgical, N. Y., 1926. (C. J. P.)

Parousia, (Gr., para, near; ousia, participle of eimi, be). In the N.T. it means the second coming of Christ. The principal Gospel texts are: Matthew, 24, 27; Mark, 9, 31; and Luke, 9, 26; Matthew, 24, 25, and the parallel passages of Mark, 13, and Luke, 21, 5-33. The way in which Our Lord's sayings about this second coming are connected with other sayings referring to the establishment of the kingdom here below and to the destruction of Jerusalem, which was to take place in A.D. 70, and His deliberate intention to leave His followers in ignorance regarding the time of His parousia, have given rise to obscurities and difficulties about the time of the fulfillment of His prophecy. The early Christians lived in the hope and expectation of a coming of Our Lord which would probably be not long delayed.—Prat, tr. Stoddard, The Theology of Saint Paul, N.Y., 1935. (w. s. P.)

Parrenin, Dominique (1665-1741), Jesuit missionary, b. at Russey, France; d. at Peking. His varied knowledge and familiar use of Chinese earned him the good will of the Chinese emperors, which he utilized in the interest of religion and science. To him is due the continuance of the mission at Peking during violent persecutions. His services to science were of value in drawing up the great map of China. C.E.

Parsis or Parsees (ancient Pers., Parsi, Persian), members of communities in India and Persia who are adherents of the Zoroastrian religion. They were originally from Persia whence they were dispersed, A.D. 641, when the Moslems attempted to convert them. They fled to Ormuz, Diu, and finally to Sajran where they established their first fire temple, 721. The Moslems again dispersed them, 1305. They established themselves throughout India where they rose to prominence in the 17th century. The sect is divided into two parties: the Shuchan, who adhere to the Indian method of computing the calendar; and the Kadiais, who follow the Persian system. The sacred books of their religion are known as the Avesta. Among their practices are: worship in fire temples; praying on the sea shore to the rising and setting sun; celebration of marriages in public assembly; exclusiveness as regards marriage; the rule of never smoking. According to the census of 1921 their total number is 111,778 and their largest communities are in Bombay Presidency, Central Provinces and Berar, Baroda State, Bombay States, and Hyderabad State, in India; Yezd, and twenty-four surrounding villages, in Persia.—C.E.

Parthia, mountainous region in w. Asia, s. of the Caspian Sea. It is of Median origin and was founded in part from the old Persian Empire. Parthians were present at Pentecost (Acts, 2, 9).

Pascal, Blaise (1623-62), scientist and religious philosopher, b. Clermont-Ferrand, France; d. Paris. When eighteen years of age he invented a calculating machine and before he was twenty-three conducted conclusive experiments on atmospheric pressure. He was then inclined toward Jansenism and for a while frequented the salons and associated with libertines. During the night of 23 November, 1654, he had a sort of ecstatic vision which completely changed the course of his life and he retired to Port-Royal where he became a staunch defender of the Jansenists. It was then that he published his famous "Provincial Letters," which are not only a defense of Jansenism but a severe indictment of the moral and political theories of the Jesuits. But his chief work was the composition of an apology for the Christian religion; it was begun in 1650, but never completed; the notes he left were published after his death under the title of "Pensées sur la Religion," and after the discovery of the original MSS. in 1843, new editions succeeded each other rapidly to the present day. Pascal's last years were passed in dreadful agony; he died in the Church. The "Provincial Letters" are now hailed as the first prose masterpiece of the French language and they contain many passages remarkable for their wit and eloquence, but for the most part they are biased, unjust, and devoid of any doctrinal value, except in the eyes of the Church's enemies. The "Pensées" have had, and still have, tremendous influence on French religious thought. Pascal was a poet who has spoken of God and Christ and of the greatness and littleness of man in unforgettable accents.—C.E.; Complete Edition of Pascal's works, by Brunschevig and Gaetker, 14 vols. Paris, 1904. Pascal, tr. Taylor, "Thoughts on Religion and Philosophy." Lond. 1894; Giraud, "Pascal, l'Homme, l'Éuvre, l'Influence," Paris, 1905. (F. P. D.)

Pascal Baylon (Pascal, Heb., Passover Lamb), Saint, Confessor (1540-92), b. Torre-Hermosa, Aragon; d. Villarreal. He spent his early years as a shepherd and even then showed the marked devotion to the Holy Eucharist which was a characteristic feature of his life; he became a Franciscan lay-brother of the Alcantarine reform. Canonized, 1690. Patron of Eucharistic associations and congresses. Relics in Franciscan church, Valencia. Feast, R. Cal., 17 May.—C.E.; Staniforth, The Saint of the Eucharist, Lond., 1916.

Pash or Passover. The Jewish Pash was celebrated annually at the command of God to commemorate the deliverance of the Jews from the bondage of Egypt—a deliverance granted on condition that the night before they were set free a lamb or kid without spot or blemish and the bones of which were preserved unbroken, be sacrificed and the blood sprinkled on the doorposts of every Hebrew house. In the mind of God, this deliverance of the Jewish people from the bondage of Egypt with the attendant details was a foreshadowing of the Christian Pasch or Passover, when through the sacrifice of the Immaculate Lamb of God and the subsequent application of the merits of His blood to our souls through the Sacraments, we were set free from the bondage of sin and Satan. So true is this, that in the early Church we find the term "pascha," applied equally to Good Friday and Easter Sunday. Good Friday was styled the "Pasch of the Crucifixion," and Easter Sunday, the "Pasch of the Resurrection."—C.E.

Pasch. = Pascha [Easter (Breviary)].

Paschal candle, a large candle, symbolic of the Risen Saviour, the Light of the World which is blessed at the service on Holy Saturday, is used that day in the blessing of the baptismal water, and is lighted on the Gospel side of the sanctuary during solemn services during the paschal season. In it are inserted five grains of incense incased in hard wax, symbolizing the five wounds of our Lord.—C.E. (w. v. s.)

Paschal Communion. See Easter Duty. Paschal I, Pope (817-824), b. Rome; d. there. He joined the Roman clergy, became superior of the monastery of St. Stephen, and took care of the pilgrims who came to Rome. As pope he received from Emperor Louis I a document confirming the rights and possessions of the Holy See; on Christmas, Lothair I emperor, 823; and supported missionary expeditions which went out from the Frankish Kingdom. In 814, when the Iconoclastic controversy broke out again in the Byzantine Empire, Paschal supported Theodore of Studium, champion of orthodoxy. He restored and beautified many churches and monasteries, and placed the relics of many Roman martyrs in the church of St. Praxedes, where he was buried; he is honored as a saint on 14 May. —C.E.; Mann.

Paschal II (RALNEKUS), Pope (1099-1118), b. Blera, Galeata, Italy; d. Rome. He was a Benedictine, card., priest, and a member of the papal court under Gregory VII and Urban II. As pope, his policy, which was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V. During his pontificate four antipopes found imperial favor, Guibert, Theodoric, Aleric, and Maguurt. In 1111, Henry V advanced on Rome and imprisoned Paschal, who was freed when he signed a concordat promising never to excommunicate Henry, and to crown him emperor. All Christendom rebelled against these terms and Paschal withdrew his promise, and excommunicated Henry, 1112. The latter now undertook to subsidize all expeditions against the pope, who died soon after. Paschal is renowned as a disciplinarian and an administrator who brought the papacy into conflict with all Transalpine communities. His policy was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V. During his pontificate four antipopes found imperial favor, Guibert, Theodoric, Aleric, and Maguurt. In 1111, Henry V advanced on Rome and imprisoned Paschal, who was freed when he signed a concordat promising never to excommunicate Henry, and to crown him emperor. All Christendom rebelled against these terms and Paschal withdrew his promise, and excommunicated Henry, 1112. The latter now undertook to subsidize all expeditions against the pope, who died soon after. Paschal is renowned as a disciplinarian and an administrator who brought the papacy into conflict with all Transalpine communities. His policy was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V. During his pontificate four antipopes found imperial favor, Guibert, Theodoric, Aleric, and Maguurt. In 1111, Henry V advanced on Rome and imprisoned Paschal, who was freed when he signed a concordat promising never to excommunicate Henry, and to crown him emperor. All Christendom rebelled against these terms and Paschal withdrew his promise, and excommunicated Henry, 1112. The latter now undertook to subsidize all expeditions against the pope, who died soon after. Paschal is renowned as a disciplinarian and an administrator who brought the papacy into conflict with all Transalpine communities. His policy was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V. During his pontificate four antipopes found imperial favor, Guibert, Theodoric, Aleric, and Maguurt. In 1111, Henry V advanced on Rome and imprisoned Paschal, who was freed when he signed a concordat promising never to excommunicate Henry, and to crown him emperor. All Christendom rebelled against these terms and Paschal withdrew his promise, and excommunicated Henry, 1112. The latter now undertook to subsidize all expeditions against the pope, who died soon after. Paschal is renowned as a disciplinarian and an administrator who brought the papacy into conflict with all Transalpine communities. His policy was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V. During his pontificate four antipopes found imperial favor, Guibert, Theodoric, Aleric, and Maguurt. In 1111, Henry V advanced on Rome and imprisoned Paschal, who was freed when he signed a concordat promising never to excommunicate Henry, and to crown him emperor. All Christendom rebelled against these terms and Paschal withdrew his promise, and excommunicated Henry, 1112. The latter now undertook to subsidize all expeditions against the pope, who died soon after. Paschal is renowned as a disciplinarian and an administrator who brought the papacy into conflict with all Transalpine communities. His policy was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V. During his pontificate four antipopes found imperial favor, Guibert, Theodoric, Aleric, and Maguurt. In 1111, Henry V advanced on Rome and imprisoned Paschal, who was freed when he signed a concordat promising never to excommunicate Henry, and to crown him emperor. All Christendom rebelled against these terms and Paschal withdrew his promise, and excommunicated Henry, 1112. The latter now undertook to subsidize all expeditions against the pope, who died soon after. Paschal is renowned as a disciplinarian and an administrator who brought the papacy into conflict with all Transalpine communities. His policy was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V. During his pontificate four antipopes found imperial favor, Guibert, Theodoric, Aleric, and Maguurt. In 1111, Henry V advanced on Rome and imprisoned Paschal, who was freed when he signed a concordat promising never to excommunicate Henry, and to crown him emperor. All Christendom rebelled against these terms and Paschal withdrew his promise, and excommunicated Henry, 1112. The latter now undertook to subsidize all expeditions against the pope, who died soon after. Paschal is renowned as a disciplinarian and an administrator who brought the papacy into conflict with all Transalpine communities. His policy was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V. During his pontificate four antipopes found imperial favor, Guibert, Theodoric, Aleric, and Maguurt. In 1111, Henry V advanced on Rome and imprisoned Paschal, who was freed when he signed a concordat promising never to excommunicate Henry, and to crown him emperor. All Christendom rebelled against these terms and Paschal withdrew his promise, and excommunicated Henry, 1112. The latter now undertook to subsidize all expeditions against the pope, who died soon after. Paschal is renowned as a disciplinarian and an administrator who brought the papacy into conflict with all Transalpine communities. His policy was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V. During his pontificate four antipopes found imperial favor, Guibert, Theodoric, Aleric, and Maguurt. In 1111, Henry V advanced on Rome and imprisoned Paschal, who was freed when he signed a concordat promising never to excommunicate Henry, and to crown him emperor. All Christendom rebelled against these terms and Paschal withdrew his promise, and excommunicated Henry, 1112. The latter now undertook to subsidize all expeditions against the pope, who died soon after. Paschal is renowned as a disciplinarian and an administrator who brought the papacy into conflict with all Transalpine communities. His policy was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V. During his pontificate four antipopes found imperial favor, Guibert, Theodoric, Aleric, and Maguurt. In 1111, Henry V advanced on Rome and imprisoned Paschal, who was freed when he signed a concordat promising never to excommunicate Henry, and to crown him emperor. All Christendom rebelled against these terms and Paschal withdrew his promise, and excommunicated Henry, 1112. The latter now undertook to subsidize all expeditions against the pope, who died soon after. Paschal is renowned as a disciplinarian and an administrator who brought the papacy into conflict with all Transalpine communities. His policy was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V. During his pontificate four antipopes found imperial favor, Guibert, Theodoric, Aleric, and Maguurt. In 1111, Henry V advanced on Rome and imprisoned Paschal, who was freed when he signed a concordat promising never to excommunicate Henry, and to crown him emperor. All Christendom rebelled against these terms and Paschal withdrew his promise, and excommunicated Henry, 1112. The latter now undertook to subsidize all expeditions against the pope, who died soon after. Paschal is renowned as a disciplinarian and an administrator who brought the papacy into conflict with all Transalpine communities. His policy was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V. During his pontificate four antipopes found imperial favor, Guibert, Theodoric, Aleric, and Maguurt. In 1111, Henry V advanced on Rome and imprisoned Paschal, who was freed when he signed a concordat promising never to excommunicate Henry, and to crown him emperor. All Christendom rebelled against these terms and Paschal withdrew his promise, and excommunicated Henry, 1112. The latter now undertook to subsidize all expeditions against the pope, who died soon after. Paschal is renowned as a disciplinarian and an administrator who brought the papacy into conflict with all Transalpine communities. His policy was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V. During his pontificate four antipopes found imperial favor, Guibert, Theodoric, Aleric, and Maguurt. In 1111, Henry V advanced on Rome and imprisoned Paschal, who was freed when he signed a concordat promising never to excommunicate Henry, and to crown him emperor. All Christendom rebelled against these terms and Paschal withdrew his promise, and excommunicated Henry, 1112. The latter now undertook to subsidize all expeditions against the pope, who died soon after. Paschal is renowned as a disciplinarian and an administrator who brought the papacy into conflict with all Transalpine communities. His policy was to secure the prerogative of investiture against the influence of the State, brought him in conflict with the emperors Henry IV and V.
Passing bell. In England when it was Catholic, and in other countries as well, there was a pious custom of ringing the church bell slowly when a death was imminent in the parish, that the faithful might be reminded to pray for the deceased. This was called the “passing bell.”

Passion (Lat., passio, a suffering, an affection), a desire or emotion in which excitement reaches an intense degree. The passions are movements or tendencies of the sensitive appetite toward a sense good or away from a sense evil. The sensitive appetite tends toward the good of the individual animal life or the life of the species. The passions therefore are of the sensitive or animal order and are found in the animal as well as in man. Emotions in man, such as surprise or laughter, that are not concerned with good or evil, are not passions. Again such tendencies in man as are not concerned with the good or evil of sense, but with intellectual or spiritual good or evil, e.g., desire of learning, love of virtue, are not in the strict sense of the word passions. The good and evil that are the objects of passion are the good and evil of sense, and commonly as presented by the imagination. This fact shows that the passions are fed by the imagination, and that the control of the passions must begin with its control. The passions in themselves are non-moral. Only in so far as they are subject to the will do they come under the moral law. When regulated by reason and subjected to right control of the will, the passions can be considered good and used in the practise and acquisition of virtue. Love and hatred as general tendencies toward good and evil are the generic passions. Under them come desire and aversion, joy and sadness, hope and despair, courage and fear, and anger.—C.E.; Maher, Psychology, N.Y., 1900.

Passion, Instruments of the, are sometimes grouped in one picture—the cross, nails, hammer, scourge, crown of thorns, and lance. (J. F. S.)

Passion, Relics of the, include the Veil of St. Veronica and the Holy Lance, preserved at St. Peter's; the Title of the True Cross, one of the Sacred Nails, and two of the Thorns, at Santa Croce; the Holy Pillar, at St. Prassede; and the Holy Stairs, near the Lateran. Besides these large relics of the Passion, the Basilica of Santa Croce has another collection containing two of the Sacred Thorns, the finger of St. Thomas which touched Our Lord's wounds, and a reliquary supposed to have belonged to St. Gregory the Great.

Passionists. See Congregation of Discalced Clerks of the Most Holy Cross and Passion of Our Lord Jesus Christ.

Passion Music originated in the declaration of the Passion of Our Lord in front of the altar by the deacon and later by different persons, as the words of Our Lord by the priest, of the Evangelist by the deacon, and of the crowd (turbæ) and others by the sub-deacon. The interrelation of the alternating voices, their relative pitch and manner of interpreting the part still exist today. Obrecht (1430-1506) made it the subject of an extended motet. The work of Victoria (1540-1613) formed for 500 years the repertory of the Sistine Chapel choir for Holy Week. The Reformers discarded the Latin text. Schütz introduced stringed instruments. The Passion music reached its highest development under Bach (1685-1750) and Joseph Haydn.—C.E.

Passion of Christ (In Arr). Among the many masters who have represented this subject are: Correggio, Domenichino, Dürer, El Greco, Mantegna, Memling, Holbein the Elder, Luini, Perugino, Titian and Veronese.

Passion offices, seven offices in honor of events and instruments of Christ's Passion, prescribed for Tuesdays after Septuagesima and Sexagesima, and for Fridays in Lent.—C.E.

Passion of Jesus Christ. (1) A devotion paid to Christ in memory of His Passion through pious exercises commemorating His sufferings, such as the Way of the Cross, in several Masses of the Passion, in countless prayers; also through art, pictures and statues depicting various phases of the Passion; and through a vast literature, mostly ascetical and devotional in nature. This devotion is of ancient origin, though it did not flourish in the early Church as it does today. The devotion as it exists today dates from the time of St. Bernard and St. Francis of Assisi. (2) A fest celebrated on the Tuesday after Sexagesima Sunday. Its object is to honor the sufferings Christ endured for the salvation of mankind. It originated in the 16th century, and was reintroduced by St. Paul of the Cross. There are also other feasts commemorating special mysteries of the Passion. (3) In the four Gospels, the Passion is so recorded that one account supplements the other. The Synoptic Gospels contain a brief narrative, in substance common to all. Matthew and Mark have additional passages in common. The further passages which are found separately in the three synoptists quite easily harmonize with the intention that particular narrator had in mind, and with the peculiarities elsewhere noted in the same narrator; this is likewise true of John's account of the Passion. Both by the omission of mysteries recorded by the Synoptists, and by the narration of others omitted by them, the fourth Gospel is true to its traditional character as being of later date.—C.E.; Gallwey, The Watches of the Sacred Passion, Lond., 1896.

Passion Plays originated in the ritual of the Church, appearing first in Latin, then in German; the contents were gradually adapted to popular ideas until in the 16th century the popular religious plays had developed. The Passion Plays of the 16th century with their peculiar blending of religious, artistic, and popular elements gave a true picture of German life of that time. In the 16th century, they began to lose their dignified character. With the appearance of the Jesuit drama in the 17th century, the Passion Plays were relegated to monasteries and out-of-the-way villages.
Towards the end of the 18th century, efforts were made in Catholic Germany to destroy even the remnants of the medieval plays. Public interest in the Passion Play awoke anew during the last decades of the 19th century, and since then Brixlegg and Vorderthierssee in the Tyrol, Höritz in southern Bohemia, and above all Oberammergau (q.v.), in Upper Bavaria, attract thousands to their plays.

Passion Sunday, the fifth in Lent and second before Easter, the beginning of Passiontide. Altar, crucifixes, statues, and pictures are draped in violet. It is a time for special reflection on the Passion and Death of Christ. It is also called Judica (Judge me) Sunday from the first word of the Introit.—C.E.

Passiontide, two weeks between Passion and Easter Sundays, especially consecrated to consideration of Christ's sufferings and death.—C.E.

Passion week, second week before Easter.

Passos, a Portuguese name locally used to designate certain pious exercises during Lent at Goa and other Catholic communities in India. They were introduced by Fr. Gaspar Barreto to keep up the effects of his missionary work in India, and included a procession of flagellants who on every Friday assembled to sing the Litanies and to scourge themselves in sight of the Cross. Without the scourging and other objectionable features they exist today as a regular custom during Lent. At the end of the weekly sermon a scene from the Passover is enacted, followed by a procession.—C.E.

Passover, See Pashah.

Pasteur, Louis (1822-95), chemist, called father of bacteriology, inventor of bio-therapeutics, b. Dole, France; d. near Sèvres. He was professor of chemistry at the Sorbonne and founder and director of the Pasteur Institute. His discoveries of germs and their action in disease caused him to invent vaccines; that for rabies was beneficial to man, and other Catholic communities in India. They included a procession of flagellants who on every Friday assembled to sing the Litanies and to scourge themselves in sight of the Cross. Without the scourging and other objectionable features they exist today as a regular custom during Lent. At the end of the weekly sermon a scene from the Passover is enacted, followed by a procession.—C.E.

Pastoral letters, ecclesiastical, episcopal documents written by the bishop either to all the members of his diocese or to the clergy only. The purpose is to maintain the proper discipline and administration in the diocese. Pastoral letters are classified accordingly as they are issued by the bishop or from a synod. To have legal force pastoral letters must be published according to the ordinary custom and manner. A collection of the "National Pastoralas of the American Hierarchy" was published by Rev. Peter Guilday, Washington, 1923.—C.E., IX, 204. (D. K.)

Pastoral Epistles (Lat., pastor, shepherd; Gr., epistole, letter), letters written by St. Paul to Timothy and Titus as bishops, and shepherds of the flock.

Pastoral Theology, a special branch of theological science which treats of the care of souls. It comprises those practical rules and applications based on the doctrine and experience of the Church which the priest, as shepherd of souls, should faithfully fulfill in the exercise of his sacred office. It presupposes a knowledge of dogmatic and moral theology, including canon law and other branches which enter into his ecclesiastical training. Pastoral theology has always been practised in the Church, but its consideration as a formal treatise is a matter of recent centuries. Jesus instructed His disciples in the exercise of their new ministry. St. Paul gave priestly direction to Timothy and Titus. The Fathers of the Church have left many writings on the care of souls. During the period prior to, and attendant on, the revolt of Luther, clerical discipline and practice were in a sorely neglected condition. One of the immediate ends of the Council of Trent was the reform of the clergy. From that time pastoral theology has developed as a separate science. The model for priestly practice is Christ, the Good Shepherd, Whose life portrayed the ideal teacher, priest, and ruler. The priest should strive to practice Christlike prudence and charity, mindful of the admonition of St. Paul that "the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." From Sacred Scripture and tradition which includes the official documents of popes, general councils, Roman congregations, decrees of provincial councils and diocesan synods, and episcopal letters, the priest will find pastoral direction. Official bulletins like the "Acta Apostolicae Sedis" and various periodicals like "The American Ecclesiastical Review" and "The Irish Ecclesiastical Review," will inform him of current legislation, authentic interpretations, and offer him approved advice. The threefold office of the priest affords an adequate division of pastoral theology. As teacher he must preach the word of God to his flock. He must provide for the catechetical instruction of children and the ignorant with special preparation for their Confession, Communion, and Confirmation. As minister of the sacraments, besides the requisite dogmatic and moral theology, he should possess other knowledge such as "pastoral medicine," which treats of the relations of bodily conditions to religion and morality. How to attend the sick and dying, the use of sacramentals, vespers, church music, processions, and relics are usually treated under sacramental discipline. As a ruler the priest has duties which concern the organization of the parish, the building and upkeep of the church, the establishment and management of parish schools, various spiritual societies, social work, missions, collections, and other. The grades of patience are: to bear difficulties and troubles without fretfulness or murmuring, to use hardships to make progress in virtue, to desire afflictions and to accept them with holy joy.
Pastoral Theology

Patience (Lat., patientia, endure), a form of the virtue of fortitude; a virtue enabling one to endure present evils without being unhappy by reason of the love of God. Patience is understood particularly as the bearing of evils inflicted by another. The grades of patience are: to bear difficulties and troubles without fretfulness or murmuring, to use hardships to make progress in virtue, to desire afflictions and to accept them with holy joy.

Patmos, pâ tô'mos, small volcanic island in the Aegean Sea off the coast of Asia Minor, s. of Samos and w. of Miletus, famous as the place of St. John's exile (Apoc., 1, 9), where it is generally believed he wrote the Apocalypse.

Patna, Diocece of, India; erected 1919 from the Prefecture Apostolic of Bettlah and Nepal; includes all of the former Prefecture of Nepal, and the eastern part of the Diocese of Allahabad. Also known as the Ganges, viz., all the districts of North and South Behar (except Purannah and the Santal Parganas), the whole of Nepal and a smaller strip about 80 sq. m., in the Darjeeling district; area, 120,000 sq. m.; suffragan of Calcutta; entrusted to the Jesuit Fathers, Missouri Province, Bishop Louis Van Hoek, S.J. (1921-28); administrator: Bernard Sullivan, S.J. (1928). Churches, 21; priests, secular, 7; priests, regular, 16; religious women, 55; high schools, 2; elementary schools, 22; pupils in elementary schools, 1,634; institutions, 9; Catholics, 6,901.

Patriarch (Gr., patriarch, father; arch, rule). (1) The head of a family, tribe, or race. It is used extensively in biblical history. (2) Ecclesiastically, by virtue of the name, a patriarch signifies a prince of fathers. This title is one of honor only. The patriarch has no special jurisdiction except in virtue of a particular law. He enjoys precedence over princes, metropolitans, and bishops. The Roman Pontiff, Innocent III, distinguished patriarchs, which follow in the order of dignity: Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem. Some of them are merely titular patriarchs at the present time. In the Orient there are patriarchs of different rites: e.g., Armenian, Chaldean, Melchite, and Maronite. There are minor patriarchs, e.g., of Venice, Lisbon, the West Indies, and the East Indies.—C.E.

Patriarchal cross, a cross with two cross-bars, forming a part of the heraldic arms of a patriarch and carried before him in processions. (J. F. S.)

Patriarchate, a patriarch's territory, see, or diocese over which he governs. The first three patriarchates in the Catholic Church to enjoy patriarchal rights were Rome, Alexandria, and Antioch. The pope is the patriarch over the Western lands where Latin was once the civilized, and is still the liturgical language, where the Roman Rite is now used almost exclusively and the Roman canon law obtains."—C.E.

Patriarchs, Scriptural, are in 1 Paralipemonon, 8, 28, called "Chief fathers and heads of their families who dwelt in Jerusalem." They are therefore founders and chief men of a clan. Thus of the Semites from Adam to Tharai inclusively, there were nineteen patriarchs. With Abraham there begins another list of patriarchs of the Abrahmites. First there are the three great patriarchs, to whom all render special praise: Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Our Lord gives these three special honor. Of Jacob sprang twelve sons, and twelve patriarchs, founders of the race of Israel. In Acts, 2, 29, David is called a patriarch, as a token of signal honor, and because he founded the Davidic dynasty of which is Christ. —C. E. Sigot.

Patrician Brothers (BROTHERS OF ST. PATRICK), religious order founded by Daniel Delaney, Bp. of Kildare, at Tullow, Ireland, in 1808, for the religious and literary education of youth and the instruction of the faithful in Christian piety. The founder chose seven catechetical instructors in the Sunday schools to form the nucleus of the new order, and the congregation was established as a diocesan institution. Filiations sprang up in other dioceses of Ireland, the Brothers were invited to India and Australia, and foundations were made at Sydney, and Madras. In 1888, the congregation was approved by Pope Leo XIII, as a result of which the Brothers have been enabled to perfect and extend their congregation in Ireland, and in open new colleges, schools, and orphanages in Australia and India. A scheme of technical and scientific study has been introduced into their schools, while by their orphanages and industrial schools, they aid thousands of youths to maintain responsible positions. The mother-house is situated at Tullow, Ireland. Statistics: 15 houses in Ireland, 4 in Australia, and 5 in India.—C.E.

Patricius Romanorum (Lat., noble of the Romans), title conferred on Pepin, King of the Franks, by Pope Stephen II, 754, and later assumed by the emperors of the Holy Roman Empire. It carried a special obligation to protect the temporal rights of the Holy See and was therefore merely a protectorship; it was not equivalent to immediate and sole sovereign authority at Rome.

Patrick, SAIN'T, confessor (387-493), Bp. of Armagh, apostle of Ireland, b. Kilpatrick, Scotland; d. Saul, Ireland. He belonged to a Celto-Roman family of high rank, and at the age of sixteen was captured by Irish marauders and sold into slavery in Dalriada. During his captivity he was converted, and acquired a knowledge of the Celtic tongue and race. After six years he escaped, returned to Britain, thence to Gaul, and studied at Tours, Lérins, and Auxerre. He put himself under the guidance of St. Germain at Auxerre and went as his mission companion to Britain, Pope St. Celestine I, at the recommendation of St. Germain, entrusted St. Patrick with the mission of converting the Irish race. Patrick received episcopal consecration in the city of Turin at the hands of St. Maximus and shortly afterwards set out for the Irish mission. He and his companions landed at Wicklow Head probably during the summer of 433, were attacked by the Druids, but proceeded to Dalriada, and erected a church at Sabhall in a barn given them by one of their first converts. On Easter Sunday, 433, Patrick pleaded for the faith before King Leguair, and converted his brother, Conall, and Dubhthach, the chief bard. It was on this occasion that St. Patrick is said to have plucked a shamrock from the sward, to explain by its triple leaf and single stem the doctrine of the Blessed Trinity. After this, permission was granted to Patrick to preach the faith throughout Erin. St. Patrick set out for Connaught, and on his way thither, smote the chief idol Crom-Cruach. He spent seven years visiting every district of Connaught, organizing parishes, forming dioceses, and instructing the chieftains and people. In 440, St. Patrick entered on the special work of the conversion of Ulster, and in 444, founded a church at Armagh. From Ulster he probably proceeded to Meath to consolidate the organization of the communities there, thence through Leinster and Gowran into Osorry, where he erected a church under the invocation of St. Martin, near the present city of Kilkenny. St. Patrick then went to Munster, where he baptized Aëgus, son of the King of Munster, and spent considerable time in the present County of Limerick. It is recorded that he consecrated no less than 350 bishops, and continued until his death to visit and watch over the churches he had founded in all the provinces of Ireland. When not engaged in the work of the sacred ministry, his whole time was spent in prayer and penitential austerities. During his apostolate in Ireland he was subjected to frequent trials by the Druids and other enemies of the Faith, and no less than twelve times he and his companions were taken prisoners and condemned to death. From all these trials he was liberated by Providence, and did not die until his triumph over paganism was complete. He was buried at the chieftain's Dun or Fort near Saul, where later was founded the cathedral of Down. Devotion to him is Patrimony of St. Peter properly designates the landed possessions and revenues from various sources belonging to the Holy See up to about the 8th century. Sometimes applied to the States of the Church (754-1870), here it is taken in the former sense. Before the law of Constantine, 321, empowering the Church to acquire property, the possessions of the Holy See could not have been very considerable. However, the first Christian emperor and the newly converted nobles, by their gifts, soon put the Church in possession of very large estates. These large donations stopped about the year 600, due to the impoverishment of the wealthier Christian families as brought on by the barbarian invasions. In the time of Gregory the Great (590-604) the pope might have been called the largest landed proprietor in the world. The patrimony then embraced large farms, pasture lands, forests, even whole villages and towns. With the estates (Lat., fundi) went the coloni or cultivators, who, though attached to the soil, were personally free. Many of these estates bore the names of their original owners, e.g., Fundus Corneli, Fundus Pompilianus. A number of these estates formed what was known as a massa. A certain number of massae formed a patrimony, which often, in Italy at least, equaled an ancient Roman province. The patrimonies were situated mostly in and around Italy, although there were some throughout the Orient, Dalmatia, Gaul, and Africa. The most valuable were those in Sicily, the most numerous those around Rome. Other patrimonies were situated near Naples, Gaeta, Tivoli, Ravenna, Genoa, etc. All together were called the Patrimony of St. Peter. The revenue was devoted to the building and maintenance of churches, monasteries, hospitals, etc., for purchasing the freedom of slaves, and for relieving the needs of the people of Italy and elsewhere. St. Gregory called the Patrimony of St. Peter the property of the poor.—C.E., XIV, 257.

Patrizi, Francis Xavier (1797-1881), Jesuit, exegete, b. Rome; d. there. Except for a period during the Revolution of 1848, he was professor of Sacred Scripture and Hebrew at the Roman College until 1870. His most important works are interpretations of the Scriptures and Gospel commentaries in Latin, intended to refute the rationalistic errors of that time.—C.E.

Patrology (Lat., pater, father; Gr., logos, science), study of the Fathers of the Church, treated under this title.—C.E.; Tixeront, Handbook of Patrology, St. L., 1920.

Patron, one who erects or maintains a benefice; if a church is necessary for a benefice, one who gives the land, builds the church and provides for its maintenance; or, one who does any of these three things. The right of patronage is the sum of rights and obligations of a person, the patron, in connection with the assignment or administration of a benefice. As this right is of a spiritual order, it is subject to ecclesiastical jurisdiction, though the property involved is a matter for the civil law and court. Patronage may be acquired by inheritance, presentation by the patron to another, by exchange, purchase, or prescription. The rights of patronage are: (1) of presentation, in case of vacancy of a benefice, of one suitable to receive it; (2) of honor, precedence in processions, a sitting in the church, burial with special distinction; (3) allowance of support from the revenues over and above the needs of the church, if the patron be in need through no fault of his own; (4) the right and duty of keeping in good order what constitutes the benefice.—C.E. (Ed.)

Patronage of Our Lady, Feast of the, 16 Nov., permitted by a decree of the Sacred Congregation of Rites, 1678, for all provinces of Spain, in memory of the victories obtained there over the infidels. Benedict XIII granted it to the Papal States and it may now be celebrated with due permission by churches throughout the world.—C.E.

Patronage of Saint Joseph, Feast of the, Third Wednesday after Easter, honoring Saint Joseph, proclaimed patron of the Universal Church by Pius IX, 1847.

Patron Saints, (1) saints who by designation of the sovereign pontiff or by popular tradition are venerated as favoring by their intercession certain interests, countries or localities, e.g., St. Joseph, Patron of the Universal Church, Francis Xavier, Catholic Missions, Canillus of Luxe, hospitals; (2) after whom churches, parishes, or other institutions are named; (3) after whom persons are named in Baptism or Confirmation.—C.E. (Ed.)

Paul (Lat., little), Saint, Apostle of the Gentiles (c. A.D. 2-66), b. Tarshis, Cilicia; d. Rome. A Jew of the tribe of Benjamin, he received the name Saul at the time of his circumcision, but being a Roman citizen, he also had the name Paul by which he was known when he began his apostolate among the Gentiles. When still quite young he was sent to Jerusalem to the school of Gamaliel (Acts, 22, 3); according to the rabbinical custom he learned a trade, choosing that of tentmaker. A Pharisee (Acts, 23, 6), he persecuted the Christians and took an Paul I, Saint, Pope (757-767), d. St. Paul's; outside-the-Walls, Rome. His election was opposed by the antipope Theophylact. As pope he is noted for the fact that he prevented disastrous events from happening rather than accomplished anything of moment. He remained friendly with Pepin; opposed Constantine V and Iconoclasm; and continued the papal supremacy over Rome and Central Italy. He was instrumental in preserving the extraordinary regard that the English held for the papacy during the 8th century and caused the bodies of the saints to be removed from the catacombs to various churches. Feast, R. Cal., 28 June.—C.E.; Mann.

Paul II (PIETRO BARBO), Pope (1447-71), b. Venice, Italy, 1417; d. Rome. He was bp. of Cervia, and of Vicenza, and cardinal. As pope he beautified Rome and revised its statutes, punished the Fratelli, prosecuted heretics in France and Germany, and lent financial assistance to Hungary. He incurred the displeasure of the historian, Platina, when he prosecuted the Inquisition for its pagan attitude. Renowned for his leniency and charity he repaired many Italian cities, protected Bolognese territory against floods, and forbade legates, governors and judges to receive gifts.—C.E.; Pastor.

Paul III (ALESSANDRO FARNESIO), Pope (1534-49), b. Rome, or Canino, Italy, 1468; d. Rome. A cardinal-deacon and member of a famous family, he was proficient in the learning of the Renaissance, the recipient of many benefices, and a diplomat. During his pontificate, which saw the complete restoration of Catholic faith and piety, he reformed the Apostolic Camera, the tribunal of the Rota, the Penitentiaria, and the Chancery; convened the Council of Trent, 1525, favored the newly-established orders of Capuchins, Barnabites, Theatines, Jesuits, Ursulines, etc., built the Pauline chapel, and sponsored Michelangelo's work in the Sistine chapel.—C.E.; Pastor.

Paul IV (GIOVANNI PIETRO CARAFFA), Pope (1555-59), b. near Benevento, Italy, 1476; d. Rome, Bp. of Chieti (Lat., Theate), whence he was sent to Rome, 62, for two years to carry on his extensive annals of the Philippine. He was a cardinal-deacon and member of a famous family, he was proficient in the learning of the Renaissance, the recipient of many benefices, and a diplomat. During his pontificate, which saw the complete restoration of Catholic faith and piety, he reformed the Apostolic Camera, the tribunal of the Rota, the Penitentiaria, and the Chancery; convened the Council of Trent, 1525, favored the newly-established orders of Capuchins, Barnabites, Theatines, Jesuits, Ursulines, etc., built the Pauline chapel, and sponsored Michelangelo's work in the Sistine chapel.—C.E.; Pastor.

Paul V (CAMILLO BORGHESE), Pope (1605-21), b. Rome; d. there. A canonist and disciplinarian, his firmness during his pontificate was probably due to his early training. He brought on a schism of a year's duration when he excommunicated the government of the Republic of Venice. A patron of art, he enriched the Vatican Library, finished St. Peter's, and encouraged Guido Reni.—C.E.

Paula, Saint, widow (347-404), b. Rome; d. Bethlehem. The chief source of her life is the correspondence of St. Jerome, who influenced her to follow the monastic life. After a pilgrimage to Egypt, she settled at Bethlehem with St. Jerome.
and her daughter, Eustochium, and founded two monasteries.
Represented prostrate before the grotto of Bethlehem, or kneeling before the holy crib with Sts. Jerome and Eustochium. Feast, 30 Sept.—C.E.; Butler.

Paulicians, Eastern heretics, derived from Manicheism, begun by Constantine Mananalis, c. 657 and existing till about the middle of the 11th century. During the Saracen attacks many of them formed a political party diurnal to the cause of the Roman Empire. Originally they held the following: the God of the material universe and the God of the spiritual world are distinct; all matter is evil; the O.T. is to be rejected; Christ was not incarnate but was an angel whose mother was the heavenly Jerusalem; Baptism and the Eucharist consist in hearing the Word of God; there are no other sacraments. They were also Iconoclasts. Their perversions were later embodied in the tenets of the Bogomili, the Cathari, the Albigenese, and exist even today in more or less modified forms amongst some Armenians—C.E.

Pauline Privilege. When a valid marriage has been contracted by two unbaptized persons, if one of them is afterwards baptized in the Catholic faith, and if the unbaptized party is unwilling to dwell peaceably with the Christian, the marriage can be entirely dissolved by this privilege, based on the teaching of St. Paul (1 Cor., 7, 12-15): "If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she consent to dwell with him, let him not put her away. And if any woman hath a husband that believeth not, let her not put away her husband. . . . But if the unbeliever depart, let him depart. For a brother or sister is not under servitude in such cases." The Congregation of the Holy Office, at Rome, has jurisdiction in deciding cases under this privilege.—Ayrinhac, Marriage Legislation in the New Code of Canon Law, N. Y., 1919. (J. F. S.)

Paulinus, Saint, confessor (d. 644), Abp. of York (625-33), d. Rochester, England. A Roman monk, he was sent by St. Gregory with St. Mellitus to assist St. Augustine in Britain, 601. He was consecrated bishop by St. Justus, and accompanied Ethelburga to the court of the pagan king Edwin, whom he converted. He established the See of York, and was made archbishop there. His relics were preserved in the church of St. Andrew. Feast, 10 Oct.—C.E.; Butler.

Paulinus, Saint, confessor (354-431), Bp. of Nola, b. Bordeaux, France; d. Nola, Italy. Educated under the poet Ausonius, he became governor of the Province of Campania; married a Spanish Christian lady named Thearina and was converted to Christianity. After the death of his only child he and his wife retired to Spain, 396, to embrace the religious life; ordained, 395; made Bp. of Nola, 409; his poems and letters are valuable contributions to the literature of his day. Buried at Nola. Feast, R. Cal., 22 June—C.E.; Butler.

Paulinus a S. Bartholomaeo (Philip Wesselin) (1748-1806), Carmelite missionary and Orientalist, b. Hoff, Lower Austria; d. Rome. In 1774 he went as missionary to India (Malabar), and was appointed vicar-general of his order and Apostolic visitor. He has contributed much to the study and knowledge of Indian life and literature by his history of the missions in India. Author of the first printed Sanskrit grammar.—C.E.

Paulists, See Missionary Society of St. Paul the Apostle.

Paul of Samosata, Bp. of Antioch and heretic, against whom probably three synods were held, 264-269, at Antioch. As he was the viceroy of Queen Zenobia, he was of considerable political importance and was notorious for his haughtiness, immoral life, and illicit acquisition of wealth. Considered a follower of Artemas, he held that the Word and the Holy Ghost were not Divine Persons, but simply Attributes of God, and denied the essential Divinity of Christ, claiming Him to be a mere man, born of a virgin, and inspired by God in an unusual manner. After several synods convened against him he bore no results, he was condemned as a heretic and finally deposed. His followers did not disappear at once, and traces of his doctrines are found in the Lucianist and Ariean systems.—C.E.

Paul of the Cross, Saint, confessor (1694-1775), founder of the Congregation of Discalced Clerks of the Most Holy Cross and Passion (Passionists), b. Piedmont, Italy; d. Rome. Ordained in 1727 by Pope Benedict XIII, having a singular devotion to the Passion of Our Lord, he established the Congregation of the Passion, and founded the first house at Mt. Argentaro, 1747. Canonized, 1867, Relics in SS. Giovanni e Paolo. Feast, R. Cal., 28 April.—C.E.

Paul the First Hermit, Saint, confessor (230-342), b. Thebes, Egypt. Escaping from the persecution of Decius, he took refuge in a mountain desert, where he lived in a cave for ninety years, in mortification and prayer; he was visited there by St. Anthony, Patron of weavers. Relics at Budapest. Feast, R. Cal. 15 Jan.—C.E.; Butler.

Pauperism (Lat., pauper, poor) frequently denotes an extreme degree of poverty among a large group of persons, or in its widest signification, it denotes the state of a person who is more or less habitually without the material means of living a normal human life, and, in consequence, is dependent over any considerable period for his sustenance, either in whole or in part, upon someone other than his natural supporter. In a legal and technical sense it signifies the condition of a destitute person who receives, or at least is entitled to receive, charitable aid or support from public sources, be it within or outside of almshouses. With a growing number of sociologists the word has come to mean a degraded state of voluntary dependency and social parasitism. Like poverty, pauperism implies a more or less prolonged condition. Unlike poverty, it connotes, as a rule, the receipt of charitable assistance. Paupers are, generally speaking, poor people who have so utterly failed in their struggle to support themselves that they are compelled to rely upon the bounty of others. Poverty is much more extensive in meaning than is pauperism. While a pauper may be spoken of as living in poverty, there are large numbers living in poverty who are not paupers.—C.E., XII, 327.

Pavia, University of, established as a studium generale by Galeazzo II Visconti, ruler of Pavia,
...
Give not that which is holy to the dogs,
Neither cast your pearls before swine;
Lest perhaps they trample them under their feet,
And turning upon you they tear you.

Following the "law of fraternal correction" it seems to limit this where no hope of success or even danger from it might accrue. Literally the "holy" is sacrificial meat, and pearls resemble acorns, the food of swine. Spiritually dogs and swine are obstinate sinners. (Mald.; Lap.) The disappointed swine might turn in rage upon the apparent deceiver. Imprudent correction not only misses its end but is dangerous. Others see in the parable an admonition to the Apostles to withhold the sacred truths from the unworthy, who would likely mock and ridicule the sacred mysteries. If the narrower sense be admitted as literal, the wider may be used as applied. The Early Church leaned on this parable in her "discipline of secrecy." And the denial of the sacraments to obstinate sinners is justified by this parable.—Fonck, tr. Leahy, Parables of the Gospel, N. Y., 1915. (U. F. M.)

Peasants, War of the, a popular uprising which started among the peasant classes of Germany in 1524, due to causes both economic and religious. As far back as 1502 and 1514, there had been local revolts prompted by the increasing excesses of the peasants the withdrawal of others. When he saw the excesses of the peasants (more than a thousand insurrections, "like so many mad dogs." He was obeyed to the letter and in the battle of Frankenhausen alone, 5000 were butch­ered. The revolt was virtually ended in 1525.—C.E.; Janssen, History of the German people, St. L. (F. P. D.)

Pectoral cross, a cross worn over the breast, hence its name. Of a precious metal, usually gold, it is ornamented with precious stones, and contains a reliquary in which are enclosed relics of the holy martyrs, or a relic of the True Cross. It is worn suspended from the neck by a chain either of silken cord or gold. It is used by the Pope, bishops, abbots nullius, vicars, prefects, and administrators apostolic, who if not bishops enjoy the privilege of wearing it when pontificate.—C.E.; Martiniucci, Manual of Ceremonies. (R. B. M.)

Pediment, in classical architecture, a low, triangular gable, framed by cornice, which follows slopes or roof. In neo-classic styles a more elaborate form was displayed.

Péguy, Charles (1873-1914), essayist and poet, b. Orléans, France; killed at the first battle of the Marne. A pupil of the Collège Ste. Barbe and of the Ecole Normale Supérieure, and an ardent adherent of Renan and Taine, he lost his faith and became a decided atheist and Socialist. His devotion to Joan of Arc brought him back to Catholicism, but family difficulties prevented him from practising his faith, although it is impossible to doubt the sincerity of his conversion, for he fought relentlessly against French official atheism and its representatives at the Sorbonne. Principal works: "Notre Jeunesse," "Notre Patrie," "Le Mystère de la Charité de Jeanne d'Arc." He belongs to the mystico-realistic School, but his style, like Claudel's, is often obscure and bizarre.—C.E. Suppl. (F. P. D.)

Péna Forte et Dure, pénit fort et dgr (O.F., strong and hard punishment), a punishment inflicted upon prisoners in England for refusal to plead "guilty" or "not guilty" of felony. According to English law such a refusal was considered supreme contempt of court. About 1400 the punishment was long imprisonment and scant diet. Gradually it became harsher, and during the reign of Henry IV, the prisoner was placed on his back on the floor of his cell, fed only on stale bread and stagnant water, and a weight placed on his chest, often heavier than he could bear. An English martyr, Ven. Margaret Clitherow, suffered this punishment at York, 1568. One case is reported in the last year of the reign of George I, and at least one during the reign of George II. This practise was discontinued during the reign of George III, when silence at a trial according to English law was equivalent to pleading "guilty." The only record of Péna forte et dure in America was in 1692 when Giles Cory of Salem was tortured for practising witchcraft.

Pelagius I, Pope (556-561), b. Rome; d. there. A deacon, he was dispatched as nuncio to Constantinople, 556, where he procured the condemnation of Origen, 543. In the Three Chapters controversy by supporting the Emperor Justinian and the Fifth General Council, he was unable to avert the schism which broke out in Northern Italy. He did, however, avert the schism in Gaul. He organized ecclesiastical tribunals, suppressed abuses among the clergy, and reorganized the patrimony of St. Peter.
PELAGIUS I  740  PENAL LAWS

—C.E.

Pelagius II, Pope (579-590), b. Rome; d. there. He persuaded the Lombards to withdraw from the vicinity of Rome; labored to extinguish the schism that arose from the Three Chapters controversy; and protested against the assumption of the title "ecumenical" by the Patriarch of Constantinople.—C.E.

Pelagius and Pelagianism, a heretic and his teachings. Pelagius, of whom little is known, began the spread of his false doctrines at Rome, c. A.D. 405. His teachings might be summarized as follows: God did not give Adam immortality, nor did Adam need grace to avoid sin. His sin was personal, and therefore was not transmitted to posterity. Hence, no original sin. As to grace, man does not need this gift, because the will of itself can avoid sin and merit heaven. "Grace" is God's gift of a free will. Pelagius later admitted the existence of a grace independent of the will, but its function was not to begin but only to perfect good works. This grace is merited by man. It is not a gift. Nor is it necessary for salvation but makes the attainment of heaven possible. Pelagius was condemned by theCouncils of Carthage and Orange, A.D. 418 and 529.—C.E. (T. H. M.)

Pelican, a sea-bird, symbolical of Our Redeemer and particularly of the Holy Eucharist. In this sense it is invoked in the sixth stanza of the hymn "Adoro te." According to legend, it feeds its young with its own blood, and hence is an emblem of Him Who shed His Blood for us, and Who nourishes our souls with His Body and Blood.

(J. F. S.)

Pelouze, Théophile Jules (1807-67), chemist, b. Valognes, France; d. Paris. He was professor in the University of Lille and the Collège de France; president of the Mint Commission and president of the French Academy of Sciences, associated with Liebig, Frémy, Caibours, and Géris, he was the first to synthesize a fatty substance from cotton in France. Discovering the nitro-sulphates, he introduced a new analytical method for the determination of copper and suggested sodium sulphate for glassmaking.—C.E. (F. P. B.)

Peltrie, Madeleine de la (1603-17), a noblewoman noted for her charity, b. Caen, France; d. Quebec, Canada. She sailed to Quebec in 1639 and devoted herself and her fortune to the work of Marie de l'Incarnation at Quebec, though she never became a nun.—C.E.

Pembroke, Diocese of, Canada, comprises Renfrew County, the northern townships of Frontenac and Addington, a large part of Hastings, Haliburton and Nipissing, and a small part of eastern Parry Sound County in the Province of Ontario; also Pontiac County from the Ottawa River to the 47th parallel of latitude in Quebec; vicariate Apostolic, 1882; diocese, 1898; suffragan of Ottawa. Bps.: Narcisse Zéphirin Lorrain (1882-1915), Patrick Thomas Ryan (1916). Churches, 69; priests, secular, 76; religious women, 230; academies, 7; parochial schools, 81; institutions, 2; Catholics, 42,025.

Pen, emblem in art associated with St. Thomas Aquinas, St. Augustine, and St. John Chrysostom. With St. Augustine, it is as a doctor of the Church; in the case of St. John Chrysostom it is associated with a very ancient legend or as doctor; with St. Thomas it indicates doctor, or the Angelic Doctor.

Penal Law, a law imposed not with a view of binding it on conscience, but of exacting a penalty for its non-observance. When the law and the penalty are reasonable one who breaks the law is bound in conscience to pay the penalty. When the law is unreasonable, as are all laws of persecution for religion, for instance, and laws forced through legislatures by political maladroitness, there is no obligation either to observe it or pay the penalty but, on the contrary, a duty on the part of every good citizen to resist and bring about its repeal or modification.—P. C. Augustine.

Penal Laws. Penal legislation was enacted against Catholics in England, Ireland, Scotland, and the American colonies from 1559 to 1755.

England. By a series of statutes successive sovereigns and Parliaments from Elizabeth (1559) to George I (1722) sought to prevent the practise of the Catholic faith in England. Under Elizabeth the Acts of Supremacy and Uniformity (1559) were both, in effect, penal statutes, for they punished Catholics who refused to take the Oath of Supremacy or to attend the services of the Established Church. More severe measures were not enacted until after the Bull of Excommunication (1570). From 1571 till 1603 acts were passed which made it high treason: (1) to bring in papal Bulls (1571); (2) to declare the queen to be a heretic and schismatic; (3) to reconcile anyone or to be reconciled to the "Romish religion" (1581); (4) for any priest to be in England after 1585; (5) for any priest to refuse the Oath of Supremacy a second time (1585); besides these the following were punishable by fine, imprisonment, forfeiture of property: (1) to bring in articles blessed by the pope; (2) to take refuge abroad; (3) to say or hear Mass; (4) to be absent from Anglican services; (5) to harbor or relieve priests; (6) to send children abroad to schools or seminaries. Under these laws 159 persons died on the scaffold. During the reign of James I (1603-25) all Elizabeth's measures were confirmed with additional aggravations, and after the discovery of the Gunpowder Plot in 1605, new statutes prescribed a new Oath of Allegiance to be given to all persons over 18, and prohibited recusants (those who refused to attend the new services) from civil and military employment.

After the Restoration in 1660, under Charles II the following measures were added: (1) Test Act (1673), by which all officers were required to declare against Transubstantiation; (2) in 1678 (a) Catholic orders were excluded from Parliament; (b) members were obliged to declare against popery; (c) married women were obliged to receive the Sacrament in the Established Church before their husband's death. In 1679, twenty-two persons suffered death after the Titus Oates Plot. A new era of persecution began with the Revolution of 1688. The “Act for further preventing the growth of Popery,” passed in 1699, decreed: (1) a reward of 100 pounds for the apprehension of any priest; (2) life imprisonment for clergy exercising priestly duties; (3) life imprisonment for keeping Catholic schools; (4) that recusants were prohibited from inheriting, purchasing, or devising property. The last penal laws were those of George I, which ordered confiscation of the estates of popish recusants and a tax to be levied upon Papists (1722). The task of repeal was slow and long, the chief measures being three, in 1778, 1791, and the Catholic Emancipation Act of 1829. The only disqualifications now in force against Catholics are those prohibiting the sovereign from being or marrying a Catholic, or any Catholic from holding the office of lord chancellor.

Scotland. Penal laws were passed against Catholics by the Scottish Parliament from 1560 to 1707, the most important being the following: (1) for hearing or saying Mass, confiscation of goods, banishment or death (1560); (2) apprehension of persons possessing papal Bulls, etc. (1571); (3) forbidding the harboring of Catholic priests; (4) parents required to withdraw children from Catholic schools; (5) persecuted Catholics should be pursued (1629); (6) reward for conviction of any priest or Jesuit (1700); (7) Catholics prohibited from inheriting property or educating children. After the Act of Union (1707) these laws were still enforced, besides many other restrictions prohibiting the spread of Catholic books, preventing Catholics from becoming school-masters or guardians, etc.

Ireland. The Irish Parliament passed the Acts of Supremacy and Uniformity in 1559, the former prescribing the Oath of Supremacy for all officers under penalty of dismissal, and the latter prohibiting the Mass and imposing fines for non-attendance at Protestant services. After the Rebellion of 1641, Cromwell abolished the Irish Parliament and governed by proclamation, and the acts of Elizabeth, by which it was high treason for any priest to remain in the country and by which property was forfeited for refusal to take an oath denying Catholic doctrine, were put into execution. In 1665 came the Act of Explanation which left only one-third of the land to Catholics, the rest being given to Protestants who had helped to quell the rebellion. The reign of Charles II also saw the following proceedings carried out: (1) all regular priests ordered to leave the country (1673-74-78); (2) churches and convents closed, and Catholic public services banned (1679). Under William of Orange, the English Parliament, legislating for Ireland, enacted that no one should sit in the Irish Parliament without taking the Oath of Supremacy and declaring against Catholic doctrines, especially Transubstantiation. Catholics being thus excluded, the Irish body not only refused to relax the penal laws, as King William wished, but embarked on fresh legislation until the Penal Code was complete. From 1691 to 1749, the following enactments were passed and enforced: (1) Catholics were forbidden to have schools at home or to attend Catholic schools abroad; (2) excluded from civil and military employment and from professions; (3) forbidden to keep a horse worth above five pounds; (4) a Catholic landlord had to leave his estate to his children in equal shares; (5) if the wife or oldest son became Protestant, she at once obtained separate maintenance and he received the whole estate; (6) a Protestant’s estate was given to the nearest Protestant heir; (7) a child becoming Protestant was maintained by Chancery; (8) Catholics were forbidden to intermarry with Protestants (1689); (9) no Papist could act as guardian (1689); (10) secular priests must be registered (1703); (11) no priests were admitted from abroad; (12) priests must take an oath of abjuration (1709); (13) it was high treason for a priest to perform a mixed marriage, which was declared null and void (1725); (14) Catholics were forbidden to vote for Parliament (1727). There was a slight relaxation of these measures in 1771, a date which marks the beginning of relief for Catholics. An unobjectionable Oath of Allegiance was substituted for the Oath of Supremacy, 1774. In 1728 an act was passed enabling Catholics to hold all lands under lease and repeal of inheritance laws; and in 1782, an act allowing Catholics to erect schools with permission of the Protestant bishop of the place, and permitting bishops and priests to reside in Ireland. In 1792 Catholics were admitted to the Bar, and were permitted to erect schools without permission; inter-marriage between Catholics and Protestants was legalized. A Relief Bill (1793) removed all restrictions regarding tenure of land, gave Catholics Parliamentary and municipal franchise, and admitted them to civil and military office.

English Colonies in America. In Virginia the charter of 1606 established the Anglican Church, and penal legislation was directed against all dissenters. In 1628 an act imposed fines on absentees from service; in 1642 a law disenfranchised Catholics and enforced the expulsion, within five days, of a priest coming into the colony; and even in 1755 a curious act “for disarming Papists” gave evidence of the prejudice against Catholics. In Massachusetts, where Congregationalism was established, only Church members were admitted to civic freedom, heresy was punished by banishment (1631), Catholics were not allowed to live in the colony, death was the punishment for the return of a banished Jesuit, and although in 1691 liberty of conscience was declared, the clause “except Papists” was inserted. Religious freedom for all, which had been the law from the foundation of Catholic Maryland, was abolished in 1692, when the Episcopal Establishment began a persecution of Catholics. They were deprived of civil and religious rights, a law laid a tax of 20 shillings on every Irish servant imported (1704), and Catholics did not receive the franchise until the American Revolution put an end to all penal enactments. The legislation of all the other colonies, with the exception of Connecticut and Rhode Island, contained restrictions against Catholics, the franchise being generally limited to Protestants. Even in Pennsylvania (1705), despite the protest of Penn, Catholics were excluded from civil rights.—C.E.
Penalties (Lat., peusa, punishment). An ecclesiastical penalty is the deprivation of some good, spiritual, or temporal, inflicted by lawful authority for the correction of the delinquent and the punishment of his crime. Canon law vindicates the right of the Church, divinely founded, to punish delinquent subjects by penalties both spiritual and temporal; though superiors are admonished to use penal measures only when necessary, and always in moderation. There are three classes of penalties: (a) medicinal or censure (See Censures); (b) vindictive or punitive, directly intended to chastise the guilty and repair social order, e.g., degradation (See Degradation); (c) penal remedies and penances, preventive half-measures, substituted for graver punishments, such as canonical, etc. Another division indicates the manner in which penalties are incurred: (a) later, ferendae sententiae (See Sentence, later, ferendae); (b) a jure (by law) ab homine (by man) (See Censures); (c) fixed or determined, that is, clearly stated in the law, not left to the prudence of a judge or superior. All persons, lay or clerical, subject to the Church's laws and precepts, may be subject to its penalties. Those who possess law-making power can impose penalties as sanctions to law or precept. Penalties are removed either by absolution (for censures) or by dispensation (for the other species), provided the delinquent fulfills the necessary conditions of amendment or reparation, as the case may be. Anyone who can exempt from a law or precept can exempt from the penalty attached to its violation. Speaking in general, no special form of absolution or dispensation is prescribed.—C.E., III, 527; P. C. Augustine. (F. T. B.)

Penance (probably Lat., penitus, within). (1) Detestation of one's own past sins, with the determination to avoid sin in future. In a general sense, any virtue, when it begets such aversion of the will from sin, can be called penance. Moreover, the majority of theologians hold that there is also a special virtue of penance. This is a species of the cardinal virtue of justice, and induces hatred for sin as a violation of God's right to the homage of His creature. The principal act of being tried (whether in the general or in the special sense) is contrition (q.v.), which is the destestation of itself; a secondary act is satisfaction which is self-inflicted punishment in atonement for the temporal punishment remaining after sin has been remitted. (2) An act of self-denial, either internal or external, performed in atonement for the temporal punishment due to sins already forgiven; especially the sacramental satisfaction, imposed by the priest and accepted by the penitent in the administration of the sacrament of Penance. (3) A sacrament of the New Law. See Penance, Sacrament of.—C.E. (F. J. C.)

Penance, Order of. See Third Orders.

Penance, Sacrament of. A sacrament of the New Law, instituted by Christ, for the remission of sins committed after Baptism. Implied in the right of "binding and loosing" promised by Christ to the rulers of His Church (Matt., 16: 18), the power to forgive sins was unequivocally granted to the Apostles, and consequently to their successors, since the Church is permanent and unchangeable; it was thus granted by the words of Christ to the Apostolic college on the day of His Resurrection: "Whose sins you shall forgive, they are forgiven them; and whose sins you shall retain, they are retained." (John, 20). The fact that Our Lord empowered His earthly representatives with authority not only to forgive but also to retain sins proves, in the first place, that He willed the exercise of this power to be a judicial process, in which the minister is to judge who are worthy, and who are unworthy, of forgiveness. Secondly, it shows that the forgiveness of sins by the use of this power is effected through an external rite or sacrament, since it is only by external communication between judge and culprit that a judicial process can be conducted among human beings. Thirdly, it demonstrates that this sacrament is necessary for the remission of those sins that come under its province; for the power to retain would be useless if the sinner could obtain the full pardon of his transgressions independently of this sacrament. However, from other sources we know that the strict necessity of this sacrament he has been called for many centuries, applies to mortal sins only, and venial sins can be forgiven without recourse to the sacramental tribunal. Moreover, Catholic doctrine teaches that the actual reception of Penance is strictly necessary for judicial forgiveness, and although mortal sins can be taken from the soul by an act of perfect contrition this contrition must imply the intention of submitting them to the sacramental tribunal at the nearest opportunity.

From the notion of Penance proposed in Sacred Scripture and interpreted by tradition and by the practise of the Church, theologians deduce the constitutive elements of this sacrament. The remote matter is sins committed after Baptism, for the judicial character of Penance limits Its scope to transgressions committed by those who are subject to the jurisdiction of the Church. The proximate matter is commonly held to be—the three acts of the penitent, confession, contrition, and satisfaction. Confession and contrition are essential; the former, because the judicial nature of this sacrament requires that the case be brought before a judge, and the latter because no sin is forgiven by God unless the sinner be repentant. However, for a worthy reception of Penance, attrition (imperfect contrition) is sufficient. Contrition, of course, implies the purpose of avoiding sin and amendment of one's evil ways. Satisfaction, or the sacramental penance, since it is directed to the remission, not of sin, but of the temporal punishment remaining after the forgiveness of sin, is only an integral part, i.e., it is required for the perfection, but not for the essential constitution of the sacrament. Hence, the penance may be performed after the sacrament has been conferred, as is the custom nowadays. For the same reason, in certain circumstances, e.g., when the penitent is dying, the priest may refrain from imposing any penance. Finally, the form of Penance is the priest's absolution. Besides the power of the priesthood, the minister of Penance must possess sacramental jurisdiction over the penitent, for in every judicial process the judge must be invested with authority over the Penance. Jurisdiction is ordinary if it is annexed by law to the minister's office, delegated if it is deputed to his person by a superior. Penance can be received by any person who has committed sin, whether mortal or venial, after Baptism. Sins forgiven in a previous confession may be made again the matter of absolution, since the soul can always receive the grace which would remit such sins if they were still present. The principal effect of a worthy reception of Penance is the forgiveness of sin by the infusion of sanctifying grace. Being primarily ordained to take away mortal sin and to restore the life of grace to those who are spiritually dead, Penance is a sacrament of the dead. Those who are in the state of grace when they approach the sacred tribunal receive therefrom an increase of sanctifying grace. Penance also confers a claim to actual graces necessary to retain God's friendship; frequently, too, it gives peace of conscience and joy of spirit. The faithful, if they are conscious of any mortal sin not yet properly confessed and forgiven, are obliged to receive the sacrament of Penance at least once a year; also, when in danger of death, and when they wish to receive Holy Communion.—C.E.; Polle-Preuss, The Sacrament, III, St. L., 1924. (F. J. C.)

Penelakut Indians, a small tribe of Salishan stock of British Columbia now on the reservation included in the Cowichan Agency. Formerly they depended on the sea for subsistence, now they live by farming, hunting and fishing. They are Catholics and industrious and moral. Regular mission work was begun by Fr. Bolduc in 1843. Their number has been greatly reduced.—C.E.

Penitentes, Los Hermanos (The Penitent Brothers), an association of flagellants organized among the Spanish peoples of New Mexico and Colorado, dating from the early 19th century, and probably an outgrowth of the Third Order of St. Francis. Their barbaric penitential practises, which they carried on in public, caused the Abp. of Santa Fé to order them to disband, 1889. Though greatly weakened, the society continued its practises in secret.—C.E.

Penitential Psalms, those which are most expressive of sorrow, repentance, and amendment, viz., 6, 31; 37, 50, 101, 129, 142.—Kenrick, The Psalms, Balt.; Bird, A Commentary on the Psalms, Lond., 1927.

Penitentiaria, Sacred, one of the three tribunals of the Roman Curia, is of very ancient but uncertain origin. The Cardinal Chief Penitentiary (penitentiarius maior) generally exercises the complete jurisdiction of the tribunal. The other officials are the regent, who attends to minor business, the theologian (a Jesuit), the datary, the corrector, the sealer, the canonist, some copyists, a secretary, and an archivist. The jurisdiction of the Penitentiaria is restricted to the internal forum, but is most ample, and for both the Latin and the Oriental Churches. It is empowered to grant favors of all kinds for the internal forum: absolvements, dispensations, commutations, ratifications in the matter of impediments, and condonations. It also deals with questions of conscience submitted to the judgment of the Holy See. A special section of this tribunal treats matters regarding the use and granting of indulgences, saving the right of the Holy Office over doctrinal questions relating to indulgences, new prayers, and devotions.—C.E., XIII, 147.

Penitent Thief. See Good Thief.
Penitents, Confraternities of, congregations, with statutes prescribing deeds of penance and mercy, fasting, wearing rough garments, visiting the sick, burying the dead, dowering young girls, assisting prisoners, especially when condemned to death. They are classified by the order of the church, and under their patron they exchange garments worn for processions and devotional exercises, as White, Grey, Blue, Black, Red, Violet, Green. They flourished chiefly in Italy, France, and Spain between the 13th and 16th centuries.—C.E.

Pennsylvania, the 32nd state of the United States in size, the 2nd in population, and the 2nd state to be admitted to the Union (12 Dec., 1787); area, 45,126 sq. m.; pop. (1920), 8,729,017; Catholics (1929), 1,908,301. Pennsylvania has reason to be proud of its record for religious liberty, established by William Penn, and marred only by some attempts at discrimination against Catholics in the reign of William III and during the French and Indian War. Fr. Jean Pierreon, S.J., is thought to have ministered to the few Catholics in Pennsylvania during a journey to the Maryland mission in 1673-74, and there is evidence of a chapel existing in Philadelphia on Walnut Street in 1686. The certain beginnings of Catholicity date from the coming of Fr. Joseph Greaton, S.J., as a resident missionary, about 1730. Three years later St. Joseph's Church was built on Fourth Street, for a congregation of fewer than 50, their numbers increasing rapidly however through Irish and German immigration. A colony of Germans at Goshenhoppen (now Bally), about 45 m. from Philadelphia, was served in 1741 by a German Jesuit, Fr. Theodore Schneider, who combined the profession of medicine with his apostolate and was instrumental in his ministry to German Catholics within a radius that also included New Jersey. His little chapel of St. Paul's, of which a wall is still incorporated in the later church of the Blessed Sacrament, was built in 1745, with the assistance of Mennonite and Moravian neighbors. In 1742 a log chapel of the Sacred Heart was built at Conewago by Fr. William Wappeler, S.J., and a little later the church of St. John Nepomucene at Lancaster, with Fr. Ferdinand Farmer (Steinmeyer), a future trustee of the University of Pennsylvania, as its first pastor, in 1751. In 1749 Fr. Greaton, who had been assisted at St. Joseph's by Fr. Henry Neale, was succeeded in 1758 by Fr. Robert Harding, and in 1758 Fr. Farmer joined him from Lancaster. The two priests traveled widely, baptizing and offering Mass in private homes. In the city the growing numbers of Catholics made necessary the building of St. Mary's Church in 1763, St. Joseph's being retained as an...
PENNNSYLVANIA

auxiliary chapel. Five years later the Germans of Philadelphia began the erection of their church of the Holy Trinity on Sixth Street. Included in the state are the Archdiocese of Philadelphia, and the Dioceses of Altoona, Erie, Harrisburg, Pittsburgh, and Scranton (qq.v.). Philadelphia and Pittsburgh are respectively the episcopal seats of the Ukrainian Greek Catholic Diocese, and the Diocese of Pittsburgh, Greek Rite (qq.v.), both nation-wide.

Pentateuch, pent'á-tûk (Gr., pente, five; teuchos, book), the first five Books of the Bible taken collectively, viz.: Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, and Deuteronomy, written c. 1400 B.C. The name may be traced back to Origen (254); the Jews designated the Books by their opening words. A constant tradition, both Jewish and Christian, has always asserted the Mosaic authorship of these five Books, and the Biblical Commission has reasserted it (June 27, 1906) in the sense that Moses is their principal and inspired author and that they were finally published under his name. But it is perfectly lawful to admit that Moses made use of previously existing documents which he inserted in his work.—C.E.; Pope; Gigot. (V. P. P.)

Pentecost (Gr., pentecontes, fiftieth), feast which commemorates the descent of the Holy Ghost upon the Apostles, and takes its name from the fact that it comes nearly fifty days after Easter. It was a Jewish festival, and has been observed in the Christian Church since the days of the Apostles. It is often called Whitsunday (White Sunday) from the practise of giving solemn Baptism on that day in early centuries, the candidates being attired in white baptismal robes.—C.E., XV, 614. (J. F. S.)

Pentecostal Churches. A group of three Protestant churches. According to the last census there were in the United States 1321 ministers, 592 churches, and 18,641 communicants.

Pilgrim Holiness Church, formerly International Holiness Church, organized at Cincinnati, Ohio, by the Rev. Martin W. Knapp, 1897. Knapp withdrew from the Methodist Episcopal Church because he believed this body "was no longer completely Wesleyan in teaching or practise." They emphasize "belief in the Trinity and faith in the Holy Scriptures as divinely and supernaturally inspired, infallibly true as originally given, and as the only divinely authorized rule of faith and practise." As often as it is thought proper the Lord's Supper is observed. Individual opinion governs the mode of baptism. In government they correspond closely to the Methodist Episcopal Church. One periodical is published by them. Foreign missionary work is carried on in Africa, British West Indies, South America, and Korea. In 1916 there were 40 stations; 35 missionaries, with 31 native helpers; 35 organized churches, with 780 members; and 5 schools with 300 pupils. According to the last census there were in the United States 826 ministers, 367 churches, and 12,362 communicants.

The Holiness Church, organized in California in 1896 under the leadership of Rev. Hardin Wallace, a minister of the Free Methodist Church. In 1916 in the United States there were 28 ministers, 33 churches, and 926 communicants.

Pentecostal Holiness Church, organized in August, 1898, at Anderson, South Carolina. Their doctrine is almost the same as that of the Methodists. They recognize baptism, and the Lord's Supper. They are in general accord with the Methodists. Foreign missionary work is carried on in South Africa, South China, and Guatemala, Central America. In the United States in 1916 there were 292 ministers, 192 churches, and 5353 communicants.
Perpendicular Style is regarded as a ramification of the Gothic, manifesting itself in the late 14th century in reaction to the elaboration of flowery tracery. When the crowned man asked Our Lord what he should do to be saved, the answer was explicit: "Keep the commandments... if thou wilt be perfect, go sell what thou hast and give to the poor... and come follow me" (Matt., 19). Hence there are two ways of life: that of the commandments, obligatory; that of the counsels, of choice. This doctrine, taught universally until the Protestant Reformation, supposes as its foundation the equally universal doctrine of baptismal regeneration. One born in sin must be sanctified by grace before he can begin to follow Christ in the supernatural way, whether of commandments or of counsels. The many responding to the latter have a most striking proof of the visible sanctity of the Church. Protestantism, founded in the rejection of the counsels of perfection, asserted its doctrine of universal depravity, the consequent impossibility of good works, and the negation of visible sanctity, from which so many errors flow. The way of perfection constitutes the matter of ascetic theology, a distinct branch of sacred science.—C.E.; Devine, A Manual of Ascetical Theology, N. Y., 1902. (H. J. W.)

Perfection, KINDS OF. Perfection is the complete possession of an attribute, a state of supreme excellence to which nothing is lacking. We may distinguish four principal types. (1) Metaphysical perfection is unlimited being, complete reality; when this obtains without any conceivable limitation, as with God, it is absolute; when it signifies this completeness in only one phase of reality, it is relative or partial, such as perfect adaptation to an end, or realization of our own essence. When a perfection is intrinsically limited, like sentient life, it is called perfect only as that within limit, like goodness, it is simple. Only those others the latter may be predicated of God. (2) Moral perfection is the full attainment of the moral ideal, the complete fulfillment of the moral law. (3) Christian perfection is a state of union with God through charity. (4) Religious perfection is a condition of observance of the Evangelical Counsels through the triple vows. See PERFECTION, Christian, Religious.

Pergamus, city of Lydia in Asia Minor, one of the seven churches in Asia, to whose bishop St. John was commanded to write an epistle (Apoc., 2).

Peristyle, a range of roof with columns surrounding either exterior of building, or interior court. Sometimes it is in the form of covered ambulatory.

Perjury (Lat., perjurium, a false or broken oath), the crime of taking a false oath. An oath, since it consists in calling upon the all-knowing and all-truthful God to witness the truth of a statement or the sincerity of a purpose, is an act of the virtue of religion. A false oath, then, in addition to the evil of a lie, introduces an evil of sin against the virtue of religion and of itself, apart from cases of ignorance or lack of deliberation, is always a grievous sin.—C.E.; Taunton, The Law of the Church, Lond., 1906. (J. V. K.)

PERIODICALS are defined as publications issued at regular intervals, whether weekly, monthly, quarterly, or at longer periods. They are the literature of the people, the vehicles of opinion, the record of events, the means of communication, and in many cases the impressions of the day. Periodicals are of the greatest value to the student and the scholar, for they are the history of the time in which they were written, and the literature of the men who wrote them. They are also the most convenient means of study, for they are arranged in a form which makes them easy to read and to understand. The following is a list of some of the most important periodicals in the world, arranged according to countries:

United States

- The New York Times
- The Wall Street Journal
- The Washington Post
- The Los Angeles Times
- The Chicago Tribune

United Kingdom

- The Times
- The Guardian
- The Telegraph
- The Independent
- The Daily Mail

Germany

- Die Zeit
- Der Spiegel
- Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung
- Die Welt
- Süddeutsche Zeitung

France

- Le Monde
- Le Figaro
- L'Événement du Jeudi
- Le Journal du Dimanche
- Libération

Russia

- Novoe Vremya
- Moskovskaya Pravda
- Izvestiya
- Kommersant
- Argumenty i Fakty

China

- China Daily
- Global Times
- Beijing Morning Post
- Asia Times
- China Daily

India

- The Hindu
- Times of India
- The Economic Times
- Times of India
- The Indian Express

Japan

- Asahi Shimbun
- Nikkei
- Yomiuri Shimbun
- Mainichi Shimbun
- The Japan Times

Australia

- The Sydney Morning Herald
- The Age
- The Australian
- The West Australian
- The Weekend Australian

Canada

- The Globe and Mail
- The Toronto Star
- The National Post
- The Calgary Herald
- The Edmonton Journal

South Africa

- The Times
- The Star
- The Sunday Times
- The Daily Sun
- The World

Argentina

- Clarín
- La Nación
- La Repubblica
- La Capital
- El Diario

Brazil

- O Globo
- Folha de S. Paulo
- Jornal do Brasil
- O Estado de S. Paulo
- Estado de Minas

Mexico

- Excélsior
- Milenio
- Expansión
- Reforma
- Amanecer

Canada
seded. Notable examples are King's College, Cambridge, and Edington, Wiltshire.

Perpetual Praise, the unceasing praise rendered to God by the angels and the whole celestial court. This is, according to Holy Scripture, one of the special functions of the angels in heaven (Tob., 12; Apoc., 8), and Our Lord refers to it as their perpetual occupation (Matt., 18, 10). (C. J. D.)

Perpetual Succor, Feast of Our Lady of, 27 June, in honor of the 13th-century Byzantine painting brought to Rome in the 15th century, venerated in the church of San Matteo and later in the church of the Redemptorists. Through the intercession of the Blessed Virgin under this title many graces have been obtained and Pope Pius IX approved the coronation of the picture by the Vatican Chapter, 1867, and established the feast, 1876, but not for universal observance.—C.E.

Perrone, Giovanni (1794-1876), Jesuit theologian, b. Chieri, Italy; d. Rome. He taught dogmatic theology at the Roman College and was active in the definition of the Immaculate Conception. His most important work is the "Theological Lectures."—C.E.

Perry, Stephen Joseph (1833-89), S.J., astronomer, b. London. He devoted himself to astronomy and as director of Stonyhurst Observatory studied, in particular, solar spots and faculae. He was sent by the British Government on numerous scientific expeditions, observing the transit of Venus at Kerguelen (1874) and Madagascar (1882), and the solar eclipse at the Isles de Salut (1889), dying a few weeks later at sea. He was buried at George-town, Delaware.—C.E.

Persecutions. In general, the endeavors of the State to suppress or harass the Church by physical or moral means.

Roman.—Ten are generally enumerated. (1) Nero (64-68) charged the Christians with insurrection and slaughtered them in crowds. (2) Domitian (81-96) took his victims mainly in the nobility. (3) Trajan (98-117) considered Christianity a menace to the Empire. (4) Marcus Aurelius (161-180) confiscated property and tortured his victims. (5) Septimius Severus (202-211). (6) Maximinus Thrax (235-238) persecuted the clergy. (7) Decius (249-251) began one of the cruellest persecutions. (8) Valerian (253-260) persecuted the clergy and nobility. (9) Aurelian (275). (10) Diocletian (303-305) and his successors till the edict of Milan in 313, put more than 20,000 Christians to death. His was the bloodiest persecution.

In England.—Began with the Act of Supremacy (1534). Refusal to accept the Act was equivalent to high treason. Monasteries were suppressed, the goods confiscated, relics and images destroyed. It was allowed to enter them. These measures were defeated by the Center Party under the leadership of Windthorst (d. 1891) and in 1866 peace was restored.

In France.—During the French Revolution, all Church property was confiscated. Religious orders were dissolved, and a new constitution for the clergy, containing a long list of anti-Catholic laws, was passed. Refusal to comply with them entailed imprisonment. Most of the sees and hundreds of parishes were declared closed and no priest was allowed to enter them. These measures were followed by the Kulturkampf. Education was laicized. The Convention (1792-95) effaced all trace of Christianity. Pius VI was imprisoned. The States of the Church were seized in 1809 and Pius VII made prisoner. Later, the Radicals used every means to "laicize" education. In 1904, all teaching Orders were suppressed, and in 1895 more anti-Catholic laws were passed.

In Mexico.—Due to the efforts of Freemasonry and other secret societies to suppress the Church, many anti-Catholic laws were passed between 1822 and 1853. The anti-religious spirit was at its height from 1837 till 1874. The Constitutions of 1827 and subsequent laws suspended all religious orders, forbade the wearing of the religious garb under penalty of exile, laicized all schools, etc. The Constitutions of 1817 denied all rights to the Church. In 1926, President Calles began to enforce the laws. There followed a persecution unequalled in history. Pillage, robbery, torture, and summary execution or deportation were the means employed. Over 100 priests were tortured and killed and scenes worthy of a Nero were enacted. A quasi-armistice was made, 21 June, 1929.—C.E.; Funk, A Manual of Church History, Lond., 1913; Camm, Lives of the Blessed English Martyrs, Camb., 1929; Guilday, The English Catholic Refugees, N. Y., 1914. (D.J.)

Perseverance. Fatal, the preservation of the state of grace until death. It is perfect if baptismal innocence is not lost; but this is not necessary, since grace lost by mortal sin can be regained. The power of perseverance is the sum total of all the spiritual means at man's disposal to continue in grace, provided he cooperates. This, however, does not assure actual perseverance. Actual final perseverance implies two elements: the faithful, continual use of the means of grace; and the condition that the person die in the state of grace. The Council of Trent calls it a special Divine gift, because it is neither included in sanctifying grace, nor is it the result of the power of perseverance. Practically it is a series of efficacious graces. It is not God's grace alone, nor the human will alone, but a combination of both, God's benign, continual providence, guiding, protecting, assisting, and man's faithful cooperation with Divine grace. Sacred Scripture, the Holy Fathers, and Doctors of the Church represent final perseverance as the fruit of prayer.

—C.E.; Pohl-Preuss, Grace: Actual and Habitual, St. L., 1921.

Persia, monarchy of southwestern Asia; area, 625,000 sq. m.; est. pop., 10,000,000. It is thought that Christianity was preached in this region in the 1st century; the spread of the Faith, mainly through missionaries from Syria, was usually encouraged or tolerated until the 3rd century, when the Sassanid dynasty revived Zoroastrianism as the state religion of their large empire. When Christianity was adopted by Constantine and invoked on behalf of the Roman Empire, in 312, the many thousand Christians within the rival Persian Empire who were still under the ecclesiastical authority of Antioch, were regarded with increasing suspicion of political disloyalty. They were severely persecuted, but their numbers continued to grow. The writings of Aphraates, a Christian Persian noble, remain as important evidence of the beliefs of this period. Schools and libraries at Nisibis (modern Nisibin) and Edessa (Urfa) were founded by St. James, Bp. of Nisibis, and his pupil, St. Ephraem, and were famous centers of Syriac culture. In the 5th century many Nestorian Christians immigrated to Persia (see NESTORIUS AND NESTORIANISM). The whole Church in Persia became Nestorian, and it continued to flourish as such for a few centuries after the Arab conquest and the adoption of Islam by the majority of Persians. There were many monasteries, and Nestorian missionaries were sent to India, China, and Mongolia. In the 17th century colonies of Armenians and Georgians settled in Persia, and at various times since then there have been other immigrations of Christians. Those successors of the ancient Nestorians who have come into union with Rome, form the Chaldean Church.

The great majority of the population of modern Persia are Mohammedans; in most parts there is toleration of other religions. Catholic statistics:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Year</th>
<th>Chis.</th>
<th>Pts.</th>
<th>Syn.</th>
<th>Calcs</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Isphahan, A. (Latin Rite)</td>
<td>1916</td>
<td>62</td>
<td>22</td>
<td>38</td>
<td>3,500</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Isphahan, D. (Armenian Rite)</td>
<td>1850</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>11</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>900</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Eranie, A. (Chaldean Rite)</td>
<td>1884</td>
<td>28</td>
<td>43</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>868</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salmas, D. (Chaldean Rite)</td>
<td>1847</td>
<td>33</td>
<td>24</td>
<td>10,469</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sehna, D. (Chaldean Rite)</td>
<td>1853</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>900</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

—C.E.

Persico, Ignazio (1823-90), Capuchin cardinal, b. Naples. While on the mission in India, he assisted in founding the seminary of Bombay and establishing the "Catholic Examiner," and in 1854 was consecrated auxiliary Bp. of Bombay. Later he was successively Vicar Apostolic of Agra, Bp. of Savannah, U. S. A., Bp. of Aquino, and in 1887 visited Ireland to report on the disturbed political conditions. Before his final report was presented, the Irish Plan of Campaign was condemned.—C.E.

Person, Personality (Lat., persona, mask), a complete individual rational or intelligent nature, distinct from, and incommunicable to, every other being, so that it exists and acts "of its own right" (sui juris), autonomously, independently of every other being except the Creator. Briefly it is a rational or intelligent individual. The attributes and actions of an intellective nature are always referred to the person present. This person is not communicable "as an accident" since it is a substance—not "as a universal" to individuals since it is itself an individual—not "as an integral part" to a whole, as a foot or hand to the whole body, nor "as an essential part" to the whole as the body or the soul to the composite, since it is itself "complete"—nor can it be communicated to, or assumed by, a higher person by which it would be controlled and to which its actions would be referred, since it has a perfection giving it its "own proper independent existence" called subsistence. [The latter perfection by which a complete individual rational nature is rendered incommunicable to another being and hence a person according to the common opinion of Scholastics is some positive perfection, really distinct from the complete individual nature. By many it is considered to be a "substantial mode" perfecting the nature in the line of substance and rendering it independent and incapable of being communicated to or assumed by another.]

Since the human nature of Christ was communicated to or assumed by the Second Person of the Blessed Trinity, there was no human person in Christ, only the one Divine Person. To this Person were referred all the acts of Christ's human nature. There are three persons in God, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost, really distinct as persons although possessing the same nature. [Personality in the Trinity is based on the "opposition" of the relative perfections, which are founded on the Son's having been "generated" and on the Holy Ghost's having "proceeded" from the Father and the Son.] The Divine Substance or Essence as such, is not a person, since it is communicated to the three Divine Persons.

Personality, that substantial permanent being which is the subject of, and to which are referred, all the states and acts of an intellective being. It is that which is understood by the "I," the "self." [It remains numerically and essentially the same throughout life, differing at various times only in accidents, in super-added states or acts.

It is possessed by inanimate objects, by plants, and by animals, as well as by men. Personality, however, is that perfection by which a being has control, control of self and of others through self, is free and independent, and superior to material forces, dominates instead of being dominated. Hence it is possessed only by beings with a spiritual principle. [One could possess great individuality through remarkable "uniqueness" and distinctiveness and yet... have little personality, due to his dependence and inability to control himself and others.] Most moderns place personality in self-consciousness or in freedom or in some act. Self-consciousness "manifests" the personality but does not constitute it. Consciousness is the modification of some thing, which thing is the self, the person or the personality. Likewise there must be some being which is free and which acts, and that being is the person. (See INDIVIDUAL, INDIVIDUALITY).—C.E.; Coffey, Ontology, N. Y., 1914; Moroney, Idea of Personality, Wash., D. C. (J. F. G.)

Persons, Ecclesiastical

In Church law, (1) those who are baptized and accordingly have all the rights and duties of Christians unless expressly limited (Canon 87); (2) corporate bodies or institutions constituted by Divine right, namely, the Catholic Church and the Apostolic See, or erected by ecclesiastical authority, e.g., religious orders or seminaries (Canon 100): in common usage, members of the clergy or of religious institutions.—C.E.; Brown, Canonical Jurisprudence, Wash., 1927.

Persons (alias Parsons), Robert (1540-1610), Jesuit, b. Nether Stowey, England; d. Rome. Famous on the English mission (1589), which he maintained at the greatest risk. Unable to keep his printing-press in England, he transferred it to Belgium and commenced his unsuccessful work for armed intervention in behalf of the English Catholics. He was rector of the English College at Douai, and endeavored to reorganize the Catholic affairs of England, but in appointing Blackwell as arch-priest, subject to Jesuit authority, he started a controversy which Clement VIII settled to his disadvantage. His greatest work, the "Christian Directory," was conceived during his English mission; his later works are controversial.—C.E.

Perth, Archdiocese of, Australia; diocese, 1845, archdiocese, 1913; comprises the southern part of the State of Western Australia, bounded on the north by 31° 20' parallel of s. latitude (Noora River), to the 120th meridian of E. longitude and from there by the 29th parallel of latitude, to the South Australian border; suffragans: Geraldton and the Abbeys of New Norcia and Kimberly, Bishops: John Brady (1845-71); Martin Griver (1870-86); Matthew Gibney (1887-1925). Archibishop: Patrick Joseph Clune, C.SS.R. (1911). Churches, 104; priests, secular, 53; priests, regular, 10; religious women, 415; colleges, 4; superior schools, 10; primary schools, 53; industrial schools, 2; children in Catholic schools (including orphanages and reformatories), 8003; institutions, 9; Catholics, 39,500.

Peru, republic of South America, on the western coast; with boundary lines in dispute, the area is estimated at c. 532,047 sq. m. or more; est. pop. (1921), 5,550,000. Spanish explorers and conquerors in the 16th century brought with them missionaries; five Dominicans arrived in 1532, and one of them, Fr. Vicente de Valverde, became Bp. of Cuzco with jurisdiction over all the conquered territory of a large region. He was assassinated by Indians in 1541. Other missionaries of various societies, including Franciscans, Augustinians, Brothers of Mercy, and Jesuits, soon established churches, schools, and monasteries for men and for women. In 1546 Fr. Pedro de La Gascua was sent to act as arbitrator to end the civil war which had raged for several years; he succeeded in making peace and in establishing reforms to restrict the colonists in their oppression of the natives. In 1577 the Jesuits in Peru founded a school for the training of missionaries in the native dialects, and they established the first printing press in South America. The second...
Perugia (Lat., PERUSIA), city, northern Italy. An ancient Etruscan city, it was the seat of a bishop, c. 546, a free commune in the 11th century, and in the 13th the residence of four popes. Perugia maintained its independence although continually warring with neighboring cities and revolting against the Holy See until 1800 when it became part of the Kingdom of Italy. The city possesses several medieval churches and a famous university—founded in 1381. Perugia is the center of an archdiocese, erected by Leo XIII, who was its bishop (1846).

Perugino (PIETRO VANNUCCHI; 1446-1524), painter, b. Città della Pieve, Italy; d. Fontignano, near Perugia. He founded the Umbrian school and was the teacher of Raphael. His first important work was done for Sixtus IV, as one of the decorators of the Sistine Chapel. His one remaining fresco is "The Delivery of the Keys to Peter," imitated by Raphael in the "Espousal of the Virgin." In 1491 he painted the elaborate altarpiece, "The Madonna adoring the Infant Christ," of the Villa Albani, Rome. His masterpiece, the great triple-arched "Crucifixion," was done for the Chapter House of Santa Maria Maddalena dei Pazzi in Florence, in 1496. He used the same arrangement for the exquisite "Nativity" of the National Gallery. The "Assumption" of the Florence Academy dates from 1500. In the same year he began the decoration of the Cambio, or Merchants' Exchange, in Perugia, which marked the end of his best period. His characteristics are the serene and lovely faces of his saints and angels, beautiful landscapes in admirable perspective, perfection of light and color.—C.E.; Williamson, Perugino, Lond., 1903.

Peschitto (Syriac, simple or plain), ancient Syriac version of the Bible. A complete translation of the O.T. was in possession of the Syrian Christians since the 4th century. It is the first version of the Hebrew Scriptures made for and by Christians, in antiquity and importance it ranks next to the Septuagint, according to which it was later revised. The Peschitto N.T. is still used in the Syrian Church; it was in circulation in the 4th century, and part of it existed in the 3rd.

Pessimism (Lat., Pessimus, worst), in philosophy, the theory that the world is essentially evil, the worst possible universe, consisting of blind, hopeless strivings of a never-to-be-sated Will, whose consciousness is synonymous with pain (Schopenhauer, 1788-1860). A state of mind characterized by extreme melancholy seeing only the evil and painful aspect of life.—C.E.; Wenley, Aspects of Pessimism, Lond., 1894. (J.A.B.)

Pestalozzi, JOHANN HEINRICH (1746-1827), educator, b. Zurich, Switzerland; d. Brugg. Of Calvinist upbringing he became a disciple of Rousish sea captain that the missionaries had been sent to Manila, 1;,)83. There he worked among the natives pitals, and convents. The indiscreet boast of a Spanippines to negotiate ,,'ith the elllperor of t-Tapan. He joined the Franciscan Order, 1567, and was sent to many countries.

PETEB, SAINT, martyr (1545-97), b. San

Esteban, Avila, Spain; d. Nagasaki, Japan. He was replaced by the present St. Peter's, where one half of his body no,v rests; the other half is in the Church of St. Paul on the Ostian Way; his head is in the Lateran Church. Patron of Rome. Emblems:

a boat, keys, and a cook. Feast, 29 June. The dedication of his chair at Rome is celebrated 18 Jan.;

at Antioch, 2 Feb. Representations of St. Peter are found in Christian art as early as the 2nd century. He is shown as a man with hair down to his shoulders, and beard, receiving the scroll of the Law, with veiled hands. He is the only Apostle represented with a wand or staff, and in the 5th century he is shown with the keys, which afterward became customary. The fa­ nous bronze statue in Rome is not earlier than the 5th or 6th century.

St. Peter wrote two Epistles, both addressed to converts from paganism in Asia Minor. Both were sent from Rome. The second seems to hint at his approaching death. The first abounds with admonitions to lead a Christian life, outlining the duties of subjects to the emperor, of slaves towards masters, of wives and husbands, mutual charity, patience, and humility. The second seems more of an attack on abuses; some seemed to have lost faith because Christ did not come in glory as soon as they had hoped. St. Peter explains the delay, warns against and describes the punishment inflicted on teachers of false doctrines, and bids his readers await Christ's coming in patience and good works.

—C.E.; Butler; Pope; Schumacher; Taylor, Peter

the Apostle, Lond., 1900. (N. G.)

Peter, SAINT, exorcist. See MARCELINUS AND PETEB.

Peter, Sarah (1800-77), philanthropist, b. Chil­ leolhe, Ohio; d. Cincinnati. A Catholic convert in 1842, she was educated at a school for Women in Philadelphia. She was a patron of art, and active in charitable and philanthropic works in Cincinnati. In 1862 she volunteered as a nurse in the Civil War.

Peter and Paul, Saints, Feast of, one festival used for these two great Apostles because, according to tradition, they were martyred on the same day, in Rome. It goes back to the 5th century. It occurs on 29 June, and is a holy day of obligation in many countries.

(J. F. S.)

Peter Baptist, Saint, martyr (1545-97), b. San

Esteban, Avila, Spain; d. Nagasaki, Japan. He joined the Franciscan Order, 1567, and was sent to Manila, 1583. There he worked among the natives and established several foundations of his order.

In 1593 he was sent by the governor of the Phi­ ippines to negotiate with the emperor of Japan. He was received favorably, established schools, hospitals, and convents. The indiscreet boast of a Spanish sea captain that the missionaries had been sent for to prepare for the conquest of Japan by Spain, aroused the anger of the emperor, and he ordered the missionaries to be imprisoned. With him were crucified 6 Franciscan friars, 17 native Franciscan ternaries, and the Jesuits, Paul Miki, John Goto, Feast, 5 Feb.—C.E.

Peterborough, Diocese of, Ontario; comprises

Peterborough, Durham, Northumberland, Victoria

Counties, and the Districts of Muskoka and Parry

Sound; suffragan of Kingston. Bishops: John

Francis Jamot (1882-86); Thomas J. Dowling

(1887-89); Richard A. O'Connor (1889-1913);

Michael Joseph O'Brien (1913). Churches, 60; priests, secular, 40; separate and free schools, 50;

institutions, 5; Catholics, 27,000.

Peterborough Abbey, Benedictine monastery,

Northamptonshire, England; known at first as Medeshamstede; founded 654 by Peada, king of Mercia. Destroyed by the Danes; restored; burned,

1116; Henry VIII nude it the cathedral of his new

Diocese of Peterborough (1541).—C.E.

Peter Canisius, Saint, confessor (1521-97),

Doctor of the Church, b. Nimwegen, Netherlands;

d. Fribourg, Switzerland. He was the second Apostle of Germany, theologian and leader of the Counter­

Reformation. He studied arts, civil law, and theology at the University of Cologne; at the instigation of Peter Faber he entered the Society of Jesus, 1543; ordained, 1546; studied under Ignatius at

Bologna. He introduced the Jesuits into Bavaria,

Bohemia, Swabia, the Tyrol, and Hungary; was employed on important missions by the Holy See; was cathedral preacher at Augsburg; and was instrumental in procuring the erection of papal seminaries at Prague, Pulska, Braunschweig, and Dillingen; encouraged Catholic printers and writers; wrote extensively; his "Catechism" appeared in over 200 ditions during his lifetime and was translated into twelve languages.Canonized, 1925. Feast, R. Cal.,

27 Apr.—C.E.

Peter Crysologus, Saint, confessor, Doctor of the Church (406-450), Bp. of Ravenna, b. and d.

Imola. He was baptized, educated, and ordained deacon by Aureolus, Bp. of Imola. In 433 he was elevated to the Bishopric of Ravenna, and was one of the principal adversaries of Monophysitism. Peter was famous as an orator and writer. About 176 of his works remain extant; they are mainly explanatory of biblical texts and are brief and concise.

Relics mostly at Imola; except an arm which is in the cathedral at Ravenna. Feast, R. Cal., 4 Dec. —

C.E.; Butler.

Peter Claver, Saint, confessor (1568-1654), apostle of the Negroes, b. Verdu, Catalonia; d.
Cartagena, South America. After graduating from the university of Barcelona, he became a Jesuit,

1601, and by the advice of St. Alphonsus Rodriguez volunteered for the South American mission. Landing at Cartagena, in 1610, he was ordained there,

1616, and devoted his remaining days to alleviating the spiritual and bodily miseries of the African slaves, 300,000 of whom he baptized. Patron of the Negro missions. Represented surrounded by Negroes.

Canonized, 1888. Feast, 9 Sept.—C.E.
Peter Damian, Saint, Doctor of the Church (1007-72), Card.-Bp. of Ostia, b. Ravenna, Italy; d. Faenza. Left an orphan at an early age, he was adopted by an elder brother and became a swineherd. He was later sent to school at Faenza and Parma and became a noted teacher. Having entered the monastery of Fonte Avellana, he was elected prior in 1043, and devoted himself to the reform of the monastery and the abolition of simony, incontinence, and other abuses. He attended a number of synods and was sent on many important missions. Relics at Faenza. Feast, R. Cal., 23 Feb.—C.E.; Butler.

Peter Faber, Blessed (1506-46), b. Villaret, Savoy; d. Rome. In 1525 he went to Paris and entered Saint-Barbe College, where he was a classmate and intimate friend of St. Francis Xavier and where he met St. Ignatius Loyola. He was ordained priest in 1534 and soon after joined the small band headed by Ignatius. He assisted at the diets of Worms and Ratisbon, and preached in Parma, Speyer, Mainz, Cologne, and Savoy, countering the influence of Lutheranism and reforming the decadent condition of Catholicism in those places. Part of his diary extant shows that he had an extraordinary devotion to the Angels. Beatified, 1857, with a single companion, he inaugurated the Congregation of the Blessed Sacrament in fulfillment of a vow to Our Lady of Fourvières. The following year he founded a congregation of cloistered women for perpetual adoration, known as Servants of the Blessed Sacrament. The Priests' Eucharistic League and Archconfraternity are also due to his initiative. His works in four volumes all deal with the Holy Eucharist. Beatified, 1925.—C.E., V. 735; Herbert, The Priest of the Eucharist, Lond., 1898.

Peter Louis Marie Chancel, Blessed, martyr (1802-41), b. Cuet, France; d. Futuna Island. He was ordained, 1827, and in 1831 joined the Marists, who sent him to the South Pacific missions, and assigned him to Futuna in 1837. There he was martyred by the pagans. Beatified, 1899. Feast, 28 April.—C.E.

Peter Nolasco, Saint, confessor (c. 1189-1256), one of the founders of the Mercedarians, b. Masdes-Saintes-Puelles, France; d. Barcelona, Spain. Dividing his wealth among the poor, he took a vow of chastity. He went to Spain and there reformed the Christians enslaved by the Moors, and in 1218 decided to found a religious order for the redemption of Christian captives, called Mercedarians; it was approved, 1230. Canonized, 1628. Feast, R. Cal., 31 Jan.—C.E.; Butler.

Peter of Alcántara, Saint, confessor (1499-1562), founder of the Reform Congregation of the Spanish Discalceates (Alcántarini), b. Alcántara, Spain; d. Arenas. He was educated at the University of Salamanca; entered the Franciscan Order at Manzarretes, 1515; ordained, c. 1524; made superior of the province of St. Gabriel, 1538; he drew up the Constitutions of the Stricter Observants, 1540. He retired with John of Avila to the mountains of Arabida, Portugal, and established there several small communities, which were united in the Province of Arabida, 1560; the order spread through Spain and Portugal, and Peter was elected superior, 1550; associated with him in his work were St. Francis Borgia, John of Avila, St. Louis of Granada, and St. Teresa. Patron of night watchmen. Canonized, 1669. Relics at Arenas, Old Caste. Feast, R. Cal., 19 Oct.—C.E.; Butler.

Peter of Alexandria, Saint, martyr (d. 311), Bp. of Alexandria. He suffered in the Decian persecution and was at one time head of the famous catechetical school at Alexandria; he probably initiated the reaction there against extreme Origenism. When during the Diocletian persecution Peter left Alexandria for concealment, the Meletian schism broke out among his own clergy, and he had this to contend with at a time when it was all he could do to comfort and guide the captive Christians. He was probably the first to discover the heresy of Arius. On his return to Alexandria he convened a synod of bishops against Melitian, Bp. of Lyeopolis, who had usurped his authority. Soon after this he was martyred at Alexandria at the command of Maximinus Daja, and was buried in the cemetery for martyrs. Most of his relics were enshrined in a church at Grasse, France. Feast, R. Cal., 26 Nov.—C.E.; Butler.

Peterspence, the name traditionally given to an annual contribution or tribute from the faithful of various countries to the Holy See for use by the Pope for the current expenses of his administration. It bears the name “Peterspence” because in England, in Saxon times, each householder holding land of a certain value gave a penny. Most probably it began in the reign of King Offa, in 787, and spread from England to other nations of northern Europe. At the time of the Reformation it ceased throughout the world, and was not reestablished until the reign of Pius IX. It is now observed by Catholics everywhere. For the most part, contributions are sent to Rome through the bishops. In some countries the funds are collected through various “Peterspence Associations.” In the United States, this collection for the Pope is taken up annually by all churches.—C.E.

Peter the Hermit (c. 1050-1115), ascetic and preacher, b. Amiens, France; d. Liège, Belgium. Contemporary historians agree that he was one of the numerous preachers of the Crusades; nothing supports the contention of later chroniclers that he instigated the First Crusade, of which Pope Urban II was sole initiator. The reason for imputing it to Peter was doubtless to attribute it to the ascetics so popular at that time. The band he led to Constantinople (1096) was massacred nearby while he was away seeking help for them; afterward joining Godfrey of Bouillon, his part was obscure, but in spite of attempted desertion he was among the envoys to Kerbflga. Returning to Europe, he founded the monastery of Neufmoustier.—C.E.

Petitions to the Holy See. All the faithful are free to request favors from the Holy See but where one’s own Ordinary is empowered to grant them it is advisable to seek them from the Ordinary. The Pope can be approached directly; however it is customary to address him by means of a petition presented in writing to the particular Roman Congregation whose province is to grant the favor in question. And it is always well, and frequently even necessary, to present a letter of recommendation from one’s own Ordinary. Canons 247 to 264 set forth the powers of the various Congregations, Tribunals, and Offices of the Holy See.—C.E.

Petró (Periérux), SAINT, confessor (c. 504-94), abbot, “captain of the Cornish saints.” He was the son of a Welsh chieftain and studied in Ireland, then returned to Cornwall, where he reintroduced Christianity to a population which had lapsed into paganism. He founded a monastery at a place called Petroestow (Padstow), and another at Bodmin, where he died. Today his name is revered in Cornwall and Devonshire. Patron of Bodmin, Little Petrockstow, St. Petrock’s, Exeter, and Newton St. Petrock in Devonshire. He is also honored as St. Perreux in Brittany. His relics were preserved at Bodmin. Feast, 4 June.—C.E.; Butler.

Petronilla, SAINT, virgin (1st century), d. Rome. She was converted to Christianity by St. Peter, and later ministered to him. Patrons of the treaty of the conclave determined between the popes and Frankish emperors. Relics in St. Peter’s, Rome. Feast, R. Cal., 31 May.—C.E.; Butler.

Peuerbach, GEORGE VON (1423-61), father of observational and mathematical astronomy in the West, b. near Linz, Austria; d. Vienna. In development of Ptolemy’s “Almagest” he initiated the transition from the duodecimal system; his “Theorica novae planetarum” is an able attempt to reconcile the theories of the universe prevalent before the days of Copernicus.—C.E.

Pew Rents, charge made for certain of the more advantageous seats or pews in a church. This constitutes one of the sources of revenue for the maintenance of the church and support of the clergy, especially in places where no state provision or endowment exists. It has been approved by various provincial councils, including the Third Plenary Council of Baltimore, and endorsed by the Holy See. In these endowments it is strictly stipulated that there should always be an ample sufficiency of free seats to accommodate those who cannot afford to rent one, in order that all the faithful might conveniently assist at Divine services. The sum to be paid and the time of payment are to be determined by local law or custom. Renting a pew in whole or in part, to one, or even the entire pew, does not entitle one to occupy that place during the time of all or some of the Divine services held in that church. In some dioceses the custom is tolerated of allowing one who retains a sitting in a church to receive the administrations of the pastor of that church, even though living in another parish.—P.C. Augustine.

Phainolion, in Orthodox Church, a vestment corresponding to the chasuble but reaching to the feet behind and at the sides, and cut away in front.

Pharao (Turk., fanar, lighthouse, lantern), name of the court of the ecumenical patriarch of Constantinople, from the quarter of Constantinople (so called from a lighthouse on the Golden Horn) where he resides. It became the chief Greek observational and mathematical astronomy in the days of Copernicus.—C.E.

Pellaeus, St. Petrock’s, Exeter, and Newton St. Petrock in Devonshire. Patron of Bodmin, where he died. Today his name is revered in Cornwall and Devonshire. Patron of Bodmin, Little Petrockstow, St. Petrock’s, Exeter, and Newton St. Petrock in Devonshire. He is also honored as St. Perreux in Brittany. His relics were preserved at Bodmin. Feast, 4 June.—C.E.; Butler.

Pharo, PHARAO (Egyptian, Pe’ra, great house), title given in the Bible to the ancient kings of Egypt. The names of many of them are unknown, such as the Pharaoh of Abraham, of Joseph, and of the Exodus, and the Pharaoh with whom Adad sought refuge in the time of David (3 Kings, 11). Pharaoh Nehao is mentioned in 4 Kings, 23; Pharaoh Ephra In Jeremias, 44; the Pharo of the Exodus is thought to have been Merneptah.

- C.E.

Pharisee (Heb., parash, separate), a member of the party of the Pharisees, who aimed to be "set apart from" all mankind by religious and political independence. The sect originated soon after the return from the Babylonian Captivity. Besides Holy Scripture, they revered a particular tradition which they ascribed to Moses. They believed in good and evil angels; in the immortality of the soul; and in a resurrection. They stoutly upheld the theocracy and their country's cause, and possessed great influence with the common people. Most of the scribes and lawyers belonged to this party. In N.T. times they had degenerated into pious hypocrites full of uncharitableness, pride, and avarice and were noted for their hollow reliance on outward works. They were bitter enemies of Jesus and were most severely denounced by Him (Matt., 23). There were some exceptions, such as Nicodemus (John, 3) and Gamaliel (Acts, 5).—C.E.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. The earliest settlers on this site, Swedes, Dutch, and English, have apparently left no record of the presence of any Catholics; but this city founded in 1682, by William Penn, with explicit provision of liberty for all religions, soon became a refuge for persecuted "Papists" from other colonies and from other colonies in America. It is thought that the first Catholic resident was a German, now unknown by name, who in 1683 came with Pastorius to Germantown, a part of the present Philadelphia. Several Catholics were named in the early records, and c. 1707 a convert, Lionel Brittin, was received into the Church. As early as 1708 and in later years, Penn was reproached in England for the fact that the government of his colony had "suffered the scandal of Mass to be publicly celebrated." The first priest known to reside permanently in Philadelphia, from about 1730, was Father Joseph Greaton, S.J., who since 1721 had traveled about, ministering to various missions in Pennsylvania and neighboring colonies. His assistants and earliest successors also were Jesuits: Fr. Henry Neale; Frs. Theodore Schneider and William Wappeler who came from Goshenhoppen and Conewago to hear confessions in German; Fr. Robert Harding, the second pastor; Fr. Steinmeyer, usually known as Fr. Ferdinand Farmer, who became a member of the Philadelphia Society and a trustee of the University of Pennsylvania; and Fr. Robert Molyneux who in 1782 erected the first special building for a parochial school.

A prominent Catholic layman, Thomas Fitz-Simons, was a member of the First Continental Congress, the Congress of the old Confederacy, the Constitutional Convention, and the first, second, and third Congresses of the United States. He was also one of the Catholics who fought in the War for Independence; of those the most famous Philadelphians were Brigadier-General Stephen Moylan and Captain John Barry. The former, after the war, served as Registrar and Recorder of Chester County and Commissioner of Loans of Philadelphia. Captain Barry was in command of various vessels and also served in the army, taking part in the battles of Trenton and Princeton; in 1794 he became ranking officer of the newly organized U. S. Navy. At the end of the war a solemn Te Deum was chanted in St. Joseph's Church and was attended by leading citizens of various denominations, including Washington; this was one evidence of the fact that the Church was now looked upon with increased respect because of the patriotism shown by Catholic citizens and also because of regard for the allied French soldiers and diplomatic representatives and their chaplains. Heroic service was given by the priests in the yellow fever epidemic of 1793 in which Fr. Lawrence Gressel and Fr. Francis Fleming, a Dominican, gave their lives; again in the cholera epidemic of 1832 priests and Sisters of Charity of the Blessed Virgin were publicly commended for their relief work. The rectory of St. Augustine's was then used as an emergency hospital in which 367 patients were cared for. In 1796 when the Augustinians appealed for aid in establishing a church in the northern part of the city, the list of subscriptions included generous amounts given by President Washington and Stephen Girard.

Philadelphia was under the jurisdiction of the Vicar Apostolic of London and then of the Prefect Apostolic or Bp. of Baltimore until 1808; in that year the Diocese of Philadelphia (see PHILADELPHIA, ARCHDIOCESE OF) was established. In two churches of the city there were contests of authority between bishops and trustees; both cases eventually were settled in favor of the authority of the bishops. In 1834 there were in the city about 25,000 Catholics with ten priests, and five churches. Anti-Catholic feeling broke out again in 1844 when a request that Catholic children in the public schools might do their Bible reading from a Catholic version, was made the occasion of rioting by "Native Americans." Two churches, a convent, a rectory with a valuable library, and many private houses were burned, and several lives were lost. The county paid indemnity for some of the destruction. During the 19th century the great increase in the Catholic population of the city was accompanied by the building of many schools, hospitals, charitable institutions, and churches, including a cathedral. In 1884 the American Catholic Historical Society was founded in Philadelphia by Martin I. J. Griffin.

The city at present has about 500,000 Catholics; 135 Catholic churches with 120 parish schools; a theological seminary; two Catholic colleges for men and one for women; 23 high schools, academies, and special schools, including one for deaf mutes; 6 settlement houses; a Catholic Children's Bureau; 9 day nurseries; 8 institutions for dependent or neglected children; 12 asylums and homes, including 2 houses of the Good Shepherd; 6 hospitals; and 3 organizations of visiting nurses. The Ukrainian Greek Catholic Bishop for the United States resides in Philadelphia and has there a cathedral, two schools, and an orphan asylum.

Philadelphia, Archdiocese of, Pennsylvania; diocese, 1808; archdiocese, 1875; comprises the city and county of Philadelphia and also the counties of Berks, Bucks, Carbon, Chester, Delaware, Lehigh, Montgomery, Northampton, and Schuylkill; area, 5043 sq. m.; suffragans: Altoona, Erie, Harrisburg, Pittsburgh, and Scranton. Bishops: Michael Egan, O.S.F. (1810-14); Henry Conwell (1820-42); Francis Patrick Kenrick (1830-51); Ven. John N. Neumann, C.SS.R. (1852-60); James M. He effectively studied in Paris, London, and Rome; and d. Cmsarea, Palestine; called a "sion of the loaves and fishes (John, 6), and again in conversation with Christ (John, 14), portraying him with Phil ip the Deacon; however the general opinion is that he, with his two daughters, died at Hierapolis. The Fourth Gospel mentions him at the miracle of the bread and fishes (John, 6), and again in conversation with Christ (John, 14), portraying him as a sly, naive, sober-minded man. Emblems: crucified, and a dragon. Relics in Church of the Apostles, Rome. Feast, R. Cal., 1 May.—C.E.; Butler.

St. Philip, Saint (d. c. 58), b. and d. in Caesarea, Palestine; called "the Evangelist." One of the seven deacons (Acts, 6), he first preached in Samaria with great success, and confirmed his preaching with miracles (Acts, 8); he converted many who "received the Holy Ghost" (Acts, 8) and, commanded by an angel, travelled from Jerusalem to Gaza, on the way converting and baptizing the eunuch of Candace, Queen of Ethiopia (Acts 8). From thence he was transported by Divine power to Azotus, and preached to all the cities until he came to Cesarea (Acts, 8), where he lived with his four daughters, virgins with the gift of prophecy (Acts, 21). Represented baptizing the eunuch of Ethiopia, or with his four daughters. Feast, 6 June.—Butler.
Philip II (Augustus), 1165-1223, King of France, d. Mantes. An able and energetic monarch, his reign was marked by a long conflict with Henry II and Richard Coeur de Lion of England, with whom, however, he took part in the Third Crusade. Their rivalry, during which Richard gained repeated victories, ended abruptly with his death before the Castle of Chalus (1190). Richard's brother John Lackland continued the fight but most of his vast estates in France were confiscated by Philip; to regain them he made an alliance with Otho of Germany, but they were decisively defeated at Bourvines (1214).

In his dealings with the Holy See and with the clergy, Philip showed himself arrogant and independent, demanding the same submission from his ecclesiastical as from his lay vassals, and even expecting military service from them. He never, however, pursued toward the Church a policy of trickery or pettiness but compelled clerics to pay to the treasury one tenth of their income. His divorce from Ingeborg of Denmark (q.v.) brought him into a long conflict with Pope Innocent III.—C.E.; Hutton, Philip Augustus, Lond., 1890.

Philip IV (1287-88), King of Spain, b. Valldolid, Spain; d. at the Escorial, Madrid; son of Charles V and Isabella of Portugal. Involved with the Duchy of Milan, 1540, Naples and Sicily, 1554, the Lordship of the Netherlands, 1555, he came to the throne of Spain, 1556, and in 1559 signed the Peace of Cateau-Cambrésis with France. Champion of Catholicism and absolutist, his autocracy caused the clergy to pay the taxes, the king retaliated by forbidding the exportation of gold and silver outside of France. The canonization of Louis IX, 1297, brought about a brief reconciliation, but the arrest and trial of Bishop Saisset reawakened the conflict, and the Pope warned the king in the Bull “Antexula, Fili.” To arouse public opinion Philip, goaded by his legists, Peter Flotte and Nogaret, circulated a falsified copy of the document and convoked the States General of 1302, which endorsed his policy of absolutism. The Pope countered by the famous Bull “Unam Sanctam,” so often misinterpreted, and which was nothing but a restatement, perhaps in too absolute terms, of the current doctrine of the Middle Ages concerning the relations between Church and State. After the disastrous battle of Courtray in which Flotte was killed, Nogaret, the most unscrupulous of the legists, took his place, and in 1303 he publicly accused the Pope of all sorts of crimes in an assembly held at the Louvre. Boniface then resolved to excommunicate the king and to release his subjects from their oath of fealty; but before he could do it, Nogaret with the help of the two Colomans, personal enemies of the Pope, invaded Anagni where he was residing, and offered to the care of the poor and sick. Ordained priest in 1253, where he pos­essed the gift of tongues; and acted as peace-maker between the Guelphs and the Ghibellines. Canonized, 1671. Relics at Todi. Feast, R. Cal., 23 Aug.—C.E.; Butler.

Philip Benizi, Saint, confessor (1233-85), fifth general of the Servite Order, b. Florence; d. Todi, Italy. He exhibited a startling precocity in learning, studied at the University of Paris, finished his medical course at Padua, and practised medicine in Florence for one year. Obeying a vision of the Blessed Virgin, he entered the Servite Order, 1253, and was elected superior general, 1267. He assisted at the Council of Lyons, 1274, where he was invested with the pecuries of the rank which he occupied, and was canonized at Rome, founder of the “Oratory,” b. Florence; d. Rome. He engaged in commercial activity at Monte Cassino, 1231, but abandoned it to the care of the poor and sick. Ordained priest in 1551, he founded the Congregation of the Oratory, 1556, and was elected superior general, 1567. He assisted at the Council of Trent, 1563, and won for his Order the conceded approbation of which was granted by Gregory XIII, 1575; it spread rapidly through Italy and Philip

PHILIP II

PHILIP NERI

ST. PHILIP NERI

755 was elected superior general. His life was remarkable for singular devotion to the Blessed Sacrament. Patron of Rome. Emblems: altar, chasuble, and vial. Canonized, 1622. Body in a shrine in Chiesa Nuova. Feast, R. Cal., 26 May.—C.E., XII, 18; Butler; Newman, Idea of a University, N. Y., 1927.

Philippine Islands

Dependency of the United States, in the Malay Archipelago, administered by a governor-general appointed by the President of the United States and a local legislature; area, 114,400 sq. m.; est. pop., 12,253,800. When Legaspi reached the islands from Mexico in 1564, he was accompanied by several Augustinians; the Franciscans arrived in 1577; the first bishop, the Dominican Salazar and a few Jesuits in 1581; the Dominicans in 1587; and the Recollect Fathers in 1606. The work of evangelization progressed rapidly, the missionaries penetrated into the interior of the country, and founded missions and schools. The natives, attracted by the zealous lives of these priests, were converted to Christianity in great numbers, and the missionaries were an active influence of peace, upholding the cause of the people against the injustices of the civil governors. These missionaries also did remarkable work in literature and science. At the time of the United States occupation of the Islands the Washington administration took over many of the large parcels of land that had come into the possession of the Franciscan Friars there, paying them a handsome indemnity. Similar indemnities were paid for injuries done to church property at the time and for other properties which had been abandoned by the Friars. The Philippine Islands included in 1829 the following ecclesiastical divisions: Archdiocese of Manila; dioceses of Cebu, Jaro, Lipa, Nueva Cáceres, Nueva Segovia, Tuguegarao, Zambales, and the Prefecture Apostolic of Palawan. In recent years most of the bishops have been Americans. Missions are conducted by the Jesuits, Franciscans, Benedictines, Augustinians, Vincents, and the Society of the Divine Word. In these divisions there are 920 churches, 677 secular priests, 384 regular priests, 34 universities and colleges, 12 seminaries, 20 high schools, 165 primary schools, 21 charitable institutions, and a Catholic population of 8,724,965.—C.E.

Philips, Peter (c. 1560-1633), composer, b. England; d. probably Belgium. Having left England before 1590, he settled in the Netherlands, becoming organist to the Archduke Albert and Archduchess Isabella. After taking orders, he received a canonry at Soignies, 1610, and in 1623 one at Bethune. Most of his works were printed by Phalèse at Antwerp and include canzoni, madrigals, innumerable instrumental works, masses for six, eight and nine voices, and motets for eight voices. His “Cantiones sacrum” are included in the repertoire of the Westminster Cathedral choir.—C.E.

Philistines, from the time of the Judges onward, prominent inhabitants of the maritime plain of Palestine. They probably came from Crete, and are generally supposed to have adopted the religion and civilization of the Chanaanites. They are mentioned in the genealogy of nations (Gen., 10; 1 Par., 1), and first appear in biblical history as a number of verses frequently quoted, as for instance, about our Saviour reforming the body of our lowness; our conversation being in heaven; thinking on whatsoever things are true, whatsoever just, etc.; “I can do all things in Him that strengtheneth me.” It is a heart-to-heart communication.—C.E.; Prat, tr. Stoddard, The Theology of Saint Paul, N. Y., 1929.

The natives, attracted by the zealous lives of these priests, were converted to Christianity in great numbers, and the missionaries were an active influence of peace, upholding the cause of the people against the injustices of the civil governors. These missionaries also did remarkable work in literature and science. At the time of the United States occupation of the Islands the Washington administration took over many of the large parcels of land that had come into the possession of the Franciscans there, paying them a handsome indemnity. Similar indemnities were paid for injuries done to church property at the time and for other properties which had been abandoned by the Friars. The Philippine Islands included in 1829 the following ecclesiastical divisions: Archdiocese of Manila; dioceses of Cebu, Jaro, Lipa, Nueva Cáceres, Nueva Segovia, Tuguegarao, Zambales, and the Prefecture Apostolic of Palawan. In recent years most of the bishops have been Americans. Missions are conducted by the Jesuits, Franciscans, Benedictines, Augustinians, Vincents, and the Society of the Divine Word. In these divisions there are 920 churches, 677 secular priests, 384 regular priests, 34 universities and colleges, 12 seminaries, 20 high schools, 165 primary schools, 21 charitable institutions, and a Catholic population of 8,724,965.—C.E.

Philology, in the widest sense of the word, the study of language; more specifically divided into: (1) classical philology, the study of language as pertaining to literature and history; (2) comparative philology, the study of the laws and principles of a language, or a group of languages, and the subsequent comparison of one language with another; this is also known as linguistics; and (3) glossonomy, the study of language as the word or as speech, with the purpose of determining its elements and laws. Among important contributors to philology are:

Catholics. Valens Acavidius (1567-95), credited by Holstein with a remarkable critical faculty, was the author of various works on Latin literature. Matteo Aimerich, S.J. (1715-99), wrote several books which won for him a distinguished place among the philologists and critics of the 18th century; his most important work was "Novum Lexicon historicum et criticum antiquae romanae litteraturae." Abraham Hyacinthe Anquetil-Duperron (1697-1769) traveled to India to study the language of the Parsees and wrote the first translation of the Avesta. Gustav Bickell (1838-1906), priest, was a professor of Oriental, Semitic, and Indo-Germanic languages and wrote numerous works on these subjects. Eugène Bérod (1809-78), priest, was a noted linguist, being at one time professeur of Armenian, and held his extensive knowledge of 40 Oriental idioms to write controversial works in these tongues. Jacques Bruyas, S.J. (1635-1712), was the author of the oldest known Iroquois grammar and is credited with the authorship of the "Iroquois Dictionary" preserved in the Bibliothèque de l'Arsenal, of Paris. Guillaume Budé (1467-1540) translated many of Plutarch's "Lives" into Latin and wrote various works on the study of Greek. He suggested to Francis I the college for the study of Greek, Latin and Hebrew which afterwards became the Collège de France. Louis Buglio, S.J. (1567-1619), was professor of Greek and Latin literature, but was rather a master and interpreter of the ancient spirit than a philologist. Among his publications are commentaries on Seneca and on Tacitus, the latter a masterpiece of erudition and discernment. Paul Maximilien Emile Littre (1801-81) translated the works of Hippocrates and wrote a series of articles on comparative philology and the study of languages. His most important work was his "Dictionnaire de la langue française," and perhaps his most interesting a translation of Book I of the Iliad, in verse and in the French language of the 13th century. Angelo Mai, cardinal (1782-1854), was a very celebrated philologist whose searches in the Ambrosian Library, Milan, and in the Vatican Library resulted in the discoveries of unpublished pages of more than 330 authors, among whom we may mention Cicero, Marcus Aurelius, Plautus, Diodorus, Quintus Curtius, and many of the Apostolic Fathers and of the Italian humanists. He also discovered an important Greek manuscript of the Bible. Giuseppe Mezzofanti, cardinal (1774-1849), left only a few manuscripts on comparative philology, as his polyglotism was intuitive rather than analytic, but is credited with a perfect knowledge of 38 languages and a less perfect knowledge of 30 other languages and of 50 dialects. Félix Jean Baptiste Joseph Nève (1810-93) was professor of Greek and Latin literature at the University of Louvain for 36 years, and at the same time gave a course of studies in the Sanskrit language and literature; he was also learned in the Armenian language and literature, and published important translations and commentaries on all these subjects. Eugène O'Curry (1796-1862) was a self-taught scholar of the Irish language, from which he translated numerous volumes, and by means of which he obtained a far-reaching knowledge of the literature of Ireland. John O'Donovan (1806-61) was an authority on the Irish language and Irish antiquities, edited and translated many Irish texts, among them the Annals of the Four Masters, wrote an Irish grammar, and was professor of Celtic at Queen's College, Belfast. Sanctus (or Xantes) Pagnino, O.P. (1470-1541) was a leading philologist of his day, taught the Oriental languages, and wrote numerous works treating of Sacred Scripture, Greek, and Hebrew. Paulinus a Sancto Bartholomeo, O. Carm. (1748-1806), composed an early European grammar of the Sanskrit tongue, using part of Hanxleden's manuscript, and wrote various works bearing on linguistics. Politian (Angiolo de' Ambrosiani del Monte Paleiano; 1454-94) was a noted professor of Greek and Latin literature, but was rather a master and interpreter of the ancient spirit than a philologist. Among his translations are Plato's "Charmides," Plutarch's "Eroticus," five books of the Iliad, etc.; his most important philological work, "Miscellanea" (1489), is a collection of essays on various scholarly subjects. Augustin Quintana, missionary (c. 1600-1734), mastered the difficult language of the Mixe Indians of southern Oaxaca, Mexico, and wrote a grammar and a series of religious articles in that language. Euæbius Renaudot (1648-1729) was one of the greatest Orientalists of his time, and the author of various works on philological subjects. He compiled a dictionary of which his known and the most valuable.

